LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

STANDING COMMITTEE ON ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

Monday 3 June 1991

The committee met at 1552 in room 228.

SUBCOMMITTEE REPORT

The Vice-Chair: I call this meeting to order. This afternoon, we will start with the subcommittee report:

"Your subcommittee met on Wednesday 29 May 1991 and agreed to the following.

"1. That public hearings on Bill 7, An Act to amend the Powers of Attorney Act, and Bill 8, An Act respecting Natural Death, be postponed.

"2. That the committee commence clause-by-clause consideration of Bill 87, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act with respect to Volunteer Fire Fighters, on Monday 3 June 1991 and also that the committee continue consideration of the Premier's conflict-of-interest guidelines.

"3. That the Chair be authorized to present the budget in the amount of $384,588 to the Board of Internal Economy."

Agreed to.

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC AMENDMENT ACT (VOLUNTEER FIRE FIGHTERS), 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT LE CODE DE LA ROUTE (POMPIERS AUXILIAIRES)

Consideration of Bill 87, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act with respect to Volunteer Fire Fighters.

Étude du projet de loi 74, Loi modifiant le Code de la route relativement aux pompiers auxiliaires.

The Vice-Chair: I call Bill 87. Any questions, comments or amendments?

Mr Mills: I had to go to the whip's office; I am getting some documentation, apparently, being faxed over to me about this and I would just like to have that before me, if we could just take a couple of minutes to get it.

The Vice-Chair: You move to recess for five minutes?

Mr Mills: Yes, and I will go and get the stuff and I will be back.

The committee recessed at 1554.

Mrs Fawcett: I want to thank everyone again for supporting this bill. It was indeed a pleasure to get all-party support, and I think the volunteer firefighters appreciate also your support and recognition. I am very pleased too that it has been brought before this committee so quickly and I do look forward to it going into the House for third reading and proclamation.

Anything we can do to assist the volunteer firefighters in their response time is really something we should be looking at, and certainly the designated licence plates would be a start in the right direction. We know the volunteer firefighters are very important to our province; 80% of fire departments are serviced by volunteer firefighters. I appreciate the fact that this has come before the committee and hope you will see that access to the scene by these people as quickly as possible would indeed help them. We know the benefits to the municipalities and to people in general, to educators, by this terrific group bears our worthy consideration, so I would certainly hope we can successfully go through the clause-by-clause, and I appreciate the time to do this.

Mr Mills: I have a little problem in that I can remember when we went through the debate with your bill, I had some reservations about it based upon some information from the Solicitor General's office. I have been trying to get that information now. I would not want to go through clause-by-clause without getting the advice I think I should have for this, because I know we had some concerns about this.

Mrs Fawcett: Around what area?

Mr Mills: I am trying to think.

Mrs Fawcett: Would it have been the speeding? Because this is in no way a licence to speed or anything; it is just recognition solely.

Mr Mills: I understood there were some discussions in process at the Solicitor General's office about some sort of things they were doing with the volunteer firefighters. I am trying to think what I said at the committee. I know I supported it. I think there were some difficulties that had to be worked out, and possibly this is the place to work them out through the amendments. Having said that, I am having difficulty getting hold of someone. They are faxing some information over now.

Mrs Fawcett: The week before the bill came into the House, I know the volunteer firefighters and the firefighters had a meeting in Markham. A resolution from them came on the floor very much like my bill, so certainly they are in support of this bill.

Mr Mills: I could not agree with you more. The problem is that until I arrived here this afternoon I did not know this was being debated today; I thought we were speaking on the conflict-of-interest guidelines.

The Chair: You received a notice.

Mr Mills: No, I did not. That is the trouble. That is why I am trying to get at now.

Clerk of the Committee: Just to clarify, there was a package sent to everybody's office that everybody's office signed for on Friday explaining what was on the agenda today: a copy of Norm's letter, a copy of Bill 87 and background material.

Mr Mills: The problem is that I was not there Friday and I have not got it.

Ms Gigantes: I could find nothing.

Mr Mills: You got nothing? No.

Ms Gigantes: Not to my knowledge, unless I got it through the mail.

The Chair: I received my information on Thursday, I believe.

Mr Mills: I feel somewhat ill at ease going through this without having that.

The Chair: If there is a question around preparation, I have certainly had adequate notice.

Mr Fletcher: I did receive mine at my constituency office on Friday. It was faxed down from my office. I was one of the lucky ones, I guess.

Do volunteer fire people have flashing lights or something already? Do they already have that?

Mrs Fawcett: They did have an amber and white light, but it is not manufactured any more so obviously they do not have access to those lights. There are some volunteer fire departments which do use a green flashing light, but that is solely on their own discretion and really the public is not aware as to just what this light means. That might be something we can look at further down the road, but this would at least open the door to assisting the volunteer firefighters in that respect.

Mr Fletcher: Is one of the purposes of this bill to assist the public in knowing who is a volunteer fire person?

Mrs Fawcett: That is correct.

Mr Fletcher: So it would have to be advertised wherever there was a volunteer fire department that someone with this licence plate is a volunteer fire department person.

Mrs Fawcett: That is correct. I think we would work in conjunction with all of the fire departments to get an idea of the kind of licence plate they think would be suitable, along with the ministry, of course. That is why I left it open, so that those kinds of things could be worked out to the satisfaction of everyone involved.

Mr Fletcher: I am just wondering, is there not something that would be better than a licence plate, something more visible for people to be able to visually see that it is a volunteer fire person? Licence plates are hard to read sometimes.

Mrs Fawcett: Right now some departments also use stickers, which of course are not able to be seen. They really are not. The firefighters themselves seem to think that a licence plate would certainly be a start in the right direction. Fourteen states in the United States use this now, they are looking at it, I believe, in Nova Scotia and BC and it seems to be the licence plate that they request right now.

Mr Fletcher: This would go along as far as public safety is concerned, when a person is going to a fire or an emergency call?

Mrs Fawcett: Right.

Mr Winninger: Just to supplement what Mr Fletcher asked you, do volunteer firefighters use sirens at all?

Mrs Fawcett: No, not in their cars to get to the fire-hall or to the disaster. Their own cars are not equipped. Certainly once they get there, then they can get on to a fire engine or whatever and then of course they have the sirens. Right now, their cars are in no way designated to say this is a volunteer firefighter trying to get to the disaster as quickly as possible. In rural Ontario this is really important, simply because in rural Ontario fire departments are really made up of volunteers. It was just a way to really assist those people.

Mr Winninger: Second, do you know if regular firefighters use any kind of special licence plate?

Mrs Fawcett: No, not yet. Most of the regular firefighters are on duty at the firehall and so they are already there when the call comes in. They just board the engines and so on. I would certainly be open to include regular firefighters as well. There is no problem with that.

Mr Winninger: I guess the engines do not need special licence plates because they are quite easily distinguishable.

Mrs Fawcett: They already are designated. They are visible and certainly you do hear them.

Mr Mills: During a debate on this private member's bill, I believe the Minister of Transportation spoke to it and he was in favour of it.

Mrs Fawcett: Yes, he was.

Mr Mills: But I can clearly recollect his mentioning some problems about the issuing of the licence plate and the difficulty of putting something like this into the system. Having heard what he said and remembering it, why is there not someone, Mr Chair, from the Ministry of Transportation here? Why do we not have some input on this? Because to pass this, and we say we are going to authorize the issuance, without knowing the ramifications of that when I think the minister said that was a concern—

Mrs Fawcett: But as you can see by the bill and what it says, it is left wide open so that the real concerns can be addressed by the ministry. Certainly the second part of the bill addresses the fact that if a volunteer stops being a volunteer, we get them back again. This way, it could be up to the individual firefighter, it could be up to the municipality, it could be up to the ministry. This is just to allow this to happen, however it happens, that they can be given the opportunity to have a licence plate.

Mr Mills: I had some discussion with the deputy minister over there about this issue and I got the feeling from him that there were some different sort of things in the works based upon that resolution from the convention of firefighters. I think one of the things they were talking about or discussing was in fact emergency lights.

I am really reluctant to go ahead and discuss anything until I have some input from those people who, when that private member's bill went through, expressed some very serious concerns. One was the Ministry of Transportation. The Solicitor General's office also asked me to voice some reservations about it. I think I have someone coming over from the Solicitor General's office momentarily with some sort of position that hopefully I can go for. I am not here to obstruct this or anything at all, Mrs Fawcett; I am just here to protect what I thought were concerns when the bill was presented in the House.

Mrs Fawcett: But there is no reason that later you could not have an amendment to say that a light, any kind of light, could be added.

Mr Mills: But the problem I have is the bill is authorizing the issuance of special licence plates. I detected from the Minister of Transportation that it was not just as easy as that either. That is why I would like to hear from him.

Mrs Fawcett: Yet he did speak in favour of it, so there must be ways that he can—

Mr Mills: Yes, but I am wondering.

The Chair: Seeing as we have encountered this difficulty, that Mr Mills is concerned that the Solicitor General's office and the Ministry of Transportation have not been apprised of our discussion today and he is attempting to assure that representation as soon as possible—however, there seems to be substantive support for the bill that I am aware of—I am wondering if we might stand it aside for perhaps one hour, Mrs Fawcett, until we have had that representation, still to deal with it this afternoon, though.

Mr Mills: I would just like to make it clear that I am not adopting any partisan position or anything.

The Chair: Would that be suitable or acceptable?

Mrs Fawcett: Mr Elston did have his hand up. I wondered if you were going to recognize him?

Mr Elston: If I could speak just for a couple of minutes, all of this stuff, having gone through some of the things, the New Democrats as government members, who are now looking at providing some protections for the ministerial interests that they do represent, and I appreciate that, know that if anything is of real importance what happens is the minister gets this big huge batch of stuff and even the bureaucrats start looking to see when this stuff starts coming up on the decks of the committees.

I suggest that you have raised some interesting issues, Mr Mills, but none of those is excluded by the two provisions, which are really quite brief and to the point and only say you can have a licence plate as long as you are a volunteer fire department member and if you are no longer a member you have to give the plate back. That does not preclude the use of some kind of signal light or warning light to be attached to the car if they deem that as an appropriate activity. In fact, in some cases there are ways well within the regulation-making authority in which it could be done, even outside legislation.

I am not sure that if you wish to wait for the Ministry of Transportation or the Ministry of the Solicitor General to come and make their formal presentations some person will not show up and say, "We're really not prepared to deal with it today, but there are some concerns in the department." If that is all the stuff we are getting, I would be somewhat concerned inasmuch as the bill itself has gone through second reading. People are following these things. I know the legislation-watching groups that are in all the ministries usually follow this stuff if it affects them anywhere closely at all. We should basically, I believe, proceed to deal with it. I am not sure what else they are going to tell us, except about the warning lights or about something else, but nobody, it seems to me, has said the reason why a licence plate should not issue.

For me, I think we might as well just do it and go. I know it is up to the government House leader again, or others. If we have to move into committee of the whole House to deal with it, we can do that, or it can be, again in terms of scheduling, sent for third reading. There may be some consensual problems or consent requests made. That is often the way things work, and I would just prefer if we went on. We may be waiting all afternoon.

The Chair: I appreciate that, Mr Elston, but what I am concerned about, very simply, is that we could be debating a moot point for an hour or so, simply for the matter of delay until consultation occurs, and if we were to set it aside and still deal with it this afternoon, we could have much more productive use of our time, having the vetting from the Solicitor General's department. I do not think it is the intent of anyone here to delay the discussion of the bill more than an hour or so.

Mr Mills: Not at all. I am sure I speak for all the members of the government side. We are not here this afternoon to cause any delay or play games with this. It is just that I have some severe reservations on going ahead with it, because I spoke to the assistant deputy minister and one of the things he said to me was, "We could have some problems with the regular firefighters, because they drive their cars and they are not always at the fire station and they might take umbrage at the fact that we are looking after one group." Those were some of the things he said, and I would ask your indulgence. The lady in my office is actively pursuing this matter now and I am sure that forthwith she will be here, and I would appreciate that.

Mrs Fawcett: I have no objection whatsoever to including all firefighters, really, in the whole thing.

Mr Mills: Yes, but that was one thing that he said.

Mrs Fawcett: That is absolutely—

Mr Elston: Most of those guys are—

Mrs Fawcett: Yes, they are, but that was included in their resolutions.

The Chair: My last two homes have been opposite firefighters, presently opposite a captain, and their licence plates are personally nominated, "Captain '82," that was when he made captain sort of thing. They seem to take a certain relish in these nomenclatures.

Mrs Mathysen: I must say that you are positively clairvoyant in your remarks. I was simply going to say that I would feel better if we had some clarity from the Ministry of Transportation. There may be some wisdom that they have that we do not regarding this. I think what is paramount here is the safety of the volunteers, so I would support Mr Mills in his motion to set this aside until we have the information we need to make a good and informed decision.

The Chair: Can we have an agreement that we will stand it aside for no longer than an hour?

Mr Elston: Mr Chair, before you do that, just so that I am not mistaken, Mrs Mathysen just mentioned getting information from the Ministry of Transportation. Are we not waiting for the Solicitor General's material, as I understood from Mr Mills? Are we also going to step it down until we get some information from Transportation? That was not what I understood from Mr Mills.

Mrs Mathysen: Did Mr Mills not say the Ministry of Transportation?

Interjection: No, he said the Solicitor General.

Mrs Mathysen: I am sorry. That is my mistake. Pardon me. The Solicitor General then.

The Chair: So we shall resume discussion of this bill no later than 5:30.

CONFLICT-OF-INTEREST GUIDELINES

Resuming consideration of the Premier's conflict-of-interest guidelines.

The Chair: We are now moving on to conflict of interest. Where are we here? If you would take out of the materials that were circulated to you, the document dated 27 May is an update of the draft report that Susan Swift prepared. Basically we have gone through the preamble, the preface and purpose in regard to conflict of interest and are now on page 4, which starts with, "The committee therefore recommends that the guidelines be adopted."

We had agreed to go over these items paragraph by paragraph. This is page 4 of the document, 27 May 1991, the draft report, conflict-of-interest guidelines. The only difference between this and the earlier one should be the earlier changes and underlining, crossing out from our last discussion. We are starting with the second line down, which is "Divestment vs Disclosure."

Mr Mills: Did we not reach some consensus on how we were going to do this? We thought the way we were going on would take from now until Christmas. Why do we not do some reading and then sort of decide?

The Chair: I am sure we can read it quietly to ourselves. Do we have an alternative suggestion?

Mr Mills: I was under the impression that we were going to move these sections in chunks, not line by line as we are doing here.

The Chair: Was that a serious suggestion?

Mr Mills: At the top of page 4 it says "The committee therefore recommends that the guidelines be adopted." Why are we going over that? Is that not a statement in itself?

The Chair: We are not. That was one of the additions we came to during our last discussion.

Mr Mills: So that does not mean anything then.

The Chair: No. We are starting with "Divestment vs Disclosure" and the first paragraph under that.

Mr Harnick: Are you saying now that the line that says "The committee therefore recommends that the guidelines be adopted" has been accepted by the committee?

The Chair: Yes.

Mr Harnick: With respect, that statement does not mean a lot. Let me defer to the clerk for a moment.

Clerk of the Committee: The process we went through last time was that we started to go paragraph by paragraph, the changes and what the committee decided were put in, and that is what Susan wrote in terms of the underlining. We have not yet gone back to clarify, to see if the committee agrees with what Susan wrote. In essence, the majority decision of the committee was, "The committee therefore recommends that the guidelines be adopted." We have not totally precluded going back. There is a point where Susan writes something and we have to go over it one more time before we finalize the report.

The Chair: This is the second draft.

Clerk of the Committee: Correct.

Mr Harnick: The very crux of that statement begs the question, "The committee therefore recommends that the guidelines be adopted," but what I say is, adopted as what? Are they to be adopted as guidelines, separate and apart from legislation? Are they to be adopted as guidelines and are they to be put into the conflict of interest act? That statement, as bald as it appears, does not mean anything. I suspect at that particular point in the document that statement should not appear. It should probably appear in another place as a conclusion, with some justification and elaboration, but to merely put that statement there is totally meaningless.

The Chair: I think you are quite right, Mr Harnick. However, I would suggest that before we go back over what we had agreed upon for a second draft, we go through the rest of the report. As a committee we will have to adopt the final draft so we have the opportunity of amending that or whatever we have agreed to at this point, in terms of how it fits in continuity and congruity with the rest of the materials.

Clerk of the Committee: In terms of report writing, it was decided by this committee: "The committee therefore recommends the guidelines to be adopted." They have been adopted by the committee. That was a vote and the committee did decide when they started this so they would not keep going backwards. Just to clarify what I said before, we have to go backwards and doublecheck what Susan did. But in terms of redebating the sections that we have already debated, it is probably open to a good argument that the committee should not be going backwards. The committee can decide that they want to do that, but when we started, it was clearly put on the record that once the committee finished a section and adopted its recommendation, it would not go back and redebate it. The report has not been adopted yet, but that was what was put on the record at the first meeting.

Mr Harnick: I only point out that this particular statement is bald and meaningless in that particular place. It really confuses the issue. But if that is what the committee decided, I guess there is nothing we can do about it at this stage.

Ms Gigantes: I have no objection to your proposal, Mr Chair, but it does not seem to me that this is out of place here because, as I understand it, the committee was looking at the question: "Are the guidelines necessary?" The answer is that the guidelines should be adopted and then you decide how they are adopted, which is the next section. That is the question, I guess, we are about to enter.

Mr Harnick: "Divestment v Disclosure" is part of the substance—

Ms Gigantes: All right, over here on page 6, "Guidelines or legislation." So we will be coming to it momentarily, as we say on this committee.

The Chair: Can we move on then to at least the first paragraph of the next section? Mr Winninger, you had your hand up a few moments ago.

Mr Winninger: Yes, Ms Gigantes touched on the reference on page 6 that I was going to mention.

Mr Elston: I am sorry, I was a little slow there, but I am at a bit of a disadvantage because I did not sit on the first drafting of this. I was looking to see if it talked about "the guidelines" or whether we should be saying, "The committee therefore recommends that guidelines be adopted over legislation." Is that more correctly the result of that first debated section, rather than saying "the guidelines," which I believe would answer the question about whether you have divestment or disclosure or otherwise? But I suspect you would say "guidelines be adopted" if it is just talking about the principle of guidelines and you could strike "the." I do not want to confound the issue.

Mr Harnick: With a small g, right?

Mr Elston: I do not even care whether they are small g or big G, but "the guidelines" that we are talking about now are interesting.

Ms Swift: Just as a stylistic comment, I have used capital G throughout when I refer to the guidelines, as a short form, for referring to "the Premier's guidelines" because that is how the reference was made to the committee. So the committee might want to consider that.

The Chair: Are we moving on or are we discussing guidelines or "the guidelines?" Yes, discussion on the first paragraph.

Interjection.

The Chair: The first paragraph after "divestment versus disclosure." The second paragraph; is everyone all right with it?

Mr Elston: Basically, is it not clear that when you go through pages 4 and 5, it is really a recitation or a compilation of material? Again, I did not listen to all of the presenters, with the exception of one whom I heard speak at length and in rather great detail while I was sitting in the witness chair. After that, I was not able to attend the hearings. So long as this is compilation of what was said, I do not think there can be too much debated on that content. Where you end up having some discussions is probably at the top of page 6 where it talks about discussion and recommendations, I presume.

The Chair: There could still be additions or corrections to the printed material. There are, it seems, none to the first three paragraphs. The fourth: Any changes before the bottom of page 5?

Mr Harnick: It seems to me the conflict commissioner made certain very pointed comments about a great many of the aspects of divestment. He made comments about the use of a trust as being the appropriate vehicle, and he made comments, I believe, about the definition of undue hardship. It seems to me that some of those comments he pointedly made should be included in this section. I do not have the Hansard in front of me, but I certainly recollect—

Ms Swift: With respect to the trusts you mention, on page 6, under section 15, my recollection is that the commissioner said the terms were vague and meaningless, and I have included that. I think the summary of recommendations and comments I prepared for the committee included the comments of the commissioner and most of those have been included in one way or another in the report. Certainly, the comments that the guidelines were draconian appear on, I think, page 4.

Mr Harnick: Should we not attribute some of those comments to Justice Evans?

Ms Swift: The committee may wish to.

Mr Harnick: Because I think those are particularly important comments he made in an area where he was deemed to have particular expertise and knowledge. I think this document should reflect specifically his comments, particularly because he is a neutral individual. I think the document should have reference to that.

The other thing I cannot see here in a fast read are some of his comments about trusts, because he, my recollection tells me, was not inclined to take the position the final paragraph on page 5 indicates.

Ms Swift: That is true. I missed this when I mentioned this before, but on page 15 I have a section on trusts, under section 16 of the guidelines. That may not be as explicit as to his comments as you might like, but I do deal with that section.

The Chair: We have another basic issue here. Mr Harnick is raising the question of whether the witness should be specifically identified, particularly Commissioner Evans. I think that is a significant aspect in terms of our direction to Susan. Are there any comments on that issue?

Mr Winninger: I guess I agree with the thrust of Mr Harnick's remarks. I would say, though, that if other witnesses reiterate or Chief Justice Evans reiterates what other witnesses have said, surely we do not need to separate his comments out from theirs. Where it says, "those witnesses" or "other witnesses," I do not think we need to segregate out Chief Justice Evans's comments.

If, on the other hand, Chief Justice Evans makes comments that are distinct from those of others and noteworthy, I think perhaps his name should be there just to highlight the fact that he, with all of his experience, has said this. That is all.

Mr Harnick: I can live with that.

Ms Swift: Just to clarify, attributions will be made with respect to the commissioner only, then, not to other witnesses as well.

Mr Winninger: My only point was, if the Chief Justice says something that other witnesses have said, before or after him, why segregate his name from the others? If he says something that distinguishes his observations from others, that would be an appropriate circumstance to reflect his name.

Mr Harnick: Certainly we all know that he was the one who came and said the guidelines were draconian, and that was specifically his terminology, so I suspect we would be in agreement that that should be attributed to him. My recollection is that he also indicated, in terms of trusts, that he thought they were a good vehicle. In this section we have a comment that trusts were not deemed to be a good vehicle. I think we should have his comment about trusts specifically, and also that he went on and indicated that trusts should be paid for by the government, rather than the cost being borne by the individual, as has been the case in the past.

Mr Morrow: I am really glad that Mr Harnick raised the trusts question. We feel that Judge Evans was correct when he said that a trust can never be a blind trust. We therefore feel that the disclosure alone cannot suffice, but rather must be accompanied by divestiture. We therefore further recommend that the divestment section remain as an integral part of the Premier's guidelines.

The Chair: So you are suggesting a couple of things: one, highlighting that Mr Justice Evans made that reference to blind trusts that have many holes in them, or eyes in them; and also the recommendation that divestiture is an integral part, a central part.

Mr Morrow: Yes.

Mr Harnick: I do not recollect that that is specifically what he said, but if you are telling us he agreed with divestiture but also called it draconian, I find that somewhat inconsistent. What I am saying is that, rather than argue about this line by line, we leave it to Susan to go through that aspect of the evidence and to cull out the significant areas that Justice Evans commented on and provide us with a synopsis of those within this section.

Mr Fletcher: I have no problem with what Mr Harnick is saying, except that the only thing I can remember Judge Evans being specific on was the "draconian" statement, and I have no problem with that being attributed to Justice Evans. Even when it comes to trusts, he was not the only person who spoke on trusts and what trusts were. When it came to a lot of other things, such as undue hardship, he was not the only person who spoke on that. When it came to draconian, that was what is attributable to Justice Evans. I have no problem with that phrase being attributed to him, and if Susan would like to go through and make that, that is fine, but along with what David was saying, I do not think every statement that the judge made should be taken out and just attributed to him alone.

Mr Harnick: I am not saying that. I am saying that we leave it to Susan to review that aspect of the evidence and cull out those areas of significance that he commented on in somewhat of a more expert and independent way than the other witnesses. We had witnesses who obviously had party affiliations. The beauty of Justice Evans's evidence is that it was independent evidence, particularly based on experience in dealing with conflict-of-interest matters, and certainly that makes him as a witness somewhat more reliable than witnesses who came here and had a political affiliation and a political partisanship.

Mr Elston: Just a minute.

Mr Fletcher: That is right. Just a minute is right.

Mr Elston: With all due respect.

Mr Harnick: With all due respect to Mr Elston, who did appear as a witness.

Mr Fletcher: But again, that is part of my objection also. We did have witnesses here who are no longer in the political spectrum—maybe they still belong to a party—and I valued their testimony. Mr Sweeney, who had the respect of every person sitting in this Legislature, every person in his riding and across the province, I consider to be non-partisan, only because of the kind of person I know Mr Sweeney to be.

Again, I am not sure about Justice Evans and what his political affiliation is, if he has one or if he does not. You know, there may be something there. The only thing I remember Justice Evans saying that was any different than any of the other witnesses—if you go through the transcript of these—is the "draconian" statement and I have no problem with that. If Susan wants to go through and do that, that is fine, but let's not just take every statement that Judge Evans said just because he was a third party. If you go through and look at it, a lot of what Justice Evans said and a lot of what the Liberal people were saying is exactly the same. I have a problem with that.

Mr Harnick: Why do you have a problem? Are you doubting the independence of the Conflict of Interest Commissioner?

Mr Winner: We are just for zero tolerance.

Mr Fletcher: That is right.

Mr Harnick: And we have seen how that has worked so far.

The Chair: We have injunctions with regard to quotations or the orientation. Does that seem to be agreeable?

Mr Fletcher: I trust Susan.

Mr Harnick: I do not want a debate line by line, or what the right position or the wrong position is, but if Susan can provide us with some of those comments, we then can come back here and go through them and vote on them if that is the way we do things here.

The Chair: Okay. Can we move on now to recommendations? Mr Carr.

Mr Carr: I have a question with that. I was reading over some of the material that Lisa had given us here, a letter from Judge Evans. This is a question for Susan. I was wondering how you took that information and sort of condensed it down. What was the process? How did you go through that?

Ms Swift: The material you are referring to there was provided, I think, last week. It was after I had prepared the report, but I left a space for it. On page 16 where it referred to amendments to the conflict of interest act, if you recall, Judge Evans made recommendations with respect to the guidelines and a fairly detailed list of recommendations with respect to amendments to the existing legislation. I think the letter you have there is in response to Mr Harnick's request to the commissioner to provide a list of the guidelines, to cull from the guidelines what provisions he would include in the existing legislation. So I have not dealt with those independently at all.

Mr Harnick: I note for Mr Fletcher that I have just received a letter from Justice Evans to Lisa Freedman and on the second page of that letter he makes certain comments about trusts. He refers to some amendments he would like to see, one of which would be that there should be more discretion for the commissioner to determine what businesses should be placed in a trust, and there should be provision for a trustee to consult with, or seek an opinion from, the commissioner with respect to the operation of the trust. Certainly, his position with respect to trusts, if that is any indication, is somewhat different from what the member—and I believe it was Mr Morrow earlier—quoted. So I think it is well worth having Susan review that material and provide us with some accurate synopsis of what Justice Evans said and what his position is and then we can review it.

Ms Gigantes: I have been given background information which has quite a substantial amount of information about that evidence, that testimony to the committee. I am wondering if it would not save time if members of the committee referred to that rather than asking for another report. I think that has already been pulled out.

Mr Harnick: Pulled out and put into the document we are now reviewing as the report?

Ms Gigantes: No. Now there, Mr Chair, I would like to ask a question. Are we here to highlight Commissioner Evans's views of what should happen or are we here as a committee to give our own report and what we believe should happen?

I think, with all due respect for Justice Evans's experience, much of what he gives that is most—how can I say it—charismatic, in terms of contributions to the discussion, is a matter of opinion. I think in this we have to weigh all opinions. I certainly have no objection, in certain sections where it seems particularly noteworthy, to noting what he said and saying who he was, but I do not think we should allow his evidence to write the report, as it were.

Mr Harnick: I am not saying that. If I have given that impression, I have not intended to give that impression. But there were certain salient areas where he provided us with evidence based on his experience and knowledge of the area, and all I am saying is to cull that from the mass of material and include it in the report. In fact, the member for London South agrees with me.

Mr Winner: To an extent.

Ms Gigantes: I agree with you to an extent.

Mr Harnick: That is fine. I mean, let's see what it looks like after it is done and then argue about it, rather than waste time now. You are going to win anyway; you have more members on the committee than the opposition does.

Ms Gigantes: It just seems like a circular motion, Mr Chair.

The Chair: Mr Morrow, I think, made a suggestion regarding the recommendations for the committee. Can we move on to a discussion of that recommendation, and if so, can we please have a repetition of that suggestion, sir.

Mr Morrow: Do you want me to read them in again?

Mr Elston: On a point of order—I am not exactly sure which order you want to take this in—maybe we should just resolve what has happened here so that I understand, when Mr Sorbara asks me to brief him on what happened today, whether we are going to highlight some more of Judge Evans's testimony or we are not. Let's just finish off that end before we move on to deal with Mr Morrow's suggestion.

His is a very specific recommendation which has been prepared for consideration here today, but the answer to the question posed by Mr Harnick, at least partially supported by the member for London South and partially but not totally supported by the member for Ottawa Centre—I think she is looking more for a balance perhaps, or whatever—I want to know what we are doing before we get on with talking about Mark's stuff. We have to know what is going to happen and whether Susan is going to be left sort of to freehand some of this stuff.

Mr Fletcher: Mr Chair, in my opinion the Premier's statements are just as important as Justice Evans's statements and therefore I would like to see the Premier's statements put into the record, if that is the way you want to go. As Ms Gigantes has said, it is just a personal opinion of Justice Evans and I do not think that should carry any more weight than anyone else's statements. That is why I cannot agree with what we are saying about Justice Evans having his statements taken out and put in by themselves.

The Chair: Mr Harnick has referred to the phrase "draconian," other phrases such as "the blind trust with many eyes" have been referred to and Mr Fletcher suggests spots where the Premier has particular interest or salient points. If members wish to highlight the author of certain statements, they could give that direction to Ms Swift, and the other members can agree or not.

Ms Gigantes: The document to which I was referring is dated 6 May and it is from Susan. It has, starting on page 7, a fairly extensive list of some of the more pointed comments by the commissioner. I think if there are members of the committee who would like to recommend to us now that one or other of these comments be included, it has to do directly with the question of divestment, which is where we are; pages 6, 7 and 8.

Mr Mills: What is the delay?

The Chair: There is no delay. We are busy looking at quotations. Are there any statements from this compendium of quotations from Justice Evans that members wish to have included?

Mr Carr: You have incorporated a lot of his statements, going way back. Just as a point of clarification, how did you decide what to put in, Susan?

Ms Swift: Basically the structure of the report, the shell that you have, is a recitation of the evidence that was presented. I did not make any attributions to any witnesses, so that it flowed stylistically. That is basically what my criterion was, aside from ensuring that the ideas, at the very minimum, were in there. Certainly I have included some of the more pointed references or statements that were made by witnesses, but that is essentially how I went about it. Again, I think the letter that you refer to could perhaps be dealt with in that final section where it deals specifically with the act as opposed to the guidelines.

The Chair: So is it the intent of the committee that there be any highlighted statements attributed to Justice Evans?

Mr Mills: I would just like to speak to that, Mr Chairman. I must admit that I have very little experience in this committee forum here, but my opinion when I came here and became part of this committee was that I would listen to all and sundry and take note of what everyone said, and that part of the position of this committee was to decide what would be in the report. Were they placing any particular connotations to Justice Evans? I respect him as a person and as a judge, but nevertheless I am against highlighting particularly what the judge said because I have a fear that once we do that, it almost looks as though, "Well, look, folks, this is what the judge said and he is right." I do not think personally this is the role that I was put here to do, so I am not going to support it.

The Chair: Is there any further discussion on this issue? Can we move on now to committee discussion of recommendations?

Mr Morrow: Would you like me to read my recommendations back?

The Chair: If you can remind us again, yes please.

Mr Morrow: Thank you very much, Mr Chair. "We feel that Justice Evans was correct when he said that a trust can never be blind. We therefore feel that disclosure alone will not suffice, but rather must be accompanied by divestiture. We therefore recommend that the divestment section remain as an integral part of the Premier's guidelines."

Mr Carr: Where were you reading that from?

Mr Morrow: That was my own part. I just wrote it down.

The Chair: Is it acceptable, Mr Elston?

Mr Elston: I am not so sure. Again, the nature of the delivery is for me too general in some ways. If you want the principle of divestiture to remain as part of the guidelines, we all face the numbers here. But I would hate to have the statement made at the beginning, or at least at the end of the one section, and then talk about divestiture when there are people who have raised very serious concerns about what divestiture means for certain people.

I know, for instance, that the member for Scarborough East, Bob Frankford, has an impossible task to divest his practice. It has cost him his parliamentary assistant's position. To be quite honest, I am not sure that is fair; in fact, I think it is not fair. Because of the difficulty associated with delivering a practice of that type, it puts an unfair burden. I only wish to bring that example up as a case in point where I think it is extremely unfair.

If we make Mark's recommendation part of the report without having, in my view anyway, some kind of more flexible wording attached to it, then we condone I think the dislocation that has occurred for one of our current colleagues. That would probably be a mistake in the writing of the report. If there were something we could attach to that recommendation that would develop a little bit of flexibility and would answer a couple of the calls for less draconian consequences of a policy of divestiture, then I would be somewhat more comforted in the writing of the report. Let's just keep that one in mind.

I know the current Minister of Tourism and Recreation had to do some things with respect to a business that he built up. In the next three or four years, perhaps there will be a different result in an election. There is a person who is forced to get out of a business he has done a lot of work on. The member for Guelph shakes his head, but these things happen even to Liberals. It might even happen to some others.

It is just a very difficult thing for somebody to go back three years or four years later after having been told: "You have the stuff to be in cabinet. Get rid of your business." If you happen to either be turfed out of the cabinet or turfed out during the election, then to start from square one four years later in your life, that is the type of stuff I have real problems with. I have a real problem if we just say "Divestiture stays" and there is not something that allows us some flexibility. Those two examples are current. I can give some examples from the days when we were in government that would really make you sit up and take notice. I just want to leave it there.

Ms Gigantes: I do not fully understand, because I have just joined the committee, exactly how the report relates to the Premier's proposed guidelines. Within the divestment section of the Premier's proposed guidelines, there is a section that makes exception. The exception is related to satisfaction of the Premier, which maybe we can discuss separately. But personally I would be unwilling to let go of the notion of divestment. I know there are real live difficulties for people. I nevertheless think the principle is important enough that we should be willing to confront those difficulties. Where exceptions have to be made, then we should provide some mechanism for exceptions, but the principle itself should be one of divestment.

The Chair: The next section will deal with the issue of hardship, so are you suggesting we leave that discussion until the next section?

Ms Gigantes: No. Again, what I would like to do is establish the principle and then if there are going to be exceptions—just as we did in the previous section—we answer the questions in order, with a kind of logic to it.

The Chair: Okay, but it is the next section that deals with those exceptions.

Ms Gigantes: I think we should say in principle that we support divestment.

Mr Harnick: I have really no problem with the comments just made except in terms of the way the legislation or the guidelines will look at the end of the process. For instance, if the guidelines are to remain guidelines that belong to the Premier, I can accept the fact that if this Premier believes in divestiture and he wants guidelines that reflect that belief, I do not have a problem with that. But as the guidelines are now written it becomes impossible, at least for me logically and, I submit, for you, to make that decision, because if the guidelines become the law and become part of the conflict of interest act, they take on a different character.

The problem I have if these guidelines become law—if we look at section 15 it says, “Ministers are required to divest themselves of any asset, liability or financial interest which causes or could appear to cause a conflict of interest.” The answer to what could appear to be or to cause a conflict of interest is left open for someone to decide. If the decision is pursuant to guidelines that are not legislation, it would be the Premier making that decision. If the guidelines become law, who makes that decision?

Certainly the Premier, when he came here, indicated that these matters were to be satisfied or solved to the satisfaction of the Premier and that is what the guidelines say. So if the guidelines become law, they are still at the behest of the Premier and not at the behest of the conflict commissioner. And it becomes very difficult to make those decisions unless you know whether the conflict guidelines are to remain guidelines or become matters of law and become part of the conflict of interest act.

I certainly do not have any problem with the concept of divestiture if that is what this Premier wants for his cabinet ministers and if he wants to be the judge, jury and executioner in terms of the implementation and enforcement of those guidelines. But if those guidelines are to become law, the categorization is different. To be perfectly fair and honest we have to make a decision about whether these guidelines should become law or whether they remain as guidelines, and then the way we categorize these different aspects to it becomes much easier.

The Chair: That is two sections away. “Guidelines for Legislation” addresses that question. Do you want to reserve your comments for that section?

Mr Harnick: I find this to be a very difficult process. It is not clear in my mind. What we are getting involved with here takes on a different meaning if we are looking at guidelines or if we are looking at something that is to become law. If it becomes law it is a much more difficult process because we know there are some very grave deficiencies in section 15, for instance, the idea of the satisfaction of the Premier. If it becomes law and it becomes governed by or under the authority of the conflict commissioner, how does that affect the conflict commissioner in terms of carrying out the guidelines when he has to be subservient to the Premier?

Who is going to define what a business interest is? Is it going to be the Premier or is it going to be the conflict commissioner? Who is going to decide whether a financial interest causes or could appear to cause a conflict of interest? Is it going to be the Premier or is it going to be the conflict commissioner? If it becomes law, we will have a real jurisdictional battle that we will have to deal with, and we will also have some very vague definitions. If it is going to become law, I think we should be amending these clauses, because we have been shown by the conflict commissioner that there are some very grave deficiencies in the way it is worded.

Certainly this committee has the jurisdiction and the authority, regardless of what we decide to do with this, not just to determine the principles of this material but also to amend, on a clause-by-clause basis, the materials, and make the sections better, based on the deficiencies that have been pointed out to us.

Ms Gigantes: Rather than getting into a long dispute about this, let me suggest that if we are going to deal with the issue of divestment, we have to say yes or no. We cannot say yes if it is not law, no if it is law. If there are problems with the question of what the guidelines are going to be, law or somebody’s idea of how an NDP government should run itself, then we can get to that question, but I think we have to assert that in principle we approve of divestment. We think the holding of interests can create conflicts which we would like to limit, and we would like to limit them by way of divestiture.

The Chair: Have we discussed the issue of the recommendation?

Mr Elston: I think you cannot put it in the report that we adopt this thing unanimously. It is obvious to me that there is a considerable amount of divergence of opinion, even within caucus to a certain extent.

In the government caucus there have been some expressions. Some people want to go on and say, “We have established this principle, period,” and I do not think that can be written in the report. Although there may be a majority vote with respect to the wording of the recommendation, I do not think it can be seen to be a unanimous recommendation. That may be the place we have to leave it, that it very well will be an adopted recommendation, having been moved by Mr Morrow, and I think we can anticipate a vote, but at least we can write in the report that there were differences of opinion expressed by the committee members. The resolution was, however, adopted by majority vote. I think you have to leave it at that, because I agree, we cannot sit here and talk about this all—actually, we could all day today, but not several days.

The Chair: No, we cannot; we are to move back to Ms Fawcett’s bill. Can we move along? Mr Elston suggests a vote on this.

Ms Gigantes: I am fairly happy with leaving that statement as our process. I assume we have not adopted that as our process.

Mr Morrow: Mr Chair, the motion is on the floor.

Ms Gigantes: There is a motion on the floor. If it passes, I do not see why the report contains caveats within it. At the end, whoever has caveats can say so, but we do not have to put caveats within the body of the report.

Mr Morrow: There is a motion on the floor. Can we deal with that?

The Chair: There is not a motion on the floor per se, but you do have a recommendation.

Mr Morrow: I made a recommendation.

The Chair: And you would like to vote on it, would you?

Mr Morrow: Yes.

The Chair: We can call it a motion.

Mr Morrow: Same thing—motion, recommendation.

The Chair: Okay. Mr Morrow is moving the following recommendation: "We feel that Mr Justice Evans was correct when he said that a trust can never be blind. We therefore feel that disclosure alone will not suffice, but rather must be accompanied by divestiture. We therefore recommend that the divestment section remain an integral part of the Premier's guidelines."

All in favour of the motion?

Ms Gigantes: Does it have to say "the Premier's guidelines"? Could it not say "guidelines"?

Interjection: They are his guidelines.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Can we move on to section 15, the first paragraph, top of page 6. "These recommendations were made to the committee concerning the meaning of 'undue hardship' and 'appearance of a conflict.' It was suggested that the section as a whole is vague and meaningless and that these terms are"—that should be "too," not "so"—"too subjective."

Mr Elston: How can we amend this without a vote?

The Chair: I think that is clearly a typographical error, Mr Elston. Besides, it was the suggestion of the researcher, who did do the writing.

This section is what Mr Harnick was referring to earlier, the definition of "hardship" being left up to the Premier; how could that be brought into the legislation or how could it be dealt with? Discussion on this section as it is written? Should the paragraph be adopted? There seems to be consensus that the paragraph be adopted. Committee discussion?

Mr Winninger: I find that while there may be some uncertainty in how these terms are defined, because this section is designed to be a discretionary exception to the absolute rule about divestment, there has to be some broad room for interpretation here in coming to the kind of discretionary decision that the Premier would have to make when faced by a claim to such an exception. If you start delineating in great detail what the exceptions would be, you run the risk that you do not cover all the possible permutations or that by defining them so rigidly you are eliminating any discretion on the part of the Premier there.

I would suggest that while there may be some vagueness there, if you become too precise and too rigid in setting out exceptions, then you remove the element of discretion, which I think goes to the—

Mr Elston: You mean the element of surprise.

Mr Winninger: If I had meant the element of surprise, I probably would have said it, but thank you for putting words in my mouth.

That is the point I wanted to make there. I think the wording is quite satisfactory.

The member for Bruce earlier alluded to the situation of the member for Scarborough East and how he had to give up his parliamentary assistantship. In a case like that, where his capitation contract with the Ministry of Health not only could be seen to be a conflict with his parliamentary assistantship, but also was in fact perhaps a conflict, he had the insight to accept that and resign from his position. There are other cases, of course, where there might not be a direct conflict, where it might be in accordance with the public interest that an investment be continued, and it may constitute an undue hardship to have to give up that investment. In that particular kind of case, the exception could be made within the broad terms of guideline 15, and I find the phraseology in which guideline 15 is couched quite acceptable for that reason.

Mr Harnick: I think experience has shown that this section has not to date worked, and in fact, in order for the Premier to get around these guidelines, he issued supplementary directions in order to extricate some of his ministers from an awkward position. He decided to change the definition of "business interest," and that was quite clear in his February documentation. It seems to me that one of the very grave difficulties with this section is the fact that it is left arbitrarily to the Premier. I will say it again: I do not have a problem with that if these are to remain guidelines, but if these are to become more than guidelines, then we make a mockery of what these sections say if we leave the wording vague and ambiguous. If they become law, they have to be precise and we have to know who is going to be making the decision. If they remain guidelines, then we can live with it as being vague and imprecise because it is a matter for this Premier and that is the course he decides to take in dealing with his ministers and parliamentary assistants.

But I do not think you can do that to the conflict commissioner if these guidelines are to become law. Again, you have the very fundamental question that if these guidelines do become law, does the Premier have the overriding decision-making power, as section 15 seems to set out now, or will that be amended so that it will become precise and understandable and able to be interpreted by the conflict commissioner in an independent manner?

Mr Winninger: Excuse me just briefly, Mr Chair. In response to that, I was just going to ask if he would be content if the divestment sections were put in regulations rather than the act.

Mr Harnick: No, because regulations to an act are law and the effect of its being a regulation is the same as its being part of the statute.

Mr Winninger: You can change that by order in council, though.

The Chair: There is a difficulty about the order of the material we are dealing with, Mr Harnick, and you have addressed that by moving ahead to the question of whether it is law or it is guidelines. Is it the wish of the committee to set this section aside and to move on to the next section? No?

Ms Gigantes: Mr Chairman, I think that again we are proceeding with one order of question after another and there is a logical flow. What may be happening is that perhaps Mr Harnick is reading section 15 in the proposed guidelines as if everything in 15 were what is going to be in the next section of our report, because there it says, "except where the minister is satisfied, the Premier," but we still have to come to the question of how the accountability will be framed. So you need not worry about that, because that can be the next decision. We do not need to decide that right now. All we have to decide at this stage is whether there should be exceptions and whether the wording that is proposed, in spite of criticisms by the commissioner, covers our concerns.

To my mind it does, because, for example, you suggest that in fact the definition of "business interest" had to be changed. That is an inaccurate reading of what happened in the case of rental properties and the Premier's application of the proposed guidelines. There, what happened was that it was decided that undue hardship would be extended, and there, what has happened is that there is a judgement made under a term which has proved to be flexible. It is not the kind of rigid armour that one might be afraid of. I think everybody understood the explanation that was given when that application was made, when that change in application of undue hardship and divestment was made. Nobody in fact said it should not be done in regard to rental property. I think that what we have, quite contrary to what you have suggested, is evidence that these kinds of terms have proved applicable, have proved to be terms which can be explained for given circumstances, and that the Premier's understanding of them and application of them changed because of his understanding of what undue hardship might be in certain cases, and I think that proves the value of the terms.

Mr Harnick: With due respect, I see it from the opposite side. Now that you mention "undue hardship" in the context of the Premier's amendments to his guidelines, if you will, or his adjustment to his guidelines, "undue hardship" was merely another term, now that you mention it to me, that is vague and that permits the Premier, as executioner of his guidelines, to allow people to skate out from under those guidelines, just as the definition of what is a "business interest" is a vague term.

In fact, I interpreted the addendum to the guidelines to be a definition of "business interest" in that the Premier permitted rental income from a residential building to be exempt from business income, and made a distinction with business income when he dealt with the rent from a commercial property. He made a definite distinction. It became acceptable for a blind trust to be set up to administer the commercial property, but the rent from the residential property was not considered to be a business interest.

On top of that—I am glad you have pointed it out to me—the other way to skate around these sections is through the "undue hardship" sections. Again, it is so vague that it can be adjusted any which way. I point out that these sections become impossible to interpret unless you know whether they are going to be guidelines or whether they are going to be law. If they are going to be guidelines, I can accept that the Premier can be the judge, the jury and the executioner, because he is making the decision and those are the ground rules he is entitled to live by. It is his prerogative. But if they become law, the characterization and the way in which they are viewed have to be totally different.

The Chair: I have Mr Morrow, Mrs Mathysen and Ms Gigantes all with incredible interest in speaking at the moment. However, it is also 5:30 and we said we would return to Mrs Fawcett's bill at that time. I would like to suggest that we adjourn discussion of the conflict-of-interest guidelines with Mr Morrow's informed input on hold.

Mr Morrow: Can we finish this section please, Mr Chairman?

The Chair: We have accepted the paragraph but not the recommendations. Those have not been put in as yet. I would like to finish it, but I doubt that we will be able to do that in a period of five or 10 minutes and we did make a commitment to return to Mrs Fawcett's bill. I would suggest that we adjourn this discussion.

Mrs Fawcett: If my bill passes within five minutes, then you can return to this and finish it.

The Chair: That is a distinct possibility depending upon the informed consultation the Solicitor General has offered Mr Mills.

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC AMENDMENT ACT (VOLUNTEER FIRE FIGHTERS), 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT LE CODE DE LA ROUTE (POMPIERS AUXILIAIRES)

Resuming consideration of Bill 87, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act with respect to Volunteer Fire Fighters.

Suite à l'étude du projet de loi 87, Loi modifiant le Code de la route relativement aux pompiers auxiliaires.

Mr Mills: I would just like to say a few things in respect to this Bill 87, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act with respect to Volunteer Fire Fighters. I would like to read from Hansard a couple of points that were made on the day the bill was debated. We are talking here of the comments of Mr Dadamo, the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Transportation. He goes on and on and he says this point: "The issuance of a special plate series to identify personal vehicles owned or leased by volunteer firefighters would require changes to public awareness programs, law enforcement awareness materials and our vehicle registration system in Ontario. None of these problems, however, is insurmountable, and they pale beside the necessity of this kind of designation of these vehicles when they are responding to an emergency situation."

He concludes his statement and says, "In view of these facts, I want to offer my support of this bill in principle and urge the other members of my party to support it as well, recognizing that we will need to explore implementation issues." That is from the parliamentary assistant to the Transportation minister. In my role as the parliamentary assistant to the Solicitor General—and I am sure that you are just itching to hear that again—I said: "In summary, the Solicitor General fully supports the principle and the intent of the legislation as a symbol of recognition of the dedicated service provided by the volunteer firefighters of Ontario and as a symbol of the need to facilitate their efforts to improve the safety of our communities. However, a caution: We need to find a mechanism to achieve this which is efficient, effective and responsive, and I am sure that this can be achieved."

So what I am saying is that both the Solicitor General and the Minister of Transportation support this bill 100%. But I have had some discussions this afternoon with people in both ministers' offices, and they tell me that at the moment there are tremendous operational difficulties in passing this. So what we are asking, Mr Chairman, is that we want this set aside. We want to have maybe some hearings from the fire departments, maybe some hearings from the public, certainly representation from the Ministry of Transportation, certainly representation from the Solicitor General—

Mr Elston: This is how you are going to put the can on.

Mr Mills: No, no, no, no. There are two ways—

Mr Elston: That is exactly what you guys are doing.

Mr Mills: We are being exactly fair. We could, Mr Chairman, say, "Support this now and we vote on it and it dies on the order paper." We do not want that. We are saying, "Let's keep it open; let's keep the dialogue and let's pass it and let's get it done." I think this is being very fair and very, very up front that this is how we are going to handle it. We could sit here and it would die.

Mr Elston: You make your presentations in second reading for people to send out in their mailings to their volunteer fire departments; then you come into committee and hope you can hide behind something like "There are operational problems." Gord, that is the oldest story in the world in this business, and I will tell you it is just going to postpone this thing. You guys are going to drop this thing off someplace, and before long what will happen? Well, there will be a new way of dealing with it from the Ministry of Transportation. Or there will be a new way of dealing with it and there will be a big fanfare when the minister or the parliamentary assistant or the parliamentary assistant who may become the minister or whatever go out to the annual meeting of the volunteer fire departments of Ontario and say: "We have decided to do this for you. That other stuff that was being proposed in a private member's bill that was supported by all the people in the Legislature is passé, and we are going to give you the new one."

I am very, very surprised that you are doing this and doing it at such a late date. You did not even have the courtesy of telling Joan that you were going to raise this. I am sorry, but this is stretching it a little bit.

Mr Mills: Mr Chairman, if I can reply to Murray's comments, both the ministers' offices that I spoke to during the recess were absolutely unaware that this was coming up so quickly and this afternoon. Believe it or not, they did not know.

The Chair: It is on the order paper.

Mr Mills: I know, but I am just telling you what they said. There is absolutely no intent of either ministry to scuttle this. In fact, I have gone so far as to photostat the debate in the House and send it to every fire station in my riding, as probably you have too, Joan, to let them know where we are at. If you think I am playing games here, I do not intend to play games. I am saying to you that I like to be honest and I want to tell you honestly that we intend to go forward with this, but to vote on it this afternoon—I am told by the higher echelons that we cannot do this and I am here to put that point of view across.

Mrs Fawcett: I think you are going beyond what the intent of the bill is here, and so possibly are the ministries. If you also notice that, as the minister said, "My ministry will be working whether to implement the contents of this bill," really, the bill just gives permission so that a licence plate may be issued. All of these other things certainly can be worked out. To me those are just ways to implement. They do not have to be in this bill. Even if you want to put them in now, that is fine, but to me they do not have to be there. All we are doing is saying we are going to allow them to have a licence plate and then once they are finished being a volunteer they hand it back in. That is really all that is here. All of this other is something that, together with the fire departments and the volunteers across the province, we can decide. The ministry and whoever is involved can work, but really all this does is say yes, you may have a licence plate. It does not mean that they would go in and demand one.

Mr Mills: The difficulty is that the licence plate might not even be the form they want.

Mrs Fawcett: Right, but it does not matter.

The Chair: We have, I am sure, several possibilities in terms of how to deal with this. The ministries seem to be supportive of the legislation. I am wondering if it might not be appropriate for your caucus to discuss how to respond to it at this moment.

Mr Mills: I have told you.

The Chair: You suggest setting it aside until whatever.

Mr Mills: We want it put over.

The Chair: Until?

Mrs Fawcett: Next week?

Mr Mills: Probably. I was just told that this afternoon is absolutely impossible to deal with this. There was no indication given to me that it would be a month, next week, tomorrow, but I have been told, and I am acting on instructions from both ministers, that it is impossible to deal with it today.

The Chair: Okay. For how long do you wish it set over, sir?

Mr Mills: You tell me when you want to put it in the schedule and then we will have people here.

The Chair: What do we have set for next Monday?

Clerk of the Committee: The only thing this committee is currently considering, other than the bill that was scheduled for today, is conflict-of-interest guidelines.

The Chair: I would suggest that we set it aside until next Monday.

Mr Mills: Right.

The Chair: Is that acceptable? Hopefully we will have informed consultation by that point.

Mrs Fawcett: Will you be placing some amendments?

Mr Mills: I cannot speak for the two ministers involved. I do not see why I seem to be sort of the bat boy for this. When I came and I saw it, right away red flags started ringing in my brain based upon the debate that day. I took it upon myself to go call these ministers and say, "Look, this is up. What do you want done about it?" and the response that I got back is what I am telling you.

Mrs Fawcett: The Minister of Transportation himself said they would be implementing it.

Mr Mills: You see, to just sit here and say we are going to give you a licence plate number is absolutely incredible.

Mr Elston: That is what the House did on second reading. In principle they have adopted that happening.

Mr Mills: In principle, yes.

Mrs Fawcett: Nova Scotia has it right now.

The Chair: We have a resolution to put it aside for one week.

1740

Ms Gigantes: Is it normal process for the committee to inform the ministry or ministries affected by a bill?

The Chair: The bill was, after all, discussed with the PAs from both of those ministries there and commenting on it. It was passed and was referred here.

Ms Gigantes: To inform them of the schedule of our dealing with matters like this.

The Chair: Oh, I see.

Ms Gigantes: It would make eminent good sense.

Clerk of the Committee: Generally what happens, if the committee is having public hearings on a bill—I can use Norm Sterling's bill that was just before the committee as an example. Because we were having public hearings, actually the ministries contacted me, the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of the Attorney General, and said they wished to appear on the bill. Because there were no public hearings on this bill, there was no direction to me from the subcommittee in terms of inviting anybody to comment on the bill. If the committee members would like me to, if they were to tell me which ministry or which groups to invite, that could be arranged for next Monday.

Ms Gigantes: I think if we built it into our process, we would certainly avoid this in the future. It is very frustrating for all of us.

Mr Mills: It is. I do not like to be part of it myself.

The Chair: So our suggestion for next week is to have information, to have hearings on this bill. Is that what you are suggesting?

Mr Mills: My suggestion for next week is that there be present here people from both ministries to discuss this matter with some sort of semblance of order and logic, rather than our just saying we will do it.

The Chair: So you are suggesting that there be invitations sent to the Solicitor General's office and the Ministry of Transportation so that if there are other problems with this—

Mr Elston: They would be making presentations, so there are public hearings.

Mr Mills: Yes.

Mr Elston: That is what they are. The committee is a proponent of the bill, and you will have them here as witnesses then.

Mr Mills: Yes.

Interjection.

Mr Elston: No, they are actually the public in that case, because they are not the proponents of it, so they come only as witnesses for the public interest, I presume.

I would not mind asking, Mr Chair, what huge operational problems are associated with implementing a licence plate program. When people in the Ministry of Transportation figured out that they could make big gobs of money by selling the so-called vanity plates, they did not talk at all about the issue of operational problems. The only thing they felt they had to do was have somebody who looked at the public interest behind the vanity plate and what was said on those plates. There are certain things that have to be screened, and I can understand that. What kind of operational overburden could befall a ministry the size of the Ministry of Transportation when it is talking about getting a plate that is acceptable to the volunteer fire department, if everybody is in favour of doing it? I just do not understand it.

Mr Mills: That is what we will find out next Monday.

Mr Elston: I just find that so totally without ground that it is kind of laughable. I suspect Mr Mills has fortunately awakened somebody who maybe fell asleep at the switch or something, but I cannot agree that there is some big, huge operational difficulty that would seem to create a catastrophe-in-waiting if we say, "Yes, now that we have the principle that we will issue these plates and we will take a look at this bill that says, in two sections, if you are a volunteer fire person, you get the plate, and if you no longer are, ie, you have ceased to be a volunteer firefighter, then you have to turn your plate back in," that that somehow is going to create some kind of catastrophe that brings the whole world falling down around us. I just do not believe it.

The Chair: I am sure that if there are some monumental difficulties with implementation of this legislation, we will be informed of them, and if we are not satisfied with the extent of those difficulties, we can pass it.

Mr Mills: Hold it. I have fresh news off the press that the MOT is now going to support this bill. No one can say I did not try to voice my concerns.

The Chair: Any further comments on the bill?

Mr Morrow: There is a motion on the floor.

Mr Mills: I withdraw that motion.

The Chair: Have you withdrawn, sir? Any further comments on the bill?

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

Les articles 1 à 3, inclusivement, sont adoptés.

Title agreed to.

Le titre est adopté.

Bill ordered to be reported.

Le projet de loi devra faire l'objet d'un rapport.

The Chair: At this point, shall we return to conflict of interest or to the subcommittee report, which should be quickly accepted? We have a quarter of an hour. We can either return to conflict of interest or adjourn early.

Ms Gigantes: I am prepared to move a motion out of the report, section 15.

The Chair: Unless there is a motion to adjourn or to move on to the subcommittee report.

Mr Elston: The subcommittee report has already been passed, I think, in your absence.

CONFLICT-OF-INTEREST GUIDELINES

Resuming consideration of the Premier's conflict-of-interest guidelines.

Ms Gigantes: I am prepared to move a motion, following from section 15, page 6 of the report before us, and I would move the following wording, "However, the committee believes that these terms, as used in the proposed guidelines, will prove useful to their application and to the judgements made under the guidelines."

The Chair: I am sorry. Could the clerk read that again, please.

Clerk of the Committee: Ms Gigantes moves the following wording for section 15, "However, the committee believe that these terms, as used in the proposed guidelines, will prove useful to their application and to the judgements made under the guidelines."

Motion agreed to.

The Chair: Shall we move on to the next section or shall we adjourn?

Mr Carr: I move we adjourn.

Mr Mills: Adjourn. We are going to be caught halfway between something anyway.

Ms Gigantes: I think we could probably finish—

The Chair: Moving on to the next section.

Mr Elston: In fairness, this is a section Mr Harnick had a particular interest in, and although we may start the discussion, I suspect we may have to repeat it when Mr Harnick comes back, so maybe Mr Mills's earlier suggestion is a good suggestion for us.

The Chair: We will adjourn till 3:30 tomorrow, when we resume discussion of conflict-of-interest guidelines.

The committee adjourned at 1749.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

STANDING COMMITTEE ON ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

Monday 10 June 1991

The committee met at 1555 in room 228.

CONFLICT-OF-INTEREST GUIDELINES

Resuming consideration of the Premier's conflict-of-interest guidelines.

The Chair: I would like to call the meeting to order. We had finished section 15, page 6 of Susan's report in regard to conflict of interest. We had gone down to the committee discussion and recommendation of this question of guidelines and legislation.

Mr Morrow: If I may make a small clarification on this, did we not read through all of page 7 when I was in the chair last, Mr Chair, and then we were just going into recommendations after page 7?

The Chair: Yes, discussion and recommendations from the committee on page 8?

Ms Gigantes: Mr Chair, I am willing to lead off discussion on this section. It appears to me that the whole point of looking at this matter at this stage is to make sure that we have conflict-of-interest legislation which is going to be an improvement on the existing legislation. I think it would be useful for us to take that as an assumption, if that is agreeable to the committee, and then talk about, flowing out of that, what structure the legislation should provide for its administration.

I am quite content to see the same structure as currently applies in the Members' Conflict of Interest Act, and that would mean essentially that the commissioner would have a widened mandate, because our conflict-of-interest legislation would be wider. The commissioner would have the responsibility for taking up any requests for inquiries under the act, the responsibility for reporting to the Legislature, and then the Legislature would determine what happens.

It seems to me to be not fruitful to spend an extended period of time talking about the role of the Premier in this. The Parliament will decide what to do with the report, as Parliament does, if my proposal is followed, under many other acts of a similar kind, for example, the Ombudsman Act and the existing conflict of interest act, and the Premier would be obviously a key person in that Parliament in ultimately deciding what happened on a given matter. But I think the reporting through Parliament and a decision by Parliament gives the Premier as much leeway as he or she may need in the future to decide how to treat a matter on which the commissioner has reported, and the mechanism that is currently in the act would provide Parliament with the independent reporting function that people have felt important.

I would suggest as a start for discussion that we think about those notions.

Mr Harnick: It is interesting to note in the paper there was only one witness who suggested that the guidelines be incorporated into legislation. The overwhelming weight of opinion was indecision about the effectiveness of that matter, or from the person who knows more about it than anybody else and the person who is most independent in his views on this matter—and I am referring to Chief Justice Evans—the opinion was that we not make this part of the legislation. I certainly hear what Ms Gigantes is saying, and we did have some information discussions. I would point out to her the provisions of section 16 of the Members' Conflict of Interest Act, 1988, and I will recite that section so that it is clear to everyone here.

It states:

“(1) Upon receiving a request under section 15, and on giving the member concerned reasonable notice, the commissioner may conduct an inquiry.

“(2) Where the request for an opinion is made under subsection 15(1) or (2), the commissioner may elect to exercise the powers of a commission under parts I and II of the Public Inquiries Act, in which case those parts apply to the inquiry as if it were an inquiry under that act.

“(3) Where the request for an opinion is made under subsection 15 (1) or (2), the commissioner shall report his or her opinion to the Speaker of the assembly who shall cause the report to be laid before the assembly if it is in session or, if not, at the next session.

“(4) Where the request for an opinion is made under subsection 15(3), the commissioner shall report his or her opinion to the clerk of the executive council.”

Then we go on to section 17:

“(1) Where the commissioner conducts an inquiry under parts I and II of the Public Inquiries Act for the purposes of subsection 15(1) or (2) and finds that the member has contravened section 3, 4, 6, 7, 8 or 9, or has refused to file a disclosure statement within the time provided by section 12, the commissioner may recommend in the report that is laid before the assembly,

“(a) that the member be reprimanded;

“(b) that the member's seat be declared vacant until an election is held in the member's electoral district.

“(2) The assembly shall consider the commissioner's report and respond to it as subsection (3) provides within six months of the day the report is laid before the assembly.

“(3) The assembly may order the imposition of the recommendation of the commissioner under subsection (1) or may reject the recommendation, and sections 45 and 48 of the Legislative Assembly Act apply in the same manner as to a contempt of the assembly, except the power to further inquire into the contravention or to impose a punishment other than the one recommended.”

So it is not quite as simple as having an act that is left to the discretion of the Premier. If this is really going to work, then if you want to make it legislation the option has got to be there that it be left totally in the hands of the commissioner, not in the hands of the Premier. If the guidelines are to be left in the hands of the Premier, then I submit they should be left in his hands as guidelines only. If the Premier wants to maintain the power to make the decision at the end of the day, then the guidelines should be left as guidelines so they can be used however the Premier of the day wants to use them.

Some premiers of the day may elect to have different guidelines for their ministers. We heard some evidence that the guidelines that were imposed by Premier Davis were more stringent than these guidelines, yet they were guidelines only and they worked as guidelines. If at the end of the day the Premier wants to have his cake and eat it too, then they should be left only as guidelines. If you want them to become law, then it is incumbent to remain consistent and not only make them law but leave them to the Conflict of Interest Commissioner to make the final decision, as opposed to the Premier.

I believe that the reason the government members seem to be opting to make these law is quite simply because a couple of cabinet ministers, all of whom are rookie cabinet ministers—not cabinet ministers with any experience, but the rookie cabinet ministers who came in here without exception were of the belief that public perception is what should make these guidelines law, and nothing more.

We heard the evidence of experienced cabinet ministers, and we also heard the evidence of the independent conflict commissioner, who said that those in public life are by and large good, honourable people. In fact, not a single person who came and gave evidence before this committee could indicate any issues in which there was an abuse of a minister's responsibilities and any gain that he attained because of that abuse. No one could point to one single incident where these primarily divestiture and other guidelines were necessary.

There had never been an instance in the past that anyone in modern times could recall where the conflict-of-interest rules, either in the Conservative government pre-1985 or in the Liberal and NDP marriage between 1985 and 1987 and the Liberal government from 1987 to 1990 would have been necessary. No one could name a single incident. Yet there was, on the part of the rookie cabinet ministers who came in here, a perceived notion that these guidelines had to become law because it was the public's perception that mattered. It was not the fact that there had been no incidents where guidelines like these were necessary; it was this perceived notion.

I point out that the conflict commissioner, who has been fully aware of the conflict-of-interest laws in this province and has administered the Members' Conflict of Interest Act, said that these guidelines were not necessary—and certainly were not necessary to become law—to do any more than the conflict of interest act was already doing. If these guidelines do become law, and they should not, they should at least be implemented without the Premier being the final arbiter. It should be the conflict commissioner who is the final arbiter.

I point out as well for members of the committee the evidence that we heard about divestment: We heard that the requirement of divestiture is draconian and unnecessary; it is not a realistic option; if divestiture is adopted there should be an exception for those corporations or businesses that are not likely to become involved with government; if divestiture is adopted it should also apply to pension plans; some exceptions should be made for small family businesses; divestiture is not appropriate because it cannot apply to non-economic matters such as political interests; divestiture is wrong; instead, disclosure should be strengthened: focus on complete disclosure with severe penalties, including a financial penalty, in addition to losing one's seat.

The words "could appear to cause a conflict of interest" in section 15(a) are vague and subjective. The term "business interest" should be defined to exclude investments. The terms "appropriate undertaking" and "not consistent with the public interest" need to be clarified. Those criticisms are really a scathing epitaph of section 15 of the conflict guidelines.

I put it to you people that if you are going to decide to make this law, which obviously you are going to do because the marching orders have been given, at least clean it up so that it reads like real legislation, so it is not this nonsense that has caused this government sleepless nights. Surely you are not going to make this law with the knowledge that every witness coming in here save and except for one, who has said that this section is a proper section in the form that it now appears in—

Ms Gigantes: Some simply did not comment.

Mr Harnick: That is probably because they did not know. But of all those who commented, I point out to Mrs Gigantes, only one had anything positive to say about the divestiture sections. Surely if you are going to make these guidelines law, you cannot make them law in the form in which they appear, because they are just incomplete. If this committee is supposed to be looking at these guidelines with a view to whether these guidelines should become law, the answer is that they should not if you are going to listen to the evidence that came before this committee. If you want to ignore that because you have your marching orders to do it, go ahead. It is your sleepless nights. I am quite sure that the next government, and it will not be you, is going to get rid of these anyway.

Mr Sorbara: Let's see now, it will not be the Tories, so—

Mr Morrow: It will not be the Tories and it will not be the Liberals.

Mr Harnick: I did not say that. But surely if you are considering making these law, do not do it in the abstract. Send it back and get some decent legislation that people can live with and that defines who is going to make the decisions at the end of the day. I urge you not to just take your marching orders from upstairs and from whatever minister is calling the shots here, but to take a look at what the witnesses said, so that all the time we spent here asking them questions and compiling their answers and doing the summaries has not been totally wasted. Surely if you do that, you cannot say you want this conflict-of-interest guideline material to become law.

Mr Sorbara: What can I say? It is great to be back. I am sorry we are still discussing these guidelines, but it is good to be back on the committee. Just to explain to you in the chair, sir, I have been called away by my party to participate in hearings of our party to consider the recent budget of the government. It is not all, all, all bad, I report, at least from the southwest, where I was, and the north. But it is pretty bad; it does not look good at all. Some of the concern was expressed in terms I had not heard in my six years in politics. Particularly the fear—

Ms Gigantes: Is this in order, Mr Chair?

Mr Sorbara: Totally in order.

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, could you refer perhaps to the question that we are discussing.

Mr Sorbara: I think my friend the member from Ottawa Centre is a little bit touchy about our inappropriate interjections in the House today. The reason I was making those comments is because I just wanted to say a little bit about listening and not listening. My own sense in this committee considering these guidelines is that all the decisions have been made elsewhere and the members of the committee are not really very interested in considering the evidence we heard or expressing a personal view about whether we should be incorporating these proposals into legislation or keeping them in guidelines.

So I guess I am just talking for the record in saying I believe very strongly that it would be ill advised to recommend to the government that it bring back legislation if that legislation requires ministers of the crown to divest themselves of the business interests and the assets that they have.

I argue that case from two perspectives. The first is based on the evidence we heard before this committee. We heard from only one real expert, Chief Justice Gregory Evans, who has been dealing with the issue of conflict of interest for quite some time on behalf of the government of Ontario. He said requiring a minister to divest of his interests is draconian and he said no other jurisdiction in the world had such measures.

Why is it draconian? I think probably members of this committee should ask themselves that question honestly. Why did Gregory Evans describe the proposal that ministers be required to divest themselves of their business interests and assets as draconian? I wonder if any members have asked themselves that question, because if you ask yourselves the question, then quickly you find that what you are doing when you put that into guidelines or legislation is basically disqualifying anyone with business interests or assets from participating as a member of the executive council.

This should be of great interest to my friend the member for Ottawa Centre, because here she is sitting on a legislative committee and only two months ago she was a member of the executive council. The kind of system that we have in Ontario unfortunately, and I say this with great honesty, required her to step down from the executive council, at least for a period of time. I expect she will be back there, probably sooner rather than later, but those are the niceties of the way in which politics are undertaken in this province.

I ask my friend Mr Winninger, are you a lawyer?

Mr Winninger: Is that a rhetorical question?

Mr Sorbara: No, it is not. I am really interested because the remarks I am about to make need the understanding of a legal mind to follow very, very clearly. So I ask, in all sincerity, you are a lawyer, are you not, sir?

Mr Winninger: And I ask, is that a rhetorical question?

Mr Sorbara: No, it is not. It is a question of substance. You do not have to answer. You are not on the witness stand.

Mr Winninger: In that case, I am not a practising lawyer, because I have divested myself of my law practice.

Mr Sorbara: But you are still a member of the Law Society of Upper Canada.

Mr Winninger: No, I am not. I do not pay dues to the law society. I am not a member of the law society.

Mr Sorbara: But you had been, up until your election, a practising lawyer.

Mr Winninger: Yes, that part is true. Is this cross-examination?

Mr Sorbara: No, not at all.

The Chair: Mr Winninger, I believe, was to have been one of our witnesses. However, we have not the opportunity to examine him in any detail today.

Mr Sorbara: The only reason I mentioned that is because if Mr Winninger has ever practised law, he will understand what is involved in the legal ramifications of divesting of a business interest, particularly within the terms of the guidelines as presented; that is, sale within, say, 60, 90 or even 120 days, or whatever. He will understand, for example, that if I own an asset that has an adjusted cost base of say $100,000—

Mr Winninger: Try a few million.

The Chair: Allow Mr Sorbara to continue.

Mr Sorbara: If a member has an asset with an adjusted cost base of $100,000 and a current market value of, let's say, $500,000, if a member is required to sell that, he will incur very substantial tax liabilities in the form of a capital gains tax, which would be 25% of the difference between $500,000 and $100,000, or $400,000, and the tax liability would be one quarter of that, or $100,000. So right away, if you sell your asset you incur that tax liability.

I think it is fair that we have those capital gains taxes, but oftentimes that is the only ramification of a quick sale of an asset of that sort. You do not get cash from the deal but the tax collector wants his tax right away. So if you cannot raise the money to pay the taxes you cannot even sell the asset, because generally what you are taking back is security in the form of a mortgage or a promise to pay. That is all the more so if, as is likely, the asset that is owned is not full and complete ownership but, say, the ownership of 25% of an asset worth, say, $1 million.

My friend Mr Winninger, if no one else on the committee, will understand that the only realistic purchaser of the 25% interest in that business is the 75% owners, and often that is a collection of 2, 3, 4, 10 or 20 people. Mostly those partners are uninterested in buying the asset. Mostly those partners do not have the cash available to buy the asset, and they will tell you that if you want to practise politics, do not make it their problem. They are not interested in buying the asset.

I use those examples just to say that the suggestion in the Premier's guidelines that if you have a business interest you should sell it is so inappropriate that to actually put that in legislation would be very foolish. I am wondering if this committee is really going to take that into consideration. If they are not and if they are going to do that—and my friend from Guelph is nodding his head, suggesting that they are just going to go ahead—I guess that is fine. That will have to be repealed when this government is finally voted out of office. But it would be very disappointing.

Just to use some examples, Franklin Delano Roosevelt would not have been able to comply with the Premier's guidelines but probably Richard Nixon would have. Clearly a Trudeau would not have been able to comply with this government's guidelines, but probably Joe Clark would have. It does not make a whit of difference in other words, Mr Chairman, as to the quality of the government you get that you would suggest someone would have to sell his interest in order to qualify for the executive council under Bob Rae. But the fact is, who in their right mind would do it?

Every minister knows you are liable to make a mistake of the kind made by the member from Ottawa Centre and you have to step down, and what is left? I got to spend a month in Bob Rae's cabinet, I sold everything I had, I took a beating, the market was not good and then I made a mistake. It was an honest mistake but politics requires me to step down. Give me a break. Who in their right mind would do that? If you own a small manufacturing concern or if you own a small interest in property, who would do that for the opportunity to serve in the cabinet?

Gregory Evans when he testified here before this committee had it right; no one. He said what you are liable to get is a bunch of ex-inmates from Millhaven and Penetang. I am not sure that was put terribly delicately but I am quoting the commissioner. The fact is that you know if you do that, you suggest to many people who could contribute effectively in the executive council of a province like Ontario that you are basically closing the door to their participation.

I know the member for Middlesex is not really interested in this and this is my—

Mrs Mathysen: I am fascinated, Mr Sorbara, but I am having a little bit of trouble imagining you spending one month in a Bob Rae government.

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, are you finished your comments?

Mr Sorbara: No, I am not. I am not finished—

The Chair: Please, please do so, sir.

Mr Winner: We are extending the guidelines to cover leadership candidates.

Mr Sorbara: You probably would like to do that but it does not matter. I have had now some six years and a little bit of experience here and one thing that I have not found, I tell my friend the member for London South, in six years of doing this business is a member who is fundamentally here to line his or her own pocket. I have seen people with very large egos, I have seen people who just throw themselves at this work with all of the addiction of a workaholic, but I have never seen anyone who is here to make himself or herself richer or to further his or her private interests.

I have never seen that. I do not see that in the 74 members who now make up your caucus, I do not see it in any of your ministers, I do not see any of them trying to figure out how they can personally benefit from the work that they do. I did not see that in the cabinet that I was a part of. I did not see that in any of my caucus members. I did not see that in the opposition members who were part of the Legislature. In fact, I have never seen it.

I imagine that someplace in our history there have been a few scoundrels. I do not think these guidelines or the casting of legislation around these guidelines will dampen the enthusiasm of a scoundrel one single bit. If you are going to cheat, if you are going to use your public trust to further your private interests, you are going to do it.

I have seen Bob Rae make the wildest of allegations about cabinet ministers in this regard, that they were trying to further their private interests, and I have seen our guys go down that path a little bit as well in respect of some of the incumbent cabinet ministers, not as aggressively, by the way, as Bob Rae did when he was Leader of the Opposition in respect particularly of a couple of our members, but they were alive then and they are alive now.

Most people when they get elected to this place generally want to serve the public interest and set aside their private interests. Most of us, I think, forgo wages and salaries that are significantly above what we make here as MPPs or ministers. Most forgo, I think, very substantially. That is the case in our caucus and I think probably it is in the case of the Progressive Conservative caucus and the government caucus as well.

Mr Winner, for example, has been a lawyer. If he decided to go back to the practice of law, he could probably make substantially more than he does as an MPP. He might choose to practise in an area where the salaries are not very good, but if he decided to apply himself to that practice, he would make substantially more than he is making as an MPP.

We say now we are going to put into place guidelines and make them legislation. I think it is so crassly political. I know that Bob Rae in opposition had to advocate this system of divesting. I understood why he would do that. But it was interesting the degree to which he had to back-track when a few ministers and parliamentary assistants could not sell interests that they had. Poor Anthony Perruzza, the member for Downsview, who had some small interest in a piece of property. The suggestion now is that he is going to have to sell it. It is so stupid to consider that Perruzza would have to sell that interest in order to continue to perform his duties as a parliamentary assistant of something or other.

Mr Harnick: On a point of order, Mr Chairman: It is interesting that Mr Fletcher makes the comment about poor Mr Perruzza that he will get that interest back as soon as this job is over anyway. It goes to show you how significant these conflict-of-interest guidelines really are.

The Chair: Excuse me. I do not think that is a point of order.

Mr Harnick: No, it probably is not, but I just wanted to get that out.

Mr Fletcher: Excuse me, Mr Chairman. Somebody is reading into the record something that I do not remember saying.

Mr Sorbara: They say memories are very short in politics. I guess Mr Fletcher provides an example of the shortest memory in the history of this Parliament if he has forgotten so quickly. It was about a 15-second loss of memory.

Anyway, it does not matter one way or the other whether he gets it back or whether he does not get it back. It is all politics. To suggest that people should sell their interest so that they can serve the people of this province is so stupid that it defies serious consideration.

Bob Rae can put it in guidelines because when he got elected he made a career out of accusing people of violating the public trust. For five years in this Legislature, he made a career out of that. He destroyed reputations on the basis that people were cheating and were violating the public trust. Ask Chaviva Hosek. Ask Joan Smith. Ask Elinor Caplan. Ask René Fontaine. Ask the member for Ottawa Centre. She experienced part of it. He made a career out of it, so when he got here he had to portray himself as holier than thou. "All of my ministers"—

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, the microphone system is working.

Mr Sorbara: Well, I get mad about it because these are my friends. Evelyn Gigantes witnessed it.

Ms Gigantes: You are no friend of mine.

Mr Winner: With friends like that, who needs enemies?

Mr Sorbara: Ask Steven Mahoney about the allegation.

I think that one day we are going to stop being so crassly political with people's lives in this place. I will tell you one thing. When our government is re-elected, if you put this into legislation, my sense is that we will repeal it, that we will ask people with significant interests to put those interests aside, to place them beyond their control and to dedicate themselves fully to the public concern. But to suggest that you would have to, in the style of St Francis of Assisi, sell all you have to serve Bob Rae is so crassly political and so designed simply to justify the kind of outrages that the now Premier undertook during his time as opposition leader that above all it is just sad.

We had one witness of substance before this committee who had no political interest whatever in the outcome of our deliberations and that was the Conflict of Interest Commissioner, and he said that it was draconian and unnecessary.

I want to predict that this committee will probably decide that this should be in legislation. We are going to disagree with that and we will have a dissenting opinion, a minority report, to accompany this report if that is what they choose to do. But that is neither here nor there. I do not think many will read nor will many care, but the fact is we have an obligation to do that, simply to say the government is wrong in what it is considering.

I look forward to further consideration of this section. I think this is one of the most important in the report. I think the work that has been done in the commentary is sufficient and appropriate and reflects what we have heard. I would simply ask members of the committee to set aside the orders they have received from the people who are running this place and to consider making a substantive recommendation, that if the Premier chooses to implement these guidelines, that is fine, but he ought not to make it the law of Ontario.

Ms Gigantes: Mr Chair, would you give me guidance? Would it be appropriate to attempt to focus our discussion by putting a motion? I am prepared to put a motion.

I move that the proposed guidelines be incorporated into the Members' Conflict of Interest Act and that the mechanism of administration—

Mr Harnick: On a point of order, Mr Chairman: Does this mean that we are finished discussing?

Ms Gigantes: No. I am putting a motion to help focus our discussion.

The Chair: Ms Gigantes suggested a motion around which discussion can hang.

Ms Gigantes moves that the proposed guidelines be incorporated into the Members' Conflict of Interest Act and that the mechanism of administration be the same as is currently in the act, ie, through report to the Legislature by the conflict commissioner in the ways suggested by the act.

Mr Harnick: With respect to the motion—

Ms Gigantes: Do I get to speak to it?

The Chair: I believe you do.

Mr Harnick: Can I say something about the form of the motion?

The Chair: Ms Gigantes?

Ms Gigantes: Mr Chair, did you rule on Mr Harnick's request?

The Chair: It was not a point of order and you have the floor.

Ms Gigantes: I think it might be considered a point of order, but I am quite prepared to speak to the motion as it is.

It does attempt to combine two items, namely, one, the direction in which we are going, in other words towards legislation, and two, the method of administration being proposed, which is the same as in the existing act.

If I could just take a few moments and go back over what our two friends from the opposition parties have been saying, if we boil it down, Mr Sorbara has been saying the guidelines propose something that is inconvenient, something that is messy and, in the end, something that is unnecessary. Further, from the point of view of the party he represents on this committee, were it to come to power, it would repeal such legislation. Mr Harnick is saying, I think most simply, that the content of the guidelines is not necessary, and from both we have heard that there has been only one witness who spoke in favour of having the guidelines incorporated into the existing act.

I think that is really not an adequate representation of the testimony that was before this committee. I count five ministers of the crown who came before this committee and talked about the purpose of the guidelines in a way that I, for one, read clearly as establishing a legal reference. I think those are significant contributions, and if others disagreed, it is a matter of difference of opinion.

I, for one, quite the opposite of what Mr Sorbara has suggested, felt that I had urged Mr Rae on this matter in a discussion many months ago, long before the election. I had a chat with him when he visited Ottawa, and he said to me, "What do you think we ought to be doing?" I said, "One of the things I really think is that the public feels it is necessary to have stronger conflict-of-interest legislation and to clean up the political apparatus, both at the national level and at the provincial level," and for all the protestations of members' offices, in fact, there have been some serious difficulties with political conflict of interest.

Mr Harnick: Name one.

Ms Gigantes: I do not want to get into cases, but there have been.

Mr Harnick: Name one.

Ms Gigantes: No. We are not going to get into that silliness.

Mr Harnick: Name one.

The Chair: Mr Harnick, please.

Ms Gigantes: The mechanism that we are proposing to use and I am proposing to use is the one that exists. It seems to have worked well as a mechanism. Now what the members opposite are complaining about is that they do not like the content which will be carried by that mechanism. It is too tough for them. It is too messy for those with business interests. It is too inconvenient, and above all, they say it is unnecessary. Well, I think that is their opinion. I do not believe that.

Mr Sorbara: Just a point of order if I might, Mr Chair.

Ms Gigantes: Further, we have talked about—

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, is this a point of order?

Mr Sorbara: Yes. Unfortunately, the member for Ottawa Centre is suggesting I indicated that the guidelines are messy and inconvenient. I think that if there were a review made of Hansard, you would find, sir, that is not—

The Chair: The member for Ottawa Centre did not name you, sir.

Mr Sorbara: The point of order that I want to make is this. A motion was moved by the member for Ottawa Centre. I am not sure if you ruled whether that is in order, but if it is I would just like to know, as we go through the report, whether in each case where the report provides for committee discussion and recommendations we are going to be proceeding to determine what is said in those sections by way of motion from the government or from others, or whether there is going to be a draft prepared by our researcher and submitted for consideration of the members. If that is the case, I would suggest that we make a decision about that so each of us could have motions prepared section by section as we come here. This is the first time I have dealt with a report of this sort, so I am really looking for direction from you, sir, on how we are going to order our business and whether we are going to proceed by way of motion and votes on the motions that are made or whether we are going to have—

The Chair: That has been the way we have proceeded, by way of motion as a final achievement in terms of the consensus of the committee. I think you are probably right; if you are able to have ready on paper some preparation of ideas or thoughts around the substance of a particular section, that would probably be preferable.

Mr Sorbara: Yes, but I just—

The Chair: I believe that the member for Ottawa Centre has the floor still, and I think her motion is proper.

Mr Sorbara: Well, if that is the case—

Interjection.

Mr Sorbara: If I might just finish, Mr Harnick, would it not be appropriate, if the government is proposing to proceed in that way—perhaps appropriate is not the right word, but as a matter of courtesy—to have copies of the motion available for other members.

The Chair: It is being copied as we speak.

Mr Sorbara: Right. Do you want to have an adjournment until those are available?

Mr Harnick: On a point of order, Mr Chairman: I have become a little confused—

Ms Gigantes: Is this a different point of order? I wish to speak to Mr Sorbara's point of order.

Mr Harnick: It is very much part and parcel of what he said. I have become confused in that I believe what Mr Sorbara was asking was, if it will be the opinion of this committee that these guidelines are going to become law, will we then be having the opportunity to go through the guidelines clause by clause to propose amendments to the guidelines? Is that what Mr Sorbara was saying? Maybe Mr Sorbara should clarify that, because he would know best.

Ms Gigantes: Mr Chairman, on a point of order: In part I wish to speak to a couple of the items which have been raised. I think I did indicate earlier that the purpose of the motion, in my view, was to focus the discussion. We have come to a section of the report which I think we all, on all sides, feel is critical to the shape of the report. It is one of the principles that we have to decide, and I have put forward a motion which I hope will help us decide that. As to what other members wish to do in terms of voting on it, perhaps if it is incorporated into the report, further elaborated by our staff and acceptable to at least the majority on this committee, if they then still have strong objections, presumably they can take action afterward.

On the question of going through item by item, I do not look upon this as a drafting exercise that we are into here. We are into the writing of a report; we are into deciding the basic principles that we would like to see reported for changes in the legislation, if changes to the legislation are what we adopt. I think as we go through certain sections, if people want to make motions on those sections, fine, but I do not think we have to invent the report as we go. I do think we can count on the staff, as we have here earlier, to help us draft the report based on the principles that we lay out and the arguments that we use around those principles. Can I continue now?

The Chair: Please do.

Mr Sorbara: Just a final word on the point of order, Mr Chairman.

The Chair: I thought that the point of order had already been thoroughly discussed, and Ms Gigantes has the floor.

Mr Harnick: I personally am still waiting for clarification of Mr Sorbara's point of order, which I thought I had asked for. I am hoping Mr Sorbara will elaborate.

Mr Sorbara: Then with the permission of the Chair—

Mr Winner: Anything to play for time.

Mr Harnick: No, I asked. You guys are the ones in a hurry. I say do it right, but you guys just want to do it. If we are here to do this quickly, then why bother? You guys have seven people on the committee. Just put up your hands and then away we go. If you people want it to be done properly—

The Chair: Could we have a little bit of order here for the moment?

Mr Harnick: If you want to impute a false motive to everything that happens here, because you are so self-righteous, the bunch of you—

The Chair: Mr Harnick, please, we are trying to conduct a little business today. You were asking about Mr Sorbara's point of order, which had to do with the issue of what it was we were discussing. We had discussed that, I believe, in the sense that we were clearly looking at each section and coming up with recommendations, and Ms Gigantes had a motion in regard to this particular section. Ms Gigantes has the floor.

Ms Gigantes: I will wrap up very briefly. The final point I want to mention is this question raised by Mr Harnick of who is the final arbiter and what difference that makes to the approach he is willing to take on this whole question of conflict of interest.

In the conflict of interest act as we have it now, the mechanism is pretty straightforward. By various means, the commissioner can become aware of the need. He can be requested to meet the need for an investigation of a potential conflict of interest under the act. He has powers to investigate which are granted under the act, and they fall in line with the Public Inquiries Act.

When he has finished his investigation, depending on the nature of the investigation he has undertaken, he can report in various ways. In major matters, it is clear from the act that he would be reporting a major report to the Legislature. In this case, the final arbiter is the Legislature, as it is in so many of the other areas in which we have set up ways of monitoring and administering what we consider to be fair and progressive kinds of political administration in this province.

The formula is now a relatively standard one. It has been developed over the last 15 or 20 years, and I think on the whole it has served us well. I know of no particular complaints under the existing act. If either of the other parties do, perhaps we should consider them, but the final arbiter on major matters will obviously be the Legislature.

The Premier is a member of the Legislature, and he or she will take a personal position which will have more or less effect among the various other members of the Legislature. Some of that may be overwhelmingly determined by party, and in other cases there may be different points of view from within parties. That has been the case before on other matters and will be again, I am sure, in the future.

I think the mechanism that is provided here is one that clearly identifies where the final arbitration occurs on major matters, and I think, given the fact that it has worked well, that is one we should continue to use in the act as we incorporate a wider mandate for the commissioners' work.

The Chair: Mr Carr?

Mr Carr: Yes, thanks, Mr Chair. I was—

Mr Mills: Are you with it?

Mr Carr: That is what I am just thinking.

Interjection: We are now back on the motion.

Mr Carr: The only point I wanted to put in about this goes back to the part about divestment. As we look at the act, I go back to what the conflict commissioner said about the whole situation, which was that the requirement of divestment is draconian. The big concern I have when we incorporate these guidelines into the law is what he said, going way back during his testimony, and I am quoting now from Susan's fine summary of that day, "The proposed divestment rules will make it more difficult for all political parties to continue to recruit good candidates, and especially from among those who have accumulated assets, done well in their communities and are making a good living."

I think one of the things I was little bit surprised at when I came to the Legislature is how precarious your terms are in cabinet, and for various reasons—the Chair quit on us; I talk, he leaves—how difficult it is to remain in cabinet or get into cabinet. I was a little bit surprised at how easy it is to be removed from cabinet, and you can see an example of one of the members here, but also at a situation something like Mr Kormos's, where he is removed from his position in cabinet.

I was also a little surprised when we heard some of the testimony from some of the previous cabinet ministers. It was over a situation one of them related, that one day they were actually having a cabinet meeting, and by the time they had finished the cabinet meeting, that individual, who was participating in the cabinet meeting, was gone within a half-hour: one minute in the cabinet, the next minute completely gone. It was Hart of the previous administration. When you look at the amount of time it would take some of them to divest, that divestment within the time frame of the guidelines, as Judge Evans was talking about, may also result in the significant loss of value of an asset and result in what he called a distress sale.

What I am concerned about is that there are not enough people now willing to throw their hat in the ring and get into this game, unless they become so upset with what is going on that they decide to do it. But I am worried, as the judge was obviously, that a lot of people are going to take a look at it and say, "No, I am not going to give up my interest in the corner store," or whatever it may be.

I was particularly interested when the judge said that divestment of certain assets may be necessary as a practical matter, but complete divestment is not a realistic option. We are asking people to jump into a situation, potentially give up what has been their livelihood and jump into the political game when the reward for getting in and getting into cabinet and really having some decision-making power is at best very precarious.

I just wanted to add those points, because as we sit and reflect, we should not only be thinking about ourselves, because quite frankly the three cabinet ministers who came in, Ms Lankin, Mr Wildman and Mr Laughren, all said they did not have anything anyway. I found it very strange that they came in and said: "Boy, divestment is the way we should go. We've got to divest, but I don't have anything myself." If we had been able to bring in some who were able to sit down and talk about it—and I am talking about putting in a preliminary when all three of them came in, and I can understand why they did. They did not want to have anybody who possibly had it.

But in our first go-around they brought in the Chairman of Management Board who is now the Health Minister, the Treasurer and also Mr Wildman, whom everybody knows for having been around here, of course. They brought in people who said, "Yes, divestment is the way to go, but I don't have anything to divest." If you had somebody who was able to come in and say, "I personally am going to lose a lot of money by divesting," then I think it would have carried a little bit more weight with the public. But to come in and say, "We're going to do this because of some perceived problems in the public's mind, but don't worry about it because I don't personally have anything to lose," I think there certainly would have been a little more credibility had somebody come in who had a great deal to lose.

When we heard this testimony, going way back, I think the big fear is that they sent some of the ones who are probably the best speakers and who would not get into trouble and say something wrong during this period of time. But if they had been able to send in somebody who said, "I've had this business but I really believe divestment should happen because I believe in it," then there would be some credibility. Poor Bud, he even laughed about it, as did the Treasurer. They even joked, if you remember correctly, about how poor they were. They laughed and made light of it. Here we are saying to the public, "Boy, we're going to come in with these tough guidelines. We're going to ask everybody to divest," but then the people who are going to be affected, it is not going to affect them.

I think we sometimes have to look past the present circumstances of some of the cabinet ministers and look to the future, take a look at somebody who may own a small business who is going to say: "No, that's it. I'm not going to get involved in the political process because I'm not going to give up all my hard-earned dollars and everything I've worked for." Remember, when you start a business you do give up a lot. I had one of the chaps in who owns a small brokerage company, auto insurance, an insurance broker, and he said to me, "The thing is, when you start a business like this and it's just a fairly small office, what you give up is not just the time—because you give up the time away from your children that you never get back—it's not just the money, but it's the whole way of life that you put into a business." I think that is true.

What we are saying now is that we are going to take a part of the people of this province and say, "No, you can't get involved in the political process because you're going to have to give up something so personal." Although, as Mr Wildman said, the thing he gave up that was worth more to him than anything else was time with his children. Actually, I think members will remember he got rather emotional because he said, "I've spent so much time and that is something I'll never get back," and I guess his kids are fairly old now.

We are asking people to give up time with their families, particularly someone like him who spends so much time travelling from a distance. You are expected to give up all your financial rewards that you have worked for, completely divest and, as the judge said, do so at a distress sale where you are not even going to get fair value for what you have because of the fact there is the time limit.

I think what we should attempt to do is take a look at somebody who is trying to look at it from a non-political standpoint, who is trying to be helpful in some of his proposals and is saying, "No, we don't need to have complete divestment for this thing to work." As we sit back and reflect, I think we should not look at this current crop of cabinet ministers who come in and say, "Boy, divestment is the way to go but I don't have anything to divest." It just seems a little bit strange to me that we would take some of those comments and listen to them when in fact it is rather ironic.

Those are a couple of the points I thought I would add.

The Vice-Chair: I would like to remind the members at this time that there is a motion on the floor and can we please speak to the motion.

Mr Winninger: It seems that the opposition to the guidelines becoming part of the legislation is directly proportionate to the level of accumulated wealth that the member who challenges seems to have, including the guidelines in the legislation. I would like to clarify, if I may, for the member.

Mr Sorbara: On a very brief point of order, Mr Chair: There is a motion on the floor. My understanding was that there is a rotation between parties. The first speaker was Ms Gigantes on her motion. The second speaker was Mr Carr. I would think that if we are going on rotation, the next speaker would have been from the official opposition, that is, Mr Poirier or myself. Are we not going in rotation?

Mr Winninger: The speakers' list was read earlier and there was no quarrel with the order.

The Vice-Chair: Mr Sorbara, I am going by the speakers' list, which I understand has been read. There will be rotation; no one party will have two speakers.

Mr Sorbara: Can I just get a better explanation of this? Are you somehow ruling that we are not speaking in rotation?

The Vice-Chair: You are up next, Mr Sorbara, if you do not mind.

Mr Sorbara: No, no. I do not care if I am next or ever. I am just trying to determine whether for some reason we have abandoned the system of speaking in rotation. Somehow you suggested at the end of your comments—

The Vice-Chair: My understanding is the speaking order has been read out, also that it is very casual and the Chair does try to alternate. Now we have alternated between the third party and the government side, and then we will come back to the official opposition, being very fair and alternating as we best can.

Mr Harnick: On a point of order, Mr Chairman: I think I heard you say that each party will be allowed to have one speaker speak to the motion. Does that mean that I am not able to speak to the motion?

The Vice-Chair: No. You did not understand what I was saying.

Mr Sorbara: Neither did I.

The Vice-Chair: What I am trying to say is that no party of the three will have two speakers back to back.

Mr Harnick: Oh, I see.

The Vice-Chair: We will move it around. Mr Winner.

Mr Winner: It is nice to have the floor again. I just want to clarify for the member for York Centre, who was delving into the esoteric area of the implications of income tax law on dispositions that members might be required to make when they become parliamentary assistants or even cabinet ministers. A suggestion was made that needs to be corrected that if a particular member sold a tangible asset and realized a gain from that, one quarter of that gain would be taxable, notwithstanding, as the member for York Centre pointed out, that there may be a mortgage on the property that goes back to the vendor of the asset.

I hasten to point out to the member for York Centre, having got my hands on the Income Tax Act of Canada, that section 40(1)(a)(iii)(C) provides that one may deduct from his capital gain "the lesser of a reasonable amount as a reserve in respect of such of the proceeds of disposition of the property that are not due to him until after the end of the year as may reasonably be regarded as a portion of the amount determined under subparagraph (i) in respect of the property."

So you can in fact elect a reserve, in which case your capital gain is diminished by the amount in that year that still remains to be paid as the proceeds of consideration for the purchase. I did not want anyone to be deceived by that argument. There is always some form of leniency in the income tax legislation to meet precisely these sorts of circumstances.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Chair, I wonder if you would allow me a comment on that, because I think—

The Vice-Chair: Mr Winner has the floor.

Mr Winner: Why do you not wait until your turn comes just as I have listened to you patiently and waited for my turn to come.

Mr Sorbara: Okay. I just thought we might have a discussion about that because there is a problem here, but I do not mind.

Mr Winner: Mr Chair, I wonder if page 133 of the Income Tax Act of Canada could be tabled for the purposes of this debate, and I will move on.

Mr Harnick: If that is the case, can we bring Arthur Scace to respond on that?

Mr Winner: Arthur Scace has moved on to bigger and better things.

In any event, getting back to the thrust of the motion. I had some misgivings at first in terms of these guidelines being incorporated into the legislation, but I am now persuaded as to the error of my thinking. I can see now that these guidelines could quite smoothly be incorporated into the existing Members' Conflict of Interest Act, as has been suggested by the member for Ottawa Centre.

In this particular case, as she has pointed out, the commissioner can conduct the investigation and report to the Premier just as he does right now and possibly may do in the future, and then leave it to the Premier to make the political decisions that have to be made once a report is in. As Mr Rae said in his oral submissions before the committee, this would extend the powers of the commissioner. So we do have the element of a third party dispassionately and objectively reviewing any potential conflict and then reporting to the Premier who can then enforce the guidelines.

I find it very odd that certain members of the opposition who oppose these guidelines should oppose them on the basis that we are setting a very high standard for ourselves here as members of government. What goes into law can perhaps be amended or deleted in the future, but these are the standards we set for our government, and fortunately members are able to comply with them. In the case of personal hardship, in the case where it is not against the public interest to make an exception to the guidelines, the Premier has the discretionary right to do so.

I would submit that there is no problem with these guidelines being incorporated into the legislation along the terms of this particular motion. Certainly there can be a working relationship, if you want to call it that, between the commissioner who investigates potential conflicts of interest and the Premier who is called upon to make the necessary political judgements when enforcing them and in certain selective circumstances to make exceptions to the guidelines, as our Premier has seen fit to do.

Mr Sorbara: Let me begin by just speaking for a moment to the references to the Income Tax Act made by my friend the member for London South. I will just wait until I have his attention and invite him to comment by way of interjection if he feels it appropriate.

I am really worried about your understanding of the guidelines if you are serious about the comments you made with respect to the mortgage back and deferring the capital gain. I say that because the requirement to divest of an interest in a business asset is the requirement to divest of an interest in a business asset, and it would not permit the taking back of a mortgage, which is every bit an interest in a business asset as ownership in fee simple if it is a piece of land or ownership of the share.

In other words, if I sell my interest in a building and I take back a mortgage, for the purposes of these guidelines or for the purposes of the Members' Conflict of Interest Act I still have the very same interest in the asset, so the problem is that I cannot take back a mortgage. I have to find a purchaser who will give me all cash. I want to ask you the last time you acted in the sale of a significant business interest where the purchaser was able to pay all cash. If the vendor takes back a mortgage, he has not taken one step in compliance with the guidelines as set out by the—

Mr Winninger: On a point of personal privilege, Mr Chair: Mr Sorbara raised the hypothetical point where a member is forced to divest himself of an asset and not receive all the proceeds of consideration at the time of divestment—

Mr Sorbara: No, I did not.

Mr Winninger: —and commented on what the income tax implications might be. I was simply clarifying his hypothetical point. I was not saying whether a mortgage would be permitted or not under the guidelines. I was correcting a misconception that the member for York Centre raised. That is all.

Mr Sorbara: With all due respect, Mr Winninger suggested to this committee that someone could take back a mortgage in the asset that he sold and comply with the Premier's guidelines. That is just the kind of misinformation that seems to pervade this committee and the deliberations on what it really means to divest. You cannot sell an asset and take a mortgage back. You have to sell it and presumably get all cash. If you take a mortgage back, and Mr Winninger suggested that was okay, you have not done anything. You still have an interest in that asset every bit as much as if you owned it outright, owned 100% of the asset.

Now, to talk directly to the motion, equally, I think Ms Gigantes's motion indicates somehow that she either has not read the conflict of interest act or has not read the guidelines. I say to her and I say to the members of the committee, the act is a system, in a sense a closed system, requiring actually three things.

The first is full and honest disclosure of the interests of a member and a member of the executive council. The second is a burden on the member not to involve himself or herself in business activity. The first thing is disclosure, setting out in a document to the commissioner every business asset and every business interest that a member has. The second thing is a prohibition against participating in any business. That is there in the act. The third substantive requirement of the act is a prohibition against making a decision where the member is in a conflict of interest. Now the act also has a mechanism for the commissioner to arbitrate if there is an allegation made of a conflict. That is what the act does.

The Premier's guideline is a wholly different affair. It requires members to sell what they have. The commissioner has no business selling on behalf of the member, notwithstanding that she refers in her motion to reporting to the Legislature. More important, whereas the act sets up the commissioner as the person who conducts a hearing or receives the information on disclosure, it is the Premier in the guidelines who is the arbiter of whether or not a member will have to divest.

I am not sure what she means in her motion to say that the Conflict of Interest Commissioner will now—if I just might read the whole thing:

"That the proposed guidelines be incorporated into the Members' Conflict of Interest Act and that the mechanism of administration..."—I remind you, Mr Chairman, that the mechanism of administration in the guidelines is the Premier's ability to grant a dispensation or not grant a dispensation—"be the same as is currently in the act"—I am not sure what that means—"ie, through report to the Legislature by the conflict commissioner in the ways suggested by the act."

The guidelines say you have to sell what you have unless you get a dispensation from the Premier. Does she mean that we will do that except that the dispensation comes from the conflict commissioner, or that the conflict commissioner will advise the Premier as to whether or not a member should be absolved from the requirement to disclose?

It does not really make any sense, and it really does not make any sense when you get to the Premier himself. Who gives the Premier a dispensation? Who reviews whether it would be unfair or unjust to require the Premier to divest? Does the Premier sit in judgement of himself? Does this committee sit in judgement of the Premier?

Either way, if you want the answer, if you want to know what really should be done, what we should do is expand the disclosure requirements that are contained in the act, make them even more strenuous and, I tell my friend from Ottawa Centre, require that ministers, in the first six months that they are in cabinet, not sell all they have, but appear before the justice committee with their disclosure statements so that they can be cross-examined by members of the opposition. That is real parliamentary accountability. We do not have that yet, and we did not put that in when we were in office.

If you want to make the act stronger, do not require that the members sell all they have, particularly in a cabinet where the members who came to testify before this committee, as Mr Carr pointed out, did not have anything. It is pretty easy to say you are in favour of that act if it does not have any personal implications.

We did not have Zanana Akande appear before us. She refused to appear before us. We did not have Ms Ziemba appear before us. We conveniently avoided that. In fact, there is no one in cabinet who would be significantly affected by this. But if you bring people who are really affected by it before the committee, what we hear is that divestment does not make any sense. It did not even make any sense to Mr Winninger, who seemed to think that it was okay to take back a mortgage.

Mr Winninger: That was your idea.

Mr Sorbara: No, no, no. I said—

Mr Winninger: You set up a hypothetical.

Mr Sorbara: I know, and in the hypothetical that I set out, for a very specific reason—

Mr Winninger: We will do it as a point of order.

The Vice-Chair: It is not a point of order.

Mr Winninger: How do you know until I say it?

The Vice-Chair: Go ahead, Mr Winninger.

Mr Sorbara: The hypothetical that I set out—

The Vice-Chair: Mr Winninger has a point of order.

Mr Winninger: I may be repeating myself, but last time it was a point of personal privilege; this time it is a point of order.

I did not respond to your hypothetical by saying it is okay to take back a mortgage. I simply said the consequences under the Income Tax Act of taking back a mortgage mean you defer payment of capital gains.

The Vice-Chair: Mr Winninger, that is not a point of order. Thank you very much.

Mr Sorbara: If you want to continue trying to justify your interjection with the Income Tax Act, that is fine with me. This is the only context or forum where I am going to be able to make the point that the practical realities of requiring cabinet ministers, before they serve, to sell their business interests, and to do it in 60 days—my God, some people put their houses on the market and they do not get a buyer for a year, and there is a vibrant market for houses generally. To take a small business, or a 35% interest in a small business, and to say that the minister shall sell that in 60 days so that he can continue to serve is the height of stupidity. I mean, go to the marketplace and see whether you are able to sell that 35% interest in a business in 60 days. You will be the laughingstock of the marketplace.

By the way, Bob Rae, in his guidelines, is the laughingstock of the marketplace, because anyone who knows anything about business interests knows that no one in his right mind can unload himself of significant business interests in 60 days, and no one in his right mind would do that for the privilege of sitting, at the pleasure of the Premier, I remind the member for Ottawa Centre. Even before the 60 days is up, that member might be out of cabinet on his you-know-what. No one will do it. No one with significant business interests would bother even applying, and the reason is that it is completely out of whack.

I invite any of my friends who own a house to take it to the marketplace and say to the agent representing him, "I've got to sell this house in 60 days." You know what will happen. The agent will say, "I can get you about 50% of the real value if that is one of the criteria." Even more so is a business interest. I would love to be the vendor in that case.

The point is, in this motion we have a suggestion—

Mr Harnick: You would like to be the purchaser. Not the vendor, the purchaser.

Mr Sorbara: I would like to be the purchaser. That is right. I am sorry. I thank my friend for the correction

Mr Winninger: You want to buy my law practice?

Mr Sorbara: Yes, in 60 days. I will give you about $250,000 for it. I would simply suggest to the member for Ottawa Centre to have a very careful look at what the Members' Conflict of Interest Act says, have a careful look at what the guidelines say and move, in her motion, a way that the two could be justified. The conflict of interest act sets up a system of disclosure and a system of arbitration where an allegation of conflict has been made. That is the pith and substance of that act. It has nothing to do with the intervention of the Premier in arbitrating which of his ministers will have to divest.

I cannot for the life of me see how those two systems can be brought together. We could chuck both of them—that is fair, if that is what you want to do, chuck both of them—and write a new act requiring that ministers divest themselves of their business interests. But do that. Move that in the motion. Do not move a motion that says somehow compliance will be through the reporting to the Legislature by the conflict commissioner in the ways suggested by the act, because that is not what the guidelines say.

The guidelines do not involve the Legislature. They require particular members to do particular things, sell what they have. They provide for one person to give an exemption from that, and that is the Premier of the day. If Bob Rae, in this case, suggests that it is okay for the Minister of Community and Social Services to keep her buildings, then it is okay. The conflict commissioner does not enter into that. He just enters into that when someone alleges that she has made a decision to further her private interest.

We had an example of that with the famous affair of the directorships where she resigned by sending a note to her kids. That is what the conflict commissioner does. Under the guidelines, the Premier says it is okay. He has, by the way, said it is okay to have registered retirement savings plans. This is very bizarre, because in an RRSP you can hide or you can manage interests in virtually every public corporation in Ontario.

Mr Poirier: Including a self-directed one?

Mr Sorbara: Including a self-directed RRSP where you can be, in effect, personally buying and selling shares. I think probably the Premier is going to want to review that and review his determination that it would be okay.

Be that as it may, the guidelines require the Premier to make a determination. The act requires the conflict commissioner to make a judgement when an allegation of conflict has been made. I do not think the two can be married and I would simply invite the member for Ottawa Centre to withdraw her motion and perhaps submit some other motion that would suggest to the members of this committee how the Members' Conflict of Interest Act and the guidelines are to be integrated into one piece of legislation.

The Vice-Chair: Before we move to the next speaker, I would like to inform the committee that tomorrow we will be meeting in committee room 1 downstairs. It is air-conditioned.

Mr Harnick: Just continuing with what Mr Sorbara was saying, the member for Ottawa Centre indicated that, on her reading of the conflict of interest act, any final decision would be a decision of the Legislature. That is not what the conflict-of-interest guidelines say. The investigation into the directorships of the Minister of Community and Social Services was an example of how the conflict of interest act works. The Premier, in response to a request, sends the matter to the Conflict of Interest Commissioner. The Conflict of Interest Commissioner prepares a report.

The Chair: Mr Fletcher.

Mr Fletcher: Are you finished?

Mr Harnick: I am not finished, but the Chairman is carrying on a conversation with the clerk and with Ms Gigantes—

Mr Fletcher: Nobody else is listening.

Mr Harnick: —two members are getting coffee, Mr Fletcher is telling me that I have said enough. What is the point of going on with this?

The Chair: Are you finished, Mr Harnick?

Mr Harnick: What is the point?

The Chair: Would you like to return to the substance of the discussion?

Mr Harnick: Yes, I would like to return to it and I think you should too. You are the Chairman of the committee. You are the one admonishing everyone to hurry up with their remarks.

Mr Fletcher: On a point of order, Mr Chair: I am a little tired of the disrespect being shown by Mr Harnick towards the Chair. I think there should be something done about that if it is within the Chair's power.

Mr Harnick: Why don't you throw me out the window, Mr Fletcher?

Mr Winninger: We would if we had a Sergeant at Arms.

Mr Harnick: At any rate, if I can continue, the Premier would then refer the matter to the conflict commissioner, a report would be prepared and then the report came back to the Premier, who decided whether to implement some form of penalty pursuant to the report.

The report that was done by the conflict commissioner for the investigation into the Ministry of Community and Social Services was merely a finding of fact the Premier had to act on; it was not a finding indicating a penalty that should be imposed. That aspect is left to the Premier. The situation would be much the same under the Public Inquiries Act. However, under the Public Inquiries Act the conflict commissioner could go ahead and indicate what the penalties should be pursuant to that act. It would then be up to the Premier to decide whether to impose any of those penalties.

So what the member for Ottawa Centre says in her motion is absolutely wrong. The Legislature does not make the decision. The motion should be redrafted. Furthermore, if we go ahead and vote in favour of this motion, we will end up with guidelines that allow the Conflict of Interest Commissioner to adjudicate in certain respects. But the final decision, in terms of every cabinet minister and indeed in terms of the Premier, would be decided by the Premier himself and not by the Legislature.

The remarks by the member for Ottawa Centre are absolutely wrong, and if that is what she has predicated her motion upon, the motion must be changed because the Legislature does not make the final decision. The final decision is made by the Premier. That is quite clear from a reading of the Members' Conflict of Interest Act. I urge the member for Ottawa Centre to read that act. I urge her to read the report the conflict commissioner prepared regarding Zanana Akande. That report dealt only with a finding of facts. The penalty imposed, if any, is left to the Premier, not to the Legislature. The Legislature has absolutely nothing to do with it.

Furthermore, if these guidelines become law, the Premier, who may be implicated in a particular situation himself, is the person who has to make the decision about what is hardship and what is a business interest. The Premier could decide at any time the definition of "business interest," if it is not within the purview of the conflict commissioner. So you are going to have an act that has a judge, who would be the conflict commissioner, who could make findings of fact; you are going to have within the same act the Premier able to make decisions with respect to penalty; and within the same act the Premier having the opportunity to redefine, based on whatever his whim of the day may be, what an asset is, what a liability is, what a financial interest is, what could cause a conflict of interest, what is a business interest, what is full disclosure, what is undue hardship, what is consistent or inconsistent with the public interest.

It would be the Premier who would decide what undertakings should be appropriate and necessary to avoid a conflict of interest. It would be the Premier who has to decide what business interests are permitted. The Premier would have to decide what persons would be at arm's length to a minister. All these things would be within the purview of the Premier and totally inconsistent with the existing Members' Conflict of Interest Act, so the motion as worded is not the proper vehicle to be considering what we have to consider.

I urge the member for Ottawa Centre to read the Members' Conflict of Interest Act, to read the decision in the Zanana Akande matter to see how the Members' Conflict of Interest Act worked in that situation. I would urge the member to read the conflict-of-interest guidelines so she could see what would be avoided in terms of the conflict commissioner's authority and what would be left within the hands of the Premier and how that would be totally inconsistent with these guidelines becoming law as they are set out now.

I would also like to indicate to the members of the committee—and I believe this has been distributed to you all—a letter to the clerk of this committee, Lisa Freedman, on 23 May 1991, together with the conflict commissioner's redrafting of the conflict act, making the amendments he discussed when he appeared the second time he came here. Certainly those amendments and alterations to the conflict act should be considered by this committee, and certainly that consideration should take place within the context of whether we do or we do not make these conflict-of-interest guidelines part of the law.

I think at some stage it will be incumbent upon this committee to consider those recommendations for amendments to the existing Members' Conflict of Interest Act. But in the meantime, I would urge the committee and the member for Ottawa Centre to redraft this motion so that it does not read that the mechanism of administration be the same as is currently in the act, ie, through a report to the Legislature by the conflict commissioner.

The Chair: Mr Harnick, are you moving an amendment to the motion or simply asking the member to move the change?

Mr Harnick: I cannot do this quite as quickly as the member for Ottawa Centre. I think we probably have to sit down and consider how to word this properly, once we decide in principle that we may or may not want to make this part of the existing law. But certainly the motion is very premature, in that it states that the mechanism of administration be the same as is currently in the act, ie, through a report to the Legislature by the conflict commissioner in the ways suggested by the act, because the ways suggested by the act are totally different in fact than what the member for Ottawa Centre said they were when she described them as being merely something that will be a final decision of the Legislature. That is not what the act says. She is wrong.

She should at least amend this motion so that the mechanism she is talking about is in compliance with what the act really does; or let's propose amendments to the conflict of interest act, if that is our mandate. This is totally in contradiction to what the conflict of interest act says, and it is certainly totally contradictory to what the member for Ottawa Centre described as how this act—and I am referring to sections 16 and 17 of the Members' Conflict of Interest Act—in fact operates.

Mr Fletcher: I have listened intently, almost, to most of what the opposition has been saying, and it does not make that much sense. They had, combined, 48 years to do something about conflict of interest and they did not do anything. Now I am hearing them say, "What we really should be doing." It is not up to you what we should really be doing; it is up to the governing body of the day.

Mr Carr: We are elected members too, Derek. Don't we get a say?

Mr Fletcher: The government of the day is saying that as far as conflict-of-interest rules are concerned, this is what we think we should be doing and this is the way we want to go. The reason we are going this way is because of what has happened in the past. In the past it has been the conduct of some members—

Mr Harnick: Name one instance—

Mr Fletcher: —of all parties, of all political stripes—

The Chair: Mr Harnick, Mr Fletcher has the floor.

Interjections.

Mr Morrow: On a point of order, Mr Chair: Does Mr Fletcher not have the floor?

The Chair: He does.

Mr Morrow: Thank you very much.

Mr Fletcher: It has happened in the past where there have been some problems and people have used their office wrongly, and that happens—

Mr Harnick: Name one.

The Chair: Mr Harnick.

Mr Harnick: You cannot make those allegations without backing them up.

The Chair: Five-minute recess.

The committee recessed at 1737.

The Chair: We are resuming. Mr Fletcher, you have the floor.

Mr Fletcher: As I was saying before we stopped, the conflict-of-interest guidelines right now are for parliamentary assistants and ministers. If the minister or if the person who is elected does not wish to be in cabinet or be a PA, he would definitely say that this is the reason he does not want to be in cabinet or be a parliamentary assistant. They have that option. If they really want to be in cabinet they divest of their interest.

I am going back to what the Premier said when he was here and when the question was put, "Should the guidelines be extended to apply to all members of the Legislature?" He said: "Additional guidelines should apply to all members. However, complete divestiture could not and should not reasonably be expected to apply to all members. It would be unduly difficult and an undue imposition on a member." Therefore, I cannot understand why the opposition is saying that good quality people would say, "I am not going to run for public office because of these guidelines."

As I say, it only applies to parliamentary assistants and to ministers. That thinking and that kind of talk is not what the Premier has been saying. I have no problem with the motion that is on the floor. In fact, I think we should have a vote on the motion on the floor. If need be, I will gladly call the question.

Mr Poirier: Would you mind if I take a couple of minutes? I think I am on the speakers' list.

The Chair: You are indeed, sir.

Mr Poirier: I want to confirm again what the member for Ottawa Centre was proposing, that her motion was going to concern only ministers and PAs, not all 130 members, right? Could she answer that question for me because that might colour—

Ms Gigantes: If it is helpful at all, I felt it was important that we get to deal with the principle of whether we are talking about legislation here or not. How you want to define what is covered in that legislation should come after.

Mr Poirier: Fair enough. For the benefit of the member for Ottawa Centre, I want to state that I still believe, with all due respect, that what the conflict commissioner has been doing with the act before and the immense respect there has been for the commissioner—we have heard the witnesses come forward and whether they were former members or others, including the conflict commissioner, obviously between the perception of what the people have on the outside and what the reality is as to the honourable status of members past and present of all three parties, I still believe that to add the guidelines to the conflict commissioner's mandate is overkill.

I want to repeat to my friends from the government party right now that eventually there will be a provincial election. We do not know what is going to happen, but should the people of Ontario perceive that it is time for a change—you will obviously not feel that way yourselves—and should, in September 1992 or whenever, the same thing happen to you that happened to us back in last September, I know—

Mr Morrow: In 1992?

Mr Poirier: Whenever that is. I do not know. Do you know the date? I do not. If you do, let me know. I will get ready for it.

Mr Fletcher: Get your signs.

Mr Poirier: That's right, yes.

I think you would go to bed that night and the following week and the following months knowing what is important to you. When you reassess what you have done in government in your mandate, you will state, "What is important for me and my evaluation of what we have done or how we have been individually or collectively is the truth as opposed to the perception." We know something about that and maybe you will know something about that at the next provincial election.

I can imagine talking to you afterwards. You will say, "What counts is the reality of the situation, not what people perceived." I hear you say that it is important, that you are moving to do this because of what people perceive to be conflicts of interest with the act and including the mandate of the conflict commissioner in place. I still believe, with all due respect, that what you are doing is going to discourage a lot of good people. Regardless of which party, it does not matter, regardless of the individual, when you look around the House at all 130 members, they are all honourable members and none of us care what they own or what they have. They are here because they are committed individuals. Who gives a damn what they have or do not have?

I have always felt that with the current or any other conflict commissioner, that person, he or she, could make sure, with the act, that those who did not comply would suffer the full wrath of the act, and they should. But I repeat, it has not been done before. We have not seen that. I am very afraid that this is a very much misguided, zealot-like intention to add the guidelines to the conflict commissioner's mandate. I will be voting against this motion, with all due respect and with my conscience very clear.

To any person across Ontario or anywhere else around the world coming forward and standing in front of me and saying, "The members of the House are not honourable," I will say, "Baloney." I will think of all members of all three parties and I will ask that person to point out to me one indication within memory, however far back he wants to go or in the current situation, to name me one person who, with the current act and the current commissioner and the current mandate of the conflict commissioner, would not be designated as honourable as per the stand of time. They will not be able to name me one person in our collective time here or before, as we heard from the witnesses.

Mrs Mathysen: I have listened with great patience over the last four months and we have considered a great deal of testimony. I would concur with Mr Fletcher that it is time to call the question regarding this motion, so I move that we call the question.

The Chair: All in favour of moving the question?

Mr Poirier: I have been requested to call for a 20-minute period to gather the troops for the vote.

The Chair: You are asking for a 20-minute division on the question?

Mr Poirier: On the vote.

The Chair: For 20 minutes? We are adjourned until tomorrow after routine proceedings in committee room 1, which is air-conditioned.

The committee adjourned at 1750.

CONFLICT-OF-INTEREST GUIDELINES

Resuming consideration of the Premier's conflict-of-interest guidelines.

The Chair: I would like to call the proceedings to order. The first issue we have to deal with this afternoon is the question raised of whether the question should be put. All those in favour of the question being put please signify. Opposed?

Mr Sorbara: Can you just review with me, Mr Chairman, what you are doing here?

The Chair: Question.

Mr Sorbara: Is this another little closure motion?

The Chair: Moving right along we now have the question, which is Ms Gigantes's motion. Would it be helpful to have that motion read out again? Ms Gigantes, would you like to?

Mr Sorbara: Generally the Chair does that.

The Chair: I appreciate that. However, would that be helpful or should we just move on to the vote?

Interjections: Move on.

Mr Sorbara: They won the vote for closure?

The Chair: Just did, yes. All in favour of Ms Gigantes's motion?

Mr Sorbara: There is a 20-minute bell on this. No, if you are going to use closure—

Interjection: We did not use closure.

Interjection: No, not on this vote.

The Chair: We are voting. We are in the midst of voting.

Mr Sorbara: Hold on a second, would you, Mr Chairman?

The Chair: The question was put.

Mr Sorbara: So it shall be war between us.

The Chair: All in favour of Ms Gigantes's motion? Opposed?

Motion agreed to.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Chairman, could you explain to me the effect of Ms Gigantes's motion? We are discussing. We are looking for commentary. We are writing a report. What is the effect now of the passage of that motion on the writing of this report? Do those words become part of the report or what? Could you just explain that to me?

The Chair: I believe the intent of the motion was to request both that a change be made in legislation and that the mechanism of the administration of that change be the same as was earlier the case with the Members' Conflict of Interest Act, as passed in 1987, I believe it was.

Mr Sorbara: That would not be my interpretation of the motion. I think there is some confusion. My problem is that as I read Ms Gigantes's motion, it called for the integration of the guidelines into the Members' Conflict of Interest Act with the same mechanism for administration; that is, the Conflict of Interest Commissioner through a report to the House. I think that puts our researcher in a very difficult situation, because if you read the two acts they cannot simply be melded together like that.

Mr Winninger: Only one act.

Mr Sorbara: I will be glad to hear from you when I am done. A motion calling upon the government to present to Parliament a bill which would amend the conflict-of-interest act and provide, in effect, a new direction for it—that is, the requirement for ministers to divest—would probably have been an appropriate motion and would have answered the question that arises in the commentary. Unfortunately, that is not what happened. What happened is we passed a motion calling for something that simply cannot be done.

Mr Morrow: On a point of order, Mr Chairman: Excuse me if I am wrong, but did we not properly debate this and vote on this, so basically are we not discussing now something that has been voted on and duly dealt with?

The Chair: Are you suggesting that a continuation of this debate would be out of order as it is on an issue that has already been resolved?

Mr Morrow: Yes.

The Chair: You are right.

Mr Sorbara: What are we doing? We are in the midst of writing a report, sir, and we have just passed a motion which requires this committee to recommend the integration of one set of guidelines requiring the Premier to make judgements and decisions and requires certain things of his ministers with an act which has the commissioner do a set of very different things; that is, receive disclosure statements and make interpretations based on allegations of conflicts of interest.

Ms Gigantes: On a point of order, Mr Chair: I think it is essentially the same point of order as was raised earlier. What Mr Sorbara is suggesting is that we have somehow made a misstep here. He is suggesting that we have not answered the question to which we were addressing our minds, which is the question outlined on page 6 of the draft report.

The question, I will remind him, is "Guidelines or Legislation—Political Versus Legal Accountability." The motion we passed addressed that question. I suggest we move on to part II of the report.

Mr Sorbara: I would agree with Ms Gigantes if her motion were simply recommending that this report contain a recommendation that the guidelines of the Premier be incorporated into legislation. That would have been fine. My difficulty is that the motion went on to suggest that the enforcement or administration of those guidelines be consistent with the Members' Conflict of Interest Act. Then it said, "ie, through report to the Legislature by the conflict commissioner."

That part of it is inconsistent with what the conflict-of-interest guidelines themselves say, which is that the responsibilities thereunder shall be in the hands of the Premier. Let's put the question to Ms Swift, if we can, if what this committee is going to be recommending makes sense to her. Mark, if you will wait a second and just try to understand the point I am making, maybe you can come up with the response and withdraw that motion and just have a motion simply saying—

Ms Gigantes: Not on your life.

Mr Sorbara: Okay, "Not on your life," she says.

The Chair: I think the member has a point and it has been recognized. I think the issue you bring forth, sir, is a very valid one. I hope it could be either incorporated in terms of changes or some of the input to other points in the report.

Interjections

Mr Sorbara: Mr White, how would you like it if I just finish the point and then perhaps we could have a discussion about it? I would prefer a discussion about it rather than just interjections or points or order. It is a real problem. I am not sure what you want to recommend.

Ms Gigantes: On the same point, all we are saying is that we had this discussion. Mr Sorbara may not have graced us with his presence for this discussion, but we had this discussion yesterday.

Mr Sorbara: I was here for virtually all of the day, my friend.

Ms Gigantes: We considered—

The Chair: But I have also ruled on a point of order.

Ms Gigantes: —this very line of argument yesterday from Mr Harnick.

The Chair: Can we adjourn this discussion? The point of order has already been ruled on. We should move on to the next section, please, the issue of political versus legal accountability.

Ms Gigantes: Good. Part II.

Mr Sorbara: If we are going to do this by way of points of order, on a point of order, could I then find out from the committee, its Chair, its clerk, its researcher or any of its government members how this committee intends to blend, in the report and through recommendations, two very separate systems, one which has an enforcement mechanism through the Office of the Premier, and the other which has an enforcement mechanism through the commissioner? You cannot have both. The commissioner is an independent officer who reports to the Legislature. The Premier is a politician elected by the people and makes his decisions as to who is and is not in cabinet based on political considerations.

Ms Gigantes: On a point of order. We rehearsed this discussion yesterday.

The Chair: These are not points of order.

Ms Gigantes: Then I hope we will move forward.

The Chair: The issue Mr Sorbara raises is dealt with to some degree in the next section we are about to deal with.

Ms Gigantes: Was that not dealt with in our discussion yesterday?

Mr Sorbara: Could you reiterate your answers then, Evelyn?

Ms Gigantes: No, you can look in Hansard. We want to move on.

Mr Sorbara: Why? Are we so intractable on this that you cannot even tell me what your view is on that? I do not understand.

Ms Gigantes: Clearly, it is not your intent to finish a piece of work; it is ours.

Mr Sorbara: Am I going to get an answer from the researcher?

Ms Gigantes: No.

The Chair: Can we move on to the application of the guidelines or whatever we want to refer to them as? First off is the issue of the parliamentary assistants, the discussion, recommendation with regard to the application of guidelines to that group of people.

Ms Gigantes: Again, we had some limited discussion of this point last week. During the discussion of the subject, I indicated it was my strong feeling that parliamentary assistants should be covered by the guidelines. Parliamentary assistants are in a special place among members of the Legislature. As a result of their connection with ministerial work they have information not available to others. I think it is important that people feel they do not have interests which are going to be in conflict with that work and with the information to which they have access. So it would be my suggestion that the changes we are proposing should be extended to parliamentary assistants.

Mr Sorbara: I want to begin by saying that the guidelines are currently extended to parliamentary assistants. It has not seemed to have much effect on the conduct of parliamentary assistants. It has not had much effect on the willingness of the government members of this committee to have a substantive discussion of the matter. I raised a simple point that I was confused on, based on the last vote, which was taken by way of closure, and I think it is terribly unfortunate that this committee does not want to enter into a substantive discussion of it. I would move adjournment of today's proceedings.

Mrs Mathysen: Mr Chairman—

Ms Gigantes: You cannot debate that.

Mrs Mathysen: We have been discussing this—

Mr Sorbara: There is no debate. I have a motion on the floor. It is a 20-minute bell.

The Chair: There is no debate on a motion to adjourn. The motion has been made. There is a 20-minute bell on a motion to adjourn.

The committee recessed at 1620.

The Chair: We are presently voting on Mr Sorbara's motion to adjourn. All in favour of adjournment, please signify. Opposed?

Motion negatived.

The Chair: Can we move on now to Part II, the bottom of page 8, the issue of whether parliamentary assistants should be included. Ms Gigantes has spoken to this already, and I believe Mr Sorbara has as well. Is there a motion in terms of recommendation?

Ms Gigantes: I wonder if there is a consensus that it should be applied to parliamentary assistants if applied to ministers.

Mr Sorbara: I think we have a little bit of difficulty here. For our party's part, we agree that the guidelines that apply to ministers in the main ought to apply to parliamentary assistants as well. However, I guess we do not have consensus, because the guidelines the government is suggesting ought to apply to ministers, which guidelines it suggests now should be put in the form of statute, we do not believe should apply to ministers, so we do not believe that they should apply to parliamentary assistants either.

The answer to the question, should guidelines apply to parliamentary assistants in the same fashion as they apply to ministers, is yes. Unfortunately we are talking about a different set of guidelines. So we would not favour—

Interjection.

Mr Sorbara: I am sorry, sir?

The Chair: Mr Sorbara still has the floor, Mr Mills.

Mr Mills: I was sort of thinking out loud, not arguing.

Mr Sorbara: Those are our comments on this section. I think some of the difficulties the government is going to find—I guess maybe they do not even care. Hello, is anyone there?

Mr Mills: I am listening.

Mr Sorbara: Okay. If you get one, that is good.

Let me tell you the problem you are going to have if you take the position that the guidelines, as contained in the document submitted by the Premier of the province and which you want to put into legislation, should apply to parliamentary assistants as well.

Under the protocol adopted by the previous government, David Peterson—you remember him then, the member for London Centre, and during that time Premier of Ontario—decided he would use the office of parliamentary assistant as a sort of important experience or training ground for MPPs. So he decided that every year—it did not matter how well you did or how poorly you did—he would change the parliamentary assistants. One year you might be the parliamentary assistant to the Attorney General and the next year you would not be, but you might be the chairman of a committee or you might be nothing at all, and you might be appointed a minister of the crown.

He did not have that same regime for ministers. Once you were appointed minister, generally you stayed there unless you ran into a problem like Ms Gigantes ran into or Mrs Smith ran into in the previous administration or whatever. But generally, if you were a minister, you were a minister until for some reason there was a want of confidence in your ability.

I do not know what Bob Rae has planned, whether he plans on rotating parliamentary assistants or not. I thought it was a good idea, and I know that in my five and a half years as a minister, I worked with—well, in some cases I had two ministries; in fact, for most of the time I had two ministries, so I would have two parliamentary assistants and they would change at the end of the year.

If Bob Rae decides to adopt that sort of system, and I think it was a pretty good system—there is nothing political about it; he might want to do that—what MPP in his right mind, if he has any business assets at all, would sell them in 60 days so that he could be parliamentary assistant for a year? Think about it.

I am not talking about a law practice that you can go in and out of with some facility and some flexibility. I am talking about a real going concern, let's say a car dealership that is doing well and making money. If you got in government, you might want to place that in trust, because obviously once you are down here, you are not going to get in the business of selling cars. But if you had a car dealership and Bob Rae called you into his office and said, "David, my boy, you are going to be parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Health," and you said, "Oh my goodness, Premier, that's very generous of you," and you are only going to be it for a year, what you will have to go and do in 60 days is sell your car dealership. Get it on the market right now; get a quick sale. Remember, you cannot take back a mortgage, because that is an interest in the business, so you have to sell it for cash. You have to get completely out of it.

If this mythical MPP said, "Oh, that's a great deal," my God, I do not know if I would want him to be a parliamentary assistant in Ontario. He would have to be completely nuts to do that.

Mr Winninger: Are you saying we are out of our minds?

Mr Sorbara: David, what I am saying is that you are proposing right now—and probably you are going to pass it—that these same rules ought to apply to parliamentary assistants, and I will bet $20 that if that is proposed, none of you will vote against it, not even Gord Mills, who knows better.

If the Premier adopts a system that has you as a parliamentary assistant until you scandalize the public record or make an inadvertent accident, then maybe you would want to have the guidelines apply to parliamentary assistants. But maybe what you would want to do here in this committee—and we will leave if you want us to leave—is to have a discussion among yourselves as to whether you really want to apply those rules, or you might want to suggest to the Premier very gently, "Premier, if you are going to be switching us around every year, maybe it would be a little bit too much to ask us to sell our businesses."

It does not matter if you do not have a business. It does not matter if you are a teacher or a broadcaster or a lawyer or a nurse or a doctor. Poor Perruzza has to sell some two-bit interest in some two-bit piece of land up in King township. That is silly. Why does he?

Mr Winninger: I thought that was Mammoliti.

Mr Sorbara: No, that is Perruzza. Why does he have to do that, as if somehow he is going to abuse his office to enhance the value of his land? But he is a parliamentary assistant, you see.

Mr Mills: What about the hardship rule?

Mr Sorbara: Gord, you raise a good question, the hardship rule. I think that leaves it too much at the discretion of one person. I disagree with the hardship rule.

Think of the problem a Premier faces, and I will just use you as an example. Let's say he really wants you in cabinet. You represent an important riding, your political experience is good, but you have this problem that you have significant assets that the new law says cannot be placed in trust and away from you; you have to sell them. Right away, I think the Premier himself has a conflict of interest because he has to make a decision about hardship, and in doing that he really is going to think about how badly he wants you in cabinet. Greg Evans would not do that because Greg Evans is not making up the cabinet. That is why I disagree with the Premier setting out in the guidelines his ability to make an exemption based on hardship or whatever, so I would take that out completely, but you guys are going to be writing the report.

Ms Gigantes: On a point of order, Mr. Chair: I think what Mr Sorbara is doing is once again entering into argument on the previous question, which has been decided.

Mr Sorbara: Can I know under what standing order this point of order is taken?

Ms Gigantes: Yes. It is that you are being redundant in arguing—

Mr Sorbara: Is that a standing order?

Ms Gigantes: You are being redundant in arguing a matter which has already been discussed and decided. What you are attempting to raise is the issue of to whom and how the administration of the amended legislation would be responsible, and we have just decided that in the previous question. The question before us is, shall it apply to parliamentary assistants?

The Chair: Ms Gigantes, I think you are absolutely accurate that Mr Sorbara is being repetitive. However, he is being repetitive with regard to parliamentary assistants, not to the earlier question, and he does still have the floor.

Mr Sorbara: Do you know what? I am just not going to be interrupted over and over again on points of order. I am going to move that this committee adjourn and I am going to ask for a 20-minute bell. I am really serious about trying to make some points here. I do not mind a discussion, but I am not going to be interrupted, sir, every time I am trying to make a point.

You guys are going to write the report, okay? We have agreed on that. I am just trying to tell you, in a substantive way, the difficulty that you get into in respect of parliamentary assistants, and I was about to conclude my remarks. I can do so in 20-minutes' time if the vote is lost.

Ms Mathysen: If we believed you were about to conclude, we would be candidates for swamp land. We have listened to this since February.

Mr Sorbara: My dear friend, you are a candidate from swamp land.

The Chair: We have not had intervening business since the last adjournment call.

Mr Sorbara: We most certainly have. We have moved on to the next section.

The Chair: You, sir, had the floor at that point and we have not had intervening business. Your adjournment motion is out of order.

Mr Harnick: On a point of order, Mr. Chair: I think it is quite clear that intervening business is merely resuming the debate. Because the debate has been resumed, it would be in order to adjourn the debate or ask to adjourn the committee hearings for the day. I suppose Mr Sorbara, if he wanted, could adjourn the committee for the day as opposed to adjourning the debate.

Mr Winninger: Do you have some place you would rather be?

Mr Harnick: No, I am easy. I do not have any particular qualms about whether we adjourn or do not adjourn. But I think it was quite clear—I guess it was over the month of May—that the Speaker ruled numerous times that resuming the debate was in fact intervening business and accordingly that the motion would be in order.

I am sorry the chairman was not listening to my point of order, but what I was saying—and I apologize for having to repeat it again—was that the fact we resumed the debate has been ruled by the Speaker to be intervening business.

Mr Sorbara: And we actually moved to a different section.

Mr Harnick: We, I believe, adjourned last time when Mr Sorbara brought a motion prior to beginning the discussion about parliamentary assistants. We now resume the debate. He has made a speech about parliamentary assistants. That is now the intervening piece of business. I think the standing orders make it quite clear that he is now entitled either to adjourn the committee or to adjourn the debate. The Speaker has made that quite clear in the Legislature, and unless you can point to another section being the applicable section of the standing orders, I think his motion is in order.

Mr Mills: Where is he getting this?

Mr Harnick: I suppose he watched the House leader of our party do this for a month and it rubbed off on him.

The Chair: As you are aware, there were different adjournment motions. You have made that point in the earlier part of your point of order.

Mr Harnick: Before we argue further, perhaps we could take a moment and obtain a copy of the standing orders. Maybe that would answer the question.

Ms Gigantes: Could I make a suggestion? As there is a determination by opposition members that we shall adjourn for at least 20 minutes, we could use the 20 minutes to do precisely what has been suggested by Mr Harnick, which is to obtain a ruling or a recommendation from the Speaker's office and then, no matter what, come back in 20 minutes. At least we will have that advice with us.

Mr Harnick: The effect of all of this has been that we have wasted 30 minutes.

The Chair: If you wish to research the issue, perhaps what we could do is—

Mr Sorbara: Could the clerk help us out on this?

Clerk of the Committee: The only help that I can give you is that the Chair rules on motions.

Mr Sorbara: With the advice of a wise clerk.

The Chair: Which is what I was seeking. My apologies, Mr Harnick.

Mr Harnick: Do you have a copy of the standing orders?

The Chair: Do you wish to recess for a few minutes to consult those?

Mr Sorbara: Mr Chair, it was my motion and I had the floor, so I will withdraw the motion for the time being and continue my remarks on parliamentary assistants—

The Chair: Fine; thank you.

Mr Sorbara: —much to the chagrin of my friend, the member for Ottawa Centre, who will probably find a way to intervene on some point of order or other. I just say to her that I was trying to make a substantive comment in respect of parliamentary assistants based on our experience as a government. You will probably include in the report a recommendation that parliamentary assistants be bound by the same guidelines. I am suggesting to you that this is bad public policy.

But above and beyond that, I think it is clear that there are many elements of bad public policy contained in the guidelines. I think that was apparent from the first, and it was a political exercise rather than an exercise of substance. Again, for my money, if you want good public policy, you will have a system of public disclosure that is second to none. We do not quite have that yet in the province, but I think we are going to get there. I think that one day public disclosure will actually include a requirement that a committee of our Legislature have the authority to call before it ministers of the crown to examine them periodically on their public disclosure document and their conduct as ministers in this general area of conflict of interest.

In fact, in the United States jurisdictions, and certainly in the federal US jurisdictions, the ratification process of senior ministers—all ministers, I guess, but only some of them are high profile—is probably where we are going. But you will notice that neither in the US nor in any other British parliamentary jurisdiction do we have this foolhardy suggestion that the ministers sell what they have and divest themselves of what they have so that they can serve at the pleasure of a leader.

I do not think we are going to get any farther on this committee. I do not think we are ever going to have a reasonable discussion. I do not think the government members of this committee are interested in listening to the opposition and to our experience, nor do I think they are interested in listening to the Tory members. I think we have a fundamental disagreement. I think your instructions are to support the notion of divestment, and to recommend to the government that it come back with a bill in that regard.

I do not think we are going to spend our time fruitfully here any more, so I am going to suggest that you folks prepare the report you want to prepare. We will have a look at it. I know our party is interested in submitting dissents on many of the sections that are contained in the document. We may combine our efforts with the third party; we may not. We have not decided that yet, but I, for one, do not want to play this any more.

I regret, to tell you the truth, that you are not interested in taking a broader view. The whole thrust of parliamentary democracies right now is for greater freedom of the representative. By the way, that is one of the things that Preston Manning is using in a magnificent way. It is catching fire all over the place. As we talk in our own party about the reforms we are going to be advocating, each of the leadership candidates is talking about how he would make Parliament different, giving MPPs greater freedom and independence to affect public policy.

The experience on this committee, and this is only my second bill in committee—support and custody orders enforcement was one, and this is the second initiative in committee. I think it is too bad that we could not have had an independent kind of parliamentary approach to it, that the word is—from David Agnew or from whomever—that you will call for the guidelines as they were presented.

Mr Morrow: On a point of privilege, Mr Chair: The member across is assuming an awful lot by suggesting we have marching orders. He is also assuming we are not here listening. I cannot speak for the rest of my colleagues, or I possibly can. We are sitting here and we are listening. I really take personal offence at that.

Mr Sorbara: I am sorry my friend the member for Wentworth East takes personal offence. It is not meant to be personally offensive; it is a comment on the way in which we are doing business. I think it is too bad, but you have to understand my perspective. I just do not see any purpose at all in participating in a discussion of this report and the making of recommendations. We could go back and have witnesses. We could call witnesses from every single jurisdiction in the world, and if the overwhelming evidence was that these guidelines are ill-advised, it would not make a whit of difference. We only had one witness here.

Ms Gigantes: Does Mr Morrow have the floor?

The Chair: Mr Morrow raised a point of privilege.

Mr Sorbara: In any event, I am going on too long on this. I just simply suggest that you folks get on with the writing of the report and we will get on with the business of preparing a dissenting report. That probably will take us several days, and we would probably want a few days after the recommendations you come up with are in writing. We will have a look at those. We will get the document translated and we will get it submitted.

Ms Gigantes: If I understand what the opposition is offering, it is that the government members of the committee indicate to our staff what recommendations would be made on the sections of the report which are still outstanding, and that report then would form the basis of the report of this committee. If opposition members disagreed with any point in that report, then they would prepare their dissents.

Mr Harnick: Certainly that would be the most productive way to proceed right now. We have gone through the items that were really the pith and substance of the conflict-of-interest guidelines. I do not think the balance of the items is going to change what has been decided up to now.

If we do proceed this way, I would expect that we would see your report within the next couple of weeks and thereafter we would be in a position to respond to it. Our reports would then be, I guess, tabled with the Clerk of the House when the Legislature resumes in September. Is my understanding correct or incorrect?

The Chair: I believe that in other committees, in dealing with other issues, such as 123 items, all three caucuses submit different recommendations, subcommittees deal with them, and then they are brought forth to the committee as a whole for final debate, with the potential of course of a dissenting report. So the preparation of differing recommendations is not at all—

Mr Mills: Novel.

The Chair: —novel, no.

Mr Harnick: I did not mean to assume that we were talking about anything novel. What I am talking about is what we will be doing in this committee for the balance of the time until the House rises on 27 June.

Ms Gigantes: What the committee does after this, we can discuss afterwards, but what we have had as a suggestion is that the committee proceed by way of having the government members indicate to staff what decisions should be made on the questions in the draft report, that the report be drafted and that the members of the opposition then have a chance to prepare a dissent.

I am going to propose that it probably would not be necessary, in terms of the body of the report, to wait until there is a complete redraft if the members of the government could quickly indicate to members of the opposition what decisions we would recommend having in the major body of the report on those remaining items. That would give members of the opposition an indication of what points they might wish to raise in dissent, and it would mean that we would be able to report this matter out to the House relatively quickly, I would hope.

The Chair: Indeed it has been before the committee for a lengthy period of time.

Mr Harnick: I have some concern about that, only in the sense that the suggestion really precludes the opposition parties from considering the report before they have to make a determination about whether they wish to prepare a dissenting opinion. I think that in itself is unfair. I would like, certainly, to see the report. There may be many aspects I agree with and there may be many aspects I disagree with, but I cannot make the determination about how I would prepare a dissenting report until I have the opportunity to read the report that the researcher, Susan Swift, is going to prepare for the committee. I think it smacks of just being blatantly unfair to even suggest that we be in a position to write a dissenting opinion when we do not see what the majority opinion is going to hold.

Mr Sorbara: I was not suggesting any extraordinary procedure for this committee. If that was the impression the other members of the committee got from my comments, I am sorry for that. What I was suggesting was that from my perspective and the perspective of my party, there is not much use participating any more in this discussion of comment and recommendations on the report. It seems to us that the government has made up its mind about what it wants, that the suggestions we might bring, whether they are on parliamentary assistants or otherwise, are not going to be relevant to what recommendations are going to go in. I am saying that for our part we will just hightail it out of here, the government can write its report, we will have dissenting comments to make on a variety of elements of the report and then it will be tabled.

Whether that takes two more weeks or three more weeks, what I am trying to say is that it is not going to take much longer to complete the work on the report, at least if the comments from our party have anything to do with it, because they are futile. They do not get us anywhere. They do not move the process along. They just delay. You do not really want to do very much other than to say: "This is very good stuff. These guidelines are so good they should go in legislation. We think basically the Premier's office and the Premier's advisers on this matter had it right."

We say no, they did not have it right. We say that the balance of evidence before this committee and the evidence from jurisdictions around the world supports our view; it does not support your view. But maybe your view is a foretaste of the future, where we are going. I hope not. I hope we do not start excluding people from public office in the way Gregory Evans thinks these guidelines might do.

But for all of that, you won on 6 September and you have the right to insist that reports and recommendations be as you are ordered or as you want to have them. Maybe you really do believe in the recommendations you are going to make. That is fine. What I lament is that we could not have had a free-wheeling, rather independent discussion of these matters apart from the directions that our parties have given us. For my part, I have not even talked about this matter with our leader. I have no idea how he really feels about where we should be going on this. I just come here whenever the committee is meeting and I am in town. I thought we might be able to get somewhere on this one.

We did not get anywhere on the support and custody orders enforcement legislation. I guess that was okay. SCOE is not a bad bill. It has some bad elements and we tried to fix up those bad elements and we were unsuccessful. On this one, though, it is really outside the realm of public policy, because it affects the nature and quality of the Legislature itself. That is our body. It does not belong to any political party or any government and it certainly does not belong to the civil service or bureaucrats in the Ministry of the Attorney General. That is our body. We are fixing rules that affect our very lives.

My own impression is that notwithstanding that, we are very rigid and set in our ways about it. I confess I am set in my ways about divestment. I personally, as an MPP, could never serve in Bob Rae's cabinet. When I made that comment to him across the floor in the Legislature when he introduced this stuff, his answer was, "Precisely." I just took significant offence at that. My view is that notwithstanding that I happen to be affluent, notwithstanding that I have substantial business interests in my name that bring me resources that perhaps not everyone can afford in Ontario, I think I could still qualify, imperfect as I am, to sit in the Legislature.

I know one thing. You cannot sell, because there is no market. My friend the member for London South knows about that. He knows what minority interests in small companies mean. The purchase and sale of interest in those things are subject to very rigid rules controlled by the majority, and when the majority says, "I'm sorry, you are not allowed to sell your interest," that—

Ms Gigantes: On a point of order, Mr Chair: We are again rehearsing a debate which occurred and was decided yesterday and earlier today. If Mr Sorbara is going to contribute to our process in the committee in dealing with this matter, he will be very attentive to that.

The Chair: I will not disagree with you about the repetition of Mr Sorbara's comments. However, he has every right to repeat them if in reference to another point on our agenda.

Mr Sorbara: My friend the member for Ottawa Centre, notwithstanding that she has been a member of this Legislature for a number of years, should realize that it is inappropriate to interrupt a member on a point of order when there is no point of order. Under the circumstances, as I said last time, I just do not want that to happen any more and I am going to move that the committee rise and report. I am going to ask for a 20-minute bell and that is not debatable. So let's recess for 20 minutes.

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, the clerk informs me that there is no rise and report in committee.

Mr Sorbara: I will move then, sir, that the committee adjourn for the day. Is that okay? I ask for a 20-minute bell.

The committee recessed at 1712.

1729

The Chair: With the consent of all present, we are resuming with Mr Sorbara's adjournment motion. All in favour of Mr Sorbara's motion? Opposed?

Motion negatived.

Mr Sorbara: Lost another one.

If I can just repeat my remarks, maybe uninterrupted, but you never know, we were talking about parliamentary assistants. Now correct me if I am wrong, Mr Chairman, but the motion, or the approach of the government members is to include parliamentary assistants under the guidelines that will become law. I would recommend to the government, as they draft their report, that they might want to amend the commentary under the section on parliamentary assistants, because if they do not do that, it is going to look rather weird. I suggest that they read it. Maybe I will help them out; I will just read it to them:

"It was suggested that parliamentary assistants should be treated differently than cabinet ministers under the conflict-of-interest rules. Parliamentary assistants do not have access to the same kind of information and do not have the same degree of influence over decision-making as do members of the executive council. In addition, although there is no security of tenure for either parliamentary assistants or ministers, it was pointed out that parliamentary assistants may in some ways be even more vulnerable to losing their position. In the past they have been subject to a rotation program to foster experience among backbenchers. The combination of these factors makes identical treatment inappropriate."

If the recommendation following that is, "Therefore this committee recommends identical treatment," this committee, or at least its government members, will look rather foolish, which is perhaps the case; maybe not. But maybe they should ask the researcher, Ms Swift, either to strike that paragraph or rewrite it, or suggest there is some evidence before the committee somewhere, a little bit of evidence that parliamentary assistants ought to be included in here. That is one of the problems you get into by making motions that they be included without reading the information that is there.

My friend, the lawyer from London South, will know that in writing a legal judgement, the judge generally wants to make reference to the evidence that supports the conclusions of law that he gets into. What you have here is a commentary, that would support a recommendation that parliamentary assistants not be included in the guidelines, at least the guidelines respecting divestment.

Is there any indication yet from the government members that they would want either to amend this paragraph or change their minds about the recommendation? If I see an indication, Mr Chairman, I would certainly cede the floor, at least for a suggestion in that regard.

Seeing none, I will just complete my remarks by saying that this is probably the final example of a situation where there is not really much interest in hearing what we have to say. Although I did not recommend the adoption of a specific procedure to complete this business, for my part and my party's part, we will cede the territory. We will have a look at the document the government members come up with.

Once again, I really recommend that you deal with that parliamentary assistant section. It would be embarrassing for a reader to read that and then see, "Therefore, Ms Gigantes moves, seconded by Mr Mills, that parliamentary assistants be included." That would be embarrassing to the government. We, of course, would have a dissenting report that would support the conclusions suggested by the commentary.

In any event, we wish you well in your consideration of this matter. We are disappointed that you would not want to take a radical, a sort of independent "I was elected by the people in my riding to think independently" kind of approach on this subject. That will come. It has come to Preston Manning, and it will probably come to the New Democratic Party government in Ontario one of these days. It has not come to this committee yet, and that is unfortunate because we have had some matters of substance here.

The worry is that where we could have actually worked together—for example, on support and custody order enforcement—to make a few minor changes, that was not possible. It is not possible on this project, unfortunately. It might be possible on the Mortgages Act, but I doubt it. The Mortgages Act is coming up. It probably will not be possible on the advocacy bills that are coming forward and—my heavens—when we get into that real meaty stuff, that Sunday shopping stuff, finally we are going to get a common pause day. Hallelujah, brother. Praise the Lord. Close those stores. It is not going to be possible on that at all. If you think we have had difficult times here this far, wait until we get into Sunday shopping and you hear the storekeepers in Windsor and Sault Ste Marie and Kingston saying, “Please mind your business.”

Mr Mills: Save that for another day.

Mr Sorbara: I will. I am talking about where the committee is going now, from this point. Where you are going on this matter is that you will write the report; we will have a look at it and we will consider some dissenting views. I am sure my colleagues in the third party will consider some dissenting views and we may even work together on that. We may set aside our partisan differences and the war of politics and actually say, “What do you think about this?” And they will say to us, “We think it should read like this but we’re interested in your opinion.”

Too bad it never happened here. We could have sent Bob Rae a document that could have added to his insight on these matters. Bob Rae has not moved one iota since 1986 when he wrote to the acting commissioner, John Black Aird, arguing for divestment in an eloquent letter he submitted to this committee, and those who were here at that time remember it. Five years later, having become the Premier of Ontario, he has not moved one iota. We could have helped him in that.

Whether these guidelines become law or not, they will embarrass Bob Rae further and further because he has put himself into the ultimate position of conflict, having to make a judicial decision—remember hardship, Gord, you mentioned it—on the basis of how badly he wants Gord Mills or Mark Morrow or Evelyn Gigantes in cabinet. If he really wants that person badly—and that is the heart and soul of conflict, how badly you want it—he made a terrible mistake putting himself in the position of judge and jury, selecting members for his own cabinet and making decisions on their behalf.

It is too bad, because we could have said that in this report. We could have said: “Premier, we understand that you want very high standards. That’s good. The people want high standards as well. But think about removing yourself from the position of making the determination about hardship and whether or not it’s a conflict. Think about vesting that in the commissioner and think again about this business of divestment, because you’re sending a signal to a significant part of Ontario that they’re not welcome even to consider public service in the role of a cabinet minister and, according to you folks, in the role of a parliamentary assistant.

We could have sent him a really good note from this committee, a good, substantial, political reflection on what he asked us to do. And do you know what? Believe it or not, I think Bob Rae would have appreciated it. When he testified before this committee, he gave us the reasons why he favoured divestment, but he really did indicate he was interested in the views—independent views, I think—of those of us who are elected to serve in this Parliament representing our constituents. I really believe he did that.

If we had taken a different course and really decided we were going to have a good, substantial discussion about this, we could have improved the laws of Ontario, not hugely, but at least in certain respects.

You will say, “Oh yes, but we want to do that; it’s just that we differ on these things.” Do you know how I know that is not the case? No government member of this committee has contacted me to discuss this stuff informally over a cup of coffee, not the whip, not the member for Ottawa Centre, who is now apparently carrying the marching orders, not the member for London South, not my good friend Mr Mills. No one has phoned and said, “Why don’t we have a chat in a less formal context?”

Mr Winninger: You have been away, Greg. What do you expect?

Mr Sorbara: My friend mentions that I have been away. Everyone who wanted to contact me while I was away was able to contact me, and some of the things I was contacted about while I was away were rather important, but not as important as this.

1740

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, his comment was out of order and you really should not respond to it.

Mr Sorbara: No, but I enjoyed it none the less.

Those are the little signals. You will find as you get more experienced in this place that those little signals are important. Someone phones and says: “I’d like to get this project moving. Can we have a talk? Can we meet down in the cafeteria? Do you want to take a walk in the park and we’ll discuss what we might be able to do, how we might be able to compromise on this project?”

It never happened to me on SCOE. I am the whip, by the way. No one called. I did not get the call; I did not hear the call; I never wrote the call, all that stuff. No one called to say, “I would like to discuss with you, Greg, what your party feels we could do on these conflict-of-interest guidelines.”

Mr Winninger: The days of deals are over.

Mr Sorbara: I believe that one day government members of this committee will actually be so daring as to pick up the phone and say, “I’d like to speak with you about—

Mr Morrow: Did you call us, Greg?

Ms Mathysen: He has called us lots of things.

Mr Sorbara: I hear voices, Mr Chairman. I do not know where they are coming from, but I do hear voices.

The Chair: Please continue, Mr Sorbara.

Mr Sorbara: The reason I do not call is because we are the minority. We do not have anything to do other than to wait to see what the government's position will be and then to try and encourage compromises. I would still be interested in some compromises or some fresh discussion on this, particularly on this one, because I really believed Bob Rae when he came here and suggested that he would like to hear some independent views on this stuff.

In 1986 he wrote a letter. He crystallized his position; his interest crystallized. My friend the lawyer will understand what I mean when I refer to the crystallization of an interest. Since that time he has not really done much thinking about it, and when he came unexpectedly to the office of the Premier, he was pretty much bound by that 1986 letter.

Have you gone through the documents lately? Bob Rae submitted a whole list of questions to us, generally in the area of conflict of interest. Do you know what? Not one of those questions has been discussed.

My own view is that there is not much left to discuss. We will be submitting some comments in dissent. If and when a bill comes back requiring that ministers divest themselves of their business interests within 60 days of being appointed to cabinet, we will oppose that measure. That will probably come back to the justice committee and we will have further discussions on that. I can tell you one thing. I am absolutely convinced in my view, in a non-partisan way, that our objection to that proposal is in the interest of good public policy.

I point out the fact that Franklin Delano Roosevelt, who the Premier wanted to kind of echo in his first few days in office—he talked about reconstruction. He really was looking back to Roosevelt's plan for reconstruction out of the Depression. Bob Rae knows all this history and he wanted to use some of the same metaphors. Franklin Delano Roosevelt would not have qualified to sit in Bob Rae's cabinet, but Richard Nixon would have. Pierre Elliott Trudeau would not have been able to sit in Bob Rae's cabinet, but Joe Clark would have.

All I am saying is, reflect on it. As you craft the report, saying that if you want to qualify for Bob Rae's cabinet, you sell what you have and you are then beholden only to him, reflect on whether you really believe that is good public policy. We do not, and our dissent will express as much.

Mr Mills: I would just like to make one or two comments about this. I noticed that when this discussion commenced, Mr Sorbara went on about the rotating of the PAs to foster experience among the backbenchers and how this was part of the policy of the Liberal party. I can appreciate that. You had so many people you did not know what to do with them to keep them all happy. I do not know what is in Bob Rae's mind, whether I will be the PA to the Solicitor General next month or next week or two years hence—

Mr Carr: You will be Solicitor General, Gord.

Mr Harnick: You are going to be it.

Mr Mills: I am just saying I do not know that, but nevertheless I think that—

Mr Sorbara: He rotated PAs even when we only had 48 members in the 1985-87 period.

Mr Mills: I am just saying that in my limited knowledge of the last government, I thought the rotation of the PAs was really designed to keep everyone happy and not necessarily to give them experience. I noticed through the discussion, and I take exception to it, that there is a sort of vein running through here that people who come to this Legislature are superior if they have money or if they are business people or are of some affluence.

Mr Sorbara: My point is that they are not inferior.

Mr Mills: This vein runs through all the discussion. Mr Sorbara made a comment which I wrote down. He said that he had said to the Premier, "I could never sit in your cabinet," and Mr Rae had replied, "Precisely." Mr Sorbara said, "I took significant offence to that."

Mr Sorbara: Yes.

Mr Mills: Okay, I take significant offence to something you said. You said, sir, that these guidelines "are going to affect the substance, the nature and the quality of this House." I have not got a penny to my name, but I still like to think that I am making a contribution here, and I think that for you to say that the people who have not got money or have not got wealth or affluence—

Mr Sorbara: I say I can make a contribution too, but I for one do not qualify.

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, Mr Mills has the floor.

Mr Mills: That is the substance, that the nature and quality of this House is absolutely awful; it upsets me when people say that. So I look at myself and say, "Crumbs," you know. But I will get on with it. I think that in supporting this this document as it relates to parliamentary assistants, ultimately that decision, no matter who you are, depends upon you. If I have ten apartment blocks and I am in here and the Premier comes to me and says: "Gord, I want you to be the PA to so-and-so. What do you think about it?" I make that decision. I then have to say to myself, "What is my contribution to society through sitting in this House? Do I feel I want to make that contribution more than I want to own my houses?" All these things run through your mind. I think it is up to the individual to make that decision and it is not for us for say, "You will not qualify," or, "You do qualify for this position."

I would like to say in conclusion that I have great confidence in the Premier's statement of hardship. If I came into this House and was offered a position and could demonstrate very well to the Premier that I would like to be here and would like to do that, but that I own this and it will be a great hardship for me to divest this to be in his cabinet or to be a parliamentary assistant, I like to think the Premier would undertake a thorough investigation of that and accordingly make a decision in a humanitarian way.

Mr Sorbara: Like he did with Peter Kormos, for example.

Mr Mills: I do not have the connotation that it is sort of—

Interjections.

The Chair: Mr Mills does have the floor, please.

Mr Mills: I have absolutely no qualms about this. I think the underlying issue with all of us is credibility with the public, and right now it is zero. I must say to my friends across there that the tactics in the House added to that lack of credibility. It was just awful.

Mr Harnick: The Premier could have sent it out for hearings without going through all of that.

Mr Mills: I think guidelines such as these go a long way in getting back the confidence of the public that there are some criteria to being in this House. I fully support them and I thank you.

Mr Harnick: Just a few remarks: I agree in part with the concepts that Mr Mills discusses. I believe public perception is important and I think we here have lost sight of what that public perception really is directed to. That public perception is directed to making promises at election time and then fulfilling your promises if you are elected.

That to me is much more significant than the perception that one needs to divest to demonstrate to the public that we have honest people in this Legislature. We heard from numerous witnesses who came before us, and they were witnesses of different political stripes. I am referring to present cabinet ministers and to former cabinet ministers. Not one of them demonstrated, when asked, that there was any incident he could think of where the disclosure rules had not been effective. None of them indicated that anyone to their knowledge ever came to this Legislature and benefited and did things for personal gain. Certainly when one looks at perception, that to me is very significant.

At any rate, it is my understanding now that we will be completing our deliberations, such as they were, on this bill. We will be seeing the report that is prepared and we will thereafter, either in combination or individually, be preparing minority opinions on either all of what is in the final report or on various sections. That is now my understanding, that those minority reports will be prepared after we have had a chance to see the report that will be prepared by the committee itself.

I agree that we did not see eye to eye on the issue of whether there should be divestiture or whether there should not be, and it is regrettable to me. As a committee we made a decision and we decided and the majority ruled that there should be divestiture. Unfortunately, we left the section hanging. There was more good work we could have done once that decision was made. We could have looked at section 15 and we could have made certain recommendations so that the issue of hardship would have been clearer. We could have made recommendations about what the Premier's function would be and what the conflict commissioner's function could be.

We did not even have the opportunity in this committee, that I am aware of, to review the subsequent guidelines or the elaboration of the guidelines that the Premier issued to his cabinet and parliamentary assistants in February. We did not even have the opportunity to see how that impacted on this legislation, and I find that regrettable. I do not find it regrettable that we had philosophical differences. What I do find regrettable is that we were not able to go through the significant sections of these guidelines and make them better. There was never an attempt by this committee to direct ourselves to do that.

I find that regrettable because I too was under the impression that Premier Rae was genuinely interested in a detailed study of the contents of these guidelines. I felt, certainly from his appearance here, that he was prepared to consider many different points of view. Unfortunately, the report that will be prepared—and obviously signed by the majority of government members—is merely a recitation of headings, a fast summary and a motion that was put after each section, “Yes, we agree,” or “No, we do not agree.” I do not think that is what the Premier really intended us to do, and I think it is regrettable that is where this has been left.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Chair, I move that we adjourn now so that we can proceed to vote.

The Chair: The only thing I am wondering about is whether we are adjourning on this, or have you resolved to subsequently present dissenting reports?

Mr Sorbara: The bells are ringing.

The Chair: Five minutes. We are adjourned.

The committee adjourned at 1755.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

STANDING COMMITTEE ON ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

Monday 17 June 1991

The committee met at 1543 in committee room 1.

CONFLICT-OF-INTEREST GUIDELINES

Resuming consideration of the Premier's conflict-of-interest guidelines.

The Vice-Chair: We are on the part where we left off on parliamentary assistants. I believe the governing party has the floor.

Mrs Mathyssen: I would like to make a motion to the committee. My motion is that we vote quickly on the remaining items of the draft report and ask the researcher to have a new draft report ready by Wednesday 19 June to distribute to members of the committee on Thursday 20 June and that the finalized report be brought back to the committee on Monday 24 June. Any dissenting report should be tabled at that time.

The Vice-Chair: Can you give that to the clerk in writing, if you would not mind?

Mrs Mathyssen: I certainly will. She may not thank me for it, but I certainly will.

Mr Harnick: That is totally contrary to what we were discussing last week and totally contrary to the schedule I had understood we had discussed in terms of the preparation of the final report, which would then be provided to the opposition parties to review and consider if they wished to prepare a dissenting report. Certainly by doing everything at the 11th hour, you make it more and more difficult for the opposition parties, if they so desire at the end of the day, to prepare a well-balanced and well thought out dissenting report.

I might add that this is very typical of the way this whole matter has been handled by this committee. Let's do everything in a rush and let's not consider what the Premier said when he came here on 14 February, that he was genuinely interested in the concerted effort this committee was going to make to thoroughly review the conflict-of-interest guidelines and the Members' Conflict of Interest Act in a section-by-section way, rather than just taking a section or a block out of his already prepared preliminary work and saying, "Are you for or are you against it?"

I submit that is not what the Premier had in mind when he came here and when he left these guidelines in front of the committee. The Premier did not have in mind at that time that we would go through a report with headings on it and merely reiterate that which is found in the guidelines themselves. The Premier certainly indicated that he was anxious to see what our review of this material would bring, that he was anxious that we look at the guidelines and go through them on a section-by-section basis to see if we could make these conflict-of-interest guidelines better than they are.

Certainly the history of these guidelines has been fraught with difficulty. I do not think there is anybody in this room who would disagree with that. That would make it even more necessary to take our time and develop a proper report reviewing this material section by section. It would seem to me that if there is some question about whether that is really the mandate of this committee, we should ask the Premier to come back here and show him the pitiful job that has been done in terms of regurgitating his headings in the guidelines, just saying for or against it and not offering any constructive criticism of that material. The Premier will acknowledge readily, I am quite sure, that these guidelines are a new initiative, that he wants them to work, that he wants them considered and that he wants the experience of their usage in the last nine months to be considered.

I think this motion merely confirms the crass way in which the government members have dealt with this material. They have dealt with it on a totally political basis. They have made absolutely no effort to review the material in any thorough way. They have put ridiculous time constraints on the researcher, and quite frankly the work that has been turned out is nothing more than a regurgitation of the existing guidelines without a single, solitary concrete recommendation for any change. If that is what the Premier wanted, why did he bother giving the guidelines to this committee at all?

I think the motion should be reconsidered. I think it should be withdrawn and I think we should proceed with our work and do this properly, or at least have the courtesy to let the opposition parties deal with it in a way that does not give them three days to prepare a dissenting report. All that you have done is to create a system of trickery here to try to speed up the process and prevent the opposition parties from preparing a well-reasoned, dissenting report, or reports, as the case may be. To do that at the 11th hour and tell us that you are going to bring your final report back on the 24th and allow us maybe two days to get a dissenting report done is not proper. It is just crassly political and it shows that you could not care less about the quality of these guidelines when the report goes back to the Legislature.

The Chair: Excuse me. The clerk has a point of clarification.

Mrs Mathyssen: In response to Mr Harnick, might I point out that we are acting on recommendations made last week by the opposition? In fact, I am looking at Hansard from 11 June and at that time Mr Harnick very clearly said, "It is my understanding now that we will be completing our deliberations." I am proposing that we complete those deliberations. As Mr Harnick so obviously pointed out, we have been at this since February. It is time to get on with it.

Mr Chair, if you were to check Hansard over the last four months, you would find that Mr Sorbara and Mr Harnick have gone on at length about these deliberations and about these guidelines. We have sat here and listened with great patience, Job-like patience. The opposition had ample time since February to consider its position. If they were at all serious about reporting serious guidelines back to the House, I suggest they would end this seemingly endless rhetoric of theirs.

My motion stands. I propose that we finalize our report by next week. If they have a dissenting report, fine. They have had months and months and hours and hours of our time to get those objections into Hansard. Let's get on with it.

The Chair: The clerk has a question back to the earlier discussion I was having with her, simply a clarification of the word "quickly."

Mrs Mathysen: "Expediently."

The Chair: It says that we vote "quickly."

Clerk of the Committee: The only thing I wanted to clarify is that a motion is out of order if it is unclear, and I was not essentially clear on what the words "vote quickly" actually mean, how one would vote quickly.

Mrs Mathysen: Okay, "today."

Clerk of the Committee: To vote "today." Thank you.

Mr Chiarelli: I first of all want to endorse Mr Harnick's comments 100%. I agree with all the comments he made and the submissions he made. I want to add several comments to those.

Quite frankly, I frequently feel under siege as an elected official, as a "politician." We all know that people in the public today place politicians on the lower end of the credibility scale. In fact, they place them on about the same level as lawyers, and I happen to be a lawyer as well. I think we should look at the whole concept of politics as self-governing, like a lot of professions. In fact, the Premier's guidelines are really rules of self-government for the Premier and his cabinet. To that extent, the credibility of those guidelines, the self-governing rules in effect, will define to the public what our credibility really is.

Look at what has happened with politics in Canada over the last number of years. Look over the last week or two at the federal scene with the Al-Mashat situation and what is happening with respect to the credibility of ministers, the credibility of the government, the whole issue of ministerial responsibility. Look at the record of this government since the cabinet was sworn in. Look at the experiences and the circumstances around the Red Hill Creek Expressway issue and ministers Philip and Allen. Look at the factual circumstances around Mr Kormos's having to leave the cabinet. Look at the technical breach by Ms Akande of the guidelines. Look at the requirement, self-imposed by Ms Gigantes, to leave cabinet, probably temporarily as everyone assumes and probably rightly so. Look at the very difficult situation that Mr Farnan finds himself in and of course the events of late last week with ministers Swarbrick and Martel. What those incidents say to us and should say to us as a self-governing profession is that the guidelines are not working. The guidelines are not working because I believe some of the ministers are unclear, and I believe the Premier is unclear, on some of them. Quite frankly, if you read the public's points of view—if you can say they are expressed through the media, through editorials—I think there is a sense that something is amiss in terms of the rules that we in effect self-govern ourselves by.

I am not trying to impute motive. I am not saying that Bob Rae has bad motives in making the decisions he does. I am not saying Mike Farnan has bad motives for not offering to resign and that there are bad motives in any way on the part of Swarbrick or Martel in offering to resign. I am not saying there was bad political judgement on the part of Ms Gigantes for deciding to resign and having it accepted. All I am saying is that it is manifestly clear to the public that the concept of guidelines, as we have them now, is not working. They are not working for the people who are on the firing line—that is, the ministers—and certainly they add confusion and problems even for the opposition, because we have to make an assessment.

As an opposition, we have to sit down and ask: "What is our responsibility to the public to give credibility to us as a profession? Is it really a question of substance to question the guidelines and the propriety of the ministers or should we get on with other issues, such as the budget and support and custody orders enforcement, etc." Believe me, we talk about that. We talk about our responsibility to the public on these issues. We have to make a determination whether or not bringing to the public's attention and keeping in the public's attention the questions of possible resignations and the propriety of these ministers is a proper matter to consistently bring before the Legislature.

The point I am making is that we have now had some very direct evidence, in the course of the last eight or nine months, that there is confusion internally about these guidelines. There is confusion in the public; there is confusion in the opposition. If there is a fault we, the people on the government side and the people in the opposition, are collectively at fault for decreasing and diminishing the credibility of our profession. If we can together make rules that make sense, we are going to enhance that credibility with the public. I think we have got a long way to go and I am talking collectively, as a Legislature.

I am going to make a motion after this vote which I hope will help cast some light on the comments I am making, but the fact of the matter is I agree with Mr Harnick. I think we should spend some time exploring objectively, in a non-partisan way, the real difficulties with implementation. It is all right to have motherhood guidelines, but if motherhood guidelines create real problem—and I am talking about heartaches for the ministers, because surely there have been many, and heartaches for the public, the families of people involved and the opposition members. We saw Mr Nixon's response. It was a very emotional response that was made in the House. It was a very human response.

Ms Gigantes: Very civil.

Mr Chiarelli: And a very civil response, as the member said. The fact of the matter is that the reason there is such a divergence and diversity of responses is that the guidelines are unclear, and when it comes to implementing and enforcing the guidelines there are serious problems.

Winding up, I believe the circumstances of the last number of months should say quite objectively and in a non-partisan way to this committee, let us take a little more time to look at the enforcement and look at the realities of some of these circumstances. I believe if we do not rush into it, we can improve it and make more sense. To that end, after this particular motion is dealt with, I will be placing another motion.

Ms Gigantes: Mr Chair, I would like to propose that we take the vote on the motion.

The Chair: Are you putting the question, Ms Gigantes?

Ms Gigantes: I would like to have the question put, please.

Mr Harnick: May I say something further about this vote?

The Chair: It is not debatable.

Mr Harnick: I do not want to debate that; I want to discuss the motion.

Ms Gigantes: No, we will take a vote on this first.

Mr Harnick: I guess we are seeing closure again.

Mr Chiarelli: Can I have 20 minutes so we can talk to our other committee members?

The Chair: I do not believe we have had sufficient discussion of this particular motion. Mr Harnick.

Mr Harnick: I think it is passing strange that we are considering the conflict-of-interest guidelines. We have not yet even opened and looked at the letter Bob Rae wrote to John Black Aird, who was interim commissioner for conflict-of-interest matters. It was mentioned in February when the Premier gave it to us. As a committee, we have never looked at this letter, nor have we discussed it on a heading-by-heading basis.

Mrs Mathysen: We talked about it in February.

Mr Harnick: May I continue, Mr Chairman?

The Chair: Please.

Mr Harnick: We have never discussed this letter. We have never discussed the addendum to the conflict-of-interest guidelines that the Premier released, I believe, in February, although we all have copies of that. It has never been discussed at this committee. We have never discussed the act on a clause-by-clause basis. We have never discussed some of the problems that have come up, dealing with ministers Akande, Richard Allen, Elmer Buchanan, and all of this documentation that was delivered to the Legislature last week dated 5 June 1991. We have never discussed the conflict-of-interest act, nor have we discussed the Conflict of Interest Commissioner's proposed amendments to that act.

I do not know what the government members' instructions are. Obviously there is a big hurry here. The Premier came into the Legislature last week and again this week and said he was looking forward to our considered deliberations. With all due respect, we have not had any considered deliberations. We have not even gone beyond looking at what the witnesses said. We have a compilation of what the witnesses said. That is all that Susan Swift, our legislative research officer, has been provided with. She has put that into the form of a written report and that is all we have looked at. That is absolutely all we have looked at. We have not looked at the conflict-of-interest act. We have not done clause-by-clause on the guidelines. We have not looked at Bob Rae's letter when he was the opposition leader writing to the conflict commissioner of the day. We have not looked at his addendum to the conflict-of-interest guidelines.

If you want to do this fast, I will put it on the record that this is not what the Premier intends. The Premier intends a good report back to him. If you do not want to do a good majority report, at least permit the opposition parties the time to see what your report says and to prepare, in a considered and reasoned way, their minority report or reports. At least grant us that courtesy. You may want to do it quickly and you may want to do it in a cursory manner. That is up to you. You have the majority on this committee and you can win every single vote of every single motion that you bring.

Go ahead and win your votes, but at least extend to the opposition parties the consideration of the time necessary to prepare a proper report, because there is not going to be a whole lot gained by tabling your report in the Legislature in the last week of this session or the first week of the next session. Not a whole lot is going to change in between, so I put it to you, go ahead and pass your motion if that is what you want to do. All your motion is is another form of closure, but if that is what you want to do, go ahead and pass your motion. But at least extend to us the courtesy, the opportunity, without having a time deadline of a day or two or three, to prepare a report.

We do not have a research assistant to do it for us as the committee does. We have to do these things ourselves. If we are going to do a minority report, the least you could do is give us more than three days to do it. All right? If you want to do it the fast and easy way, that is fine and you will win the motion because you have more votes than we have, but at least extend to us a realistic time frame so that we can prepare our report and can consider all the things that this committee has not considered. Maybe we can give the Premier back something in addition to a regurgitation of the guidelines as written, because that is all you have done here.

Ms Gigantes: On a point of order, Mr Chair: Is that enough?

Mr Harnick: Go ahead and have your vote.

The Chair: There would have to be a motion to find out. Mr Fletcher is next.

Mr Fletcher: I am willing to defer to—

Ms Gigantes: Go ahead and move it again.

Mr Fletcher: I move the question.

Mr Chiarelli: Can I raise a point of order?

The Chair: I had ruled the previous question out of order as there had not been sufficient debate.

Mr Chiarelli: Can I make a point of order?

The Chair: No, I am sorry. Not on that question, no. That is my ruling, as you know.

Mr Chiarelli: I wanted to speak on the motion. I wanted to know why the Conservative member can speak twice to this matter and I cannot, for much less time.

Ms Gigantes: On the point of order, Mr Chair, you were going to rule on putting the question. It is not debatable.

The Chair: So I understood.

Mr Chiarelli: On a point of order, Mr Chairman: Did you not say that you were going to permit additional time to debate the issue?

Ms Gigantes: He did.

The Chair: I did.

Mr Chiarelli: Are you going to permit me some additional time or just the member from the Conservative Party? Is that fair and evenhanded as a Chairman?

The Chair: I think that is a reasonable request, Mr Chiarelli.

Mr Chiarelli: I do not go on at length. I try to make my points briefly.

The Chair: The issue was sufficient time. Mr Harnick, as you have already mentioned, has already spoken twice. I think that is reasonable.

Mr Fletcher: On a point of order, Mr Chair: Are you allowing the opposition to speak again on this for the same amount of time Mr Harnick spoke?

The Chair: What I am suggesting is I am allowing Mr Chiarelli to speak. If the request is brought up again, I suggest that at that point it would probably be ruled in order.

Mr Fletcher: Then do I have the floor after the opposition? Is my name still on the list?

The Chair: It is, sir.

Mr Fletcher: Then I will move it after them.

Mr Chiarelli: I just wanted to make a comment that we are talking about something that is obviously very technical. It is something that requires Solomon to interpret, both from the end of the persons who are doing the acts and from the end of the person who will be doing the judging. I am talking particularly about the ministers and the Premier.

If the government side is determined to move quickly and rush these matters through, I hope it is going to be cautious and careful and judicious in what it does, because it is paying a monumental political price for the guidelines that are in place at the present time, a monumental price in terms of human turmoil that has been created on the part of individual ministers, on the part of the Premier and on the part of the opposition. In fact, if they are hell-bent on speeding this thing through, then there will be no sympathy after the fact when this becomes law or is legislated, if and when errors continue.

I am simply cautioning that there should be deliberation and patience. As a matter of fact, the House is not going to be sitting for a number of months. There is time to consider things in due course and to do the job properly and right. I am simply suggesting, from the point of view of giving some advice to those who are going to be on the firing line, that they might want to think twice about rushing into it.

Mr Fletcher: Just a couple of comments: We have had four months of deliberations on this and countless witnesses. For Mr Harnick to speak for the Premier I find to be ludicrous. To say that he knows what the Premier wants is crazy. He does not know what the Premier wants. Only the Premier knows what he wants.

On that note, Mr Chair, I am calling the question.

The Chair: All in favour of putting the question?

Mr Chiarelli: Can I have 20 minutes for the vote, please?

The Chair: A 20-minute bell.

The committee recessed at 1610.

1630

The Chair: We are resuming. All in favour of putting the question? Opposed?

Motion agreed to.

The Chair: We now have the motion in front of us. Mrs Mathysen, would you like to re-read your motion or would you prefer I do it?

Mrs Mathysen: Would you please, Mr Chair?

The Chair: Mrs Mathysen moves that we vote today on the remaining items of the draft report and ask the researcher to have the new draft report ready by Wednesday 19 June for distribution to members of the justice committee on Justice on Thursday 20 June and that any dissenting report should be tabled at that time and that the finalized report be brought back to the committee on Monday 24 June for final approval.

Mr Chiarelli: I ask for 20 minutes, Mr Chair.

Mr Morrow: Did you just ask for 20 minutes?

Mr Chiarelli: Yes.

The Chair: The question has been put. All in favour of the question?

Mr Chiarelli: Just a minute. I have asked for 20 minutes.

Mr Morrow: Excuse me. I do not understand something. If both caucuses have their full complement here, why do we need 20 minutes?

Mr Chiarelli: Because I want to go and review the motion that I am going to move immediately after the vote. I want some time to consider that. Besides, you are not entitled to an answer.

Ms S. Murdock: On a point of order, or a point of information, Mr Chair: I do not know whether it is a point of order or information, but I am sure I will be told. Have the substitutions been properly adhered to in this committee?

The Chair: Yes.

Mr Elston: Thank you for your concern.

Ms S. Murdock: I am definitely concerned.

The Chair: We have the question in front of us.

Mr Chiarelli: I am requesting 20 minutes.

The committee recessed at 1632.

1652

The Vice-Chair: I call the committee back to order. Can I ask the clerk to please read the motion.

Clerk of the Committee: Mrs Mathysen moves that—

Mr Harnick: Dispense.

Mrs Mathysen: I want it read, Mr Chair, because the first time it was read, it was not read correctly. I want it read correctly because after it was read the second time, the intent of what I had written was seriously changed. It would possibly, by virtue of the fact that the time frame had been seriously changed, cause the opposition some concern and at this point in time it is not my intention to ever upset or cause the opposition any concern.

The Vice-Chair: I am asking the clerk to re-read the motion as you have stated.

Mrs Mathysen: Oh, thank you. I appreciate that very, very, very much, Mr Chair. It is very important that it be delineated in a clear fashion. That is very kind of you, I must say.

Clerk of the Committee: Mrs Mathysen moves that we vote today on the remaining items of the draft report and ask the researcher to have the new draft report ready by Wednesday 19 June for distribution to members of the justice committee on Thursday 20 June and that the finalized report be brought back on Monday 24 June and that any dissenting report should be tabled at that time.

The Vice-Chair: All those in favour?

Mr Fletcher: On a point of order, Mr Chair.

The Vice-Chair: I am sorry. A point of order.

Mrs Mathysen: We are in the middle of a vote here.

The Vice-Chair: You cannot have a point of order in the middle of a vote. All those in favour?

Mr Elston: I have a point of order, Mr Chair. We now have had two motions read to us, one by the preceding Chair and one now by the clerk. It is my view that in order to ensure that we know exactly what the motion is, we now undertake to determine the matter before us. I had heard the previous motion read to indicate that the dissenting report, which it was to be assumed might be available since the hammer is coming down on us, would have to be delivered by 19 June. This one now changes that date, I believe, to Monday 24 June. It might be well that we have Mrs Mathysen, who was concerned that the matter be read more fully this time, now expound upon the background on why the previous reading was in error and why this new motion is the one that is in place.

Mrs Mathysen: It was a courtesy that I extended to you to make sure there was clarity in this motion. I am not playing any more games here. My motion is before this committee and there is a vote called on that motion.

Mr Elston: Which one?

Mrs Mathysen: Shall I read it?

The Vice-Chair: Mrs Mathysen, you have two options here.

Mr Chiarelli: Can you please explain why there are two motions here?

Mrs Mathysen: There are not two motions and you know that.

Mr Chiarelli: Can you explain why there are two of them? Why do they read differently?

Mrs Mathysen: They read differently because there was a misreading. I will read it and I will provide clarity if that is what you wish.

Mr Chiarelli: The motion is now on the table.

Mrs Mathysen: My motion is on the table. Shall I read it?

The Vice-Chair: Excuse me. Order, please. The only difference in the motions is that the first motion stated that the report would be back by Thursday and the second motion said it would be back by Monday. You can go with the first one if you so wish. I leave that up to the committee. I am now asking the clerk to clarify, if you will give the clerk your indulgence, please.

Clerk of the Committee: In terms of what closure was moved on, the motion that the Chair read—that is, that the dissenting report is due on Thursday of this week—was a misreading of the intent. Therefore, I believe the New Democratic Party gave the benefit of the doubt in terms of what it wanted and changed that to Monday to give the opposition extra days. If we are moving closure on the motion that was read, then the dissenting report of the opposition would be due in by Thursday of this week.

Ms Gigantes: Mr Chair, if I could add to that my understanding of what happened, Mrs Mathysen read her motion in the form that has just been read to us now. When it was transmitted to the clerk and it was read before the adjournment motion for the vote, it was read in mistaken form. If we want to go back and check the tape right now, we can check what Mrs Mathysen said in the original tape, but it is, I guarantee to you, exactly as it has now been presented to us.

The Vice-Chair: Ms Gigantes, I am going to rule in your favour, as Mrs Mathysen read that in the first place and all members have had this motion in front of them for 20 minutes.

All in favour of the written motion? Opposed?

Motion agreed to.

Mr Harnick: On a point of order, Mr Chair: I have a motion.

The Vice-Chair: Mr Chiarelli asked to be recognized after this. You cannot move a motion on a point of order.

Mr Chiarelli: I will defer to Mr Harnick. I have a motion to put after his motion.

Mr Harnick: I have a motion to put on the floor. I move that we request the Premier to reattend before this committee for clarification of the kind of report and the kind of review he wanted done regarding his conflict-of-interest guidelines. That is my motion.

Ms Gigantes: Mr Chair, I put it to you that the motion is out of order, this committee having just passed a motion which is of contrary intent to the motion Mr Harnick is trying to place right now.

Mr Harnick: No, it is not. What do you have to lose by asking the Premier to come back?

Ms Gigantes: The motion we just passed is that we finish today the decisions to be made on the remaining points in the draft report that we have in front of us. The intent of Mr Harnick's motion is to delay matters again. We have just passed a procedural motion which I expect you will now proceed to follow. No delaying motions, Mr Chair, are now in order.

The Vice-Chair: The question of delay implies intent on Mr Harnick's part. However, I think you do have a very valid point. I am sorry. Mr Elston, do you wish to speak on the point of order?

Mr Elston: I do wish to speak on the point that was raised. Although Ms Gigantes has raised an issue about the compatibility of the new motion with regard to the one that was just passed by the New Democratic majority, I must indicate that if she really wishes to be consistent, she might very well check the reference of this material to this committee in the form that it took, which was, by the Premier's own admission, to ensure that there was the fullest and most complete and thorough analysis of the conflict-of-interest materials.

That having been stated, and that also having been indicated not to have occurred at this point, could mean that the reference which was given this committee would not be subject to the cutoff that was just orchestrated by the New Democratic majority. That being the case, I suggest to you, Mr Chairman that if you want to be perfectly consistent, perhaps Mr Harnick's motion is even more correct than was the last one which was just placed and found to be in order by yourself and then voted on and passed by the New Democrats.

I suggest to you that this is a particularly long day and there is time to extend the invitation to the Premier. We are all sitting here until midnight. He can come over. I am sure he has a couple of minutes someplace or other and we can get all of the work done. We have from now till midnight to do all that work. Mr Harnick's motion is very compatible with the amount of time we have to do our work.

The Vice-Chair: Mr Elston, we have until 6 pm.

Mr Elston: No, we can sit all day. The day is now extended until 12.

Mr Chiarelli: I have an amendment.

The Vice-Chair: We are entertaining questions on the point of order, not an amendment.

Mr Chiarelli: It has to do with the point of order in the sense that I think the comment was made by Ms Gigantes that this particular motion is contrary to the substance of the motion that was just voted on and approved. Quite frankly, I do not think that is the case. My understanding of the process is that when a motion has been approved for extra hours, as it has for the Legislature, that applies to committees if the committees so choose.

The Vice-Chair: No, it does not.

Mr Chiarelli: We certainly can accommodate that particular request for the Premier to attend for evening hours. We need unanimous consent.

The Vice-Chair: We need unanimous consent to extend the committee's hours, so we are discussing the point of order at the moment. Do we have any further discussion on the point of order?

Mr Harnick: May I speak on the point of order? The point of order indicates that the motion I have put on the floor is incompatible with the motion we just passed. The only incompatibility concerns the time limits, and I put it to everyone here that we have the time. The Premier could be here tomorrow afternoon if we extended the invitation. We would probably need him for one or two hours. We are going to be here from 3:30 till 5:30 or 6:00 tomorrow. We could quite easily have the Premier here and get the clarification that I think we need in order to provide the kind of report the Premier has mandated us to deliver, which is not the report that this committee—the majority, I might add—is in the course of ramming down the opposition's throat. That is not, I submit, the intent of the Premier.

If you feel that is the intent of the Premier, you have nothing to hide by having him come here. We can seek clarification by telling him what we have done and clarify what it is that he wants us to examine for the purpose of providing a proper report. That certainly supersedes the ridiculous time limits that we have now imposed upon ourselves, but it is not incompatible with those time limits. We can certainly find the time to have the Premier attend and we can ask him the specific questions that remain, certainly in my mind and I know in the mind of the official opposition and in the mind of my colleague Mr Carr. The only incompatibility is the fact that you are in a great hurry to ram this through and come up with some kind of half-assed report that is not going to do anything to further good conflict-of-interest legislation in this province.

The Vice-Chair: Mr Harnick, I would like to suggest that while the motion which you put is, I think, out of order with today's proceedings, if another motion were put to invite the Premier for tomorrow—now that, given the Premier's schedule, may be difficult, but that may be in order. However, I would have to agree with Ms Gigantes that your motion is out of order as it was originally stated.

Mr Harnick: Well, I think if that is—

The Vice-Chair: Mr Chiarelli.

Mr Harnick: May I respond to that?

The Vice-Chair: No. I have ruled. Ms Gigantes?

Mr Harnick: At least tell me you are going to cut me off.

Ms Gigantes: He just did. You have just ruled, Mr Chair?

The Vice-Chair: I have.

Ms Gigantes: That is good.

Mr Harnick: Can I amend my motion, then?

The Vice-Chair: Ms Gigantes, did you have something further to add?

Ms Gigantes: Mr Chair, I am prepared to begin our process through the report with motions—

Interjection.

The Vice-Chair: I am sorry. You are quite right, Mr Chiarelli. I apologize, Ms Gigantes. I should have recognized Mr Chiarelli first.

Mr Chiarelli: I had indicated much earlier, even before the last number of votes, that I had a motion I wanted to put. I have since changed the motion and I will be introducing the motion I originally indicated later.

The motion I have at the present time is that the draft report referred to in the motion be translated and available in French for the public and members of this committee. That is my motion.

The reason I have indicated that is I have been informed by Mr Poirier that there has been tremendous media interest from the francophone media on this particular issue, conflict-of-interest guidelines. There are a number of constituents who have raised this matter and I think it is in order for this committee to consider variations of the rules concerning translation. We know that there are guidelines available to committees for translation of reports and draft reports, etc. In my opinion, our committee should consider having this available in both of our official languages.

The Vice-Chair: The report, unless a motion is placed to have it available only in one language, is automatically translated into both languages.

Mr Chiarelli: I am talking about the draft report.

The Vice-Chair: The draft report?

Mr Chiarelli: Yes. It is simply a motion I have put on the floor and in my opinion, it is in order.

The Vice-Chair: I believe you are right. Ms Gigantes?

Ms Gigantes: Again I am going to suggest that this motion at this time is out of order. In fact, we have just placed a procedural motion. It would be quite in order, once we have completed work under the motion which we have just passed, to have a new motion about the form of the draft report. But in the meantime we are governed by a decision we have just taken procedurally, which is to proceed with the outstanding items to be decided, for the draft report to be completed in second round. After that, I think it would be in order to have another motion.

The Vice-Chair: I appreciate your input, Ms Gigantes. I think, however, that the motion is in order. I would suggest that further debate be on the motion.

Mr Fletcher: Speaking to the motion, this draft report will automatically be made available to the public.

The Vice-Chair: The final report will be made in both languages. The draft report may not be.

Mr Fletcher: Is not all testimony that is brought forward before this committee open to the public?

The Vice-Chair: May I ask the clerk to respond to that issue of what is translated and what is not.

Mr Fletcher: No, open to the public. I am not saying translated. Open to the public.

Clerk of the Committee: Yes.

The Vice-Chair: Yes.

Mr Fletcher: We do not really need a motion to make this open to the public, since the public will be—

The Vice-Chair: No.

Mr Fletcher: I do not have a problem with the translation. It is just the other part where you are saying—

Interjection.

The Vice-Chair: Okay. Further discussion on the motion itself?

Mr Elston: I think that in this case, particularly when we are at the foundation of the existence of this government, the draft report ought to be available for analysis in both English and French. It seems to me that this government has staked its reputation on making a new mark for itself in these matters. From my point of view, the motion by my colleague the member for Ottawa West is both timely and of importance so that we can make sure there are no errors between the two versions. When we review the reports, they then can be made to correspond one with the other. We wish no problems to arise after the material is printed.

It seems as well that while we consider some of those other things and have the translations brought forward to us, as you had well indicated, a motion later for us to review some of the material the Premier might bring in would allow us to augment the reports as well and we ought to take time now so that we do not waste time later in making sure that the English and French reports are to the same effect. I think my colleague for Ottawa West has moved a very important motion to make sure that our work is done in the most thorough fashion and I commend him for that.

Ms Gigantes: I am going to speak against the motion, because it is being used as a delaying tactic. It is in direct contravention of the motion we have just passed, in my view, and it would also constitute a total precedent for the drafting of reports around this Legislature. It would make it even more difficult to reach the point of report writing and report completion, report tabling. If the members opposite wish to have delays built in which are going to make it impossible for a government to proceed in any kind of regular way with work, then clearly that is what they are about.

Interjection.

Ms Gigantes: Mr Chair, I believe I have the floor.

We will certainly, as is the normal course of events, make sure that the conclusion of our work is available in two languages, but to go through the process of drafting and redrafting in two languages seems to me quite extraordinary, particularly as we are not going to be delaying this matter, I hope, beyond next week.

Mr Poirier: Obviously what my colleague for Ottawa West advanced was quite true. There is quite a bit of interest, and if I am not mistaken, the draft report is available for the public's perusal. Is it?

Clerk of the Committee: I do not hand the draft report out to the public. If anybody from the public wants it, I request that they get it from a member.

Mr Poirier: Fair enough. As a francophone member, I have a hard time with people who might find some problems with that. Obviously bilingualism will require a bit longer to produce material, but I am sorry, I would like to be able to look at it in French, and if we want to write part of the material in French or the media or somebody requests it, what is the government going to answer, that it is not available in French?

The Chair: The clerk informs me that the translation of the draft report could delay the draft report's presentation by up to three weeks.

Mr Harnick: Is there a problem with living with 23 September as opposed to now?

Ms Gigantes: If I might, we are not writing legislation here. We are not dealing with legislation. We are dealing with a report about how the proposed additions to conflict-of-interest legislation in this province are to be approached. We have been mandated to provide guidance to the Premier, and for us to engage now in a delay for purposes of translation—it is quite clear to all members on all sides of this committee and everybody in this room that the motion is put forward as a delaying tactic, as many other motions have been.

Mr Elston: Speak for yourself. Don't speak for us.

Ms Gigantes: I am speaking for myself. I will hazard a guess that people on all sides of this room see this as a delaying motion.

Mr Elston: It is against the rules. Ask her to withdraw, Mr Chair. You know it is against the rules. It is quite clear. You should call her to order and ask her to withdraw the remarks.

The Chair: If you have a point of privilege to raise, you can do so sir.

Mr Elston: On a point of order, Mr Chair: You know what the rules are. You know that it is against the rules of procedure of the House and therefore the committee for another member to impute motive to another member. I have asked informally, but now, because you have requested it, I ask you formally to ask the member for Ottawa Centre to withdraw and apologize for the remark made about what our motives are. She is not allowed to do that by the procedures and she should be called to order. Please call her to order.

Ms Gigantes: If we were to accept that kind of notion, we have been accused of everything from jackboots to you name it as we have proceeded.

The Chair: Ms Gigantes, you are aware of that particular—

Ms Gigantes: It will certainly cause us to care what members of the opposition say in the future.

The Chair: Ms Gigantes, would you resume your discussion of the motion.

Mr Elston: Does she withdraw? She is to withdraw under the rules.

Ms Gigantes: I will withdraw if I am asked to withdraw.

Mr Elston: Mr Chairman, I ask—

The Chair: Mr Elston, I hear your point. Ms Gigantes made some comments which could have been interpreted as you suggest. I believe I heard her having responded positively.

Ms Gigantes: I was just trying to remember his riding, if he would quit interrupting me.

The Chair: I am sure she will attempt to avoid having any semblance of imputing motive.

Mr Elston: Excuse me. I want you to be clear, Mr Chair. For the record, she withdrew. Is that correct?

The Chair: Could we resume?

Ms Gigantes: Remind me what riding you are from.

Mr Elston: To be clear, did she withdraw her remark?

The Chair: I believe I heard very clearly Ms Gigantes indicating that she would be more cautious.

Mr Elston: No. I said, "Did she withdraw?" It is the orders.

Ms Gigantes: If the member for Bruce would allow me, if he feels impugned, I withdraw all those words that make him feel subject to any impugnement on my part. If he feels his motives have been questioned, I withdraw all those words. Now, to say that I find this a delay is certainly correct and to say that most people in this room and most reasonable people would find it a delaying motion is correct. I hope he will find that satisfactory.

Mr Elston: New Democrats.

Ms Gigantes: You would not have to be a New Democrat.

The Chair: We have already discussed the point of order. Actually, I believe it should have been a point of privilege. Regardless, Ms Gigantes still has the floor.

Ms Gigantes: Mr Chair, I have asked you to accept the fact that, first of all, I consider this to be in conflict with our original decision. I consider this a motion designed to undo the motion we have just passed. I will therefore be voting against it.

Mr Chiarelli: I want to comment with a bit of hindsight. Last year some time, I believe it was early in the year, there was a special meeting which had been convened of committee Chairpersons and committee clerks. At that time, I was Chair of the standing committee on administration of justice. The meeting was convened by the Speaker and the Clerk to discuss in some detail, and to get some feedback and soundings from the committees, as to what the rules or the guidelines should be with respect to providing French-language services through the committees. There was very detailed discussion on this matter.

My recollection is that the the Speaker and the Clerk's office took the comments of the Chairs and the clerks under advisement, with the clear understanding that under certain circumstances, depending on the nature of the issue and perhaps the public need, committees could determine their own agenda with respect to providing French-language services. I believe this is a case where it is appropriate, because the matter has received such widespread media attention over the last eight or nine months—the entire life of this government—that in recent weeks, in fact in recent days, there has been tremendous attention placed on this issue by both the anglophone and the francophone media. Certainly, Franco-Ontarians across this province are very interested in this particular issue. I really believe it would be extremely helpful if the draft report could be translated and this matter could be dealt with equitably for both official languages.

Mr Harnick: I find it rather incredible that a request such as this has been made and is receiving opposition, particularly in terms of Mr Poirier being on this committee. Mr Poirier is expressing, certainly in his wisdom and his experience, that this would be a necessary report to be translated into the French language. I would say to everyone in this room, who better knows of the necessity of this than Mr Poirier? I am quite frankly very surprised that we are not, as a group, prepared unanimously to vote in favour of this. Again, it is all because we are in a great big hurry here.

We keep hearing that this has been here since February. In fact, it has not been here since February. We had one week of conflict-of-interest hearings in February. The months of March and April were virtually totally devoted to Bill 17. We then had a one-month delay while the Premier refused to refer the budget to a committee.

Mr Morrow: On a point of order, Mr Chair: I would like to inform the member that while he claims the Premier was playing with the budget, that in essence did not happen.

The Chair: That is not a point of order.

Mr Morrow: Excuse me, Mr Chair. Can I get to my point of order, please?

The Chair: Okay.

Mr Harnick: He is challenging your ruling.

Mr Morrow: The point of order is that we sat here with witnesses every day while the third party played with the budget in the House.

Mr Harnick: I think the idea that has been expressed here, that the conflict-of-interest guidelines have been on the table and actively discussed since February is quite wrong. Now we did, I will admit, fall off our schedule because we had the one-month delay while the filibuster was going on.

Mr Morrow: Whose fault was that delay?

Mr Harnick: Mr Morrow is asking me whose fault it is. I would not characterize it as being anyone's fault. There was obviously a difference of opinion that was ultimately resolved when the budget was referred to the standing committee on finance and economic affairs and is now being sent out for public hearings. I would not describe that as anyone's fault and I would not describe that as anyone's victory. I think it is a good thing for the people of Ontario, who are now going to have the opportunity, as the committee travels around the province, to come and discuss the budget. Whether anyone was the winner or anyone was the loser, I do not know and I do not characterize it in that sense.

What I am saying is that these conflict guidelines have not been on the table and have not been actively discussed for the length of time that people are making out. The fact is that they have been discussed very little. We did have a tentative schedule that was thrown off during the period of the budget controversy—I will call it that as opposed to a filibuster—but at any rate the fact is that these guidelines have not been reviewed to the extent that I believe the Premier wanted them reviewed.

We have had our differences of opinion, and one would expect that. Obviously I was never in favour of having these guidelines proposed as becoming law; I preferred them to remain guidelines. A difference of philosophy obviously indicated this was not going to be so, which is fine. But I say to the members of the committee that it does not negate our duty to sit down together and review these guidelines on a clause-by-clause basis to try to make them better. Whether we agree philosophically that they should be guidelines or should find their way into legislation is now behind us, but it does not negate the idea of sitting down and reviewing the guidelines on a clause-by-clause basis, because that is very important.

At any rate, I want to get back on topic because the chairman is going to get upset with me. I only point this out to indicate that we have not wasted the amount of time people are alleging we have wasted. We are not under the gun to complete this by 27 June. We can very easily deliver our report on 23 September when we come back to the Legislature. We could very easily invite the Premier—

The Chair: Mr Harnick, you are diverting somewhat.

Mr Harnick: No, I am not diverting. I am just making the point.

The Chair: According to our earlier motion, we have a timetable in front of us, sir.

Mr Harnick: I am just making the point that the hurry that the committee seems to be in is exemplified by the fact that it does not wish to spend whatever the time is to get the document translated into French. That is something Mr Poirier has told us is important, that it is important in his community, that it is important to the media that he obviously knows better than we do, and out of respect for him I think this is a serious motion and it should be considered.

I think this committee is setting up a timetable that is indicative of only one thing, and that is to complete the review of these guidelines as quickly and as superficially as we possibly can. I will note for the record that everyone on the government side, except Mr Fletcher, just indicated that my remark was very funny. Well, I do not think my remark was funny. I think this is serious and I think the Premier has been very genuine in asking us to review these guidelines and to give him a thorough review of the guidelines, not just a recitation of what witnesses said and a motion at the end of every section saying, "I move we accept this section." That is not what the Premier wanted.

But in your haste to avoid translating this document into French and in your haste to get this away from the committee and get it done for the sake of saying you are going to get it done, you are passing motions like Mrs Mathysen's motion and you are denying motions such as the motion put on the floor now by Mr Chiarelli. I think what you are doing is a grave disservice to your own Premier, who is interested in these guidelines, who thinks these guidelines should be reviewed thoroughly and who has given every indication to this committee that these guidelines can and should be made better.

We have had now, from I guess early December when the guidelines were released, several instances where the guidelines have been controversial. Surely as a committee we should be reviewing those instances so that we can be reporting in a relevant way back to—

Mr Morrow: On a point of order, Mr Chairman: Please speak to the motion.

Mr Harnick: I am speaking to the motion, and certainly that is quite obvious to you, Mr Chairman.

The Chair: You did return to it, but I think you have diverted slightly.

Mr Harnick: It is all part and parcel of the same unrealistic timetable that is being set. I think we have had numerous instances where these guidelines have been the subject of controversy, and surely as a committee, even though we differ philosophically, we should be reviewing those instances in light of what the guidelines say. I do not recall a single word in this committee dealing with the idea of contact with the judiciary. We have not talked about that at all, yet we have had a number of instances in the Legislature—I think four come to mind—

Interjection: Mr Chair, this is not in order.

The Chair: This is a motion, which was a translation of the draft copy of the—

Mr Morrow: He is way off the topic.

Mr Harnick: Yes, and the committee, based on the majority on the government side, is obviously not interested in making that review that the Premier has requested. They have now set a timetable that will effectively negate the idea of translating this document into the French language.

The Chair: Oh, you did. Thank you.

Mr Harnick: I am sorry, Mr Chairman, I do not have the facility to think quite as quickly as you do and I have to go from point to point. I cannot really speak the words as fast as you can think them, but I know you are thinking along the same lines I am.

Ms S. Murdock: Oh, he is a mindreader.

Mr Harnick: No, I am not a mindreader.

Ms S. Murdock: You just said, "I know you are thinking what I am thinking."

Mr Harnick: He has given me enough clues to tell me the wavelength he is on and I am trying to stay on it. If there is some controversy about the time it is going to take to translate the working paper into French, maybe we could adjourn until tomorrow before we vote on this important motion brought by Mr Chiarelli and supported by Mr Poirier. Perhaps we should find out how long it is going to take to translate this document, and maybe we could adjourn for the day seeing as it is now almost 5:30.

The Chair: The clerk has already informed us it will take several weeks. It is not something that needs research.

Mr Harnick: She indicated that is what she thought, because that is the normal course of things around here, but I am sure that if we could speak with the powers that be who translate these documents, we may well be able to find out that it can be done more quickly.

The Chair: There is no internal translation, Mr Harnick.

Mr Harnick: Maybe we could get the external translation to move more quickly in this particular case, because we are not talking about an extensive or voluminous document. We are actually talking about a very pedestrian piece of work up to this time. It would seem to me it would be well worth our while to find out if we could have this translated within a faster time frame to satisfy the government members who want to see this finished without having enough time for the opposition parties even to prepare a thoughtful and reasoned minority opinion.

Those essentially, then, are my comments. I think (a) we should find out whether we can get this translated more quickly than we now believe is possible, and (b) we should support this motion, even if you are against it, even if you believe it is for no more reason than delay, because to deny this motion is to impute to Mr Poirier a motive that would be improper. It would be disrespectful to him to deny this motion.

I think we have a couple of options and I think we should proceed accordingly. But again, I think we have to respect what Mr Poirier tells us. He certainly knows more about the necessity of doing what the motion asks than anyone else in this room. He certainly knows the press that is anxious to review the document. We should respect his views regarding both the press and, as he says, the public who are interested in this very subject matter.

Mr Chair, I apologize for getting in the way here and for delaying, or what the government obviously says or would seem to be thinking has been nothing more than to delay this committee, but I think we can do a much better job than what is on the table right now. Those are my comments.

Ms S. Murdock: There is no question that any motive for our opposition to French translation is being impugned totally by the members opposite, but in fact there is no question, and I am sure everybody realizes, that the minimum length of time it would take to translate the draft report would be three weeks and that alone contravenes the motion that has already been previously passed by this committee.

I realize I am a guest on this committee today, but I know that when I sat on this committee for the week of 11 February and subsequent weeks thereafter, all members of this committee had contributed to the contents of this draft and had listened to the presenters, and it is now open for discussion. We have spent—as I say, I am a guest today—the last two hours, of course with no intent at all imputed, without discussing one item of this, and certainly not because we on the government side are not prepared to discuss and debate and whatever. We have been ready and willing, and I think we should get on with it, even though we only have 24 minutes left

Mr Chiarelli: I just want to make some comments, particularly with respect to certain references that have been made by a number of people regarding imputation of motive.

I indicated to the members a bit earlier that there was a committee established last year on which I sat with other committee Chairs and committee clerks. If anyone cares to check the record of that time, I think you will find that I was the only member of that committee who spoke at some length, very strongly and vociferously in favour of the Legislative Assembly having 100% French-language services in its committees. I talked about simultaneous translation. I talked about having Hansard prepared in both French and English languages. I felt strongly enough about it at that time to put that on the record.

As a matter of fact, again, if you are imputing motive, there is no imputation of motive, because I felt strongly about this issue. I felt strongly at that time and I feel strongly now. At that time I suggested that we go so far, as a Legislative Assembly, as to have simultaneous translation. We have a committee room, 151, which is set up for simultaneous translation. Last year, probably around this time of year as well, I recommended that the Legislative Assembly invest the funds to do every committee room the way 151 is so that there would be simultaneous translation, that we be prepared to put our money where our mouth is.

If we look at the select committee on Ontario on confederation which travelled around this province, that issue was determined by somebody to be significant enough to have simultaneous translation services travel across this province for five or six weeks as it dealt with that issue, which somebody, in his wisdom, determined was important enough for French-language services.

Someone has to make a determination. What are the issues that are important enough for French-language services? Much to the chagrin of the government members, I think the issue of the Premier's conflict-of-interest guidelines is of sufficient interest and sufficient importance to attract the same type of attention I was talking about for all committee work last year and which the constitution committee determined this year was sufficiently important for simultaneous translation to go around the province with the constitution committee.

I am saying, in that context, that when we have an issue that has totally dominated this government and the media, affecting eight ministers, week after week after week, it is of sufficient importance to be put in the context of why I was asking for all committee proceedings to be translated simultaneously last year, to be put in the context of the importance of the constitution committee travelling around this province with simultaneous translation.

This issue is so important that it was included in the speech from the throne. The Premier stood in the House and made special statements on it, and it has almost caused the resignation of eight ministers and has in fact caused the resignation of some.

We are now saying they are imputing motive as to why I feel this draft report should be translated. The motive is a good motive. It is a motive that is part of my philosophy that I talked about last year.

Interjections.

Mr Chiarelli: Mr Chairman, could we have some order?

The Chair: Mrs Mathysen?

Mrs Mathysen: I am sorry, but—

Ms Gigantes: On a point of order, Mr Chair: Are we going to be able to dispense with this matter, at least while the opposition—

Interjection.

Ms Gigantes: I am asking, Mr Chair, are you going to help committee members on this, because the effect of what is happening is to destroy the procedural motion we passed.

The Chair: We have a little difficulty.

Mr Chiarelli: She is attributing motive again.

Ms Gigantes: No, I am attributing effect. Mr Chair, could we get a ruling on this, because I would like to know how we are proceeding here. Are we going to get to a vote on this matter at least, which I consider out of order in any case, but are we going to have a vote on it before six? Mr Chair, I am asking you.

The Chair: I think that is a good point.

Interjection.

Ms Gigantes: He has not made a ruling on it.

Mr Harnick: On a point of order, Mr Chair.

The Chair: We have a point of order here already, Mr Harnick. Could I confer with the clerk for a moment, please. I think Ms Gigantes has a very valid point. I would like to recess for a couple of minutes, please.

The committee recessed at 1741.

The Chair: We are ready to rule on the motion in front of us.

Mr Chiarelli: I had the floor when there was a point of order. I would like to just wrap up for a minute or two.

The Chair: There is a ruling and we are continuing debate with your motion. Go ahead, sir.

Mr Chiarelli: I just want to wrap up, for those people who were imputing motive or who continue to do it in a secondhand way, so that they realize I felt strongly about that issue last year when it came up and I feel strongly about it now. I still feel that the Legislative Assembly should provide full services in both official languages, including simultaneous translation, that at the very least, if we are going to abridge the normal guidelines and rules from time to time, we be evenhanded on the issues for which we determine that we are going to provide extra French-language services.

As I say, we provided extra French-language services, simultaneous translation, for the select committee on Ontario in Confederation. This issue, conflict-of-interest guidelines, is of sufficient importance as described by the government in the throne speech that the draft report should be translated.

Ms Gigantes: Mr Chair, on a point of order: We recessed in order to have clarification.

The Chair: I received consultation and the motion is still in order.

Mr Chiarelli: The member for Ottawa Centre will be happy to realize that I have now concluded my remarks and the question may be put.

The Chair: Thank you. All in favour of the motion?

Mr Poirier: A recorded vote.

Clerk of the Committee: Is he moving that the question be put?

Mr Chiarelli: No, I did not move that the question be put. I said somebody may want to move that the question be put.

The Chair: He did not move it. I am sorry. Go ahead. Anyone else want to speak on this motion?

Ms Gigantes: I will move that the question be put.

The Chair: Twenty minutes? We are recessed until after routine proceedings tomorrow, unless there is unanimous consent. That issue was brought up earlier. Is there unanimous consent?

Interjection: No.

The Chair: We are recessed until after routine proceedings tomorrow.

The committee adjourned at 1753.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

STANDING COMMITTEE ON ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

Tuesday 18 June 1991

The committee met at 1547 in committee room 1.

CONFLICT-OF-INTEREST GUIDELINES

Resuming consideration of the Premier's conflict-of-interest guidelines.

The Chair: I call the committee to order. We are dealing with the motion put yesterday by Ms Gigantes. All in favour of the motion?

Mr Sorbara: Mr Chairman, if I might, just on a point of order—

The Chair: There is no discussion on a closure motion.

Mr Sorbara: I would like the motion read.

The Chair: It is a closure motion.

Mr Sorbara: There is no such thing as a closure motion; there are motions. They should be read.

The Chair: "Ms Gigantes: 'I will move that the question be put.'"

There was a request for a 20-minute bell on that motion.

Mr Harnick: What is the motion?

Mr Sorbara: What question is to be put?

The Chair: The question to be put is Mr Chiarelli's motion, which when we get to it, should be re-read.

Motion agreed to.

All in favour of the motion? Opposed? Mr Sorbara, are you voting?

Mr Sorbara: I am opposed.

The Chair: We now have the other motion in front of us. Could we have a reading of that?

Clerk of the Committee: Mr Chiarelli moves that the draft report be translated and available in French at the same time as the English report is made available.

The Chair: All in favour? Opposed?

Motion negatived.

Mr Sorbara: You are opposed to a translation of the report?

An hon member: Draft report.

Mr Sorbara: That is interesting.

Ms Gigantes: Mr Chair, I would like to place a motion.

The Chair: Ms Gigantes moves that the Chair put every question necessary to dispense with the new draft report by 18 June at 5:30 pm and that the committee ask the researcher to have the new draft report ready by Wednesday 19 June for distribution to members of the standing committee on administration of justice on Thursday 20 June and that the finalized report be brought back on Monday 24 June and that any dissenting report should be tabled at that time.

The later part of that motion is not necessary because it was already passed yesterday.

Ms Gigantes: I have included it so as to make it all-inclusive.

The Chair: So you are encompassing the motion from yesterday that was already passed.

Ms Gigantes: Yes, I am.

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, your point of order.

Mr Sorbara: No, I am just going to speak to the motion. Let me begin by saying that I came into this committee this afternoon trying to convince my colleagues on the committee that we could adopt a conciliatory approach to the work that we have to do, and I was going to reiterate my position in that regard. I am astonished that Ms Gigantes has moved this motion, which is very much like throwing down the gauntlet.

Let me just step back a few days. The last time I was in this committee, which was I guess last Tuesday, I suggested to my colleagues, and I would reiterate the suggestion today, that we not spend much more time in discussion of the guidelines because it was clear that the government was firm in its position and the opposition was firm in its position and that really what needed to be done was the government needed to sit down and go about its work of articulating its views on the report and the opposition would have to write a dissenting report.

I obviously spoke for it myself and in some respects for my party. I did not, obviously, speak to the interest of the Progressive Conservative Party on this matter. Then early today I heard about the motion that I raised in the Legislature today on a point of order and a point of privilege. My remarks today in the House—I am not going to go over them in detail here, but I meant what I said there. I thought both motions were out of order, and I will get into why I thought that motion was out of order and why I think this motion is out of order in due course.

I also felt that my privileges had been violated, because in effect what has happened is, in the absence of any provision under the standing order, there is an attempt to constrain our ability to submit a dissenting report on the matters that are before us. What I expected to happen here this afternoon at this committee was some discussion about what happened yesterday and some attempt to try and reach a reasonable compromise in completing our work in this regard.

The very first order of business here, after a vote that was carried on yesterday, was yet another motion—I would appreciate a copy of the motion from the clerk as soon as one is available—which I think both violates the standing orders of this committee and violates our privileges as members.

This is all the worse because of the charade that is going on in the Legislature right now on the very subject of conflict of interest. The mover of this motion used to be a member of the executive council of the province of Ontario. She slipped once in question period and the fall was a very severe one. Our party believes she did the appropriate thing in submitting her resignation to the Premier and our party believes the Premier did the appropriate thing in accepting that resignation. We also fully expect, given the way in which these matters are dealt with in Ontario, that in due course the Premier will invite her back into the executive council and she will assume either the same or a new role in the executive council of the province of Ontario.

I am appalled therefore that it would be Ms Gigantes, along with her colleagues on this committee, who would, for no apparent reason, to further nothing really, once again poison the atmosphere of this committee by moving this motion.

I just want to tell you once again, sir, my view of how things tend to work when Parliament works well. I will use the example of the House leaders in the Legislature. When Parliament works well, there is a good working relationship between the government House leader, the opposition House leader and the House leader for the third party. The phone lines between those three individuals are always very busy and their staffs work together. The same situation could accrue to a committee such as this one. We could have a good working relationship if, for example, the government members saw an urgent and pressing necessity to complete this project within a particular time frame.

I believe that good parliamentary practice and etiquette and good bloody manners would have at least one of the members phone one of us, and presumably it would be me because I am the whip, just to say: "Look, we have a problem. We need to get this report in because we feel like we want to get off this report and on to some other business." No one has called me to say that it is urgent, even after I said in this committee that we were no longer interested in a lengthy debate because we feel like the positions have crystallized and it is no use talking further. The only thing that we requested, really, was enough time to submit a thorough dissent to the report that would be written.

What do we have now? What we have now is a closure motion that is, in my view, entirely out of order and breaches the standing orders. Again, I will get into why that is in just a few moments.

I want to tell you, sir, that this did not need to happen, that a phone call from the whip of the justice committee to me would have initiated a discussion about the timing of the presentation of the full report, including the dissent. I think we have made our point on conflict of interest. We have made it clear that we do not agree with the major thrust of the guidelines, and that is the requirement to divest.

We believe, by the way, that the Premier has degraded the standards in this area in a very significant way, not only as a result of his inconsistency in applying guidelines. For the life of me, I cannot understand the consistency between accepting the resignation of the member for Ottawa Centre for a slip of the tongue and not accepting the resignation of the Minister without Portfolio responsible for women's issues when she sits down and drafts a letter, which surely she knows is to a body which is about to make a quasi-judicial decision. In fact, the Premier himself, early in the day in question period last Thursday, acknowledged as much. He said at that time, "It is not a question of my guidelines; it is a question of the standard that we have in this province," and he was right then.

Let me just quote to you from a document dated 8 November 1978. It is a memorandum to the cabinet, to executive council.

Mr Morrow: On a point of order, Mr Chair—

Mr Sorbara: I hope, sir, that this is a valid point of order.

Mr Morrow: I always believe all my points of order are valid.

Can we please ask Mr Sorbara to come back to the motion that we have before us?

Mr Sorbara: I think if you check with the clerk, this is a very broad motion and debate on a topic like this, a closure motion, is a very broad debate. Your party has set the precedent. Sometimes these debates go on for weeks.

The Chair: We had these discussions, I believe, yesterday. I think he is close enough to the point.

Mr Sorbara: In any event, I am now reading from the document dated 8 November 1978. It is a memorandum to the executive council, or the cabinet. It is from the Office of the Premier, and the heading at the top of the page reads: "Re Communication Between Members of the Executive Council and the Judiciary and Key Officials in the Judicial System."

The second part of the second paragraph reads as follows: "However good the motivation that would lead to an intervention in such a matter before the courts by a member of the cabinet, such an intervention could well be interpreted as a threat to the independence of the judiciary."

I would simply argue by extension that the very same principle applies to all quasi-judicial bodies, including things like the Ontario Municipal Board, the Workers' Compensation Appeals Tribunal and any body, like the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario, when it meets as a quasi-judicial body.

The fourth paragraph which reads, "Regardless of the human merits or motivations behind an intervention, every effort must be made to protect our courts from any suggestion of interference in due process."

I think guidelines of that sort were really the motivating factor on Thursday when the Premier met with the minister responsible for women's issues and had a discussion about her breach of the rules of this province. He said in question period, "I have reluctantly accepted the resignation of the minister responsible for women's issues," and then went on to say that a similar letter, written by the Minister of Northern Development, had just come to him. He had been surprised, really, by the matter, he had not had an opportunity to reflect on it and he had not had an opportunity to discuss the matter with the Minister of Northern Development. Therefore, he asked Parliament to bear with him for some time while he had an opportunity to reflect on the matter, to reflect on the content of the letter and to discuss the matter with the minister. Between that time and some four and a half hours later, something happened.

Mr Morrow: Bob Nixon.

Mr Sorbara: My friend Mr Morrow interjects with the words "Bob Nixon." I want to tell him that if it were that easy for an opposition member, even the Leader of the Opposition, to influence government policy and government decision-making, this province and this Parliament would be far better places right now.

The Chair: We are diverging slightly. Mr Morrow, I hasten to add that you will have your opportunity to speak and to make those points at some later point in time if you wish to, but please do not interrupt Mr Sorbara.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Chairman, it is going to be very difficult for us to find out what happened in those intervening four hours or so.

Mrs Mathysen: Bob Nixon.

Mr Sorbara: Some other member mutters "Bob Nixon" as well. I think it is Mrs Mathysen. I repeat once again, sir, it surprises me that a member would actually believe that. I know that for the consumption of the press it is quaint and convenient to suggest that the Premier reconsidered his views on the basis of a suggestion from Bob Nixon.

My concern is that during that period the Premier did not make any of the kind of inquiries that he ought to have made. He did not, for example, make inquiries as to whether or not the minister responsible for women's issues took counsel from her ministry, the people who work in the directorate.

One thing I know for sure is that the letter the minister responsible for women's issues signed was not typed by her. Although she has not told me that, I would bet just about everything I have that she did not type the letter, she did not get the piece of stationery out and prepare it. It means that at least one other person in the Ontario women's directorate was aware of the fact that the minister responsible for women's issues was planning to write to the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario in its capacity as a quasi-judicial body.

The Chair: Can you stick to the issue at hand, sir?

Mr Sorbara: Mr Chairman, I want to indicate to you why this forms part of the argument that is the subject of this motion. This motion provides that we complete our discussions on conflict of interest as of a particular date. The guidelines that we have before us are the subject of the discussion, so anything I say related to the guidelines and how they are applied in Ontario is relevant to the debate. If, sir, you want to have five minutes to consult with the clerk or take your own advice or consult with the Speaker on this matter, I am perfectly willing to agree to an adjournment of five or 10 or 15 minutes while you make those consultations, but I assure you that my own experience of—

The Chair: I am just suggesting that you slide back to the issue of the timetable that Ms Gigantes's motion spoke to.

Mr Sorbara: The issue of the timetable is the issue of the entire matter that we have discussed, so it is, in short, the broadest of discussions. Any closure motion, any motion to restrict or allocate time in respect of a matter before a committee or the House is, under our parliamentary rules and precedents, the broadest of discussions. If you want time to consider that matter, you just have to indicate to me and then you can discuss that with the clerk.

The Chair: Go ahead, sir.

Mr Sorbara: As I was saying, obviously one other person knew that the minister responsible for women's issues was proposing to write to a quasi-judicial body to try and influence it in its decision.

Mr Morrow: On a point of privilege, Mr Chair: Can you please tell me how dealing with these two cases last week has anything to do with the mandate of this committee?

The Chair: That is not a point of privilege.

Mr Sorbara: As I was saying, at least one other person in the Ontario women's directorate was aware that the minister responsible for women's issues was at least proposing to write to a quasi-judicial body in its capacity as a quasi-judicial body to try and influence that decision. We already have it from the minister that what she did was wrong and we all appreciate that what she did was wrong. The question that arises, I submit to you, sir, and to the members of this committee, is, who else in the Ontario women's directorate was aware that the minister responsible for women's issues was proposing to interfere with the decision of a quasi-judicial body?

Ms Gigantes: Why do you want to know that, Greg?

Mr Sorbara: My friend the member for Ottawa Centre interjects with a question. Why do I want to know that? That is just where I was getting to in my remarks, so I will tell her.

The Chair: The member for Ottawa Centre will have the floor after you are finished.

Mr Sorbara: It may be a while before my friend for Ottawa Centre has the floor, sir.

The Chair: I think she can probably ask you those questions at a later point. Go ahead, sir.

Mr Sorbara: I will always accept an interjection which poses a question like that because it helps me focus my remarks. So, sir, I say to her, through you, because all remarks have to be addressed through the Chair, that it is entirely relevant. Who else in the Ontario women's directorate knew that the minister was proposing to try and influence the decision of a quasi-judicial body? If, for example, the minister simply heard about the issue and determined on her own to write a letter to try and influence and if she took pen in hand and crafted a letter and provided it to a stenographer in the ministry and that stenographer reproduced the letter on letterhead, that is one set of circumstances.

I would say that as far as this aspect of the issue is concerned, the matter is closed, but if a different scenario existed—let me propose one. If, for example, the minister was lobbied by a group to write a letter, to speak up, to express an opinion, which is probably the case, I suspect, although I do not have any evidence that someone came to see the minister or some group wrote to the minister and suggested to the minister that she do something about this outrageous case—and it is an outrageous case; I think we all agree on that—if that happened and then the minister, confronted with the request, began to seek advice within the Ontario women's directorate, then we have a problem. We have a very serious problem. As I said in my remarks apropos of the Premier and what he did during the four hours when he changed his mind, we have to know what inquiries he made and we have to know what inquiries the minister made before she determined to write the letter.

If she made inquiries within her ministry, to whom did she speak? From whom did she get advice? Who did she tell that she was proposing to write a letter which she now acknowledges was wrong to write? For example, did she speak to one of her political assistants? Political assistants are not civil servants; they are not part of the bureaucracy, narrowly defined. They are there in the Ontario women's directorate, as in all ministries, to be the political support for the minister. I ask whether the minister approached one of her political advisers, one of her political staff, to reflect on whether or not she should write this letter. I do not know, but I think it is important. If she did that, why did the political adviser, who after all is there to assist the minister in abiding by the guidelines, not advise the minister that it was inappropriate to write that letter?

It is like the Mohammed Al-Mashat affair. Who knew what and when? We all know that—

Mrs Mathysen: Are you using hyperbole?

Interjection.

Mrs Mathysen: You do not think Mr Sorbara is using hyperbole?

Mr Harnick: He is extremely serious and I think he means everything he says today.

Mr Sorbara: I simply say to Mrs Mathysen that if you ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the government of Canada or the incumbent Minister of Employment and Immigration or the incumbent Minister responsible for Constitutional Affairs whether they think the matter is light—

Mrs Mathysen: No, no. I was referring to your use of hyperbole. It is wonderful.

Mr Sorbara: I am glad you are paying attention, because I am not using hyperbole. I am raising matters which I think are deadly serious.

I was at the point of questioning out loud whether or not the minister consulted with political staff. Political staff, by the way, have a very specific role in the way in which our cabinets and our parliamentary system work. The political staff are there to give appropriate political advice to ministers so that their judgements in terms of substance and their judgements in terms of politics are good, solid, appropriate judgements. We need to know whether political staff spoke to the minister about this matter and we need to know if political staff said to the minister: "You can't do that; it is against the guidelines. It is not only against our Premier's guidelines; it is against guidelines that have governed cabinet ministers in Ontario for two decades at least."

I think those inquiries are going on now and I think we need to know the answer to those inquiries. But I am not sure that with the kind of closure motion we have here, this committee will ever get a chance to ask those questions.

Assuming for a moment that the political adviser said to the minister, "You can't do it," then why did the minister not take that political advice? Why was she so repentant when the matter was reported in the Ottawa Citizen but did not heed the advice when she was advised not to write such a letter by a political staffer? Again, I am assuming that the political staffer understood the guidelines and gave the right advice.

Let's take a different scenario for a moment. Let's take the scenario which has the political staffer saying: "Yes, I think you should go ahead. You are an advocate. You have been an advocate for years. This is an important issue. You ought to speak out on it." That political advice to a minister is normally deadly poison. I repeat, that political advice to a minister would be deadly poison because under normal circumstances—I know it did not accrue under these circumstances—that sort of advice, if followed by a minister, would be the end of the minister. I think we all agree about that.

Bob Rae seemed to suggest that here the cause was just. There was no harm done to the public good and there was no furthering of private interest—and I will get to those three criteria in a minute—but here we have a situation where because of those three criteria the Premier says, "It is okay this time; she is staying in cabinet," even though at about 1:30 or 1:45 she was gone; the resignation had been accepted.

By the way, just a little anecdote for you and the other members of the committee, if you saw a copy of Ms Swarbrick's statement to the House on that matter, her statement of about a page and a half long ended with the words "and so I have submitted my resignation to the Premier (and the Premier has accepted it)."

She did not yet know whether she was going to use those words. In fact, if I recall correctly, she did not use those words. The Premier later stood up and explained why the traditions of the Parliament demanded that the resignation be accepted.

What happened in the intervening four hours? I think we should know. We should find out. If we were a sort of non-partisan parliamentary committee responsible for the administration of justice, if none of us had any particular political allegiance, we would be voting unanimously for an inquiry on just that subject.

I remember, by the way, in a minority Parliament, a parliamentary committee made just such an inquiry into the activities of Elinor Caplan, the member for Oriole, and René Fontaine, the former member for Cochrane North. But I do not think, given the way in which we play our politics these days, we are going to get an opportunity to make those inquiries.

But I am interested to know because we have got down to the level of the political staffer, the political adviser. Was a political adviser consulted by the minister and what was the nature of that advice? Surely to God, if the advice from that political adviser was to go ahead and write the letter, somebody has got to do something about that staffer. He or she has to be re-educated about what the guidelines entail or, I would suggest, dismissed from office because the job of the political adviser is to protect the minister from those sorts of pitfalls.

Let's go just one step down the road, to the bureaucracy, to the Ontario women's directorate. I want to tell you that I had the privilege for two full years to be minister responsible for women's issues in this province, one of the most challenging responsibilities I have ever had in my life because the issues are so volatile and the dramatic changes that are going on in the area of women's issues are so very powerful. They are changing our society dramatically.

So I am taking us one step along this adventure and I am taking us to the level of the senior bureaucrats in the Ontario women's directorate.

The reason I mention that I was minister for two years is as authority for the proposition that I know how that place works, just like my friend the parliamentary assistant for the Solicitor General is getting to understand how the Ministry of the Solicitor General works. When you are minister, you get to know it even more intimately.

If I had to rely on my own experience as minister responsible for women's issues, I would have to testify that a minister responsible for women's issues, before she writes a letter of the kind that was the subject of the letter of resignation, should consult at least with the director of the Ontario women's directorate, the deputy minister, the senior civil servant in the Ontario women's directorate, and often with at least two other senior officials, the senior person responsible for communications and the senior person responsible for policy.

Let me put it to you this way, sir: under no circumstances would any minister responsible for women's issues that I have encountered during the Tory era, during our own time—and I cannot say subsequently, because there has only been one and I do not know her that well—but generally, no minister would write that sort of letter on ministry letterhead without consultation with her senior bureaucracy. Do you want me to tell you why? Because you cannot hide the letter; because copies are made; because the fact that the letter is written gets around.

I remember once as minister responsible for women's issues I was proposing to write a letter and I had not checked with the senior bureaucracy. A director at the Ontario women's directorate, at that time a woman named Naomi Alboim, came to see me and said, "I hear you are proposing to write so-and-so and such-and-such." It was not a letter to a quasi-judicial body, it was just in the normal course of business, but she thought it was important enough to come to me and say, "I do not think you should write that sort of letter at this time." This was before there was even a draft made.

It is almost inconceivable that the minister could consider writing the kind of letter that she wrote without word of it getting around to the senior bureaucrats in the women's directorate, and it is inconceivable indeed, if my experience is any teacher, that the director and at least a couple of the senior civil servants would not come and advise the minister that what she was doing was a breach of the legal guidelines about interfering with a quasi-judicial body.

I want to tell my friends on this committee, I have to assume, given my experience as minister, that at least two or three senior bureaucrats in the Ontario women's directorate knew a long time ago that the minister was proposing to write this letter, and that the minister did write the letter.

I want to tell you, sir, that this raises very serious problems. I hope you understand why this is so serious: because there is a responsibility on the part of senior civil servants to advise the central administration of the government when a breach of this type is about to occur or has occurred.

It is not so much whistle blowing, although the New Democratic Party has proposed to bring forward whistle-blowing legislation to allow civil servants to blow the whistle with impunity. We want that to happen. But my argument has taken us down the road this far, that in all likelihood, some time back in early March, even before the minister wrote the letter, senior members of the Ontario women's directorate were aware that a letter either was written or was about to be written.

Now you have to start to ask yourself the following questions: Who knew what when, and what did that person or those people do about it? I want to tell you what the story going around is. The story going around is that the director of the Ontario women's directorate was, indeed, aware of the letter, and had given very strong advice that the letter not be written, because you do not interfere with a quasi-judicial tribunal. The advice was clear. The advice was rejected. A political posture, a violation of the guidelines was preferred over sound advice, and then an objection was made by someone in the Ontario women's directorate to someone in the Premier's office.

Now the question is, who in the Premier's office was aware that there was a proposal to write this letter or that the letter had been written? Did anyone in the Premier's office speak to anyone in the Ontario women's directorate about this intervention before a quasi-judicial body? If that is the case—and in normal circumstances that would happen—what did that official in the Premier's office do with the information? Let us suppose the official did what he or she should have done. Let us suppose the official brought this matter to the attention of the Premier. If that is the case, then the Premier's suggestion in the House last Thursday that the first he knew of this was Thursday morning, was in error, to be gentle about it.

Do you know what, sir? I do not think the Premier was in error. I think the Premier was genuine when he said to us in the House that he first heard of this matter a few hours before, that is Thursday morning. But the question then arises about what the officials in the Premier's office did with the information they had from the Ontario women's directorate, because they, of all people, would be even more familiar with the guidelines than a new political staffer in the office of the minister responsible for women's issues.

These are serious matters, because the minister responsible for women's issues wrote the letter—when, 4 March, is it? If we had a copy of Hansard here, I could confirm the date, but let us assume 4 March. That is over three months ago. We were still in the winter season. There was still snow on the ground. It was still cold. Now it is hot. Now the heat is on the minister, it is 13 June, and suddenly a story breaks on the pages of the Ottawa Citizen, and only then did the minister stand up and say, "What I did was wrong."

What I want to know, sir, is how many people in what positions in our great government in this great province were aware that the Minister without Portfolio responsible for women's issues wrote the letter that she wrote to the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario on 4 March.

My friend the member for Ottawa Centre suggested in her interjection by way of question that this is not important. My God, I think it is crucially important. It is certainly as important as what officials knew about the fast-tracking of Mohammed Al-Mashat into Canada as a landed immigrant. After all, with Mohammed Al-Mashat there was no breaking of the law. I want to tell you, I wish every application for permanent residence to this great country was handled as quickly as that application was. Not that every one is accepted. I would have said, "No, I am sorry; you do not qualify for security reasons." But I practised immigration law for quite some time and I used to be appalled at the delays in considering applications. Sometimes families would be separated for months and years because the system was so bogged down.

So my response to the Al-Mashat case is that everyone should have his or her application handled that quickly. Not everyone should be accepted and Al-Mashat probably should not have been accepted, but needless to say, there was no breach of the law. The law was upheld. In fact, it was a model of processing of an application, a gem. The difficulty in that situation is that under normal circumstances, the application should have taken two years.

Mr Morrow: On a point of order, Mr Chairman: I understand that the member for York Centre has a right to speak to the motion and we have let him ramble on for roughly 45 minutes, but can you please ask the member to go back to the motion?

The Chair: I have already spoken. You can certainly ask him; however, Mr Sorbara has the floor.

Mr Sorbara: I say to my friend the member for Wentworth East—

Ms Gigantes: On a point of order, Mr Chair: The problem is this. The motion before us is one that calls upon us to complete our work by 5:30. The effect of what the member opposite is doing is to prevent us from being able to pass this motion. I would ask you to ask the member how long he intends to speak. Can we ask for a fair allocation of time which would nevertheless allow us, if we wish to pass this motion, to vote on it and complete it and effect the motion? Otherwise, he is destroying the motion by hogging the time, to put it simply.

Mr Sorbara: Let me just say to you, in that regard, that I will speak in due course as to why this motion is in itself out of order. The suggestion that I somehow—

The Chair: Are you wishing to speak on that question?

Mr Sorbara: I am saying that I will in due course during my remarks speak to whether or not I think this motion is in order.

Mr Morrow: Can I ask you please to rule on Ms Gigantes's point of order?

The Chair: Are you willing to suggest how long you will be taking?

Mr Sorbara: No, I have not decided that yet. I would not want to mislead the committee.

The Chair: I did not think you would be willing to. Go ahead, sir.

Ms Gigantes: There is no point of having such a motion—

Mr Sorbara: Then withdraw the motion.

Ms Gigantes: —if you are going to allow this member to prevent it from being put into effect.

Mr Sorbara: I will cede the floor if my friend the member for Ottawa Centre wants to withdraw the motion. I have not even begun to deal with the technicalities of the motion.

Mrs Mathysen: That was already voted upon and adopted.

Mr Sorbara: I think before the points were raised—

The Chair: The issue about the time was brought up and debated for a great deal of time at the sitting yesterday. I think it is not inappropriate to suggest that you find some time, in terms of allocation, so that it can be available. How much time do you think you could take, sir?

Mr Sorbara: I have not yet determined that. After all, I have been interrupted on a number of occasions here. I just want to point out to you, sir, that if you look at the way in which time allocation motions—which this really is—are presented in the Legislature, they are always open-ended. They begin to take effect after the motion is passed by the House.

The Chair: I am aware of that.

Mr Sorbara: So it refers to the sitting day after the motion is passed. But this is highly irregular, to require a member to constrain his remarks so that a motion can be relevant. That is part of the problem with the motion and that is why it is entirely out of order.

If, for example, the motion had read that the Chair put every question necessary to dispense with a new draft report by 5:30 on the sitting day following the passage of this motion, it would have logically made sense. But no Parliament in the history of the parliamentary democracy has ever cut off a speaker because "if he speaks too long, the very motion that he is speaking about becomes irrelevant."

The Chair: The issue, though, is something which was decided yesterday in terms of the schedule—

Mr Sorbara: No, sir, I am sorry.

The Chair: In terms of the schedule of the submission of reports, that was decided yesterday and I think debated at some length, and on two occasions yesterday I set aside a request for closure. I do not think it is overly rigid to suggest that we wind up today. Your colleagues yesterday spoke at some length, as did members of all sides, on essentially the same issue. I would suggest that we wrap up, sir.

Mr Sorbara: I find that offensive.

The Chair: I appreciate that.

Mr Sorbara: The Chair does not suggest that members wrap up, particularly on time allocation motions, but if you want to refer to the motion of yesterday, that motion is now functus, because it provided that the report be completed by yesterday.

Mr Morrow: On a point of order, Mr Chair, please: In your capacity as Chair, can I please ask you to rule on Ms Gigantes's point of order, which I really do not feel you have, because she has asked—

The Chair: The motion that was passed yesterday is in order with the exception of the time frame, of "complete by" whatever, yesterday. So the issue of the timetable is already established. I would suggest we—

Mr Harnick: Nothing is established.

The Chair: I have already ruled on that, sir.

Mr Harnick: A point of order.

Mrs Mathysen: It most assuredly is established.

Mr Harnick: A point of order.

The Chair: Mr Morrow was asking first for me to rule on Ms Gigantes' motion. I have suggested—

Mr Harnick: A point of privilege.

Mrs Mathysen: Not unless you are kidnapped, Charles. Get that right.

Mr Harnick: Well, I am being kidnapped. Kidnapped and hijacked all at once.

The Chair: I have suggested to Mr Sorbara that he please wrap up by a certain period of time.

Mr Morrow: Thank you, Mr Chair.

The Chair: Mr Sorbara.

Mr Sorbara: I will just continue my remarks and—

The Chair: Would you please indicate how much time you need, sir?

Mr Sorbara: Sir, I simply want to tell you that the Chair does not have the authority in a committee of this sort to require a member to indicate how much longer he will be speaking unless there is unanimous consent of the committee that each member will be allocated a specific amount of time. I would just ask the clerk to confirm that or give us other advice.

The Chair: Go ahead, Mr Sorbara.

Mr Sorbara: If I can just continue now. I think we are through with all the points of order. I think I was on the Al-Mashat matter and—

Ms Gigantes: No, you are wrong, you were not. You are confused again.

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, return to whatever you wish to.

Mr Morrow: Mr Chair, I asked you to rule on a point of order that the member was out of order.

The Chair: I did.

Mr Morrow: Well, then, he cannot return to that point.

Mr Sorbara: I am sorry, I am not on a point of order. I am speaking to a motion.

Mr Morrow: Can he please speak to the motion.

The Chair: Mr Sorbara.

Mr Sorbara: Thank you, sir. Notwithstanding what Ms Gigantes has said, I was on the Al-Mashat matter and I was pointing out that in my own view there was no law broken there. What did occur was that the normal procedures that govern the consideration of an application for permanent residence were overridden in the sense that an individual's application was put at the front of the line. There is nothing illegal about that and in certain cases it is required. Under the Immigration Act, as I understand it and understood it when I was practising immigration law, a minister has the ability to expedite an application. In certain instances, for example when there is some threat to an individual or there is some other perhaps humanitarian or compassionate reason, the Minister of Employment and Immigration does expedite an application.

The interesting thing in Al-Mashat was that the application was expedited as quickly as any application has ever been expedited in the history of that ministry and yet nobody knew who was responsible. A parliamentary committee not unlike this one was unable, even with high-ranking officials and ministers before it, to get to the bottom of the case.

For example, Joe Clark, the Minister responsible for Constitutional Affairs—

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, please return to the provincial Parliament.

Mr Sorbara: I am going to help you out a little bit by just telling you that I am making this argument to build an analogy between the cases of conflict of interest, which are why we are here, the subject of our guidelines, and other matters of a similar sort. Just to recap and review with you, sir, I am trying to establish here before this committee, for Hansard and for others, how important it is that we find out who Ms Swarbrick consulted before she wrote the letter and what those people did as a result of that consultation. I am using the Al-Mashat matter as a comparison to build my case.

The Chair: It would be edifying to at least maintain ourselves with provincial issues.

Mr Sorbara: Sir, if you do have a problem I would suggest that you cede the chair to your Vice-Chairman and consult with the Clerk of the Legislature, M. DesRosiers, or the Speaker himself. I think you will probably find that what is inappropriate here are your interjections in my remarks. Your responsibility, sir, is to keep order in this committee. I have the floor.

The Chair: You do so.

Mr Sorbara: I could conceivably have the floor for several days on this topic.

The Chair: You could, sir, and you do, sir. Please go ahead.

Mr Sorbara: We will expedite matters if you restrain yourself in your own interjections, I say to you, sir, with all due respect, and you attempt to restrain the government members from interjecting.

The Chair: I think it is quite appropriate for me to ask you to turn to the issue at hand. However, it is also quite appropriate for you to ignore that interjection if you wish to.

Mr Sorbara: Okay.

The Chair: As you know, sir.

Mr Sorbara: I am taking your wise counsel, with the respect that is appropriately accorded to it.

I was talking about the Al-Mashat matter, was I not? In Al-Mashat we had, I think, three ministers testify before the committee. Those ministers were able to stonewall that committee sufficiently so that it has become very difficult for that committee to establish the truth of the matter. The allegation from each of the ministers is that they did not know anything about it until it was raised by the press. You will recall that Joe Clark blamed his chief of staff. That was a cruel one, a real, real cruel one. But notice, I say to my good friend from Durham East—

Mr Harnick: It is sort of like Mr Farnan and his probationary—

The Chair: Mr Harnick, please allow Mr Sorbara the floor.

Mr Harnick: Very cruel.

Mr Sorbara: Now there is an inappropriate interjection and one that I welcome.

In any event, the notion that Clark and the others would look for scapegoats is interesting here. As I suggested in my argument in respect of the Minister without Portfolio responsible for women's issues, the Al-Mashat case is instructive, because the political advisers did know before the ministers. That is what political advisers know. This is the stuff that they work with, this information that comes to them. So it is almost inconceivable that the chief of staff or the executive assistant to the Minister without Portfolio responsible for women's issues did not know that she was planning on writing a letter. That is almost inconceivable. The only situation where no one in the directorate could know about it is a situation where the minister herself took out the stationery, sat down at the typewriter and tapped out the letter, did not make any copies, did not log it, just sent it on to the college of physicians and surgeons.

Now, that would have been really cute, because sometimes they do that so that they can have what is called in these circles deniability. Do you know what deniability is? It is: "Well, no, we didn't write that letter. That is not my signature. Come and look at our files. You can't find a copy of that letter in our files." But I think in this case the minister was not looking for deniability. She acknowledged her mistake. The Premier acknowledged the mistake, and indeed the Premier at one point accepted the resignation.

I reiterate, I think we have to know what happened in those four hours between the acceptance of the resignation and the rejection of the resignation. I say that because I think what is really on trial here is not the conduct so much of the minister responsible for women's issues but the competence of the Premier himself. The reason I say that is that I would judge the competence of the Premier, not based on what decision he made but on what advice he sought, what inquiries he made apropos the submission of a letter of resignation from our good friend and colleague the member for Scarborough West, the then and now minister responsible for women's issues.

I do not believe the Premier made any such inquiries, but I think those sorts of inquiries ought to be made. If, as a politician, you think the federal committee was doing its job making an inquiry into the Al-Mashat affair, how could you at one and the same time propose that no such inquiry ought to be made here? Who else knew? What advice was given? I am scandalized at the notion that perhaps several months ago the director of the Ontario women's directorate knew that the letter was written. I say parenthetically, sir, to you and to the members of this committee I would like to know what advice the director of the Ontario women's directorate gave to her minister in this regard.

The Chair: You have covered Mashat and perhaps you could go on to another subject.

Mr Sorbara: If you keep interjecting, sir, I can go into great detail on Mashat.

The Chair: Please, go ahead.

Mrs Mathysen: It does not matter what you do; you are damned if you do and you are damned if you don't.

Interjections.

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, you have the floor.

Mrs Mathysen: I am sorry, Mr Chair—

Mr Sorbara: Before Mrs Mathysen leaves the room, let me say this to her. You are not damned if you do and damned if you don't. If you, as whip—

Mrs Mathysen: Mr Sorbara, if someone—

The Chair: Mrs Mathysen, please. Mr Sorbara, you have the floor, sir. Return, please, to the question at hand.

Mrs Mathysen: I would say to Mrs Mathysen, parenthetically, that if she can prevail—

The Chair: Why do you not speak to the Chair parenthetically, rather than to Mrs Mathysen? She was out of order.

Mrs Mathysen: That is right. You should address your remarks through the Chair. I am helping you.

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, have you finished your remarks?

Mr Sorbara: I simply say parenthetically to Mrs Mathysen, the member for Middlesex, through you, sir, that if she could prevail upon her friend Ms Gigantes to withdraw this motion, and then if she would do me the courtesy of sending a note saying that she, as whip, would like to discuss with me the timing of the completion of this business, I could make this speech a very short speech. I have not once received a note from Mrs Mathysen.

The Chair: Would you be willing then to recess to do that?

Mr Sorbara: No. All I need is a note saying, "We're going to withdraw the motion and we'd like to sit down with you between now and 6 o'clock to talk about the timing of the completion of the report." I think, for example, it is going to take us about another week and a half to two weeks to complete our dissent. We would like you to finish your work first so we can refer to the recommendations that you're making. By the way, our dissent will not carry much weight. It will not prevail when the report returns to the Legislature, so I do not think you run a very big risk of doing that. But I leave that entirely up to the government members. We can debate this motion for several days or several weeks, or the motion can be withdrawn and the whip could send me a little note saying, "I'd like to talk to you over a cup of coffee about the timing of the completion of our work."

Mr Mills: You said you needed two days.

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, go ahead, sir.

Mr Sorbara: To complete the writing of the dissent?

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, please.

Interjections.

Mr Sorbara: In any event, I am trying to use the Al-Mashat matter, which has been covered so extensively in our national press, to build the case that argues, I think effectively—I know I have the attention of my colleagues in the Progressive Conservative Party, at least for a little while—that the Premier ought to make inquiries within the Ontario women's directorate and within his own office to determine who knew what, why and when. That is what is relevant.

Now, my friend from Guelph mouths the word "Why?" and I am going to answer him because—

The Chair: Your friend from Guelph does not have the floor. You do, sir.

Mr Sorbara: I know. I am just noting for the record—

Mr Morrow: With Mr Sorbara's indulgence, I would like to ask him if we can have a couple of minutes so he and I can confer about some things. I assure you, Mr Sorbara, that I will give you the floor when we are done. Is that fair?

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, you would still have the floor when we resume.

Mr Sorbara: Why do I not just move a motion that this committee adjourn for the day and have a 20-minute bell, and then I will return after? I consent to adjourn for 20 minutes.

Mr Morrow: I want to talk to you for a couple of minutes; that is all I want to do.

Mr Sorbara: Sure, I do not mind.

Mr Morrow: You can have the floor when we come back.

The Chair: Five-minute recess.

The committee recessed at 1654.

The Chair: We have resumed. Mr Sorbara.

Ms Gigantes: On a point of order: I would just like to report to other members of the committee that the attempt to have the opposition agree to a date which, following the tabling of a report on this reference, would be a reasonable date for it to do a dissenting report—it was impossible to reach any accommodation on that matter.

Mr Sorbara: That is not a point of order.

The Chair: I am not sure that is a point of order.

Mr Sorbara: I think I have the floor on the motion.

The Chair: Go ahead, Mr Sorbara.

Mr Sorbara: So long as that matter was raised, even though it is not a point of order, I should just say a word about it parenthetically. In trying to deal with the motion we have before us, which is really a time allocation motion, I want to make it clear once again that our party would have been entirely willing to agree to a specific date by when a dissenting report would be submitted. That is to say, we in fact suggested that three weeks after we received the report written by the majority on this committee we would have a dissenting report ready for the clerk to have transcribed and incorporated into the report. We were willing to agree.

Ms Gigantes: If you are still willing to agree to that, let's talk about it.

Mr Sorbara: I want to say to my friend the member for Ottawa Centre that we are completely willing to agree to that. There is some concern from the Progressive Conservatives about the specific date when the entire report, including its dissent, is submitted. What I and my party are not willing to agree to is to incorporate that in a motion of the sort before us now. The reason is because I find, in my own judgement, based on the rules of this House and the procedure before committees, this a motion that is out of order and inappropriate and ought not to be considered. I will get to that topic in my remarks, but if we all want the clerk to write up a document saying this is the way we are going to proceed and we all put our John Henrys on it, I am perfectly willing to do that. I said that during the recess.

The problem the member for Ottawa Centre has is that she wants her time allocation motion to succeed. I want to tell her that it is inappropriate, it is offensive, it is without precedent before a committee like this and it is simply not acceptable to us.

Ms Gigantes: On a point of order, Mr Chair: If it were possible to understand what the member for York Centre is suggesting, perhaps we could have an agreement about how to proceed. Is he referring to the first part of the motion—namely, that which calls upon us to deal with the outstanding matters in the draft report by 5:30 tonight—as a time allocation motion or is he referring to the question in the second part of the motion, which deals with the time framework for the tabling of a report and a dissenting report, as a time allocation motion?

Mr Sorbara: Those are interesting questions; they are not points of order. Of course, I am not allowed to answer them, but I will anyway, sir, to see if we can further this matter.

Ms Gigantes: They are points of order.

Mr Harnick: On a point of order, Mr Chair: If there is some genuine idea that we can break this impasse, why do we bother debating about it across the table? Why do we not see if we can get this thing settled? Let's adjourn and do this properly, because it is not a point of order.

The Chair: Would you like to recess for five or 10 minutes to do that, sir?

Ms Gigantes: I suggest five, Mr Chair.

Mr Harnick: Why impose another time limit? Let's do it.

Ms Gigantes: Because we cannot deal with the motion.

Mr Sorbara: I will be about 15 more minutes on the entire topic, at least on the subject I am on. Listen, I could continue discussing this. Perhaps Mr Harnick and Ms Gigantes want to go off on their own, stroll in the park and simply discuss it, see if they can come to an agreement.

The Chair: Would it not be possible for you all to go out together to come to an agreement, or is it impossible?

Mr Sorbara: My position, sir, is crystal clear.

The Chair: You are not willing to negotiate with these members, then.

Mr Sorbara: I appreciate that a member of this committee has the authority under the standing orders to move a time allocation motion for the committee. There are many precedents—

The Chair: We would like to recess for five minutes so the position can be clear.

Mr Sorbara: No. I am sorry, sir, but not in the middle of a sentence.

The committee recessed at 1710.

The Chair: Can we resume now? We are resuming.

Clerk of the Committee: The understanding that I believe we have between the three parties is that the motion would be withdrawn, that we would continue where we were on the report, which was the section on parliamentary assistants, we would get all of the motions for the report to the researchers by 5:30 today, the final report would come back to the committee on Monday 24 June, dissents would be due three weeks following 24 June and the report would then be tabled after the dissents are printed, translated and bound in proper form for tabling.

The Chair: Could I have a clarification? I was not part of that negotiation. Does that include votes on issues that are still outstanding at 5:30?

Clerk of the Committee: That would all be done before 5:30 today.

Mr Harnick: Just so that we are not confused about this, I gather that we will be tabling the report and the dissents immediately upon completion rather than waiting until the Legislature resumes. Is that what everybody wants?

Ms Gigantes: You cannot table when the Legislature is not in session.

Mr Sorbara: Yes, you can.

Mr Harnick: I am not so sure about that. I understand you can do that. Do you want to do it when the Legislature is back on 23 September or do you want to do it whenever the translations are done and the paper is bound?

The Chair: Do you have an agreement on that point?

Mr Harnick: I do not know if we have an agreement on that point.

Ms Gigantes: Yes, we do.

Mr Harnick: What is the agreement we have? Because I have not been made part of it.

Ms Gigantes: What would you like?

Mr Harnick: An agreement is usually something between two consenting people.

Ms Gigantes: What would you like? I am asking you, what would you like?

Mr Harnick: I did not hear anything from the clerk about when we would be tabling the report. Accordingly, we have no agreement. Your understanding was that we could not table the report until the Legislature resumes.

Ms Gigantes: I was mistaken.

Mr Harnick: You were mistaken.

The Chair: The clerk says that as soon as the report is translated and bound, it will be tabled.

Mr Sorbara: But he does not want that.

Mr Harnick: Is that what we have agreed to?

Mr Sorbara: No. I agree to that.

The Chair: Excuse me. Are you suggesting that we delay until 23 September?

Mr Harnick: I do not know. I do not know what the government's position is.

Ms Gigantes: We are relatively easy. What would you suggest, Mr Harnick?

Mr Harnick: I frankly could not care less.

Ms Gigantes: Then choose one, please.

The Chair: Why are we debating something if you could not care less about it?

Mr Sorbara: It is not our motion that is on the floor.

Mr Harnick: We did not create this logjam. Now you want an agreement so that we do not run into problems later on. If I came back later on and this was not part of the agreement and I said, "No, no"—

Mrs Mathysen: Oh, isn't that cute. You say one thing one minute and another the next.

Mr Harnick: No, no. That is not what I am saying. I am saying that we should have a concise and complete agreement. When do you want to table the report?

Ms Gigantes: Whenever you would like, if you make a decent suggestion. Make a decent suggestion.

Mr Sorbara: I suggest that we are ad idem on almost all points except the question of when the report is tabled. My suggestion would be that we give the clerk a reasonable amount of time to prepare the report in appropriate form for tabling and that the report be tabled thereafter upon the instructions of the subcommittee but in any event no later than the first day when the session resumes; that is, September the whatever. How is that?

Mr Harnick: I can agree with that. What about the government? Do you agree with that?

Mrs Mathysen: I want a clarification. There are too many vague words there, are there not?

Ms Gigantes: Spell it out. Let's have it spelled out.

The Chair: They have a last date, but the tabling could occur before that last date.

Mr Sorbara: Just again to review the terms of the agreement, the motion before us is to be withdrawn, so we do not have that motion. Therefore, the committee has its regular business before it; that is, the guidelines themselves. This motion then need not be dealt with. It is withdrawn by the mover.

The second point is that you folks do whatever you want and complete the report. I just assure you that, for our part, my members, we have no more to say on the matters that you will raise in completing the deliberations this committee has to do. Okay? We may vote against your motions, but we do not have any more speeches to make. There is no time allocation. We finish it when it is finished, but you can rely on our assurance that we have no more comments to make and that we reserve the right to vote either for or against, depending on what you propose. That is the second thing.

Then the report gets prepared. We ask simply, in terms of this agreement, that we have three weeks from the date we get the final document to prepare our dissent. We agree to that. If we are one day late, please do not punish us. Then the whole document goes to the clerk to be prepared for submission and tabling in the House. It is translated and put in a form suitable for tabling.

After that point—the clerk is also going to be having us travel around Ontario discussing Sunday shopping—thereafter, the subcommittee will decide as to the timing of the tabling but in any event it cannot choose a date later than the first day that the Legislature is sitting in the fall session. I think I have just summed up the terms of a reasonable agreement. If there is discussion on it, I think the Chair would be interested in listening to those discussions.

The Chair: Is there agreement on those points?

Mr Harnick: The only thing that was not mentioned in that summary, and I do not know whether it is at all significant, is the date of 24 June. The way it was worded, the dissents, the minority opinions, would be available three weeks following whatever date the final report was delivered. Is there some necessity that the final report has to be delivered on 24 June, or are we waiving that? I think 24 June was part of the agreement and I think it should be mentioned.

The Chair: I think it should be, because 24 June is the next meeting of the committee. That makes sense.

Mr Harnick: If the report is available on 24 June, we have three weeks from that day. If the report is not available 24 June, but is available at a subsequent date, then we have three weeks from whatever subsequent date it is delivered. But at a minimum, the opposition parties will have three weeks from the 24th to deliver their dissents, if you decide to rush the report and get it to us faster than the 24th. We want three weeks from the 24th and that has always been my understanding. Do you want to put the 24th in that summary?

The Chair: The clerk had it in her original summary. Go ahead, Mr Sorbara.

Mr Sorbara: Just on the very narrow matter of the 24th, I think Mr Harnick is wrong to incorporate that date. I fully expect that it will be done by the 24th, but that is your affair. I gave my summary in very careful terms. We undertake, as a party, not to raise any more matters in terms of debate. In other words, as you bring forward motions, we are not going to be making speeches. I just want to tell you that every member of the Legislature and all 73 members of your party have the right to come in and sit on this committee and give speeches on motions that are presented.

For our part, we undertake that we will control our members, and as whip, I will control my members so that will not happen. If the Progressive Conservative Party wants to give that undertaking to the committee, so be it. If your whip wants to give that undertaking to the Chair, so be it. It is my assumption if there are those sorts of undertakings from each of the three parties, the report will be finished and full instructions will have gone out to the researcher.

But anything could happen. Peter Kormos could come down here. There is one member who is not a member of any political party, who got thrown out. He could come down here and speak to the topic if he wanted to. That is why I did not put in the 24th. But whenever you are finished—

Mr Fletcher: He is still a member of Parliament.

Mr Sorbara: Well, he is not a member of the caucus. Excuse me, I made an error.

Ms Gigantes: Are you going to talk through to the 24th?

Mr Sorbara: No, I am finished. I do not want the 24th in there. All I want is that three weeks from the date you are finished, we are finished. But three weeks from the date that you are finished—

Mr Winninger: Charles is saying if we get done before the 24th, he wants at least three weeks from the 24th, which may involve—

Mr Harnick: For all I know, with the haste that you people are obviously in—you are obviously in a tremendous hurry—you could have this report delivered to us tomorrow.

Mr Sorbara: It cannot be done. Well, okay, three weeks from the date that—

Mr Harnick: Three weeks from the 24th, or if the report is delivered after the 24th, from whatever date.

Mr Sorbara: Three weeks from that date.

Mr Harnick: Is that understood?

Ms Gigantes: Let's go.

The Chair: Is there agreement?

Ms Gigantes: There is agreement.

The Chair: Ms Gigantes, are you withdrawing your motion?

Ms Gigantes: Yes.

The Chair: Thank you. We are on the parliamentary assistants stage of the report.

Ms Gigantes: I have a series of motions which I am prepared to put forward. I have copied them for the clerk.

The Chair: Could you read out your proposal in regard to parliamentary assistants?

Ms Gigantes: I am prepared to put all the motions forward together as a package, if that is acceptable to the opposition.

Mr Sorbara: Let's do them one by one.

The Chair: One by one.

Ms Gigantes: Very good.

Mr Sorbara: Hold on a second—

The Chair: You said one by one.

Mr Sorbara: I said one by one. The reason I said one by one is that there may be some that we agree with and there may be some that we do not agree with.

Ms Gigantes: Fine.

The Chair: Ms Gigantes moves, on the question entitled "Parliamentary Assistants," that the new divestment requirements should apply to parliamentary assistants as well as cabinet ministers.

Mr Sorbara: On a brief point of order, Mr Chair: I just wish my good friend would wait just a moment until I find my copy of the document so I can follow along as she goes through the motion.

Ms Gigantes: I cover the waterfront.

Mr Sorbara: I take it once again that we are working from a document dated 27 May 1991. Is that correct?

The Chair: Yes.

Ms Gigantes: Yes.

Mr Sorbara: And we are on—

Ms Gigantes: Page 8, part II, "Application—To Whom Should the Guidelines Apply?" Parliamentary assistants.

The Chair: Any further discussion on parliamentary assistants? All in favour? Opposed?

Motion agreed to.

Mr Sorbara: Just parenthetically on that—

The Chair: Ms Gigantes moves, on page 9 under "Members of the Legislature," that members of the Legislature should be required to provide the commission with detailed statements of assets, liabilities and interests, which statements will be made available to the public by the commission.

Mr Sorbara: That law already exists in the province of Ontario.

Ms Gigantes: It answers the question.

The Chair: All in favour? Opposed?

Motion agreed to.

1730

The Chair: Ms Gigantes moves, on page 9 under the heading "Senior Public Service and Government Appointees," that the committee recommends the incorporation of requirements concerning these two groups into the Public Service Act.

All in favour?

Mr Sorbara: Just hold on a second. You cannot call the question without discussion first.

The Chair: I realize that. I thought we were moving further.

Mr Sorbara: Say "discussion."

The Chair: Discussion.

Mr Sorbara: We will be voting against this because this committee heard no evidence as to the pros and cons of doing what the motion incorporates, and we think it is foolish to proceed on the basis of—

Ms Gigantes: Yes, you did hear evidence.

Mr Winner: Premier Rae made recommendations. It is right in the summary.

Mr Sorbara: We had no discussion on it.

Mr Winner: Read your summary.

Ms Gigantes: Did we vote?

The Chair: Further discussion? All in favour? Opposed?

Motion agreed to.

The Chair: Ms Gigantes moves, on page 10 under the heading "Spouses, Family and Others," that spouses and minor children should be required to provide reports to the commission similar to those for members and similarly subject to public disclosure by the commission.

Discussion? All in favour? Opposed?

Motion agreed to.

The Chair: Ms Gigantes moves, on page 11 under the title "Constituency Work—Communication in the Administration of Justice, with Tribunals and Ministries," that the committee recommend incorporating the Premier's guidelines 19 to 24 into the conflict of interest act.

Discussion?

Mr Sorbara: I just want a moment to consider the direction of that recommendation. May I just hear the motion again?

Ms Gigantes: The clerk has it.

The Chair: You have it in front of you.

Ms Gigantes: You have a copy, I believe.

Mr Sorbara: It is extremely surprising, particularly in view of events over the past two days, but okay.

The Chair: The researcher would like some clarification.

Ms Swift: If I could just have a little clarification on this, my understanding was that under the part I, "Guidelines or Legislation," the recommendation of the committee was that the guidelines be incorporated into the existing act. I took it from that that all of the sections of the guidelines were to be incorporated. This seems a little redundant in light of the previous recommendation.

Ms Gigantes: Fine. It certainly expresses particular approval in connection with this section. That is fine.

Mr Sorbara: You will have some legal difficulty—I would suggest that we withdraw it.

Ms Swift: I do not know if the committee wants me to—

The Chair: It is a committee report, not a law.

Ms Gigantes: Well, the question is before us in terms of the report, which is why I thought I had better prepare a motion.

The Chair: Okay.

Ms Swift: Do you want me then to just make specific or—

Ms Gigantes: It indicates which portion of the guidelines should be fitted into this question in the draft report.

Ms Swift: Just to give it emphasis, then?

Ms Gigantes: Clear direction.

The Chair: All in favour? Opposed?

Motion agreed to.

Ms Gigantes: Mr Chair, on page 12 of the draft report, under the title "Additional Restrictions—Criminal Code Convictions," I recommend that the committee make no recommendation.

The Chair: Do we need to accept that, seeing it is a non-recommendation? Do you want the section to come out, or just to make no recommendation?

Ms Gigantes: No, there is nothing wrong with the section. I believe the section stands on its own and it does not need any recommendation following it. That is what I am proposing.

The Chair: Thank you, Ms Gigantes. So leave the section in, but with no resolution. Okay. All in favour? Opposed?

Motion agreed to.

Ms Gigantes: Mr Chair, on page 13, under the heading, "Gifts and Benefits," no recommendation. Again, I would suggest that we leave the text without recommendation.

The Chair: When you say no recommendation, for my clarification, does that mean that the present conflict-of-interest law or the guidelines would hold precedence?

Ms Gigantes: Obviously, the existing law.

The Chair: The existing law. You are suggesting that the existing law would hold precedence here.

Mr Sorbara: Not that I am going to take any credit for the report in the end but, believe me, the inconsistencies that will arise are rather shocking. You have an act that has a figure of $200, guidelines that have a figure of $100, and an earlier recommendation that the guidelines become the law, which means that you have to make a choice between one or the other. Then you have this section where the committee is saying the committee did not make any recommendation. I think you are going to leave the researcher rather confused, and certainly the general public will be wondering what exactly it is you are recommending.

The Chair: I would suggest, given my clarification, Mr Sorbara, that the guidelines would not be enacted in this particular section and that, as Ms Gigantes suggested, the act would still remain.

Mr Sorbara: No, that is not what she is saying. She is moving that there be no recommendation. The impact of moving that means that either the guidelines at, say, $100 become law, or the law that says $200 remains the law, but not both, and I think we will be back here trying to—

Interjection.

Mr Sorbara: So all of the guidelines except this one be incorporated into the act.

The Chair: Okay.

Mr Sorbara: I was just trying to point out the inconsistency. It is rather stupid.

The Chair: Further discussion? All in favour? Opposed?

Motion agreed to.

The Chair: Ms Gigantes moves, on page 13 under the title "Additional Disclosure Rules," that we incorporate the Premier's guidelines 10 to 14 into the conflict of interest act.

Mr Sorbara: Same problem.

Ms Gigantes: No problem.

Mr Sorbara: We moved that all of the guidelines be incorporated into the act. Moving these specifically suggests that there is some sort of qualification on that.

Ms Gigantes: No, it does not.

Interjection.

Ms Gigantes: Are we ready for the question?

Mr Sorbara: Can I ask who drew this up? Did anyone give any thinking to it or anyone put some thought behind it?

Ms Gigantes: Yes, we did. Thank you. Yes, we did.

Mr Sorbara: Who did? May I ask whose work this is?

The Chair: Further discussion?

Ms Gigantes: Are we ready for the question?

The Chair: Further discussion? All in favour?

Mr Sorbara: David, is this yours?

Mr Winner: It represents a combination, okay?

The Chair: All in favour? Opposed?

Motion agreed to.

Ms Gigantes: Mr Chair, on the "Meaning of 'Conflict of Interest,'" I had indicated that I would move a motion of definition. I am going to withdraw that motion. That is on page 14. I had indicated, on page 2 of the motions before you, that I would propose a definition. On advice, I am not going to propose a definition.

The Chair: So you are withdrawing that.

Ms Gigantes: Yes.

The Chair: Do you have a response to that?

Ms Gigantes: On page 14, Mr Chair, under the heading, "Miscellaneous"—

The Chair: I am sorry, Ms Gigantes. Does that mean on page 14 in regard to the meaning of "conflict of interest," there is no recommendation at this point?

Ms Gigantes: That is correct.

The Chair: Thank you.

Ms Gigantes: Under the title "Miscellaneous" on the same page, section 13, "disclosure of material changes"—which should be in my motion—"in assets," I recommend that we incorporate recommendations made by the conflict commissioner concerning sections 12 and 13 of the act.

Mr Harnick: Where are those recommendations made by the conflict commissioner? Where are you referring to them?

Ms Gigantes: Those are included in our background material.

Mr Harnick: Which recommendations?

The Chair: Appendix B, May 6. He also, of course, submitted them in front of the committee.

Ms Gigantes: That deal with sections 12 and 13.

Mr Harnick: Are those his proposed amendments?

Ms Gigantes: That is correct.

Mr Harnick: So those are the only amendments of his that you are interested in dealing with?

Ms Gigantes: Those are the ones I am enumerating right here.

Mr Harnick: Those are the only amendments of all those he has suggested that you are—

Ms Gigantes: No, that is not so. You can figure it out for yourself. Here I have mentioned them by name. Mr Chair, are we ready for the question?

The Chair: Further discussion? All in favour? Opposed?

Ms Gigantes: On page 15, Mr Chair, under the title "Section 16, Trusts."

The Chair: Ms Gigantes moves that where the test of unusual hardship determines that divestment is not required, arm's-length trusteeship shall be required.

Discussion? All in favour? Opposed?

Motion agreed to.

Mr Sorbara: I wish to say that that is not new.

Ms Gigantes: Divestment is new though. Mr Chair, a final motion and then if I could, I would like to maintain the floor just for one final comment which I hope will be helpful.

The Chair: You will have the floor. However, there seem to be two motions on the next page.

Ms Gigantes: Yes, you are right, sorry. Section 25, which is also on page 15.

Mr Sorbara: On a point of order, Mr Chair: can she arrange to maintain the floor down the road?

The Chair: She will have it automatically, will she not?

Mr Sorbara: No.

Ms Gigantes: It pertains exactly to these motions, Mr Sorbara.

Mr Sorbara: Just on the point of order, sir, if she moves motions, we deal with motions; and then another matter comes up and anyone will agree, I suppose, to—

The Chair: You are right, sir, you are right. That would be with the consent of the other members.

Mr Sorbara: We will see when the time comes. You may get another time allocation motion or something like that.

Ms Gigantes: No, you will not. Next is page 15, under the title "Section 25, Subsequent acquisition of land."

The Chair: Ms Gigantes moves that subsequent acquisition of assets will be governed by the same requirements as for previous land holdings. However, no exception shall be allowed for subsequently acquired land.

All in favour? Opposed?

Motion agreed to.

Ms Gigantes: Mr Chair, next is page 16, under the title "Section 27, Confidential cabinet documents."

The Chair: Ms Gigantes moves that we provide for access by the commissioner where necessary.

Where necessary?

Ms Gigantes: Yes, where he has a requirement to look at the materials that are related to what he is reporting on.

The Chair: And he would determine that necessity?

Ms Gigantes: I do not think the researcher will have a problem with this, Mr Chair.

The Chair: Okay, thank you. Discussion?

Mr Sorbara: This is one of those cases where the dissenting report is going to be the one that has historical value—

Ms Gigantes: Are we ready for the question, Mr Chair?

The Chair: Further discussion? All in favour? Opposed?

Motion agreed to.

Ms Gigantes: Mr Chair, if I might, there was a question about duplication.

Interjection.

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, please. Ms Gigantes—

Ms Gigantes: There was a question earlier.

Mr Sorbara: Just hold on one second. You interrupted me.

The Chair: You did not have the floor, sir.

Mr Sorbara: You have no right whatever—

Ms Gigantes: Mr Chair, if I might, I feel it would be helpful to the researcher, and perhaps to other members of this committee, to explain that, where motions which we have just passed appear redundant, because we have said that we were moving the conflict-of-interest guidelines into the Members' Conflict of Interest Act, the question we were dealing with there, primarily, was whether we should in fact use the guidelines as a basis for amendment to the act, or whether they should simply remain outside legislation and be used as guidelines apart from legislation—if that is helpful to our researcher.

The Chair: Okay. Further discussion?

Mr Sorbara: Just a second, is there a motion on the floor?

The Chair: No, there is not.

Mr Sorbara: Well, what is the discussion?

Ms Gigantes: There was no discussion. It was a point of information.

Mr Sorbara: I will move a motion then, if I might, in conjunction with our work on these guidelines.

The Chair: Mr Sorbara moves that the committee invite the minister responsible for women's issues and the Minister of Northern Development to come before this committee and testify as to the circumstances leading up to their breach of the guidelines as they presently exist.

Mr Harnick: Can I make an amendment to that motion? May I add that we request that the Premier come and elaborate generally on the issue of the conflict guidelines and specifically on the incident relating to those two ministers.

Mr Sorbara: In conjunction with my motion, I certainly would accept the friendly amendment from my friend the member for Willowdale so that my motion will read: "I move that in conjunction with the preparation of this report and the dissent contemplated thereunder, the committee invite the Premier, the minister responsible for women's issues and the Minister of Northern Development and government House leader to appear before this committee."

I have some comments to make on the motion I am moving. I would begin by simply saying to you that today is a rather unusual day, where we have completed all the government motions on the report and we now have authorization to proceed to the writing of the report. Nevertheless, this issue has so gripped us and the province that at one and the same time we are debating in this committee the conduct of ministers—we have a former minister on the committee—just as I speak right now, the member for Scarborough North is speaking on a want of confidence motion in the House; soon we will all be going up to vote on it. It just indicates how dreadful things have become.

I do not think I want to go through the list again of the ministers who have gotten into trouble in this government, but if you go right back to the time when we were just about to adjourn for the end of the fall sitting, there were two ministers—

Interjection.

Mr Sorbara: No, I am not going to finish today, but we can vote on this Monday—unless you want to comment on it. Do you want to comment on this motion?

Mr Fletcher: Let's vote on this on Monday.

Mr Sorbara: That would be all right. You may want to have something to say and you may want to support it.

Mr Fletcher: I have nothing to say.

The Chair: Are you yielding the floor to Mr Fletcher?

Mr Sorbara: No, I am not. I am remarking that without even thinking about it, the member for Guelph says, "Oh, no, we wouldn't want to do that." The standards of this government are even lower than the standards of the Mulroney government in Ottawa. Mulroney conceded that the matter of Al-Mashat had to go before a committee.

Mr Harnick: At least they had a committee in Ottawa. You guys were scared to send the Farnan thing out to a committee.

Mr Sorbara: I am not surprised that the member for Guelph was interjecting that he would not be supportive of the motion. But I just make the comparison that in Ottawa, when there were some serious allegations, at least the government conceded that it should go before a committee for a while. Here, we cannot get any real opportunity to do the kind of investigative analysis we used to be able to do.

Mr Fletcher: I might be able to support this on Monday.

Mr Sorbara: In deference to my good friend the member for Guelph, I will move that we adjourn this discussion in consideration of the motion until Monday, so Monday we can take up the discussion of this matter. I will call for a 20-minute bell.

The Chair: Before we do that, could I remind the members of the subcommittee that we should be having a meeting at 3:30 in the west lobby.

Mr Sorbara: On Thursday.

The Chair: On Thursday at 3:30.

Mr Sorbara: I move adjournment of the debate.

The Chair: We have a motion to adjourn and a 20-minute bell. We are adjourned until Monday.

The committee adjourned at 1745.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

STANDING COMMITTEE ON ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

Monday 24 June 1991

CONFLICT-OF-INTEREST GUIDELINES

The Chair: We have a couple of items of business to deal with. Obviously there is Ms Swift's compilation or draft report, which has been circulated, and I am sure that today we will enter into a discussion of that report and how it should be presented. First we have Mr Sorbara, who had a motion and I believe had the floor when last we spoke, and also, of course, we have the very tentative schedule for our hearings this summer.

Mr Sorbara: I hope to keep my remarks on this motion as brief as possible under the circumstances. But just for the sake of reminding the committee members what the substance of the motion was, it was a motion which would have this committee ask for the authority from the Legislature to call witnesses before it, including the Minister without Portfolio responsible for women's issues and the Minister of Northern Development, and to question them, and hopefully their officials, concerning the breaches of the conflict-of-interest guidelines that we have been discussing over the past several months.

Why would we want to do that? I do not suspect this motion is going to succeed; I think the government members have already made up their minds to vote against this motion. They do not want to have this matter discussed further in a public forum. I think that is terribly unfortunate. I think it is regrettable. It says to me that the standards of this government are even lower than the standards of the federal government in Ottawa, the government of Brian Mulroney.

You will recall, and I mentioned this in my remarks the last time we met, that faced with some question about the immigration of the former ambassador of the Republic of Iraq to Canada, Mohammed Mashat, Brian Mulroney, the Prime Minister of this country, did the right thing. He said, "Well, let's have a parliamentary committee look into it." Members of the government were called before that committee and ministers were called before that committee. The committee did not come to an agreement on a recommendation back to the federal House of Commons, but at least it had an opportunity to pursue some investigation.

Mr Fletcher: Go join Brian.

Mr Sorbara: I am sorry? What did my friend from Guelph say? I think it is rather relevant what he said.

In any event, what we experienced in the Legislature—I guess almost two weeks ago—is two ministers publicly submitting their resignation to the Premier because of clear violations of the conflict-of-interest guidelines, not only the Premier's conflict-of-interest guidelines but, as the Premier acknowledged himself when he accepted those resignations, guidelines that have really guided the conduct of ministers in this Legislature for many, many years.

In my remarks the other day I mentioned that it would be of interest for this committee to know what investigations the Premier made during the time at around 1:30 in the afternoon, when he accepted at least the resignation of the minister responsible for women's issues, and at 5:15, when he decided that he would change his mind and decline to accept those resignations. I think it is terribly important to find out.

The last time we met, when I mentioned this matter, somebody interjected. I think it was Mrs Mathysen and I think it was Mr Morrow as well who mentioned the name of Bob Nixon. "Well, Bob Nixon said it was all right," was the suggestion by way of interjection.

Let me tell you what I think the Premier should have done at 5:15 on that afternoon. I think what the Premier should have said, having reflected, as indeed he did, is as follows: "This afternoon in the Legislature I accepted publicly the resignation of the minister responsible for women's issues and I did that following her submission of a letter of resignation as a result of a letter she wrote to the College of Physicians and Surgeons in respect of a quasi-judicial matter before it. I reiterate to you now," he should have said to the press, "my determination to accept that resignation. I am also announcing that I accept the resignation of the Minister of Northern Development for the very same reasons which force me, unfortunately, to accept the letter of resignation of the minister responsible for women's issues."

Then he should have said, "I do this notwithstanding the very comforting interjection of the Leader of the Opposition, the member for Brant-Haldimand, who for a moment during question period set aside the politics of the matter and the justice of the matter and, in a moment of sheer compassion for two very competent ministers, suggested I change my mind. I understand that compassion," he should have said. "I too have that compassion." He should have praised the ministers for the good work they had done, for they are both very competent in their jobs. The justice of the matter, however, should have required the Premier to accept the resignation of both of these ministers, just as he was required to accept the resignation of the member for Ottawa Centre, the former Minister of Health in the government.

What is so very troubling, I tell you, Mr Vice-Chairman and members of this committee, is not only that the Premier changed his mind, did a classic flip-flop—that was regrettable, unfortunate, but sometimes we do change our minds and sometimes a flip-flop is appropriate. That was regrettable, certainly, but what was more regrettable, and I think rather distasteful, was his reference to Bob Nixon when he did that, encouraging the notion that he had been given leave to change his mind by the authority vested in the Leader of the Opposition. That I found distasteful.

But what are troubling and of grave concern, not to those of us who are politicians but to anyone who is concerned about standards in our society, are the reasons he gave for changing his mind. I am supported in this view by a column written this very weekend by the Toronto Star Queen's Park columnist, Thomas Walkom. I invite any of you who are interested to have a look at the column Walkom wrote. I am not going to bother to quote from it, but he points out the three matters the Premier referred to when the Premier suggested that he was acting appropriately in changing his mind and getting involved in a flip-flop.

First of all he said, "The intentions of the two ministers were very good, and the cause that they were supporting was very good." The Bob Rae we all knew and loved as Leader of the Opposition before the election of 1990 would never have said that. In fact, he would have said the very opposite: that it does not matter whether or not the intentions were good. It does not matter if Joan Smith, for example, was going to the police station because of a clear, compassionate intention just to help the son of a neighbour. The first thing he said was that their intentions were good and it was a good cause.

"But the public interest," he said second, "was not harmed. There was no negative impact on the public interest. There was no breach of the public trust." One wonders about that, because it puts the Premier in the place of defining what is and is not in the public interest. He will not let us as a committee discuss that. You will vote against this motion which will establish conclusively that the orders of the Premier are to shut down all discussion of this. I invite you to do otherwise. I think you are probably going to vote against this motion. But the second thing he said was that the public interest was not harmed, in his view. To change the standards at the snap of a finger, at the flip of a flop—does that not at least affect the public interest, and I say affect negatively the public interest, particularly when the flip-flop is at the instance and instigation of the very man who used to be the Canadian first-choice crusader on the issue of conflict of interest and ministerial accountability? Who is he to say that the public interest has not been impacted negatively? I say it has, and for that very reason he ought not to have changed his mind.

Finally, the Premier said it was okay and he was not going to accept the resignations of the ministers, because after all, what they did did not further their private interests. They did not profit from it. Well, heavens, if we now need clear evidence of personal profit before a minister steps down, having tried to interfere with the administration of justice, we have really gone downhill in Ontario.

Did Jean Charest personally profit where, in humiliation, he had to step down? Sure, the Prime Minister of Canada said: "This is a great politician. I have a lot of faith in Jean Charest. I think some day he's going to be back in cabinet and he's going to do very well. Maybe even he'll be Prime Minister some day. He's a great politician, but he must step down. Our system demands it." Jean Charest did not personally profit. He did not personally benefit. Is that now the standard, that we have to show money in the pocket of the minister or some other personal, private gain on the part of the minister before there is ministerial accountability and responsibility?

We have had Tory ministers step down because they breached the rule about interfering with the administration of justice. They did not personally profit. I do not want to go over the names, but those of you who know anything about the history of this place know how many Tory ministers had to step down.

Certainly in the government that I was a part of we had ministers who, at the insistence of Bob Rae, now the Premier of this province, had to step down. Do you remember his words concerning Joan Smith? He said, "I want her out." Not because she personally profited. Let's go over what Joan Smith did. She got a phone call late at night. The person at the other end of the phone suggested that the son of a neighbour was being assaulted by police officers at the police station in Lucan. It was about 1 o'clock in the morning. She got dressed, she went down to the police station, she made an inquiry, she determined that no such thing was happening, she confirmed that and she went home.

When Bob Rae said, "I want her out," he did not say, "because the public interest has been negatively impacted," or that Joan Smith received a private benefit by way of going to the police station or that somehow the cause was unjust. None of those standards did he apply. He said, "This is very tough stuff. I want her out," and she left and she never returned.

We had thought the appropriate thing was that the Minister of Northern Development and the Minister without Portfolio responsible for women's issues spend some time outside of cabinet. We would fully respect the right of the Premier to bring those two competent ministers into cabinet after a specific period of time, maybe even in September before the start of the next session of Parliament, maybe even back into the very portfolios they held before then. What is just so difficult to accept is that suddenly, in the case of two ministers, the guidelines are thrown out the door. The Premier says, "Well, there's nothing in the guidelines that says the ministers have to resign." I could never hear him saying that in opposition, but he said: "There's nothing that says they have to resign or that I have to accept their resignations. I can do whatever I want. They haven't benefited personally. There's no money in their pockets. Their intentions were good. The public trust, the public interest, has not been violated."

Why did he not apply those standards in the guidelines? Why do we not see those words in these very guidelines that you and I and the rest of us are considering? He does not say that. He does not say that ministerial responsibility will be determined based on these three criteria. Why is that not in the guidelines? Why were those criteria not applied to Evelyn Gigantes, the member for Ottawa Centre, or to poor Peter Kormos, the member for Welland-Thorold? We still have not figured out what he did wrong, except perhaps to disagree with the Premier and a majority in cabinet on automobile insurance. We suspect—in fact, it is common knowledge—that Mr Kormos was perhaps the only real crusader who wanted the New Democratic Party to keep its promise in respect of automobile insurance.

Why not those three guidelines about personally profiting and the public trust and the public interest and the bona fides of the minister? Why were those guidelines not applied to the ministers who have resigned? What about poor old Mike Farnan, the Solicitor General? Why in the world did Farnan not at least offer his resignation and allow the Premier to make a judgement? Why is it that in each case a completely different rule book is governing the matter? That, for us, is what makes the deliberations we have here in this committee so ludicrous. Here we are given a set of guidelines and asked to deliberate on it and make recommendations, and the Premier said that as soon as he tabled the guidelines they would govern his conduct, yet in each case we have a completely different rule book applying to the matters at hand.

I would like to know more about this. If we are really going to respond substantively to the Premier and the Legislature on what are useful guidelines, I would like to know more. I would like to hear from more witnesses. I would like to ask the Premier what inquiries he made between 1:30 on the day those resignations from those two ministers were submitted and 5:15 when he changed his mind and said that Bob Nixon said it was okay. I would like to know more from the Minister without Portfolio responsible for women's issues and her political staff and the bureaucrats in the Ontario Women's Directorate about what advice was and was not given to the minister in respect of the writing of that letter.

As I said the other day, I have been there as a minister and I know that, in matters like that, the activities of the minister are known to the bureaucrats and the bureaucrats generally give advice on the advisability of writing letters. I would like to know whether or not the minister received any advice. I am just dumbfounded that the government members on this committee do not want to know that and do not want to share that with the public. I suspect the only reason why they do not want to know is because it will prove somewhat embarrassing to the minister and somewhat embarrassing to the Premier. But I would like to know whether the Premier at least talked to civil servants in the Ontario Women's Directorate before he changed his mind.

In regard to the Minister of Northern Development, the inquiries I would want to make are fewer, because the letter came from the constituency office. We all have constituency offices and we know that those inquiries and the determination to write or not to write arise differently. People generally come to your office and say, "Would you please support me in this?" Sometimes, in response to that, you just say to your assistant, "Yes, well, let's do that and here's a draft of a letter that I want to sign," and that is the end of it. I do not suspect the Minister of Northern Development consulted with her bureaucrats or her political assistants in the ministry, her political staffers, before she wrote that letter.

My motion is all about finding out what happened and who advised whom on these matters. If the government members really want to be doing their jobs on a committee that purports to be concerned with the administration of justice, they will support this motion. I do not propose that we go into months and months of hearing. I propose that we simply set aside four or five days some time over the next while, and call these ministers and call their senior officials and their senior political staff to get to the bottom of this.

Everyone thinks that this is okay now, because there are no more questions being asked in the Legislature and because the Premier has had his say. I want to tell you that this is like a little dose of poison. For the Premier to change the guidelines, for the Premier to set out three new criteria to determine whether or not a resignation will be accepted or rejected, is simply unacceptable. It simply flies in the face of every standard that has governed ministerial conduct for years and years in this province, in this government, and in this Legislature.

I think that before we give our tacit support to that change we ought to do a little investigation here ourselves. Before we rubber-stamp the conduct of the Premier and his ministers in this matter we ought to make our own independent parliamentary investigations as independently elected MPPs responsible primarily to our constituents, not to our leaders and not to our whips.

So, sir, I ask you and the other members of this committee to support this motion, vote in favour of it, and give us an opportunity to make those inquiries.

The Vice-Chair: All in favour of Greg Sorbara's motion? Opposed?

Motion negatived.

Mr Sorbara: Surprise, surprise.

The Chair: We are now moving on to the finalization of the committee report on conflict of interest. Are there any comments on the report as presented to us?

Mr Morrow: I would just like to congratulate Susan on a job well done and thank her very much for presenting such a fine report. Thank you very much, Susan.

Mr Sorbara: In the same vein, I think Susan Swift has worked under very difficult circumstances in preparing the commentary on the report and of course the recommendations as well. Our view is that the commentary reflects in general terms the nature of the discussion. As you know, we are not supporting most of the substantive recommendations in the report and we will be submitting dissenting views on most of the substantive recommendations. Notwithstanding that, I am grateful and my colleagues are grateful for the work that has been done here on the report, and we appreciate that work, particularly under circumstances that I would describe as less than ideal.

Mr Harnick: I, too, would like to say that we should all be indebted to Susan Swift for the work she has done under difficult circumstances. I have read most of the report. I received it only a very short time ago. I wish to restate again that it is regrettable we never had the opportunity, because the committee did not want to proceed in this way, to review the letter of the Premier, which was really the basis and background for many of the items that found their way into the guidelines. We never had the opportunity, unfortunately again, because the majority on the committee did not want to review the amendment to the guidelines that the Premier released in February, not publicly, but which subsequently came to light in a public way.

Unfortunately, we never even opened the Members' Conflict of Interest Act. That, to me, makes this whole exercise very suspicious. We never opened that act. We never considered a single, solitary amendment as suggested by the conflict of interest commissioner, although he gave us his proposed amendments for discussion purposes, which this committee—and I am talking about the majority members on it—never permitted the opportunity—

Interjection.

Mr Harnick: I am going to talk about that in a minute, Ms Gigantes.

The committee never so much as opened the conflict-of-interest act. They never so much as commented on Justice Evans's proposed amendments to that act. In fact, when I read this report, I find things in it that I do not believe were ever discussed at this committee, and I paid close attention.

I refer members of the committee to page 6, where it states:

"Specific recommendations were made to the committee concerning the meaning of terms such as 'undue hardship,' 'the appearance of a conflict' and 'business interests.' It was suggested that the section as a whole is vague and meaningless because these terms are too subjective.

"However, the committee believes these terms as used in the proposed guidelines will prove useful to the judges to be made under the guidelines."

I cannot conceive of how those terms can prove to be useful if the suggestions were that we did not know what those terms meant. I think this section, under section 15 on page 6, is reflective of the quality of the work that was done by this committee. The quality, I would submit, is very poor and did not answer the questions that begged to be answered. We did not make any attempt to improve upon this legislation in anticipation of the difficulty it would cause.

On page 7 it states, "who should be the final arbiter of conflict-of-interest matters; whether the courts should be involved in these determinations; and whether citizens should have any role in the process"—we never discussed any of this. These questions were just so obvious and a discussion of them was just begging to be had, but we never had that discussion. We never so much as discussed whether courts should or should not be involved.

I think it is interesting. When you take a look at page 8, the second-last paragraph states:

"The use of the court system in the determination of conflict-of-interest issues was suggested by one witness,"—I might add that although not named, that one witness was Premier Bob Rae—"but rejected by another who argued that there is no expeditious way of having such issues resolved through the court system." That other witness was Mr Justice Evans.

What that paragraph points out is the dilemma about where the final arbitration, where the right of appeal, should go. Should there be a right of appeal? The Premier believed we should have access to the courts. The conflict of interest commissioner said that access to the courts would ruin the conflict-of-interest proceedings because it would take such a long time that issues involving human beings who were caught in conflict-of-interest matters could not be resolved expeditiously. People would be left in limbo.

This committee never found the time to discuss these very important issues. It is regrettable that we did not do that, because quite apart from our philosophical, political differences, these questions could be answered without resort to political beliefs. They are questions and concepts that, once the committee decided that the guidelines should become law, we should have been going ahead and trying to wrestle with. But the committee found it did not have the time. Even now the committee is really not very interested in any meaningful discussion about this matter.

I would not hesitate to make the statement that of all the members on this committee, I would bet not a person on the government side has really read this final report. Certainly if they have read it, they have read it in a cursory manner, without regard to any of the issues which we were asked by the Premier to discuss but never got around to. That is the reason my party will be preparing a dissenting report, because we believe some of these matters are fundamental to the issue of conflict of interest. They should be discussed. They should have been discussed by the committee, but the committee was too busy. All they were prepared to do was make motions to speed this process along and invoke closure and make further motions: "Just dealing with section 15, we are for it, we are against it, all in favour." That was the extent of the discussion we had.

I appreciate that the remarks I am making are not going to win any favours from anybody, but we had a mandate to do a job and we have not done that job. Because of that, the majority members on this committee are giving to the Legislature a report that is superficial. It takes a cursory look at the conflict-of-interest guidelines, and interestingly enough, it identifies all of the issues that are important. It then refuses to take the time to discuss them and analyse them and put them into some perspective, and it does not try to make them better.

These guidelines were given to us as guidelines, with a mandate to review them and to make them better. We have not made a single attempt to make these guidelines better. We have merely gone through the guidelines and said, "All in favour," and six or seven government members would put up their hands and that section would be passed and we would move on to the next section. I applaud the government members because they took their orders from whoever was giving the orders and they put not a single iota of work, of commitment and imagination, into making these guidelines better than what was given to us.

I think the Premier will be disappointed when he sees that all he receives back is a rubber stamp of guidelines that he himself knows are far from perfect and that he himself knows should have been discussed at length, with attempts made to make these guidelines better so that if they are ever enacted they will work. But the committee decided it did not want to do that. They just decided to ram these guidelines through as they were presented. You can all be satisfied that you get an A for your effort. You did exactly as you were told by someone, I gather, and you just rammed these things through holus-bolus, without a single change suggested in one single section of guidelines, which I think were some 25 sections in all.

It is interesting in appendix A that we have the commissioner's proposed amendments to sections 12 and 13 of the members' conflict-of-interest guidelines. We never discussed sections 12 or 13. I do not know why they found their way into appendix A, but we never so much as opened the Members' Conflict of Interest Act in the whole time this committee met.

I might add as well that we had all kinds of consternation on the government side about how long we had spent on these guidelines. Up until 7 May, which was approximately the time that the bells in this place started to ring for budget purposes, we had met exactly five times to hear witnesses; five times we sat down and listened to witnesses. Then the government members tried to tell us how many days we had spent deliberating on a section-by-section basis. The fact is that we never deliberated on a section-by-section basis. So if there is an attempt here by the government members to say that time was being wasted, it was not. We met five times, we heard evidence from people on those five occasions, and then we did not meet for one month. We then spoke for a couple of weeks about this matter and rammed the sections through as they were written.

Certainly I do not take any satisfaction in the job that was done here. The job was a poor job. You have not answered the mandate of your Premier in providing him with any meaningful analysis and critical examination of the conflict-of-interest guidelines.

Mr Carr: I was just going to say how the mood of this committee changed. Back when the Premier came in and the Treasurer and the Chairman of Management Board and the minister responsible for native affairs, during that period of time there was the—

The Chair: I am having difficulty hearing Mr Carr with the other conversations.

Mr Sorbara: Are we allowed to turn that television off? Those who want to attend the House should attend the House. Those who want to attend this committee should attend this committee.

Mr Harnick: I note for the record that four out of six members of the government are sitting here watching television rather than—

The Chair: Mr Harnick, you do not have the floor. Mr Carr has the floor.

Mr Harnick: Go ahead, Gary, you can say that. Say that four out of six are watching television, because that is indicative of the way they have approached the whole—

The Chair: Mr Carr.

Mr Carr: I was going to be insulted, but I noticed they had started before I started talking, so it is okay, but I see they have brought some attention back.

Mr Sorbara: If you just turn your back on the guy and watch television, why are you here?

The Chair: Could we allow Mr Carr to speak, please?

Mr Carr: As I was saying, the mood when we started this was much different for those who were here during that time.

Mr Sorbara: This government has become arrogant.

The Chair: Mr Carr, would you please speak, and Mr Sorbara, would you please allow Mr Carr to speak?

Mr Sorbara: Sorry, Gary.

Mr Carr: No, that is fine, go ahead.

During that period of time we had all the cabinet ministers coming in and at that time there had been no problems. None of the scandals had happened at that time.

I was one of the new members who actually believed the Premier when he said he wanted to work in a non-partisan way to improve it. Even as late as a week or so ago when he said, "I want to hear from the justice committee," anybody who had not been here, if you just had been watching question period, you would have said: "This guy is genuine. He really wants to get the input from the justice committee."

As a new member what I find a little bit—and I guess the word is insulting—is that you have a Premier who stands up and says that, yet I come into a committee meeting where I watch the government of the day trying to ram things through. So in question period he stands up in answer to a question saying: "I want to hear from the justice committee. They are looking at it and I want to hear and have good input." Anybody who would turn that on would say: "Isn't this terrific? We are having the first input. This is great." Not more than two hours later, I come to a committee where closure is invoked and they are saying: "Whip it through. No input from anybody. We're not going to do this. We just want to get it all behind us. There are too many scandals. When we talk about conflict of interest there are too many opportunities for the opposition to bring up all the people who have left and all the controversy. So we want to get it swept behind us."

I would just like to go on the record as saying that, as you are aware, we will be submitting a report from our caucus on what we believe needs to be done. Of course, it will not matter to the government of the day. As the Premier said, he is the one who is ultimately going to be judged, and believes that to be the way it should be.

I say to the people out there, the worst part is that you hear the Premier saying one thing in question period at 2 o'clock, and then see another thing happen less than two hours later, at 4 o'clock, in reply to questions, and I believe it was from Mr Sorbara—

Mr Harnick: I was looking right at Gary's face.

Mr Carr: —saying: "I want input. I want to hear from the justice committee." The fact of the matter is, they did not. They wanted to push this through to avoid the controversies, not to do a good job with the conflict, but for one reason and one reason only—to avoid the political heat that discussing this would represent. Not to get in the best conflict guidelines for the people of Ontario; just to avoid the political heat.

As we sit here today, there is a tremendous amount of political heat, listening to some of the opposition talk about some of the scandals. The government is not going to fall as a result of it, but instead of trying to get the best possible conflict-of-interest guidelines, they try to push things through. The motions that were presented were done to speed things up. As my colleague Mr Harnick said, we did not spend a lot of time on this. We heard submissions from the various cabinet people, and in terms of dates, yes, it started a long time ago, but during that time we had other business come up, and we did not do justice to this important issue.

The Premier of this province said in the throne speech that he wanted to bring integrity back. Quite frankly, I think if he had not said that and then this had happened, there would not be too much of a problem out there. But he tried to trumpet out these guidelines when he thought it was politically correct to do so. As soon as he got burned—and I guess it was not only once that he got burned; he was getting burned two and three and four and five times. What is it now?

Mr Harnick: We are up to 10.

Mr Carr: Ten. We have had more scandals in this government than we have had bills passed under the first government. We have had more scandals and resignations and conflicts than we have had bills passed. We have had more times when we have dealt with scandals than times when we have had the Lieutenant Governor come in and pass bills.

We have a Premier of the day who will say one thing to try to get political mileage, and then when the public is not looking, when the press is not around, all of a sudden the backroom people, the people on this committee, are going to attempt to push things through. I guess I was one of the naïve people who believed that what you do on these committees counts. Well, it doesn't.

This was done for political reasons, not to try to improve guidelines for the people of Ontario, to bring integrity back. It was done for one reason: to avoid political heat, to sweep it under, to get this passed, to get this through so that we do not have to take any more heat. Let us get the word "conflict" out of the public's mind over the next little while. That is the only reason this was done.

I guess a lot of people originally said that one of the things about the Premier was that he was going to try to change things, but I will tell you, nothing has changed. These types of tactics are probably what has gone on in the past. I was not here during that time, but I was one of the people who honestly and truly thought one of the differences—in spite of the fact that we differ on ideology and in which direction we are going to take the province—was that he really meant it when he said he was going to attempt to be different and have more involvement in committees.

The fact is, there is no change. Quite frankly, to sit here and have to go through this and then have the Premier of the province stand up and say, "I want input," and to know that that is not the case just makes me a little more cynical about this whole process.

I wanted to go on record with that, Mr Chair, and say that we will be bringing in a report that hopefully will attempt to do justice. More than anything else, I resent the fact that we are trying to sweep this under the rug for no other reason than political purposes.

The Chair: Any further discussion on this motion?

Seeing no indication, shall the report be presented to the House for adoption of its recommendations?

Mr Sorbara: When the dissent is ready.

The Chair: We have that agreement already. Agreed?

Motion agreed to.

The Chair: It seems to be the will of the committee that it be presented—with additional reports, yes.

Ms Gigantes: Mr Chair, just before we leave this matter, if I could, on a point of personal privilege, draw to the attention of members opposite the fact that the resignation from my job as Minister of Health had nothing to do with conflict of interest whatsoever. It was the failure to responsibly carry out my ministerial duties.

Further, I know some of the members opposite are young, but in fact there is a difference between a scandal and a question of conflict of interest, which I believe most people in Ontario can judge to be serious or not serious, in the cases, for example, of the Minister of Northern Affairs and the House leader, and the Minister without Portfolio responsible for women's issues. For those terms to be used as loosely as they have been here, and in particular in connection with my own case, I would like to be on the record on that matter.

Mr Sorbara: On the point of privilege—

The Chair: It is not strictly speaking a point of privilege, so I do not think it is debatable.

Can we move on to the next point. Shall the committee ask for a comprehensive response from the Premier's office in regard to our submission?

Mr Harnick: No, our submissions.

The Chair: When it is presented to the House pursuant to standing order 36(d).

Mr Sorbara: I would like to speak to that, if I could for a moment, please. In speaking to the question of whether we should ask for a comprehensive reply from the Premier, I guess my own vote would be that we do not do that. I would like to basically end this charade on conflict-of-interest guidelines. This is one case in which I hope the report, along with the dissents, are submitted and then for ever forgotten, because we have not furthered the wellbeing of the province through this discussion.

I am reminded of that most recently in the point of personal privilege raised by my friend the member for Ottawa Centre, where she took offence at something or other.

The Chair: However, it was not a point of privilege.

Mr Sorbara: I am speaking on your motion, sir. I am speaking on the issue that you raised.

The Chair: Please do.

Mr Sorbara: In doing so, I want to say to my friend the member for Ottawa Centre that I thought she, as a minister, was doing a very competent job as Minister of Health. In fact, to the extent that she was responsible for the negotiations with—

Ms Gigantes: Mr Chair, this is totally out of order, if I may. There is no reason for him to be going on. I raised a point that related personally to me and I pointed out to members opposite it had nothing to do with conflict of interest. Now for him to engage in debate of this nature is ludicrous.

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, please return to the question.

Mr Sorbara: Each of the other ministers who has been the subject of some sort of inquiry has basically performed competently, and what we are questioning here is not the—I would never use the word “scandal,” because I do not think they are scandals. I think the issue is the conduct of the Premier on these matters. We are basically reporting back to the Premier.

I have the highest of regard, for example, for the minister responsible for women’s issues. In 1987 she ran in the riding right next door to my own, and she was a very competent candidate.

Ms Gigantes: Mr Chair, does this have anything to do with the question which you raised?

Mr Sorbara: To answer that, I am just using this information as a basis for my reasoning that we not ask for a comprehensive response.

We use the phrase “conflict of interest” now not simply to refer to a conflict of interest narrowly defined but to generally refer to standards that apply to ministers and their behaviour, their mistakes, their faults, their shortcomings and how the public deals with those, and now how the government deals with those.

I am not interested in a comprehensive response from the Premier. I think all of us make our mistakes and we pay the penalty. The Premier has shown, I think, particularly over the past couple of weeks, that he does not give a darn about what is in the guidelines, about what this committee thinks, about what the province thinks. He will set his standards as the moment dictates. Someone referred to situational ethics, and I think that is what we are getting from the Premier.

So I hope he does not respond. I hope the report is submitted and it gets chucked in the garbage, because the Premier will do what he wants to do. People will raise questions about the conduct of ministers. It happens in every government and it is a regular part of life at Queen’s Park or any other provincial or national government. It is a reality. But what we have here is a Premier who said: “I don’t care about precedence, I don’t care about standards, I don’t care about history. I will make up my own mind as to when ministers have to obey guidelines and when they don’t.” So my vote is going to be not to ask the Premier for a comprehensive response; in fact, not to ask him for anything other than that the Legislature accept the report and not act on it further.

Mr Harnick: I have to take issue with Mr Sorbara. I, in fact, would like a comprehensive response. Mr Sorbara predicates his not wanting a comprehensive response on the fact that he hopes the report and the dissents will be chucked in the garbage and the issue forgotten. I hope that would happen too. I am not as optimistic as Mr Sorbara that it will happen. I suspect the Premier will go ahead and do whatever he wants, and he has made his intentions quite clear that he wants guidelines, he favours their becoming legislation, and I would be very interested in hearing his comprehensive response only because, as I said before, I believe he wanted more from us than we have given him in the report that is presently before us dated 20 June 1991.

In that I am not optimistic that he is going to throw this material in the garbage and in that he is going to proceed with conflict guidelines and in all likelihood make them law, I would like his comprehensive response, because I would like to have something in writing to hold him to what his beliefs really are. These guidelines were put out by the Premier and they have caused him no amount of consternation so far. Every time he elaborates, it becomes easier to determine what standards he is not going to uphold. So frankly I would like to see what his response is. I would like to see if he wanted something better than what we have given him and I would like to see how he intends, if he intends at all, to make these guidelines better than they were in light of the experience he has had with their usage. He certainly did not get any guidance in terms of altering those guidelines from this committee, and I would hope that he has obtained some guidance in the use of these guidelines in terms of the events over the last nine months, when several cabinet ministers have breached these guidelines and been caught in breach, yet there has been no enforcement.

I must differ with my friend Mr Sorbara. I think it would be useful to see what that comprehensive response is, only because I am not optimistic that this material will be thrown in the garbage.

Mr Morrow: Mr Chair, I am really inquisitive as to some matter. I sat with the members opposite last Thursday and this motion did not come forward. Could you possibly tell me where this motion came from?

Mr Harnick: It came from the Chairman.

Mr Morrow: I am not asking you, Mr Harnick. I am asking the Chair.

The Chair: The motion, Mr Morrow, is compulsory under 36(d), I believe it is, of the standing orders. It is a procedural issue and the clerk can clarify.

Clerk of the Committee: Just to clarify, section 36(d) says, “Within 120 calendar days of the presentation of the committee report...the government shall, upon the request of the committee, table a comprehensive response.” We are just trying to determine whether the committee is requesting that the government table a comprehensive response.

Ms Gigantes: I do not see any point in asking for a comprehensive response. I think that at this stage the government will decide what form the legislation will take and when it will be brought in and we will just proceed on that basis. I do not see any point in asking for a response.

The Chair: Any further discussion on this question? All in favour of the request being made for the government, in this case the Premier’s office, to prepare a comprehensive report within 120 days? All those opposed?

Motion negatived.

Mr Sorbara: You guys are opposed as well? At least ask for it, Evelyn.

SUBCOMMITTEE REPORT

The Chair: We now have in front of us the report from the subcommittee, which I will read into the record.

"Your subcommittee met on—"

Mr Sorbara: Dispense.

The Chair: No, we cannot.

"Your subcommittee met on Thursday 20 June 1991 and agreed to the following:

"1. As per the schedule agreed upon by the House leaders and the whips, the committee will hold public hearings on Bill 115 during the weeks of 29 July, 6 August, 12 August and 26 August.

"2. The committee will conduct clause-by-clause examination of Bill 115 during the week of 16 September 1991.

"3. Assuming proper accommodation and travel arrangements can be arranged, the committee will travel to the following locations: Thunder Bay, Sudbury, North Bay, Collingwood, Ottawa, Kingston, Peterborough, Windsor, London, Hamilton.

"4. Groups and individuals who request shall have their expenses paid to enable them to attend hearings in the closest centre."

"5. The committee will attempt to meet Mondays through Thursdays during the daytime only. Should it be necessary to schedule additional meetings, these meetings will be scheduled in the evenings before they will be scheduled on Fridays.

"6. An advertisement will run in every English daily and French weekly newspaper during the first week of July.

"7. Groups will be afforded one half hour for their presentations, and individuals, 15 minutes.

"8. Committee hearings will begin exactly at the time scheduled, whether or not there is representation from all three parties.

"9. The committee will commence consideration of Bills 74, 108, 109 and 110 following Bill 115. The committee will advertise for the above-mentioned bills early in July to afford groups substantive notice."

Mr Sorbara: Mr Chairman, I would strike out the word "exactly" in 8 if I were you. Does the committee hearing not happen if for some reason we are two minutes late? Is it a nullity? Is it void for want of that precision? If you just say "will begin at the time scheduled," then you avoid that question. If it is two minutes over, some weirdo like the member for Willowdale may say, "My God, it is two minutes beyond so these committee hearings can't take place."

The Chair: With the committee's agreement, we can strike out the word "exactly."

Agreed to.

The Chair: However, the intent is that the committee will start on time, ie 9 o'clock or 10 o'clock or whatever, and not drift on until 10 minutes past awaiting the attendance of one of the other parties who may not be present.

1650

Mr Harnick: Dealing with paragraph 3, the list of places that the committee intends to be travelling to, it strikes me that only one of those places is really a border city, and that is the city of Windsor.

Ms Gigantes: What about Ottawa?

Mr Harnick: Ottawa is a border city but not in the sense that it is on the Canada-US border. I suspect we should be going to places like Sault Ste Marie, like Cornwall, like St Catharines, because those places are relevant.

Mr Sorbara: Niagara Falls.

Mr Harnick: Niagara Falls as well. Those places are being racked with unemployment. One of the reasons that they are being racked with unemployment is alleged to be the laws on Sunday shopping that presently exist. Is there some reason that the government, which prevails in these things, has not seen fit to include some of the other relevant cities?

I can appreciate that it is very nice to go to Kingston in the summertime when all the boats are out sailing, and we can go to Collingwood because it is a lovely summer resort and people are up there at their cottages, but these other places are crying out to be heard. I cannot believe, if this is going to be a meaningful exercise, you can avoid going to these places. It is obvious that Collingwood will be a tourist attraction and it will fall under the exemption. Those places will have the opportunity to be open. But what about some of the other places? What about Sault Ste Marie, where there are businesses that cannot compete?

On a person's leisure day, which is Sunday, when people are not at work—if they have a job—they decide to go across the border to do their shopping. Surely those places should have the opportunity to have the committee come and hear representations if this is going to be a meaningful exercise. I am sure there are many other places that should be heard as well.

St Catharines is not on here. One day I was sitting in line on my way to the United States and I rolled my window down and spoke to the driver beside me, who said he was from St Catharines. He indicated to me—and this was at a time when no grocery stores or gas stations were allowed to be open in St Catharines—that he would go down to Buffalo every single weekend because it was cheaper to fill up his tank and it was cheaper to buy his groceries, and all of his stores were closed at any rate. If that is what is happening and Sunday shopping is impacting on that particular aspect of a community's life, surely we should be going to those communities and speaking to those people.

I do not know how you came up with this list. There is nothing wrong with this list, but there should be additional places added that are places of great importance in the Sunday shopping debate. I think this committee should reconsider where it wishes to be going.

The Chair: I think the issue you bring up, Mr Harnick, is a very valid one. However, I think you also are aware that on the subcommittee, every party is equally represented.

Mr Morrow: I am sure, with Mr Harnick's indulgence—had he been at the subcommittee meeting last Thursday, most of these were agreed to. Also, if you look at the situation, Bill 115 is not a cross-border shopping bill; it is a Sunday shopping bill. They are two distinct and separate issues.

Mr Sorbara: Keep telling them that.

Interjections.

The Chair: Mr Morrow has the floor.

Mr Morrow: We are also going, as I see reported here, to three border towns to actually hear what is being said. I reiterate that Bill 115 is Sunday shopping legislation and amendments to such. Nothing is over cross-border shopping.

Mr Sorbara: In effect, I agree with what Mr Harnick has said about the absence of important communities like Cornwall, Sault Ste Marie, Niagara Falls—

Mr Fletcher: Send it back to the subcommittee.

Mr Sorbara: I say to my friend from Guelph who says—

Ms Gigantes: Send it back.

Mr Fletcher: I am willing to send it back.

Interjection.

Mr Sorbara: The member for Ottawa Centre says, "Don't bitch; do something positive."

Ms Gigantes: Don't just bitch.

Mr Sorbara: Oh, she corrects me. She says, "You just bitch."

Ms Gigantes: No, I said, "Don't just bitch."

Mr Sorbara: Oh, I see: "Don't just bitch; do something positive." My difficulty with doing that—I have accepted this list of cities because the Vice-Chairman of this committee has told me in no uncertain terms, just before this meeting, that the government will under no circumstances accept that this committee goes to another border town like Sault Ste Marie or Niagara Falls, so there would be no purpose in sending it back to the subcommittee.

The government members have the majority. If they refuse to go to Niagara Falls or to Sault Ste Marie, so be it. Look, you won the election. You have the majority. You can make those sorts of decisions. I think, in the end, you will regret it.

Mr Morrow: Did you not agree to this just before?

Mr Sorbara: Yes, and I agreed to it—

Mr Morrow: So what is the problem now?

Mr Sorbara: Look, Mark. Do not mess around like that.

Mr Morrow: I am not messing around. You agreed to this just before.

Mr Sorbara: Yes, that is right, and I still agree—

Interjection: You agreed to it, Greg. Now what are you doing?

Mr Sorbara: I agreed to it. I agreed to it on the basis that you said to me, over in those chairs, that under no terms will the government allow this committee to go to another border town. So I agreed. I agreed that if that is what you are saying, then that is what you get.

Mr Morrow: You said this is fine.

Mr Sorbara: That is right. This is fine, and I accept this, and we will live with this, only because you have said—if you want to move a motion that we go back into the subcommittee or change this, move a motion to amend this to add Niagara Falls or Sault Ste Marie, I tell you, I will support that.

Mr Harnick: Can I make such a motion?

The Chair: No, Mr Sorbara has the floor.

Interjection.

Mr Sorbara: No, I have the floor, Irene, if you will just—

Interjections.

Mr Sorbara: My friend Mr Harnick says while I have the floor, I should make the motion. I am not going to do that, but I invite him to do that, and I would support it.

I support this motion. We have negotiated it. It was negotiated on the basis that the government would not agree to go to any more border cities. You cannot hide that. You cannot pretend that we did not go to Niagara Falls because somehow the subcommittee did not want to. My God, we are going out into the community. When they write you from Niagara Falls and say, "Why aren't you coming here?" you cannot say, "Oh, well, the subcommittee, you know, and Sorbara, they agreed to it, so we didn't want to do it." Look, at least accept the decisions you make.

Interjection: The committee of the whole still has the opportunity—

The Chair: The committee of the whole does not speak; Mr Sorbara does. Mr Sorbara, you still have the floor. You can exercise your right to speak, please.

Interjections.

Mr Sorbara: I want to make the point, as clearly as I can, that you live with the decisions you make. Now, Mark, I say to you as Vice-Chairman, please do not try to pretend, as we avoid Sault Ste Marie and Cornwall and Niagara Falls, that somehow it was Liberal members or the Conservative members who did not want to go there. Those are the very places we want to go, and I said to our clerk—

Mr Morrow: Windsor, Kingston, Thunder Bay.

The Chair: Well, my friend, if you want to substitute Kingston for Niagara Falls and Sault Ste Marie for, I do not know, Collingwood or North Bay, that is great. Listen, please do not try to get involved in a charade now. Accept the fact that you do not want to bring this committee to Niagara Falls. I think we are going to have a motion here to add Niagara Falls and Sault Ste Marie and Cornwall to the list. And you know what? You are going to vote against it.

Mr Chiarelli: Open government.

Mr Sorbara: Or if you just get the floor and make remarks that the government has decided, in its wisdom, not to go to those communities, I accept that. Yes, Mark, you are right. I accept this list, because I can count, and I count over here five members who would like to go to those cities, and seven members who are going to prohibit it. Do not give me that nonsense that we are not going to Niagara Falls and we are not going to Cornwall and we are not going to Sault Ste Marie because somehow we agreed to it. That is scandalous; it is outrageous to suggest that in this committee. That is the very thing that has poisoned the atmosphere of this committee. Look, you make a motion, my friend, substituting or including Niagara Falls, and you have my support.

Interjection.

Mr Sorbara: And you still do have my support, but I will give you even more support if you amend it.

Mr Harnick: On a point of order, Mr Chair, and I think it is an important point of order: What has been said here is that there is an agreement on the table to go to these places. That agreement is an agreement of the subcommittee. The subcommittee brings that agreement to this whole committee and it is the whole committee that then has the opportunity to decide whether we do or do not accept what the subcommittee says.

I object to the fact that people are pointing the finger at me and saying I have agreed to these places. I was not at that subcommittee meeting. My colleague Mr Carr was. He did not agree to those cities. He was outvoted, and now one who was on that subcommittee, namely, the Vice-Chairman of this committee, is trying to tell us that because that was a decision made by the subcommittee that therefore the decision—

The Chair: Thank you, Mr Harnick.

Mr Harnick: I am not finished. I am speaking to a point of order and it is a valid point of order, and you as Chairman have no right to cut me off until I am finished.

The Chair: Yes I do, sir.

Mr Harnick: No, you do not. Not if my point of order is a valid point of order, which it is.

The Chair: Mr Harnick, you have made your point.

Mr Harnick: You have no right to interrupt me the way you have. If you want to throw me out, take your sword and throw me out.

The Chair: You have a right to put a point of order, and you did. It is acceptable. Your point of order is taken, sir. What we have is a subcommittee report which is fully debatable and amendable, as you suggested. The issue of whether you were there or not is inappropriate—

Mr Harnick: But as Chairman of this committee and as the person who makes the decisions, I would like you to put it on the record that—

Mr Fletcher: A five-minute recess, Mr Chair.

Mr Harnick: We are not having any recess. I would like you to put it on the record that we have no agreement of this committee as a whole. All we have is a recommendation from a subcommittee, not, as the Vice-Chairman states, that we have an agreement among everybody here and now we are trying to renege on it. That is not the case.

The Chair: That is exactly what a subcommittee report is. It is a recommendation from the subcommittee to the committee as a whole.

Mr Harnick: Maybe you better put it on the record so your Vice-Chairman understands what is going on, because it is clear that he does not.

The Chair: The procedural issue is very clear. You made it, sir. Thank you.

Are we still debating the acceptance of the report? I am sorry, Mr Sorbara, you actually have the floor. You were interrupted on a point of order.

Mr Sorbara: I do have the floor. I think probably—

Interjections.

Mr Sorbara: I am going to try and bring a bit of reasonableness to this discussion, although my first instinct is to simply allow this thing to degenerate in the same way in which our discussions on conflict of interest degenerated.

If we can just get the government members, through either the whip or the Vice-Chair, to acknowledge that this is the list of cities they are willing to go to, that is fine.

Interjection.

Mr Sorbara: Derek, you are playing a dangerous game. You are trying to suggest that somehow this is our agenda. It is not our agenda. Just acknowledge that it is—

Interjection.

Mr Sorbara: My friend, you are going to get motions to go to Sault Ste Marie and you are going to get 20-minute votes. What you are going to get as well are press releases sent out to Sault Ste Marie and Thunder Bay saying the government members have refused to allow the Sunday shopping committee to go to those towns. That is what you are asking for. On the other hand, you can forgo all that and simply acknowledge to us that you do not want to go to any more border towns.

Interjection.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Fletcher says it is the first he saw of this. I would love to hear him say that he is anxious to support a motion to go to Sault Ste Marie and go to Niagara Falls.

Mr Poirier: And Cornwall.

Mr Sorbara: And Cornwall, although I do not think we have to go to every border community. I would substitute Cornwall over Kingston.

If the government members come in here and say, "Look, this is all new. We're just talking here. This is our agenda," then we have to prove their mettle by way of votes.

If I could just know what the speakers' list is, I suspect—

The Chair: You are definitely on it, sir. You are speaking now. Mr Carr, Mrs Mathysen.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Carr is next. I expect Mr Carr will be moving a motion to substitute some cities for other cities.

I want to tell my friend the Vice-Chairman of the committee that I am prepared to support this subcommittee recommendation. I had a part in this subcommittee recommendation and I am willing to support it, but only on the basis that you not create the charade that the government would have been willing to go to Sault Ste Marie and Niagara Falls but for the will of the committee. Just admit that. Admit in this committee what you said to me over there, which is, "No other border towns."

Mr Morrow: What I said to you, Mr Sorbara—

Mr Sorbara: Look, you do not want to co-operate on this committee and call it like it is. That is too bad, because you are just going to get into more and more trouble. I will say that I will support this and I will consider any motions to amend this that are put before the committee. I am going to want time to consider it if amendments arise.

Mr Morrow: On a point of order, Mr Chair: Niagara Falls and whatever other border towns Mr Sorbara has named—

Mr Harnick: On a point of order: This has nothing to do with—

The Chair: Excuse me. I have not had an opportunity to hear his point of order.

Mr Morrow: People can come from these areas to where we are having the hearings.

Mr Harnick: This is an argument of substance.

The Chair: Mr Harnick, Mr Morrow had the floor. He has an opportunity to speak and for me to rule on that point of order, just as you had, sir. Mr Morrow, did you make your point?

Mr Morrow: I was making the point that people across this province in other areas do have a right to come to where we are having the hearings.

Mr Chiarelli: On a point of order, Mr Chairman: I want to apologize for being late. Would the Chairman please indicate to me the exact item that is on the floor now for discussion?

The Chair: The exact item is the subcommittee report.

Mr Chiarelli: Could you give me the wording that is on the floor? Is it a motion? Is it a discussion? What exactly is it we are debating?

The Chair: We actually have not a motion. You are quite right. There should be a motion to accept the subcommittee report. We are discussing the subcommittee report but there is no motion on the floor. You are procedurally quite right. There should be.

Mr Chiarelli: I was going to put an amendment to the motion, but there is no motion on the floor.

The Chair: Is it agreeable to the committee that we have a motion to accept the report, which could then be amended or whatever? Mr Carr, would you like to make that motion so we could properly discuss the report?

Mr Carr: I was just going to speak to what transpired. When the subcommittee met, we were going to go right from Ottawa to Peterborough, and it was myself who asked: "What about Cornwall? Wouldn't it be nice to go to Cornwall?" As part of a compromise, Kingston came into play.

In the subcommittee, they did not want Cornwall, the border town, all the things we heard about, so in the art of compromise, I said, "We'll make it Kingston to get regional representation so people could come in." When we went farther along, we hit Niagara Falls. I said, "What about Niagara Falls?" Border town. "No, we don't want that." Again, in the interest of compromise I said, "Why not St Catharines?"

There may be logistical reasons the clerk has done this, but North Bay got included. We talked about Sault Ste

Marie, and that depended on whether we could fly into Thunder Bay and get out. There were a lot of things that were changed.

When I left, however, we were going to have, as a compromise because they did not want to go to Niagara Falls, at least St Catharines in the Niagara region. We joked about the fact that we were going to be able to go to Mark's house for dinner. As I left, St Catharines was going to be in there to take in that region. We could not get down to Niagara Falls, the border community, so in the art of compromise we would get something in the St Catharines area.

That was on the table for everyone to know, that we did want to go to border towns, but for some reason, because of logistics—going to Thunder Bay would not allow us to go into Sault Ste Marie—going to Cornwall was suggested. We did get into that region with Kingston.

I wanted to clarify it, because the assumption was made that none of these spots were brought up. They were. Cornwall was brought up, Niagara Falls was brought up, Sault Ste Marie was brought up, and we ended up with this list. St Catharines got left off. I thought that was going to be in there. I understand there is some reason St Catharines was left off, maybe for logistics or whatever, but I did want to have something down in that area just to cover it.

Those were the understandings in the subcommittee. We were attempting to compromise, knowing the government did not want to go to border towns, but we did want to try to be fair so that if people in Niagara Falls did want to present, they would not have to go all the way to Toronto; they could make a compromise and go to St Catharines. I did want to get that on the record and lay out what transpired.

The Chair: For clarification of this issue, there were some changes from the discussion we had on Thursday. I am wondering if those parts could be clarified by the clerk.

Clerk of the Committee: The discussion we had included places that were subject to hotel accommodation and availability. There were some changes after the meeting. I spoke to one member of the subcommittee, left a message for another member of the subcommittee this morning and did not hear back, and spoke to another member of the subcommittee prior to the meeting. Generally, when there are changes I get all the members to sign off on the changes. That was not done, agreed upon, but that was part of the meeting and subsequent phone calls to subcommittee members after the meeting resulted in this schedule.

Mr Sorbara: Might I put a motion that we adjourn for 15 minutes to try and work this thing out without the shouting and screaming across the floor. Perhaps 10 minutes.

The Chair: Mr Carr can make that motion if he wishes to.

Mr Carr: I make the motion to adjourn for 15 minutes to discuss.

Motion agreed to.

The committee recessed at 1713.

Mr Morrow: I would like to report back. Although the subcommittee tried desperately to come to an agreement, we could not come to an agreement. I would ask that section 3 stand because we feel—well, not we—some of us feel Hamilton is close enough for the people of the Niagara region to appear in Hamilton. I would move acceptance of the whole report, Mr Chair.

Mr Chiarelli: I would like to move an amendment. I move that the report of the subcommittee be amended to include as one of the municipalities in section 3 the city of Cornwall.

The Chair: Mr Chiarelli moves the inclusion of the city of Cornwall.

Ms Gigantes: Clearly, the committee cannot go everywhere. The drive from Cornwall to Ottawa is not a long one. I am sure there will be enough interest in the Cornwall region to lead witnesses to come to Ottawa, so I do not think it is necessary.

Mr Mills: When this trip was organized, was there not some consideration given to the difficulty of hotel accommodation, flights, buses, etc, which played a major part in this agenda, rather than, as is being suggested, that the government members—I certainly never saw this until it was put in front of me this afternoon—had some peculiar input in this? I would just like the comment of the clerk—

Interjection.

Mr Mills: I did not see this until I came in here. I want to know the considerations that were given to this regarding accommodation, travel and meshing in all over.

The Chair: The clerk has already commented, and we have already gone into deliberations about the exigencies of travel. I do not think it is fair to ask her to become involved in what is essentially a committee debate.

Mr Mills: I am just asking if that was part of it.

Mr Poirier: I am personally quite knowledgeable of the situation in Cornwall. Being a geographer, I know the distance between Cornwall and Ottawa is not the distance between Thunder Bay and Ottawa, but I honestly believe, and I want to support Mr Chiarelli's motion, that Cornwall must be included because of the extremely difficult situation there, with the massive number of people going over to Massena. There is more than enough interest in Cornwall in discussing this issue to make a day in Cornwall, as opposed to asking the people from Cornwall to come to Ottawa. This is much too important a dossier to pass Cornwall over.

Mr Harnick: In response to what Mr Mills was saying, I was not at the subcommittee meeting; Mr Carr represented our party at the meeting. But I do know, for instance, that there is some misconception that you cannot get from Thunder Bay to Sault Ste Marie. Well, you can get from Thunder Bay to Sault Ste Marie. You can go on Bearskin Air; you can get a charter that will take you there. Allegedly, and I understand this from the clerk—

Ms Gigantes: You are supposed to be speaking to the motion.

Mr Harnick: I am not speaking directly to the motion. I am responding to what Mr Mills, your member, said. It is indirectly related to the motion, in response to what Mr Mills said.

Ms Gigantes: On a point of order, Mr Chair: The motion before us deals with the question of whether we add Cornwall to the hearing list.

Mr Harnick: I am getting to that. I am talking about the logistics of travel. The fact is that there is a flight that goes from Thunder Bay right to Sault Ste Marie, just as that flight goes from Thunder Bay to Sudbury. It is the same airline. I point out that all those problems can be avoided with a little planning. Because a place may be difficult to get to or because it may be somewhat difficult to find accommodation on a given day is no reason to avoid areas that are being very hard hit by the Sunday shopping legislation. One of those places is obviously Cornwall; one of those places is Sault Ste Marie. The fact that it may be difficult, and I think Mr Mills can appreciate what I am saying, is not a reason to ignore the citizens who live in those particular towns and cities.

Mr Chiarelli: We are speaking to my amendment, which is to include Cornwall on the itinerary. I have just looked through the very tentative agenda and it indicates four hearing days in Toronto before clause-by-clause consideration of the bill. This issue affects the whole province very significantly. I believe eastern Ontario should be better represented in terms of the travel time of this committee. That is one reason I am suggesting the border community of Cornwall.

Second, I did have the opportunity to speak to the member for Cornwall, Mr Cleary. He is tied up in another committee, but he did want to express his wish very strongly that this committee go to Cornwall, for a number of reasons, not the least of which is that Cornwall is being absolutely ravaged by this recession, free trade and cross-border shopping. This particular community could not be in more economic dire straits, Elliot Lake included. It is just dying on its feet. If for no other reason than to give these people an opportunity to participate in a matter of important concern to their economy, the issue of Sunday shopping, which is a significant component of the cross-border issue, out of fairness and equity to that community I would think we would consider the committee going to it, rather than suggesting that these people, who are economically strapped, travel all the way to Ottawa to participate in a hearing.

Those are the main reasons I have moved my amendment, and I hope the members on the government side would give this particular motion some due consideration.

Mr Carr: As I mentioned originally in the subcommittee, I wanted to include that particular area. The feeling, as you know, was that we were going to bypass that complete area and go from Ottawa through to Peterborough, which would have left that entire region out. I think it would be easy to do from a logistics standpoint.

But rather than expense to those who wish to appear, I think we are talking about the time involved. As you know, we will not be sitting during the evening, so we are asking anybody who does have a job to take time off work. With the travelling as well, basically an individual is going to have to take the entire day off. If we go directly into some of the communities like Cornwall, they might have to take off only the time to make their submissions.

So I think, as I originally wanted, we need to include that. With the concerns down there, I suspect we are going to get a lot of inquiries from people wanting to come in and I think that is an area that should be included.

Mr Sorbara: I regret we could not work this out during our recess. I am going to support the motion to amend the list of cities to which we are going to travel to include Cornwall—I think it would be a good idea—although if that motion is defeated I am going to support the motion if it just includes the cities that are here.

I had thought we could come to a compromise which would have us spend half a day in St Catharines. That could fit into the day we are in Hamilton or the following day, when we are scheduled to be in Toronto all day. I think that would have worked and that kind of compromise still can work, but it may well be that we are going to have to consider this motion on its merits and perhaps hold the vote when we come back tomorrow and see if over the evening we could not, with some judicious phone calls—I have yet to receive a phone call from anyone on this committee other than the Tory members trying to work things out, but I am still hoping. Or tomorrow during the day we could maybe have a chat before we get down to see if we can work out an arrangement.

I for one would like to go to one or two more border communities, because for those communities, although cross-border shopping is not Sunday shopping, the issue of Sunday shopping is particularly relevant.

If the government does not want to do that, I can understand. I accept that. I regret it, but I accept it. It is part of the authority you have as a result of winning the election. You have the ability to say, "No, we're not going to go to any more border communities." Let's not hide, though, behind logistics, hotel arrangements, airplane arrangements or any of that stuff. If you want to go to more border communities, you can and we can. If you do not want to go to more border communities, you do not have to because you ultimately get to call the shot. There is a deal here, and I think the deal is for the government to yield in one, perhaps even two, circumstances.

Mr Morrow: I asked you to deal. You said no.

Mr Sorbara: He wants to interject, does the Vice-Chairman. He says he wants to deal, for some reason, by ditching North Bay and including Timmins. There was no reason given to me for that. I do not understand why that change is requested, so I do not accept it. I understand why the request for St Catharines has been made, and I would support it. If that request fails, I support this deal I have already signed on to, but I want to tell the members of the government on this committee that they can satisfy our Conservative friends here by one or two more concessions to get not right to the border—we are not going to have hearings at the Customs gate—but communities for whom Sunday shopping is a particular problem.

Derek Fletcher says no more concessions. Maybe there are no more concessions. Let's have a 20-minute bell on this thing and think about it overnight.

The Chair: We have a vote tomorrow afternoon. We are adjourned until tomorrow after routine proceedings.

The committee adjourned at 1746.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

STANDING COMMITTEE ON ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

Tuesday 25 June 1991

The committee met at 1537 in room 228.

CONFLICT-OF-INTEREST GUIDELINES

Resuming consideration of the Premier's conflict-of-interest guidelines.

The Chair: I call the meeting to order. Where we left off yesterday afternoon was an adjournment prior to voting on the issue of Mr Chiarelli's motion, which was to include Cornwall in our list of towns for visitation. Further discussion? All in favour? Opposed?

Motion negatived.

Mr Harnick: On a point of order, Mr Chairman: I wonder if we might note for the record that the opposition parties were in favour of Cornwall and the government—

The Chair: It is not a point of order. Thank you. The researcher has a small point she would like to bring our attention. Would it be all right if we allowed Susan to speak briefly first, Mr Harnick?

Mr Harnick: Can I make a motion?

The Chair: Ms Swift wanted to make a point about the report from yesterday and then Mr Fletcher and then yourself.

Ms Swift: This is a relatively minor matter. When I gave you the report yesterday, I did not include a separate list of the recommendations, so what I have done is number the recommendations from the report that you approved yesterday and included, and will include, subject to your approval, a separate list of the recommendations, setting them out by numbers.

Ms Gigantes: On that matter, I wonder if we could also attach the guidelines with the report, because otherwise we do not know what we are speaking of in most of the report.

Miss Swift: Sure.

The Chair: Basically, we are looking at those things as additions to the report as circulated. Could we have a motion to make those alterations?

Ms Gigantes: I so move.

The Chair: All in favour? Opposed?

Mr Fletcher: Is it my understanding that we have a motion on the floor to accept the subcommittee report, or was there an amendment?

The Chair: The amendment was defeated. I am sorry. We should properly have returned to the motion. However, Ms Swift requested an addition, which really reflects back to our earlier discussions.

Mr Fletcher: Are we on the motion or are we on the—

The Chair: We should be on the motion, sir.

Mr Fletcher: Then I would like to call the question on the motion.

The Chair: The question is called.

Mr Harnick: I have not had a chance to speak on the motion. The Liberal Chiarelli spoke and he brought an amendment—

The Chair: The clerk brings to my attention that while we did discuss at some length the amendment, or proposed amendments that were not actually brought to the floor, we did not at great length discuss the report itself.

Mr Morrow: On a point of order, Mr Chair: We sat in this committee for over an hour yesterday discussing, I do believe, the third paragraph of the report. I do believe all three parties had adequate time and my colleague Mr Fletcher has called the question. I would ask that you support his calling the question. There was adequate time for this yesterday.

The Chair: My ruling is that, while we discussed the amendment to the extent that I think closure would have been appropriate, we did not actually discuss the motion itself at great enough length. I think I have already made that ruling.

Interjection: What does great length mean? Is one hour, two hours, three hours great length?

Mr Fletcher: Mr Chair, do I still have the floor?

The Chair: You do have the floor. Yes, sir, go ahead.

Mr Fletcher: We discussed this whole subcommittee report yesterday for quite a number of hours.

Mr Harnick: We spoke about the amendment; we did not speak about the motion. Again, you are invoking closure.

Mr Fletcher: Do I have the floor, Mr Chair?

The Chair: You do.

Mr Fletcher: Thank you. We discussed this whole subcommittee report for a number of hours yesterday and we looked at—

Mr Harnick: We were only here for two hours.

The Chair: Mr Harnick, he has the floor.

Mr Harnick: Well, at least make sure he is accurate.

The Chair: Mr Harnick, please. I have already ruled against.

Mr Harnick: You guys blew it. I could have made my motion, we could have lost, and then great cheers, and now we will probably end up taking—

Mr Fletcher: Do I have the floor, Mr Chair?

The Chair: You do, sir.

Mr Fletcher: Thank you, Mr Chair. We discussed this subcommittee report for a number of hours yesterday.

Interjection.

The Chair: Would you please allow Mr Fletcher to speak without interruption.

Mr Harnick: My interventions are relevant.

The Chair: Mr Harnick.

Mr Fletcher: Mr Chair, other than talking about this recommendation, I do feel that the member sitting opposite is showing total disrespect for the rulings of the chair and a total disrespect for the Chair.

Mr Harnick: Have me ejected.

Mr Fletcher: I think something should happen, Mr Chair, because this is not the first time this has been complained about. I know what we can do because, as I was saying, I do believe we have talked about this subcommittee report and I cannot agree with your ruling that we have not had the opportunity, just because of the technicality that it was not moved before the discussion went on. The discussion was on the total report and especially section 3, and then it was moved only because it was a technicality. I cannot agree with your ruling and I would hope you would reconsider that ruling. Thank you.

Mr Harnick: On a point of order, Mr Chairman: You have made a ruling and the member has challenged your ruling. We had a motion on the floor yesterday that was an amendment to that motion.

The Chair: Is this a point of order?

Mr Harnick: Yes, it is. If he is permitted to make the argument he made, why can I not make the argument I am going to make? I do not know where you stand, because you change your mind several times in the course of deliberating on these things and I have no idea where you stand right now.

The Chair: Mr Harnick, I made up my mind. I made a ruling that a motion for closure was not in order at this point. I clearly stated that.

Mr Harnick: May I speak to that?

The Chair: I do not know why I allow further discussion on that when it was already past the point at which I had made that ruling. Now, sir, we have in front of us the motion. As you so rightly point out, we are no longer discussing my ruling, which has already been made. In front of us is the motion. We should be discussing the motion, not a closure motion that has already been ruled against.

Mr Harnick: I am prepared to discuss the motion.

The Chair: Go ahead, sir.

Mr Harnick: I would like to propose an amendment to the motion. I move that the committee travel to Sault Ste Marie, Niagara Falls and St Catharines and have hearings in each of those locations. They are significant border locations and the impact of this Sunday shopping legislation is detrimental to them. I also request that we have a recorded vote.

Yesterday we had discussion on the importance of going to these border cities. I can appreciate that it is the government's position, as is stated on the record, that it draws a very significant distinction between cross-border shopping and Sunday shopping. They do not believe there is any overlap between those two issues. I simply say that when a community is not able to be open and an adjacent community on the other side of the border is able to be open on a Sunday, people avail themselves of the opportunity on that so-called pause day to cross the border and do their shopping. In fact, they do it in another country, they hurt people doing business in their own communities and there is a significant impact on people trying to maintain the viability of their businesses in border towns in Ontario. Accordingly, and I agree it may not be the total answer to the cross-border shopping problem, it certainly compounds the problem border communities are having, that when they cannot compete on a Sunday they lose business, and it is business they cannot make up.

I appreciate that the government does not see this as a significant problem. They laugh at the contents of my motion and at the remarks I am making, and I want those—

Ms Gigantes: On a point of order, Mr Chair. I think you should ask Mr Harnick not to impute our motives. We are not laughing at his amendment at all.

Mr Harnick: Let me put it this way: As I speak, they laugh. I do not know what they are laughing at, but they certainly are not listening to the content of what I am saying and I merely point that out.

Mr Winner: As a point of personal privilege: A member can listen attentively and laugh at the same time at a totally unrelated subject of humour.

Mr Harnick: I point that out to the people in Sault Ste Marie and the people in St Catharines and the people in Niagara Falls and even those people in Cornwall. Although we did not ask for a recorded vote at that time, I might advise that the opposition was fully in favour of going to Cornwall to discuss the Sunday shopping legislation and the government members unanimously voted against going to Cornwall. I think the people in those communities should know there is not an ear on the government side that is prepared to listen to them and prepared to help them through probably the most trying economic circumstances those border communities have faced since the Depression. That is something we have heard the Premier speak about.

At any rate, those are all the comments I have to make. As I said, Mr Chairman, I would like a recorded vote and I have no further comments to make at this time.

The Chair: You might want to remind me of that at the time of the vote, sir.

Mr Sorbara: I am going to be supporting Mr Harnick's motion and I hope we can get to it soon. I do not expect we will win the motion but, just to explain to my friends on the committee why I will be supporting it, I want to make the point clear that I am going to live with the list of cities we ultimately come up with but just want to express my disappointment that the government members are unwilling to bring these hearings to other border communities.

I appreciate that cross-border shopping is not exclusively a Sunday shopping issue. Of course it is not. It is a tax issue, it is a cost-of-doing-business issue, it is a value-of-the-dollar issue, but for border communities not having the opportunity to open on Sunday really is part of the competitive disadvantage.

In fact, when our Sunday shopping legislation—I cannot remember the number of the bill; I am sorry about that—was before the Parliament, one of the serious criticisms that the then opposition party, the NDP, launched against our bill was that it would pit community against community and have a domino effect. It would force all communities to open. For example, if Metro Toronto decided to allow for so-called wide-open Sunday shopping, it would be virtually impossible for the region of York or the region of Durham or the region of Peel, all of which are neighbouring municipalities, to resist the pressure to open on Sunday because of the competitive disadvantage. That point was argued eloquently by the opposition.

In our view, they were wrong on the point that the marketplace would determine which stores opened and which stores did not, in the main, to the extent that municipalities would agree, but nevertheless the point was made and I think it was an interesting and a strong point because it reflected the realities of the marketplace.

Any of you who have lived in a border community like Niagara Falls, Windsor or Sault Ste Marie know full well that the community on the other side of the border is really just next door, at least in terms of the consumer marketplace. It is a little bit different, but not that much different, from crossing Steeles Avenue from York region into Metro. Admittedly, there are some disincentives—there is a wait at the border, there is Customs—but there are also some very significant incentives. That brings us back to the cross-border shopping issue.

For all of those reasons, the issue of Sunday shopping is of particular concern to these communities. Talk to the mayor of Windsor who recently said, much to the chagrin of the Premier, that his community would simply declare itself a tourist area in every corner and therefore be open on Sunday. To Windsor and to Niagara Falls and to Sault Ste Marie and other border communities, cross-border shopping also includes the issue of Sunday shopping.

So when we now vote as a committee, at least when you vote to exclude those communities from an opportunity to have the committee come and visit them, I think it is an affront and that is why I ask you simply to reconsider. I would be willing to substitute communities that are already on the list. We cannot make our hearings longer.

By the way, the political risks you suffer are minimal. Yes, there will be some criticism there, and yes, perhaps the depositions will be somewhat stronger, but what you lose there you will gain in terms of courage. In the end I think that is probably a more important political plus; that is, the courage to go in and confront the communities that want something slightly different than what is in your bill.

All of us who have carried a bill have been through this kind of stuff. I perhaps make too many references to Bill 162, but it was a very controversial bill, amendments to the Workers' Compensation Act. My strategy was to take that bill to the heart of those communities that were most opposed to it. I believed in it strongly, I believed we were making important improvements to workers' compensation and I respected the opinion on the other side. Gord Wilson and the Ontario Federation of Labour waged a magnificent campaign against the bill. I knew I was going to win because we had the majority.

Maybe we lost the election because of Bill 162, but I think not. I think that was not the issue. I think other issues played a much more important factor. Your next election is, God knows, four years away and down the road. Frankly, I think we are probably going to have wide-open Sunday shopping by that time no matter what law you pass now. But down the road no one will remember except about your political courage, whether you have the courage to go to where the problem is felt most directly. I just want to say that in my view, and it is not infallible, those places are border communities. It is not that North Bay is not concerned and not that, heaven knows, Collingwood or Peterborough or Lindsay or Trent are not concerned about these issues. They are, and there is a wide variety of opinion out there and that is why this issue is so difficult.

The people of Ontario are schizophrenic about Sunday shopping. They want all the stores to be closed except for the ones they shop at. That is why it is so difficult to come to grips with the issue. We all feel sort of the same way about it. You cannot have one general rule, and that is why we went to a municipal option, yet we do not seem comfortable to move to simply vacate the territory and let the marketplace determine.

I plead with you as we start this venture just to take a politically courageous route. It is not going to change the dynamic very much; it will just make those communities slightly happier. We do not get the political opportunity of sending out a press release saying that the government refused to come to Niagara Falls, and we will forgo that for the opportunity of bringing this committee there. If you do not go, by the way, we will go ourselves. Our party has already determined to have Liberal hearings in those communities if this committee refuses to go. I just plead with you in the interest of trying to make this thing work well.

I want to say that if Charles' amendment passes, we would be willing to forgo some other communities. For example, I would prefer Sault Ste Marie to North Bay. I would prefer Niagara Falls to all the time we have in Hamilton or perhaps one of our days in Toronto. I personally would be satisfied with Niagara Falls and Sault Ste Marie.

I implore you to set aside the whip and set aside the political demands of the Solicitor General and show just a spark of independence here. I want to assure you, to the extent I can, that it will not mean the failure of the legislation. You have the votes to pass it. There may be one or two little amendments this committee can advise on to improve the bill slightly, but going to Niagara Falls and Sault Ste Marie will not destabilize the province, destabilize the legislation or destabilize this committee, but it will be an act of political courage, and I recommend it.

Mr Morrow: I am obviously going to speak against the amendment because basically the amendment does not support what we did last week or what we did yesterday. As we all know, the main motion supports the subcommittee's report. As far as I can see, Bill 115, the Sunday shopping legislation, has nothing at all to do with cross-border shopping. They are two distinct, separate identities. Basically, cross-border shopping is a federal matter. It is a problem with GST—

Mr Harnick: Therefore you just bury your head in the sand.

Mr Morrow: We do have a provincial matter here as in Bill 115. As far as I can see, if we have a one-day hearing in Hamilton, all areas such as St Catharines and Niagara Falls are properly represented because they are all within at least one hour of Hamilton, nowhere close to two hours.

Mr Sorbara: Mark, do not put this on the record. Let's just vote.

The Chair: Mr Morrow has the floor. Let him say it, will you?

Mr Morrow: I let you talk, right? My understanding from talking to the clerk is that yes, we will pay for groups to come in and represent themselves. We will pay for individuals to come in and represent themselves. There is no problem there. We are listening to the public. I would like to remind Mr Harnick, by the way, that in the House on 17 June, when we were debating second reading of Bill 115, your leader did want to take the third reading. This government wants to put it out for public hearing. I would like to remind you of that. I also would like to remind you that to go into St Catharines and Niagara Falls would be a significant cost, not only to this committee but to this government, and we are committed to doing things properly.

I would now like to call the question, if I may.

The Chair: The question is put. All in favour of calling the question?

Mr Mills: Did you have my name down?

The Chair: I have your name, I have Mrs Mathysen, Mrs Gigantes, Mr Winner. However, the question has been put. All in favour of putting the question?

Mr Sorbara: Hold on a second.

The Chair: It is not debatable.

Mr Sorbara: This is to cut off debate.

The Chair: It is not debatable, thank you. All in favour of putting the question?

Interjections.

The Chair: I am sorry. My apologies. Procedurally speaking, the clerk reminds me that putting the question puts the previous question, which is the report of the committee. The report of the committee, not the amendment.

Interjections.

The Chair: The clerk informs me what when you move closure, everything that has not been passed is superseded and you go back to the original report.

Mr Morrow: Are you saying that if I call the question I am calling the question on the original motion?

Mr Harnick: What happens to the amendment, then?

An hon member: It disappears.

Mr Harnick: Then I would like a recorded vote.

Mr Morrow: Okay, then I am calling the question.

Mr Harnick: May I say something?

The Chair: Are you wishing a recorded vote?

Mr Harnick: Yes, I want to put it on the record.

The Chair: That is fine. The question is being called.

Mr Sorbara: Is it debatable who is calling the question?

The Chair: No. Mr Harnick is asking for a recorded vote, which I think is in order, is it not? All in favour of the report of the subcommittee in front of us?

The committee divided on the subcommittee's report as presented which was agreed to on the following vote:

Ayes—6

Fletcher, Gigantes, Mathysen, Mills, Morrow, Winner.

Nays—3

Harnick, Poirier, Sorbara.

The Chair: Any other business? Do we move adjournment?

Ms Gigantes: I move adjournment.

The Chair: Ms Gigantes moves adjournment. All in favour? Opposed? We are adjourned until 29 July.

The committee adjourned at 1604.

MINISTRY OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

MINISTRY OF LABOUR

MINISTRY OF TOURISM AND RECREATION

The Chair: I would like to call this meeting of the standing committee on administration of justice to order. We are here to hear initial submissions in regard to Bill 115, an act to amend the Retail Business Holidays Act. As our first witnesses we have Mr Farnan, the Solicitor General, Mr Mackenzie, the Minister of Labour, and Mr North, the Minister of Tourism and Recreation, who will be making some brief introductory comments. I understand Mr North and Mr Mackenzie will only be with us for the first hour, and in consequence we should possibly think of the initial questions going to those honourable members. We have time for initial comments. Would you like to make them separately or together at the witness box, gentlemen?

Hon Mr Farnan: Good afternoon. I want to take the opportunity, first of all, to thank the committee for the opportunity to be present and to address the committee this afternoon. You have a key role to play in bringing to fruition the Retail Business Establishments Statute Law Amendment Act, otherwise known as Bill 115.

This legislation is important to the citizens of Ontario because it will further ensure a common pause day for retail workers and thereby help strengthen family and community life in the province. At the same time, it will maintain and enhance Ontario's tourism industry by allowing tourist-based businesses to operate on Sundays and other holidays. But it will also protect retail workers who do not wish to work on Sundays or other holidays and it will establish a provincial-municipal partnership in allowing municipalities to determine their special tourism industry needs within province-wide guidelines.

As you know, Bill 115 was introduced in the Legislature on June 4, 1991, and received second reading on June 17. The provisions of this bill include amendments to both the Retail Business Holidays Act and the Employment Standards Act. The proposed amendments to the two acts included in Bill 115 will improve the effectiveness of both these laws.

Principally, the amendments to the retail business holidays law will ensure that retail business holidays are common pause days throughout the province. Municipalities should not use their exemption power to permit retail stores to open on Sundays or other holidays except to maintain and develop tourism.

The amendments to the employment standards legislation would give employees the absolute right to refuse Sunday and holiday work. It would also guarantee 36 hours of continuous rest in every seven days and strengthen the role of employment standards officers in dealing with employee complaints.

I would like to offer now a brief historical overview to the committee. Like any sequence of historical events, it is useful in defining where we are today, and indeed where we are going tomorrow.

The issue of retail activity on Sundays and other holidays has been a topic of frequent debate, indeed often heated debate in this province since 1845. That was the year Upper Canada passed a law banning just about every Sunday activity except churchgoing. The history of related legislation tends to mirror the evolution of our society. It reflects both tradition and change. It chronicles our long-standing values and our evolving attitudes.

During the 1880s, for example, streetcars were not allowed to run on Sundays. Sunday shopping, or the transaction of any business for that matter, was made illegal by the federal Lord's Day Act of 1906. In 1943, Toronto movie theatres were first permitted to open on Sunday, but only to members of the armed forces. This privilege ended in 1945 and was only restored in 1961, and professional sports were banned on Sundays until 1950, when municipalities were permitted to pass enabling bylaws.

While the history of Sunday and holiday shopping laws may seem marked by quaint anachronisms, the strong thread that runs through it and pulls us towards our purpose here today is a strong desire on the part of Ontarians for some structure or framework to their working week.

Our government's commitment to support that desire was expressed in the throne speech last November. Our promise to support legislation which provides for a common pause day while protecting the rights of retail workers was sincere, and indeed a priority for us during the recently completed session in the Legislature.

A closer look at the recent history of the Retail Business Holidays Act will help put the importance of Bill 115 in proper perspective. In June 1990, the Supreme Court of Ontario declared the existing legislation to be unconstitutional, due primarily to the virtually unrestricted powers delegated to municipalities. That decision was appealed and was heard by the Ontario Court of Appeal in September 1990.

The court's ruling in March of this year reinstated the Retail Business Holidays Act as the law of the land. In doing so, it recognized the pressing and substantial concerns for a common pause day addressed by the legislation. After the court's decision, I promised to introduce amendments to improve the legislation and to make it more effective. It was decided that amendments to both the Retail Business Holidays Act and the Employment Standards Act were necessary to achieve this.

I should point out that the amendments to the Employment Standards Act do not apply to the hospitality industry, which includes hotels, motels, tourist resorts, restaurants, amusement parks and museums. These enterprises are exempt from the current legislation regarding the right to refuse Sunday work and will continue to be exempt.

I must emphasize here that both acts are in effect in their entirety at this time. The existing provisions are in force and their basic principles—that is, worker protection and the common pause day—are not up for negotiation.

My ministry administers the Retail Business Holidays Act, and I think it would be useful if I briefly reviewed its provisions as they exist today.

Mr McLean: On a point of order, Mr Chairman: The fact is that Mr North and Mr Mackenzie are here for one hour, from 1 to 2. My understanding is that Mr Farnan is here until approximately three. Perhaps we should be listening to the other two ministers, who are leaving at 2 o'clock, before time runs out.

Mr Sorbara: On the same point of order, Mr Chairman: Perhaps the Solicitor General might just give us an indication of how much longer his opening remarks are going to be, either in pages or time, and then we could determine whether or not we have to express any concern that we will not get a chance to question either of the other two ministers.

Hon Mr Farnan: I am just over halfway through my remarks.

Mr Sorbara: That gives me a little cause for concern.

The Chair: Which means Mr Farnan would be finished before half past.

Mr Sorbara: Might I suggest perhaps that the Solicitor General proceed as quickly as he can through his remarks and then that we hear quickly the remarks from the other two ministers, and then have an opportunity to question the other two ministers, inasmuch as they have to leave, and then ask the Solicitor General to return for questioning after 2 o'clock. Would that be agreeable?

Hon Mr Farnan: Yes. I will try and move through this as quickly as possible to facilitate that.

The current act essentially calls for most retail business establishments to be closed on Sundays and other holidays enumerated in the legislation. Most exemptions are based on providing flexibility to small businesses which sell certain types of goods and on recognizing on the need for important or essential services to carry on in response to public need.

There is also a Sabbatarian exemption which accommodates owners of retail businesses who observe a religious day other than Sunday. In addition, activities which seem to be conducive to the concept of a common pause day are accommodated. For example, subsection 3(6) provides an exemption for businesses of an educational, recreational or amusement nature.

The great shortcoming in the act lies with section 4. It provides that municipalities may create bylaws which can further restrict or exempt holiday retail activity. The unrestricted scope of the authority given municipalities under this section presents the potential for a patchwork of inconsistent holiday retail practices across the province. Through Bill 115, a revised section 4 has been proposed which allows municipalities to pass bylaws to accommodate local tourism-dependent areas and businesses.

While the administration of this process is the responsibility of municipalities, they are required to ensure that provincial criteria, in the form of accompanying regulations, are met before they can grant the tourism exemption. This will ensure that genuine tourism-based needs are addressed with uniformity and fairness across the province.

Municipalities would be empowered to make the final decision on applications for exemption, and develop their own procedures for dealing with applications and establish fees to cover the costs of this process. Municipal councils are not compelled to grant such exemptions, even if the criteria are met by an applicant. In fact, in the text of the bill, councils are reminded of the importance of maintaining holidays as common pause days when considering the passage of a bylaw.

The focus on tourism in the proposed new section 4 of the act is a key component of Bill 115. As a cornerstone of our provincial economy, the unique requirements of the tourism industry must be addressed. Permitting municipal councils to administer the tourism exemption ensures that local needs will be met and legitimate tourism-based businesses will be protected and promoted in co-ordination with local economic development plans.

The other proposed change to the Retail Business Holidays Act establishes minimum fines for violations of the act. The significance of this is clear, since it reflects the seriousness with which our government views the purpose of this legislation. We believe strongly in the need for effective and fair legislation which provides for a common pause day for Ontarians while protecting the rights of retail workers and recognizing the unique requirements of the tourism industry.

As I have said, Ontarians have also expressed, through a long history of related legislation, that this kind of law is a vital component in our society. It is part of our Canadian heritage to place a high value on the quality of life and community values. We Canadians seek to achieve a balance between the interests of the individual and the interests of the community at large. Our government remains resolved to support this vital component in the quality of life for the people of Ontario.

Before I conclude, I would like to address the importance of consultation. I commend the members of this committee for the role you will play in this important process. Your committee provides an opportunity for Ontarians to voice their opinions on the proposed legislation. This is an important part of our open and accessible system of government. The committee's objective analysis of public input will play a significant role in determining the final shape of Bill 115.

I think it is important, however, that the fundamental principles of this legislation remain intact. These are the principles of a common pause day, the principle of protecting retail workers, the principle of allowing a tourist exemption and, finally, the principle of partnership with the municipalities that allows for local needs to be met within the context of provincial guidelines. Our government believes, and I feel quite strongly, that a responsive government is a responsible government.

I thank the committee members for their efforts in reinforcing the process of open and accessible government in Ontario. I am pleased to advise the committee that members of my staff and ministry staff will be attending the hearings of the committee around the province and will be available at all times to assist the committee.

I have with me today Mr David Spring from the legal branch of the Ministry of the Solicitor General. I will be asking him to join me here after the other ministers have made their presentations. At this stage, I would hand over the floor to the other members of the delegation.

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I will try to be as brief as I can so that there is some time for questions.

Before I begin my remarks, I would like to say that I am very pleased that this legislation has come before this committee for public deliberations of a most important issue.

I would also like to inform the committee that my staff and ministry staff will be monitoring these hearings closely and reporting back to me. They will also be available to assist the committee on any questions that may arise as you travel across the province.

As my colleague the Solicitor General has mentioned, a common pause day is essential if we are to maintain and improve the quality of family and community life that we enjoy here in Ontario. In order that thousands of retail workers in this province are able to participate in this quality of life without the fear of losing their jobs, this government proposes to amend the Employment Standards Act as part of Bill 115.

Retail workers, full-time and part-time, will have the absolute right to refuse work on a Sunday. No reasons for the refusal will have to be given to the employer.

Employees who agree to work on a Sunday but subsequently decide not to will be able to refuse, once again without giving a reason, with 48 hours' notice to the employer. This notice may be either verbal or written.

In addition, retail employees will also be guaranteed 36 hours of continuous rest in every seven days. Workers who volunteer to work on a Sunday will still be able to enjoy a regular day of rest.

Under Bill 115, retail employees will be able to exercise these rights with the protection of additional provisions of the Employment Standards Act. These will prohibit employers from dismissing the employee or taking other punitive measures, such as discipline, suspension, layoffs, threats, intimidation or coercion.

There have been some concerns raised about the enforceability of the proposed new provisions of the Employment Standards Act.

The amendments outlined by the Solicitor General for the Retail Business Holidays Act will ensure that most retail workers will not be forced to work against their wishes on a Sunday since the majority of retail establishments will be closed.

The amendments give retail workers the absolute right to refuse work on a Sunday with no reasons required. This will provide a right without qualification as in the current right to refuse unreasonable work.

Also, under the amendments to the Employment Standards Act in Bill 115 employment standards officers will be able to issue orders for compensation or reinstatement if an employer takes action for refusal to work on a Sunday. Employers and employees will retain their right to appeal any order issued by an employment standards officer.

Other amendments to the Employment Standards Act outlined in Bill 70 provide for an accelerated appeals process for employers and hearings by independent adjudicators for employees. This bill is currently under deliberation by the standing committee on resources development. Appeals will be heard within 45 days of filing, with a decision within 90 days of the initial hearing. Neither employers nor employees will be tied up in lengthy and protracted appeals procedures.

The amendments to the Employment Standards Act outlined in Bill 115 relate solely to retail workers. Generally speaking, these are workers who are for the most part unorganized and least able to fully exercise their rights. Workers from the hospitality industry businesses, such as hotels, motels, restaurants, tourist resorts, amusement parks and museums, will be exempted from these amendments, just as they are under the current provisions for unreasonable Sunday work.

The principle of a common pause day is an important one. It is a principle that we have fought for for years and it was directly outlined in the speech from the throne.

I urge the committee members to listen carefully to the points that are raised during the public hearings into Bill 115. I urge you to make your report in a thoughtful and thorough fashion, keeping in mind that the underlying principle of Bill 115 is to give retail workers a right that most of us enjoy, and that is the right to a day of rest.

I thank you for the opportunity to make this presentation.

Hon Mr North: I will try to be as brief as I can. I am delighted to appear before your committee as you begin the important task of reviewing Bill 115. During the next few weeks, you will hear presentations from a wide variety of interest groups. You will need to carefully consider and balance their views when preparing your final recommendations for changes, if any, to Bill 115.

I am pleased that Bill 115 recognizes the importance of the provincial tourism industry by providing an exemption for legitimate tourism businesses in the retail sector. I hope that after consultations your committee will recommend we keep this provision.

Bill 115's major objective is to balance the importance of providing a common pause day for workers and their families in Ontario with the need to recognize the impact tourism has in communities throughout our province. I have met with representatives from the tourism business across Ontario. I remain convinced that maintaining this balance is important.

Tourism and recreation play an important role in the growth of Ontario's economy. Tourism is Ontario's fourth largest export industry. In 1989, it created 160,000 jobs province-wide. In 1990, tourists travelling throughout Ontario spent a total of $15.5 billion.

The current act requires most Ontario retail businesses to close on Sundays and holidays. Many people use these days to travel, visit friends and relatives and enjoy Ontario's natural and man-made attractions.

Today, travel and other leisure activities are more than frills. Many people are able to reduce the stress they face in their everyday lives by relaxing and sharing activities with their families. In that sense, quality leisure activities help people to lead healthy, productive and fulfilling lives.

For many people, shopping can be an important part of a tourism experience. In fact, Sundays and holidays are the very days when most tourism-dependent operations and communities do the majority of their business. They should have the opportunity to remain open. Businesses dependent on tourism actually enhance the common day of rest by providing leisure services Ontarians need and enjoy.

Our balance must consider the needs of a diverse workforce. It must also consider the needs of diverse communities. Each region of Ontario has distinctive tourist attractions and strengths. They include historical sites, ethnic and cultural festivals, natural attractions such as lakes and rivers and a large variety of recreational activities. Given this regional diversity, flexibility in the treatment of businesses dependent on tourist attractions is essential.

The provisions of Bill 115 would give municipalities the opportunity to establish an exemption for retail establishments closely associated with the local tourism industry. Municipalities could then cultivate the major economic and social benefits tourism can provide.

After Bill 115 and the draft regulations have been finalized, our ministry will provide guidelines and work with municipalities and representatives of the tourism industry to assist in the implementation of the new legislation. I am confident your committee's report will help us towards a fair and workable balance that will allow for continued development of Ontario's tourist industry.

The Chair: Thank you, Mr North. We have approximately half an hour for questions, which will be, I believe, on a rotating basis, starting with the official opposition.

Mr Sorbara: It is nice that we are all back together again on the great ship Sunday Shopping, which leaves Queen's Park every three years without fail. I want to direct my first question—there are three parts to it—to—

The Chair: The questions are rotated.

Mr Sorbara: That is right.

The Chair: The first question, the second question, the third question.

Mr Sorbara: I appreciate that.

The Chair: Thank you.

Mr Sorbara: I want to direct the first question that I ask in the rotation to the Minister of Labour, Mr Mackenzie, and there are three parts to the question. The first part refers to the final words of his statement, in which he says he would like "to give retail workers a right that most of us enjoy, and that is the right to a day of rest."

Might he point to the place in the statutes of Ontario where non-retail workers, that is, workers in any other sector of the economy, have a statutory right to a day of rest, with the exception of the One Day's Rest in Seven Act, which does require one day of rest in seven to workers in the hotel industry? Do workers other than retail workers have special statutory provisions giving them what he says most of us enjoy, and that is the right to a day of rest?

The second part of the question has to do with the substance of the legislation itself. As he knows, the current act provides for a retail worker to refuse an unreasonable assignment of Sunday work and at the same time provides a mechanism to make a judicial determination whether or not an assignment of Sunday work is unreasonable. That is the pith and substance of Bill 114, the predecessor of Bill 115.

Could the minister tell this committee why in his view it is more reasonable to give a retail worker the absolute right to refuse an assignment of Sunday work, that is to say, to give the retail worker the right to agree on Monday morning with an employer that he or she or they—let's take a workforce of five people—agree with the employer, perhaps in writing, that they will be available for Sunday work, and Thursday evening, having decided for some reason or another that they choose not to work on Sunday, have an absolute and statutory protection to advise the employer that they are refusing to work that Sunday?

The third part of my question to the minister is this: The provisions in Bill 114, the predecessor bill, which prohibited the employer from taking any retaliatory action against a worker who refused an unreasonable assignment of Sunday work, were on perhaps 15 or 20 occasions described by the minister when he was in opposition as "not worth the powder to blow them to hell." In his speeches, most of them very eloquent, he said that most employers when they saw that provision would just laugh and would find other means and mechanisms of retaliating against their employees if they refused an unreasonable assignment of Sunday work. In his words, those provisions were "not worth the powder to blow them to hell."

I have compared the provisions in his bill with the provisions in my bill, and the prohibition sections and the penalty sections look surprisingly similar. I am not surprised to say that, because they were drafted by the same competent bureaucrats who advised me and are now advising the minister. But I am wondering if the minister can point out specifically what provisions there are in his bill which will ensure that his provisions are "not worth the powder to blow them to hell."

The Chair: There were three parts to that. Is there any particular choice you have in terms of which of those questions you would like the minister to answer?

Mr Sorbara: Let's see if the minister might wrap it all up in one comprehensive answer, with the indulgence of the committee.

The Chair: As we have agreed to rotate questions, you should probably choose which of those three questions you wish to pose to the minister.

Mr Sorbara: I think that ruling this early in these committee hearings poisons the nature of how we are going to go. I am not going to choose. I will let the minister choose.

The Chair: It was the subcommittee that agreed to that, and you are part of that subcommittee.

Mr Sorbara: The minister can answer one or all of the questions. In fact, the minister does not have to answer any of the questions.

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I am going to answer some of this and some of it I may have Ron Saunders, who is the assistant acting director of policy, answer for me as well.

On the last one, with regard to my comments in the past about "not worth the powder to blow them to hell," I grant that one of the few regrets I have from time to time is some of the words I used in opposition. In fact, the employment standards officers now can issue an order if they wish, even directly. We have given a credibility and an enforcement value to the orders that we just do not think was there prior.

Mr Sorbara: We could argue about that.

Hon Mr Mackenzie: It is not a statutory right to refuse which we have had in the past. We now have a statutory right for retail workers to refuse and they do not have to give any justification for their reason. The fact that they can refuse without any justification at all is a clear indication that the decision is theirs, and that the common pause day, the right of rest, is the right of the employee himself in any event.

Mr Sorbara: But under the existing law, they have to explain their reasons. They ultimately have to justify. Someone has to decide whether it is unreasonable. Under your law, if they get tickets to the ball game on Sunday afternoon, they can say, "I'm not coming in."

Hon Mr Mackenzie: Under our law, if they are a retail employee, they do not have to give any justification at all. They can just decide they want the statutory right to take the Sunday off.

Mr Sorbara: Until the issue is resolved.

Mr Carr: First, I very quickly want to thank all the ministers for appearing here today and answering our questions.

The question I have is for Mr North and deals with the tourism criteria. Those tourism criteria are so broad that virtually any municipality could look at that and say, "That includes our area," so virtually we could have every part of the province open if the municipalities so choose. One of the allegations that has been made is that these tourism criteria were so broad to enable the government to get off the hook on its election promise of having a common pause day. First, I wanted to see if that was the reason they were made so broad, so that virtually every place could be open. If not, I would like to see how you came up with these criteria, what groups were consulted and why you came up with this set of guidelines.

Hon Mr North: I appreciate the question. I would like to say we are not in the business of trying to make criteria broad enough to get off the hook from anything. My job in this particular bill was to develop some tourism criteria that would underline the fact that we were trying to develop something that was workable for the tourism industry from a small business standpoint and which had consideration for workers and which had consideration for what they call the "common pause day."

We feel we have developed criteria that will enhance the tourism industry, giving municipalities an opportunity to decide at a local level, rather than have a paternalistic attitude from the province. We would like to try to do it at a local level, give areas such as the east, the north, the southwest and the northeast opportunities to look at their particular tourism industry, as it may, as I said earlier, diversify and be different from what would be in the southwest as compared to the northwest as compared to the southeast, but still keep them somewhat, as you say, general enough so they could be used province-wide. I believe we have come up with criteria that are general enough to be province-wide but still specific enough so that municipalities can administer them within their own municipality.

Mr Mills: My question is for the Minister of Labour. What I would like clarified is that if an area is designated under the tourism criteria and included in that area there happens to be the type of establishment that employs a retail worker, even though the area has been designated as a tourist area will that worker still have the opportunity to refuse work as a retail worker?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: They would still have the right to refuse, unless they were in one of the tourist industries themselves.

Mr Sorbara: I have a question that could perhaps be answered by any of the ministers, but I will direct it to the Minister of Tourism and Recreation. This bill, the two bills together, has been described in some quarters as an elitist bill which caters directly to the rich and the affluent and is a slap in the face to the typical, average Ontarian who simply might want to go out and do some shopping on Sunday. I will tell you why that is. If, for example, I am relatively affluent and I have a cottage at Lake Simcoe, on Sunday morning I can get into my car, and on my way up to my cottage I will be able to stop at the most luxurious of fruit markets and grocery stores and do virtually all of my shopping for the week, because I am travelling a distance and I am getting into a tourist area. If, on the other hand, I live under much more meagre circumstances in downtown Toronto and do not have any way of getting out of downtown Toronto on Sunday, you are going to close all the stores I might otherwise have done my shopping in, even if I happen to be working the other six days of the week.

Why is it that we have made this distinction in tourism? We acknowledge, of course, that most of the tourists to whom you are catering are local, indigenous Ontario tourists, that is, people who are driving from, let's say, Sudbury to Sault Ste Marie for the weekend, or cottaging or visiting downtown Toronto for the weekend, or something like that, people who have money to spend. But the rest of us, the rest of the people of the province, are going to find that the stores in their neighbourhoods are going to be closed. Do you think that is an appropriate distinction to be making in 1991 in Ontario?

Hon Mr North: First, I think it is a distinction you are making. I do not think it is a distinction—

Mr Sorbara: It is a distinction people are making when they read your bill, that the stores in their neighbourhoods are going to be closed and the stores in the places that are inaccessible to them are going to be open.

Hon Mr North: Perhaps I can clarify that. We have an opportunity here for municipalities to decide within their own municipality an area they would decide is a tourism area. They have an opportunity to decide the stores that should be open and the stores that should not be open.

Mr Sorbara: Peter, perhaps I can just stop you for a second.

The Chair: Perhaps you would allow him to finish his response, Mr Sorbara.

Mr Sorbara: Tourism implies that you go from A to B, not that you go around the corner, and that you have the money to be on vacation or touring.

Hon Mr North: I understand perfectly what you are saying. If you use Metro as an example, there are various ways in Metro to use transit to get to other locations in the province. I wonder if you—

Interjection

Mr Sorbara: My colleague says, "Take the subway to Collingwood."

Hon Mr North: I wonder if you are saying that what we are doing is eliminating the poor from travelling or eliminating the poor from shopping.

Mr Sorbara: What I am saying is, if I am not rich enough to be a tourist on Sunday I am likely not going to be in an area where I can do some shopping on Sunday, and if I am wealthy enough to be a tourist, then I probably will be, or if I want to be, I can make arrangements to be.

Hon Mr North: My understanding of the bill, and perhaps it is different than yours, is there is an opportunity for each municipality to have certain segments of its area, core or east or west, whichever you prefer to call it, open under the tourism criteria.

Mr Sorbara: Yes, if they comply with your tight tourism guidelines.

Hon Mr North: If they comply with the tourism guidelines that have been put in place, the criteria that are set. I think most people will have an opportunity, as you say, to shop or purchase what they need in various locations. There are going to be stores that were open before these criteria were put in place that will be open afterwards. Those are convenience stores and such.

Mr Sorbara: Becker's where the milk is the most expensive and the orange juice is the most expensive. Again, you are making a distinction between—

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, would you please allow him to answer your question.

Hon Mr North: I appreciate your concern and I understand you will be able to raise this question in a number of different locations in the province and perhaps you will give us some information and we can work on clarifying it for you.

Mr Sorbara: That would be great. That is a good idea.

Mr Carr: I have another question for Mr North. It is kind of interesting that he says he wants to leave it up to the local people to decide, because our friend the Solicitor General, during the last hearings, said that was taking the chicken way out. I notice the Solicitor General does not have his little mask on, that little chicken that he took around with him, this time. Actually, I asked him if I could borrow that, but I guess it is long gone.

One of the questions I have relates to the classification of businesses by using the square footage. I went to a press conference this morning and heard where that will probably make it open to a legal challenge that we are discriminating against certain groups. One of the larger groups this morning said that it will more than likely be taking this legislation to court and saying that what you have done is something it feels discriminates against it. I wondered why that was put in there, why the difference in footages. If you are talking about tourism exemptions and so on, how did that come about? What was your rationale for putting in the different sizes like that?

Hon Mr North: I was just having some discussion. That was not a decision, I would say, that was come by easily. There was a lot of discussion that centred around square footage, workers, a lot of things, and some very difficult decisions were made. We felt that to use criteria based on square footage was reasonable. There was an opportunity for smaller stores and larger stores, based on the tourism criteria at the first level, to be open. When you come to the second level of more stringent criteria, I guess it gives larger stores that are in fact tourism based, tourism oriented, dealing specifically with consumers that I would say are tourists—they will still have the same opportunity, so I do not think it is discriminatory in that sense. If it is based on tourism it will in fact be open.

Mrs Haslam: This is very interesting. I was a sub on the justice committee and I am learning that what you do is preface your question with the background, depending on whether you are running for anything or not, how long you talk. I find it—

Mr Poirier: You're learning.

Mrs Haslam: Not me. I want to talk again to Mr North about tourism, because it is an area I find very applicable to my own riding. I appreciate what Mr North has done for tourism because I think it is very important, especially in my riding. I want to look at the minimum fines for the violations and I wondered if there was a possibility that, should the committee decide we did not feel those were strong enough and we brought back some other recommendations—or how you came to that type of fine. I know

I have been discussing fines. The second part to my question is, will these fines be applied to employees or someone who has been admitting the public into a particular business?

Hon Mr North: I am going to do something rotten to you.

Mrs Haslam: Never.

Hon Mr North: I am going to pass this question to Mike, if I can, because that is not my bailiwick, so to speak.

Hon Mr Farnan: First of all, on the question surrounding the fine, the determination and the proposal before the committee has stipulated fines. You ask the question, can the committee come back with recommendations? I suggest this is an active listening committee. This is a very tough issue. There is a lot of controversy around a whole variety of clauses within the legislation. We have given it considerable thought and we have presented what we believe is a reasonable piece of legislation, legislation we can be proud of.

What is the committee process about? You are going to tour the province, you are going to listen to delegations and it is meaningless unless in listening to those delegations there is the possibility of change. As I pointed out in my presentation at second reading, the principles of the legislation are not negotiable. The fact that there would be a common pause day that would strengthen family and community values is not negotiable. The fact that we want to protect retail workers is not negotiable. The fact that we want to enhance tourism through a tourism exemption is not negotiable.

But as to details of the legislation that have been raised, I think the committee has a responsibility to listen, and I would point out to my friend Gary that the chicken is alive and well and sitting on my desk. As we went around the province during the last hearings three years ago, I had a sign tied around the neck of the chicken that read: "We're not deaf. We're just not listening to you." That was the attitude of the previous government. "We're not deaf. We're just not listening to you." We went through the process and it was cast in stone. What I am saying to this committee is that indeed we expect this committee to involve itself in an active open process, to listen carefully. I certainly will be doing the same thing and I suggest to you that the possibility remains for fine-tuning of the legislation in areas such as you have pointed out.

Mr Poirier: I seem to recall that you said the municipalities might retain the right, or will retain the right, to refuse a tourism designation to a business, even though it does seem to meet all the minimum requirements for it to be so designated. Did I hear correctly? That being the case, I seem to recall that in the days of the previous Tory administration the law was also partly based on the tourism designation and we know where that got us. It seems to me you are coming full circle and I can just see the great debate and discussions, the great core debate as to which businesses will be awarded a tourism designation and which ones will be designated and accepted by each municipality. In one municipality a certain type of business may be designated, whereas in the municipality next door it may not. This seems to me, if I can paraphrase your great expression, Bob, to provide the power to blow the bloody dossier all the way to hell.

As Minister of Tourism and Recreation, sir, do you not see a hell of a mess coming up with that particular type of provision?

Hon Mr North: I look at this bill from the tourism aspect, as you have just described. What I see and what we tried to develop was an opportunity for tourism, an opportunity for tourist operators and municipalities, and a stronger interest, perhaps, from chambers of commerce and from local business. I see an opportunity here for the enhancement of the relationship between those people, and also between operators and labour and, again, business.

My feeling is that, sure, the opportunity is there. There is no question it is a challenge. I think if we can get in, go through the committee hearings, have an opportunity to get good, solid information through committee hearings, take it back and finish the development, finish our work, and come up with something through which we as a ministry have an opportunity to work with the municipalities and with the operators, we can overcome, we hope, a lot of these barriers. We would perceive that municipalities look at tourist operators as a source of provincial revenue and as a source of revenue in general for the area.

There is certainly an opportunity here for the ministry to develop a stronger relationship with the municipalities and for the operators to develop a stronger relationship with the municipalities. There will have to be some give and take; there is no question about that. I will say, in all fairness to your question, that there is the opportunity to challenge.

Mr Poirier: And that can go on for quite a long time, for years to come?

Hon Mr North: I cannot disagree with you, sir.

Mr McLean: Section 2 of your bill lays out the criteria for establishing a tourist area. The city of Orillia, the town of Collingwood and many others have passed bylaws now to have Sunday shopping with the approval of the chamber of commerce, which indicates that they support shopping in that city or town for every business. Will that still qualify under Bill 115, that those councils can pass bylaws with a public meeting which meet the criteria you have set out and that every business in that town which is tourism-based would be able to open?

Hon Mr North: There are a couple of different situations here. From the information I have, one situation is that bylaws that are passed by June 4, 1991, the date the bill was introduced, will be repealed on the date the bill comes into effect.

At a second juncture, municipalities that designate certain areas or can substantiate the perimeter of the area that they have designated through public meetings, through criteria, can in fact open a broad sort of area. The question will remain: Will all the businesses that are within that area be able to open? Those will have to go through the scrutiny of the criteria and will already have gone through the scrutiny of public meetings. That is the best information I can give you, sir.

Mr Fletcher: My question is for Mr Farnan. I am just wondering, after what you were saying about the previous bill and the previous legislation, exactly how different is this from the Liberal legislation?

Hon Mr Farnan: Let me link your question to a comment that was made in putting forward a question just a moment ago. The presumption was made by Jean that there was no difference. Of course the reality of the matter is that this legislation is significantly different.

If you look back at the history of the legislation surrounding the common pause day and go back to the Conservative version, they did have a tourism provision within the bill, but there was absolutely no definition of what tourism was, so in fact it was relatively useless and provided no guidance, no direction.

During the more recent administration, that of the former Liberal government, its legislation simply passed on this issue to the municipalities. Gary is quite correct that the then Solicitor General had said this was the chicken way out, that to hand it over to the municipalities was the chicken way out. I still agree with that. The reality of the matter is that when you give this issue to the municipalities with an absolutely unbridled and unrestricted opportunity to have the area wide open, certainly that is not conducive to a common pause day. I think the principle we are attempting to enshrine here is that there be a common pause day. Not only have we accepted the fact in going back to the tourism exemption; we have actually undertaken the very difficult process of making those definitions.

The Minister of Tourism and Recreation and his staff are to be commended for the extraordinary work they have done in this area: very difficult, very challenging. There is no doubt that as you tour the province you will receive considerable input on the definitions of "tourism." Of course, that is precisely what these hearings are all about, that we do get some input. In the course of the hearings there may be some very positive and constructive refinements that can be made. As I have already indicated to the committee, that sits very comfortably with this government, which wants to take an open approach and an active listening approach to these hearings.

Mr Daigeler: Mr Chairman, a quick question to the Minister of Labour, since he has to leave.

The Chair: Do you have time for?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: This is what I have been waiting for, the wage protection stuff that has started, but I will hang on for this question.

Mr Daigeler: Under the previous legislation, both Liberal and the Conservative, how many cases have there been of people who were forced to work on Sundays and have lodged a complaint about it? How successfully generally has that worked before, to the knowledge of your ministry? I do not know whether you want to answer that or have someone else within your ministry do so.

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I will answer part of it and I may have Mr Saunders answer the rest. There have been a fair number of calls, but very few actual charges or complaints laid. A lot of it was the reasonableness of the request, which was very difficult.

Mr Daigeler: There were no specific complaints?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: There were only a small number that actually ran to complaints. Under current provisions concerning the right to refuse an unreasonable assignment of Sunday work, a total of 16 claims have been filed with the ministry. Of these, six have been sent to the referee. Two were upheld by the referee in favour of the claimant, one was denied and one claim was settled prior to the decision. The number of calls the ministry had over the right to refuse was considerably larger than that. The reason for my calling the previous legislation and the authority you had under it not worth the powder to blow it to hell is the fact that proving something was an unreasonable request was extremely difficult.

Mr Sorbara: With respect, there was a prima facie presumption in the law that it was unreasonable.

Hon Mr Mackenzie: That is your response, not the way I was looking at it.

Mr Sorbara: No, that is what the law states. You are wrong on that, Bob. Sorry.

Mr McLean: I have a final question for the minister. It is just a simple question with regard to tourism.

The Chair: Mr North, do you have time?

Hon Mr North: Yes.

Mr McLean: Mr Michener is the chief executive officer of Tourism Ontario. I just wanted to know if he had any input into this meeting with you and into this legislation.

Hon Mr North: We had an opportunity to meet with a lot of different groups. This is my assistant, Marion Joppe.

Dr Joppe: Tourism Ontario definitely was one of the groups we have consulted with. We have also consulted with other tourism organizations, but in the original go-arounds, consultation into possible criteria for tourism exemption, they were definitely consulted.

Mr McLean: My question is, did you meet with Mr Michener?

The Chair: Excuse me. Could you introduce yourself for the purposes of the reporter.

Dr Joppe: I am sorry. The name is Marion Joppe.

Mr Sorbara: And you are?

Mr McLean: She is an assistant to the minister. The basic question is, did you meet with Mr Michener to have input? That is what I wanted to know.

Hon Mr North: I have met with Mr Michener a number of times on a lot of different issues; I will not say specific to this issue, but on a lot of different issues.

The Chair: A couple of people here have requested an additional question as well.

Mr Lessard: I wondered whether anybody else had a final question for the Minister of Tourism from our party, because my question is for the Solicitor General. I see that everybody else has asked one more question to the ministers who are leaving.

The Chair: Mr O'Connor, was your question for the Minister of Tourism?

Mr O'Connor: Actually, I would not mind if the minister could please answer one more question. I would just like some response towards the municipality. The act applies to the upper tier of government in a regional government where in a tourist area the whole region of government would not be affected. Why has the decision-making been left up to the upper-tier government?

Hon Mr North: I will say to you very frankly that this is a question that has been asked by Tourism Ontario; it has been asked by a number of different people. We are going to have to, again, go through these meetings and listen at length to what has been said and try to work out, by the time we finish with the bill and regulations, something that is amenable to everyone, so to speak. As frank as I can be with you, it is a question that has been asked by a lot of different people, and I am hoping we can come to some resolution of it.

Mr Sorbara: My question is for the Solicitor General. I understand the beleaguered Minister of Tourism has to leave us now. We regret to see him depart.

Hon Mr North: Thank you.

Mr Sorbara: We will have other questions later which support the proposition that this is a bill that favours the rich and patronizes the poor, but my question at this point for the Solicitor General has to do with his assertion during his opening remarks that this bill was the subject of broad consultation on the part of his ministry. I direct the attention of the Solicitor General to the draft regulations which he submitted as part of this bill. In clause 3(1)(4)

he provides that an application of a business entity to come within the tourism exemption and therefore have the right to be open on Sunday must get the Good Housekeeping seal of approval from a chamber of commerce or a similar bureau. I will quote the section:

"If there is a chamber of commerce, a convention and visitors' bureau, or a similar organization serving the area being considered, a letter indicating that the organization, or if there is more than one of them, one of those organizations, supports the opening of the retail business establishments in that area on a holiday."

The local chamber of commerce, which is a voluntary body in a community, is set up, by virtue of this draft regulation, as the arbiter as to who gets to open on Sunday, because if you do not have that Good Housekeeping seal of approval from the local chamber of commerce, then your application is not complete and you do not qualify. This puts the chamber of commerce right in the middle of the fiercest retail debate that is going on in our province right now, save and except the debate on cross-border shopping.

The executive director of the Ontario Chamber of Commerce wrote to us, wrote to the Premier and wrote to you after this measure was introduced by you and said that he had not heard one word from you or your ministry about setting the chamber up as the decision-making body as to who should and should not open.

The Chair: Do you have a question?

Mr Sorbara: Yes, I do.

What is even worse is that since the bill was introduced, you still have not contacted the Ontario Chamber of Commerce to ask whether it would be interested in taking on this terribly delicate role. How is it, I ask the Solicitor General, that you have put them right in the middle of the debate as to who should and should not open in a community, and you do not even have the respect, never mind the determination to consult, to ask them whether they are interested in that role? By the way, they are not interested and they will not do it. Why have you not contacted them since you introduced the bill to at least begin discussions about what you might be asking them to do under clause 3(1)(4) of your draft regulations?

Hon Mr Farnan: I want to add a comment to this. As it is an area that falls under the tourism section, I am going to ask the member of the Tourism ministry to respond.

Mr Sorbara: I am sorry. If I just might interject, these are draft regulations under the Retail Business Holidays Act and you are still the Solicitor General responsible for the Retail Business Holidays Act.

Hon Mr Farnan: Believe me, I am going to respond to you in some considerable detail. I am going to allow the representative of the Ministry of Tourism and Recreation to make a contribution.

Dr Joppe: If I may just read the first sentence of clause 3(1)(4) in the regulations, it says, "If there is a chamber of commerce, a convention and visitors' bureau, or a similar organization serving the area." It does not say a chamber of commerce must. If a chamber of commerce wishes not to help the retail business establishment making an application, any of the other business organizations in the community or in the area that applies for a tourism exemption is equally eligible to support that application.

Mr Sorbara: I am sorry. My question was, why did you not consult with the chamber before incorporating it in the legislation? Their position is that if they are forced to do this, there will not be any chambers of commerce because that sort of decision will tear them apart.

Dr Joppe: I would suggest that they are not forced to do anything in this regulation.

Mr Sorbara: They are already making a decision if they refuse to do it, because if the entity, like the local craft jewellery store, does not get the seal of approval and does not meet the criteria, it will not open. Even by refusing to participate in this silly little scheme, they are making a decision because they are refusing to do it. My question is about consultation.

Hon Mr Farnan: The member continues to make a fundamental error in presenting his question.

Mr Sorbara: No, I am not, Mike.

Hon Mr Farnan: In both the initial question and in his interjection following he used that the chamber did not want to be the decision-making body as to who opens or closes. In fact, this legislation does not give the chamber of commerce that kind of power. It has been very clearly pointed out that any one of a number of groups can lend its support to an application. However, the authority to grant or not grant an exemption lies with the municipality.

As a former alderman of the city of Cambridge, I can tell you that I can hardly recall an issue that affected the economic life of my community in which the local chamber of commerce did not have a very substantive presentation to make to council. I admired them for that. I certainly admired the chamber of commerce for its involvement in local communities, contributing its expertise, contributing its sensitivity to local community needs.

Mr Sorbara: On a point of order, Mr Chairman—

Hon Mr Farnan: Mr Chairman, if I may be allowed to finish, I would be very grateful.

Mr Sorbara: I am sorry. I do have a point of order. I asked a question about consultation with the chamber. I do not need a lecture on the important role the chambers play. I want to know about consultation.

The Chair: That is not a point of order.

Hon Mr Farnan: The member asked much more than the area of consultation and made many insinuations in his question that need to be rectified. I am in the process of doing that and I would certainly appreciate it if the member would allow me to complete my comment.

Mr Sorbara: I would like you to begin to answer the question.

The Chair: Mr Farnan, please do so.

Hon Mr Farnan: As I suggested to you, local chambers have expertise, have knowledge like other groups. It is my experience that chambers of commerce are very community-minded and are willing to make that contribution. Should an individual chamber not wish to be involved in that process, there are other groups. Indeed, during the process of these hearings I suspect we will have representatives of chambers of commerce who will come forward and make the case that Mr Sorbara has made.

However, the reality of the matter is that within the legislation is an effort to be sensitive to the local community. When we go to the chamber of commerce we are saying to it: "We want to work with local communities in order to do what is best for that community. As a chamber, you have your finger on the pulse of the community; you have your finger on the needs of the community; you have a contribution to make."

My own belief is that as we become more familiar with the legislation people will feel more comfortable, but certainly I am very interested in listening to the dialogue that will take place during the committee consultation. It is an area we can discuss.

Mr Carr: Just a general one on your statement of June 4: You said, "Our purpose is to provide for a common pause day for Ontario." I will read a couple of comments I have read in some of the papers:

"Sunday Business As Usual Under the New Law.

"The new provincial legislation on Sunday shopping shouldn't change things in Sault Ste Marie. It should allow Sault Ste Marie to stay open like it has in the past four years."

The mayor of Windsor says, "'All of Windsor would qualify as a tourist area allowing stores to open on Sunday under the Ontario government's proposed law,' said Mayor John Millson."

You say your purpose is to provide a common pause day, and yet mayors of two rather large municipalities say that will not happen, that there will not be a common pause day, that in fact they will be open, business as usual.

My question is this: How do you reconcile these differences to the public, that on the one hand you say something and yet other major, well-thought-of people in the community say something else?

Hon Mr Farnan: That is one of the dangers when we take little pieces of the puzzle in isolation. When we talk about a common pause day and leave that in isolation, then of course you run into difficulties.

The purpose of this legislation is to produce a common pause day that will strengthen families and communities, protect retail workers and enhance tourism within the province, which we recognize as a significant cornerstone of our economy. Obviously, there is a balance there. If you were to take the common pause day and close the lid, everything closes, but that is not what we are talking about. We are talking about a balance in terms of protecting retail workers, allowing the opportunity for legitimate tourism exemptions. Of course, there has been the occasional headline in the newspaper that gets things out of whack.

Mr Lessard: I just wanted to tell the Solicitor General that as a member of this committee I plan to be an active listener and make some constructive criticisms at the end of these hearings. However, there are some fundamental principles that I realize are not going to be changed, one being that there will be a common pause day for the citizens of Ontario.

As a member from a large border city, that being Windsor, one of the arguments or questions I can anticipate is that there need to be stores open there so they can compete with stores that are over the border. It is a community that has suffered the impact of cross-border shopping to a great extent. I wonder if the Solicitor General can address those concerns that I anticipate we will hear in the city of Windsor, that stores need to stay open on Sundays in order to compete with stores in the city of Detroit.

Hon Mr Farnan: I think it is very clear that there are two separate and distinct issues. I had meetings with the mayor of Windsor concerning this matter and he recognizes that fact. The seven-day-a-week, cross-border shopping issue is one issue. I think we have to be sensitive to the concerns of communities that are being affected by cross-border shopping, and this government has demonstrated that by involving itself in what we would call trilateral discussions with the federal government, with the local government and with the provincial government. But everybody is in agreement that a lot of the levers that most significantly affect cross-border shopping—the high interest rates, the GST, the failure to collect the provincial sales tax—lie within the hands of the federal government. There is no doubt that there has to be an ongoing determination by all politicians at every level to address real concerns of border communities.

In terms of the issue of a common pause day, the reality of the matter is that in British Columbia, for example, when there is wide-open Sunday shopping, there has been, I believe—I stand to be corrected—an increase by 400% in the cross-border traffic in terms of shopping, so they are two distinct factors. I think we would all accept that. Certainly the mayor of Windsor accepts it and accepts the fact that there have to be specially addressed programs geared to the cross-border shopping issue, but you know, this is the issue of common pause day legislation as it affects the entire province.

Mr Daigeler: My question is on the same point. I was going to ask you how you react to the link between cross-border shopping and the Sunday shopping legislation and you addressed it a little bit. However, you are saying that there may have to be some special arrangement. Are you referring also to special arrangements with regard to your legislation? Are you open to that? After hearing from the public on this matter, are you willing to make certain exemptions with regard to areas that are close to the borders, or were you referring to the broad government initiatives.

Hon Mr Farnan: I was indeed referring to the broader initiatives that refer to the border communities, but let me point out further that in the legislation we talk about not only maintaining tourism, but you will note the phrase in the legislation “to maintain and promote tourism.” Tourism in Ontario is in excess of $15 billion a year. As I pointed out already, it is a significant cornerstone of our economy, and that is why we recognize this as a significant exemption.

Mr Daigeler: So as a follow-up, what you are saying—

Hon Mr Farnan: Let me complete this thought. The same opportunities exist for border communities to take advantage of the legislation by enhancing their tourism, by developing within their areas legitimate tourism exemptions. I think any community, be it a border community or any other community in the province, but certainly a border community, has good reason to be constructive and creative in developing that tourism exemption.

Mr Daigeler: I see. So you are proposing they create tourism attractions so that they can in fact be open on Sundays and compete with the United States. Is that what you are saying?

Hon Mr Farnan: I think the way the legislation is constructed, it is designed to allow legitimate tourism exemptions to exist. I think all of us in Ontario who are concerned about our economy in a very competitive market, knowing that tourism is a competitive market and particularly competitive if you are in a cross-border community, want to enhance any advancement that would give a competitive edge to our border communities. I think that goes without saying.

The Chair: Mr McLean.

Mr Daigeler: I find this quite interesting and would like to refer to this. This involves what the minister just said.

The Chair: Thank you. Mr McLean.

Mr Daigeler: Mr Chairman, it has been tradition in these meetings that the opposition be given a reasonable opportunity to ask questions.

Mr Fletcher: On a point of order, Mr Chair: We agreed at the beginning that it would be one question and one question only and that we would go in rotation. I think the member was here when that was stated.

Mr Daigeler: I think it has been the tradition, unless the member opposite would want to change that and he had better be prepared to back it up, that there be flexibility towards the opposition members, especially when the ministers are here for a relatively short time. There have been flexible arrangements, with the two ministers sitting here for almost an hour.

The Chair: Mr Daigeler, you asked two questions and there was a previous agreement to rotate questions. Mr McLean.

Hon Mr Farnan: I would be happy to meet with the member after to clarify that.

Mr McLean: Minister, let's call a spade a spade. If the city of Windsor wants to pass a bylaw to allow Sunday shopping year-round, then there is no common pause day in the city of Windsor. Would that be right?

Hon Mr Farnan: The city of Windsor can in fact pass a bylaw under the current legislation that will open it wide open. Under this particular legislation it would have to do so bearing in mind that it would have to be addressing the criteria contained in the legislation, specifically the tourism criteria. It would have to be, in their view, a legitimate tourism exemption, and for those stores that did not meet certain specifications, they would have to be dealt with on an individual basis. So I would say even if it took the approach you suggest, there would be a lot of individual applications that they would have to deal with.

Mr Fletcher: I heard from the member opposite about this bill protecting and benefiting the rich. Would you agree that a bill that gives workers the right to refuse work is one that benefits the rich? As number of people in Ontario I know who travel around the province go camping, go to a trailer, which is usually called the working person's cottage. Again, is your bill one that is going to benefit just the rich?

Hon Mr Farnan: I think you have hit a real nerve when you ask the question and I think you have in fact answered it. The reality of the matter is that retail workers are very much unprotected, have to a great degree received remuneration that has not been very—not a particularly well-paying occupation; let me say that. It is a group that is significantly vulnerable, in many instances is non-unionized and has little protection. I would agree with you that you are talking about a group of workers who certainly would benefit from this legislation.

I would point out two things: There has been the presumption as the questioning has taken place today that people simply want to shop. When I talk to people, there are many people who say to me, “I do not want to work on Sunday,” and there are other individuals who suggest that they would like to have time with their family. It is not a black and white issue, as some members of the committee have tended to present the opening case. Neither should any member of the committee presume that it can be a black and white issue.

The reality of the matter is that there are many people who will feel this legislation is too wide open. Other people will feel it is too restrictive. There are different shades of opinion within the province. The reality of the matter is that I think the legislation does move towards a balance with a certain sense of addressing significantly important principles that we believe the majority of the people of Ontario endorse, and those are a common pause day, protection for workers who need protection and the recognition that tourism is an important aspect of our economy.

Mr Sorbara: I want to deal with the assertion from the member for Guelph and the minister that this is very great news for retail workers. This, I reiterate, is a bill that favours the rich and patronizes the poor.

Let us take, as a preamble to my question, the assertion that for the first time retail workers will—I am quoting the minister now—“be guaranteed 36 hours of rest in every seven days.” I want to tell the minister that if his government really wanted to do something, he could figure out a way to guarantee workers in this province 36 hours of work in every seven days. That is what workers are looking for—an opportunity to work full-time.

You cannot fool me on this one. I was the minister for two years. The real issue for retail workers is that they are being forced to work part-time. They cannot get 36 hours of work. They are split-shifted and they have all sorts of other problems. Their major problem is not, I reiterate, that they are unable to get 36 hours of rest in every seven-day period.

Let me just point out another example to you.

The Chair: Do you have a question?

Mr Sorbara: Yes, I do. Your legislation continues the distinction for drugstores between those that are under 7,500 square feet, which will continue to be allowed to be open, and those like Payless and Hy and Zel's, which are over 7,500 square feet, which are not going to be open. I suggest to you, sir, that those are the very discount drugstores you are going to require to be closed with your legislation, those where the poorer in this society can go and get real value. With the powerful entities in our society, like the Shoppers Drug Mart chain, all of its stores are going to be allowed to remain open. It is your legislation that is going to do that. It is your legislation that is going to make the choice.

How is it that in creating the common pause day the reality is that those of us who are affluent are going to have Ontario as our playground on Sunday, with much less traffic, and those who do not have cars are going to stay home? For them the province is closed down, but for those of us who are affluent, who can afford to be tourists, your common pause day makes Ontario our playground for a day.

Hon Mr Farnan: There are two aspects to the question. The first aspect, again, is when a member takes a narrow window in examining the issue. The member talks as though you can only shop in a large discount store on Sunday.

That, of course, is not the truth. The reality of the matter is you can shop in these stores all week.

Mr Sorbara: The thing is the expensive stores are open, but the stores where people of less means have to shop are closed, and you are doing that. So the presumption again is based on a false premise. Certainly, we are looking at a common pause day—

Mr Sorbara: For whom?

Hon Mr Farnan: —so that it will strengthen families and community values in Ontario, so that it will protect retail workers.

The member may want to take the point of rich and poor. There is a reality in life, and I do not dispute for one moment that there is a certain lifestyle. The member talks about going off to his cottage and enjoying the drive and stopping in a residential tourist area. Other people may have to do some shopping in a designated tourism area closer to home, and many people do that. Many people visit a flea market. We all try to do the best for our families in terms of providing them with a quality of life, but the key essential in providing that quality of life for a family is that all the members of the family have the opportunity to share it together.

It is one thing to be able to say, “My son will be working here and my daughter will have a part-time job here,” or whatever, “and the family will work a cycle of seven days a week.” I think there is a reality in this that suggests the purpose of the common pause day is to support family and community values, not simply dollars. Dollar issues are important, but there are other principles at stake. That is why when I talked to Gary earlier I said that I do not think it is possible or fair to look at this legislation and take one piece of the puzzle and say, “We'll stick that piece over here and we'll just examine it,” and then suggest that in examining it we can be critical. You have to put the pieces of the puzzle together. Then you have a balanced piece of legislation and then criticism is fair.

That is the kind of criticism I think I am most open to respond to, where people look at the legislation in a fair manner, look at the balance we have tried to achieve, look at the partnership we have tried to achieve with the municipalities, and then, if you are making constructive criticism of that balance and that fairness, I think your active listening during this process will help you to come forward with constructive suggestions.

Mr Carr: One of the concerns I know you have about the present legislation is how to protect the workers. I was reading another article where it said, “The Ontario government will have trouble enforcing the guarantee that a retail worker can refuse work on Sunday,” admits Solicitor General Mike Farnan.” I do not think this is a case of the headlines being wrong, because I happened to see the Focus Ontario show where you basically said that you were working to strengthen it. I guess that was back in June.

Hon Mr Farnan: I have to interrupt you. If you say you watched Focus Ontario, then you know that—Mr Carr: That you agreed with them. You said there is no question about it.

Hon Mr Farnan: You know that the thrust of the program—you want to isolate one line in that program.

Mr Carr: So you are not worried about it. You think the protection for workers is fine. Is that what you are saying?

Hon Mr Farnan: Let me finish. If you want to isolate one word, that is fine.

The Chair: Perhaps Mr Farnan—

Mr Carr: Yes, finish his answer, okay.

The Chair: Then you could respond to him and correct his assumption.

Mr Carr: I will go further. I will say that if you disagree with that, then obviously you think the protection is fine and you are not going to do anything. The question I had, in light of the fact that you are concerned about the protection and in light of the fact that this was back on June 8, is whether you have come up with any other ideas since that time to strengthen the protection for the workers, or are you satisfied that that is it, the protection is there. If you disagree with what you said on Focus or if you agree, it is up to you. If you do not think there is enough protection, what are you going to do to increase it, and if you do think there is enough protection, then I guess you are not going to do anything. I will leave it up to you. Go ahead.

Hon Mr Farnan: I would like to repeat what I have said, that of course I think we have to accept the fact that there will be difficulty in enforcement, but I want to reiterate very clearly that because something is difficult does not mean you do not do it. This would be ludicrous. We could have no progress in society if you said, "This is going to be hard to do; therefore we are not going to do it." The reality of the matter is that you can look at any piece of legislation and come to the conclusion and say: "Should we remove apartheid in South Africa? That is going to be difficult to do." Does that mean you do not do it?

Let me suggest to you then, as the Minister of Labour has pointed out, that there are provisions within this legislation that go beyond what was there previously and there is a very firm commitment, a very firm political will on the part of the government that the employment standards provisions of this legislation will be enforced. Workers are going to know they will be enforced, because this government will enforce them. Employers will know they are going to be enforced because this government is going to enforce them. When employers and employees understand that this government is determined to enforce those aspects of the legislation, I think they will work constructively to that end.

Mr Mills: Minister, the thrust of this bill is the protection of the retail worker, so I am applying for a job in a retail store—

Mr Carr: You are resigning your seat, Gord?

Mr Mills: Not yet. The owner of it comes to me and says, "Gord, I want you to promise me that you're going to work on Sundays." I need a job and I say, "Yes, I'm going to work on Sundays." For the first Sunday that comes up, 48 hours before the Sunday I say to my employer: "Guess what. I've had a change of mind. I don't want to work on Sundays."

Mr Poirier: You wouldn't do that, Gord.

Mr Mills: I would not. This is a hypothetical situation to understand this bill better. Would I then, as that employee, have the protection of the retail workers act? Even though I had agreed to work, can I give you 48 hours' notice and get out of working? Would I be safe with my job and would I have the protection?

Hon Mr Farnan: I am going to ask the representative of the Ministry of Labour to answer the question.

The Chair: Could you identify yourself?

Mr Flanagan: My name is Brendan Flanagan. I am with the policy branch of the Ministry of Labour.

In answer to the question, an employee is free to refuse Sunday work with 48 hours' notice once the person has been hired. Before they are hired the Employment Standards Act does not apply to them. Generally speaking, employers and employees are free to arrange voluntary Sunday work and in most cases both parties will agree to a voluntary arrangement. Where the employee wishes to exercise his or her right under the act, having been hired, then he or she is free to do so with 48 hours' notice.

Mr Mills: Excuse me, Mr Chair. It is a follow-up. Is it not allowed?

The Chair: Mr Daigeler.

Mr Daigeler: I did not say anything. I was quite prepared to grant you your follow-up, even though I am a little bit confused about the questions you are asking. If I am not mistaken, you are the parliamentary assistant to Mr Farnan, are you not?

Mr Mills: That is right.

Mr Daigeler: In that case, I would expect you to provide the answers, rather than ask questions. I would expect, and I ask the minister, over the hearings, will Mr Mills be representing you and listening to people, or will you be travelling with us?

Hon Mr Farnan: I will not be travelling. There will be members of my staff travelling. I would like to put forward the offer to the committee that my ministry and my staff want to facilitate the work of the committee as much as possible in the sense that if there are some statistics that you as a member of the committee would require—there is a significant database of information that was collected around specific issues that were dealt with in the previous legislation and that re-emerge in some form here.

Mr Daigeler: I certainly expect that staff representatives of your ministry will be travelling with us and will be available for these kinds of questions, but I think in terms of the political representation it has been the tradition that the parliamentary assistant is there somewhat to play the lead role when it comes to questions and policy. I presume that will be the case and certainly I will be addressing any questions I may have to Mr Mills.

Hon Mr Farnan: I would say the same thing, that we have great confidence in the contribution that Mr Mills will make, but I think the reality here has to be that we want to be open and positive and helpful in this process to every member of the committee. We want whatever information you feel is necessary to do your job. The resources of my ministry are there to try to provide that information.

The Chair: With that point clarified, and Mr Mills having no further ability, after Mr Farnan leaves, to ask questions, do you have anything else, Mr Daigeler?

Mr Daigeler: To Mr Farnan? Yes, actually I have, in follow-up to the previous question, where you said that—

Interjections.

Mr Daigeler: The chairman gave me the floor and, with your permission, I will ask my question.

You answered earlier that there is also interest in providing tourism promotion and that it may be an avenue under which municipalities can pursue tourism exemptions. Would you elaborate a little-bit on this? Would it be possible for municipalities to say, "This area has tourism potential and therefore we should designate it as a tourism area"?

Hon Mr Farnan: The ultimate decision as to a tourism exemption lies with the municipality. The municipality will make that determination based upon the criteria that are eventually worked out and agreed upon in third and final reading. The municipality would have to work towards legitimate tourism exemptions. Now, whether it is a tourism and convention bureau, I think there are always creative ideas at work about developing a local community's tourism potential. If this legislation were to act as an impetus to tourism in the province, I do not think that would be a side-effect I would have problems with at all.

Mr Carr: I too, like most of the other members of the committee, am concerned about some of the workers in this industry. I am concerned for one reason even more so. That is the fact that many of our retail businesses are facing a very precarious situation and many of them are going out of business. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business has called the new rules "a knife between the ribs for small business," because the struggle to meet the tourism criteria will add to the government red tape they already face. What would you say to a small operator of a retail business who is now going to have to go through the process with these various municipalities to get his exemption, and go through the chamber of commerce? What would you say to that small individual running a business that now is facing more government red tape because of your legislation?

Hon Mr Farnan: I believe that many small businesses actually want to close on Sundays. Many small businesses are caught in the tail-stream of the larger stores, department stores, etc, which may be opening. It has been expressed often enough that, "If we did not feel our market share was just being absorbed, we would be quite happy to close." The reality of the matter is that when we had the period when there was wide-open shopping, many small businesses expressed concerns that they were being forced to open against their will and were happy when some of the larger stores decided there was not a profit margin at a particular moment in time and decided to close.

I am sure we will hear a great deal during the course of the committee hearings. I suspect much of it will be in favour of the legislation, although I do not doubt there may be some that will question it and I would like to listen to those people. I am sure you will have input you might want to consider in the final summation.

Mrs Haslam: It was during the comments of one of my colleagues across the way that this question kind of cropped up. He was talking about the affluent going to cottages and shopping, and then commenting on the poor, the ones who need the drugstores open. To my way of thinking, it is the affluent who have the time and the resources who want to shop on Sunday. It is the poor who end up working on Sunday so the affluent can shop on Sunday.

I really question this idea of "leave the big drugstores open so the poor can shop on Sunday." They are working. They cannot shop on Sundays. The interrogatory part of my question is, I wanted to know if you felt that this proposed change in the legislation would give adequate protection to the retail workers.

Hon Mr Farnan: What is very important is that there has to be the political will. Very clearly, this government is determined to provide protection to the greatest degree possible for workers in this regard. Whether that can ever be totally absolute I think will remain a topic that continues to be open for discussion. The question really is, is it worth protecting workers? I do not think there is any doubt about the answer to that. These are workers who are underprotected, whose benefits are not significantly high, and who have to a great degree to work some extraordinarily difficult hours. Retail workers I think deserve protection, and that is why it is enshrined as a cornerstone of this legislation.

Mr Poirier: As I see a healthy debate coming up inside municipalities, and from one municipality to another, to designate what qualifies and what does not qualify to be a tourist service, are you not afraid this is going to take years of debate, in the courts even, before it is decided which gets that? I honestly try to see a law that will facilitate the designations, but I am sure that for a lot of businesses that want to be designated tourist, it becomes very subjective as to what is tourist or not.

With 839 municipalities across the province, I presume you are going to get quite a broad sector of different definitions as to what is and what is not tourist. How many municipalities have the capability, really, even if there is a will to designate what is tourist, to be able to do this? Once tourist operators see this variety of definitions that will creep up across the province, I presume, if I were in the justice system, I would see a hell of a field day coming up for a heck of a long time in Ontario before the dust settles and you have some kind of clear guidelines, if you ever can have clear guidelines as to what is tourist or whatever. How do you feel about that? Do you really see some short-term solution to all this incredible mess that is about to come up?

Hon Mr Farnan: What we are attempting to do, with the positive contribution of all members of this committee, is to develop an objective test by which these decisions will be made, and not a subjective test. Obviously, if it is simply subjective, of course that becomes a difficulty. When I suggest to you that this is an open committee that is prepared to listen—perhaps there will be discussion around regulation and around definition—I think that is a very healthy and productive discussion and one in which the community and the public can have meaningful input. To the best of our ability, I think we have to determine objective criteria that can be measuring rods.

Mr Carr: I know some of the municipalities were a little concerned that this is now going to be thrown in their laps. I was reading what the regional chairman from Hamilton-Wentworth said. He said: "Under the criteria that the province has outlined, we'd be hard-pressed not to grant an exemption. This is so vague, practically anyone can qualify." One of the concerns we have is that his region obviously, he feels, is going to be open, and that we might have another region, for whatever reason, that is not.

Are you concerned about the patchwork effect we are going to have, with one region open and one region not open? People will not know. It is going to be a confusing situation for anyone coming as a tourist from another jurisdiction. Are you concerned about the patchwork effect, that we are going to have some places open and some not, and that no one is going to really know? Is that a concern of yours, and if so, how do you see that being addressed?

Hon Mr Farnan: Well, is the glass half full or half empty? The reality of the matter is, would you like to see, as we would like to see, a sensitivity to local communities, to a degree, shaping community life within their borders?

However, we have attempted to bring to this issue a sense of uniformity across the province. The significant difference in this legislation as opposed to previous legislation is that what we have presented are provincial guidelines. Under the current legislation there are no guidelines. Under the old Conservative legislation there were no definitions. New Democrats and this government have stepped in with courage and said, "We will attempt this difficult task of definitions, and we will attempt to build in this sense of some guidelines so we can bring a sense of uniformity across the province."

It is not a small task, by any stretch of the imagination. I think we have gone a long way. I think it is very significant that this was mentioned in the throne speech. It has become part of the legislative agenda that completed first and second reading during the first 10 months of the new government. It certainly is a very clear commitment of this government to common pause day legislation and protection for retail workers, and to support tourism in our economy. This is very different from a patchwork quilt that would exist under the present legislation.

Mr Owens: I think the second question Mr Mills was attempting to ask was around the issue of probationary employees. The Employment Standards Act does not kick in until 90 days have elapsed, and some employers have probation periods even longer. How will this legislation protect that worker in the event that he or she decides he does not want to work on Sundays?

Hon Mr Farnan: Again, I am going to ask the representative from the Ministry of Labour to respond.

Mr Flanagan: Could you repeat the question?

Mr Owens: How will this legislation protect workers who are in probationary periods who do not want to work on Sundays? That is the bottom line. If their probationary period is 90 days and the employer decides he wants the employee to work Sundays and he wants to refuse, is there a method where, prior to probation ending or the employment standards legislation kicking in—how will he be protected?

Mr Flanagan: The employee will have the same rights as any other employee. When an officer is investigating, he can review the situation and order whatever actions the employer should or should not take to ensure the worker can exercise the right to refuse work that this proposed legislation has in it. The officer can ensure that the employee can exercise the right to refuse Sunday work.

Hon Mr Farnan: May we wish the committee well on its travels? I hope they have as good a time as I had when I toured the province.

UNITED FOOD AND COMMERCIAL WORKERS INTERNATIONAL UNION, CANADIAN REGION

The Chair: We now have a presentation from the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union. Mr Clifford Evans is the Canadian director. We have approximately half an hour. Usually that time is divided up with a quarter of an hour for presentation and a quarter of an hour for the questions which are presented in rotation from the various caucuses. Please feel free to start when you are comfortable. As well, could you please introduce yourselves into the microphone for our recorder.

Mr Evans: Today, making the presentation on behalf of the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union is Tom Kukovica, the service sector director, and I am Cliff Evans, the Canadian director of the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union. We are pleased to have an opportunity to appear before the standing committee on administration of justice to present our views on Sunday shopping and Sunday working.

Our organization is the largest private sector union in Canada, representing some 180,000 members in this country. Our members are employed in more than 20 sectors of the economy, including the retail, service, meat packing, food processing, brewing and beverage production and distribution, fishing, general merchandise, health care, shoe and leather and banking industries. We represent more than 70,000 working people in Ontario.

In addition, we are affiliated to the Ontario Federation of Labour, which represents more than 800,000 workers in Ontario. The OFL fully supports the efforts and views of UFCW Canada with regard to the matter of Sunday shopping and Sunday working. We believe our organization and the labour movement in general appreciate the government's efforts in bringing forth legislation aimed at enshrining a common pause day in Ontario and providing the needed restrictions on both Sunday shopping and Sunday work.

While this proposed legislation is an important step forward, the UFCW has five main areas of concern with the proposed amendments to the Retail Business Holidays Act. These concerns are related to the intent of the act itself, the municipal option, drugstores opening on Sunday, enforcement of the legislation and the definition of a "retail business." In this presentation we will present our members' views on each of these concerns and we will also address three other issues related to that of Sunday shopping and Sunday working.

The intent of the Retail Business Holidays Act is the first area of concern. The present act fails to recognize the right of workers to a common pause day. The proposed amendment in the legislation recognizes the need and importance of a common pause day in part I. The wording in the proposed amendments such as "shall take into account" and "should be maintained" is, however, too general. This achieves only a watered-down version of what is required.

Our recommendation is that to ensure that the intent of the act is consistently followed, the amendment of subsection 4(2) regarding municipal power should read, "The council, in passing a bylaw under subsection (1), must maintain the principle that holidays are to remain as a common pause day; that is, to ensure that they remain days on which most businesses are not open; days on which most persons do not have to work."

The second area of concern deals with the municipal option. The legislation implemented by the previous Liberal government provides that municipalities have full control over the decision to allow stores to open on Sundays or other holidays. There are no regulations, no criteria and no principles to guide municipalities in the making of decisions. The will of municipal councils simply predominates. The provincial government has no way of stopping wide-open Sunday shopping and working. One only has to look at the high rate of applications for exemption that are presently in the hands of municipalities for proof of the extent of the problem.

In the amendment as proposed, the decision-making process would remain in the hands of the municipalities. In addition, the regulation and criteria of the tourist exemption as set out in sections 1 and 2 and subsection 4(1) of the new amendments are so broad as to effectively restrict no one.

As reported in a June 6 article in the Toronto Star, Metropolitan Toronto Councillor Paul Christie stated, "Almost any of the city's busiest shopping areas would qualify for exemption from the Sunday shopping ban under the proposed tourist exemptions." The same article reported that lawyer Tim Danson has already been contacted by a significant number of stores from the Beaches area and from other parts of Metropolitan Toronto and the province to arrange a tourist exemption.

Under the proposed rules, decisions of the municipalities would be final, and the province, including the Solicitor General, would not be able to challenge this decision. In the view of the UFCW this proposal would lead to wide-open Sunday shopping and working, and as a result would fail to enshrine the common pause day as intended.

Our recommendations dealing with the recreational, entertainment and cultural pursuits of tourists as well as the goal of enshrining the common pause day can both be accommodated by the law. To accomplish this the UFCW recommends the proposed amendments be changed to reflect the following: a new subsection 4(1) to read:

"Notwithstanding section 2 and subject to the provisions of clauses 4(1)(a) and (b) below, the council of a municipality may by bylaw permit retail business establishments in the municipality to be open on holidays where it is essential for the maintenance and development of a tourist industry and where it is essential to meet the educational, cultural, leisure and recreational needs of the tourist; and

"(a) only retail business establishments in which the total area used for serving the public or for selling or displaying to the public in the establishment is less than 4,000 square feet; and

"(b) the number of persons engaged in the service of the public in the establishment does not at any time exceed four."

The government must establish a committee of the affected stakeholders that will prepare and recommend a new set of viable tourist criteria, the regulations. The stakeholders shall include representatives of the affected groups such as retailers, unions and government.

According to the amendment, the tourist criteria as proposed would not form part of the legislation. However, we recommend that the new set of viable regulations established by the stakeholders mentioned above be integrated into the legislation.

Subsection 4(8) must be modified to state, "The council's decision may be appealed by any interested party to the tourist exemption board."

The third area of concern deals with drugstores opening on Sunday. Under the present act, drugstores with a square footage of 7,500 square feet or less may open on a holiday. Currently, these drugstores must dispense drugs and the principal business must be the sale of goods of a pharmaceutical or therapeutic nature or for hygienic or cosmetic purposes. No other goods are allowed for sale, with the exception of sundries.

Unfortunately, there is a widespread problem with these drugstores selling soft drinks, potato chips, candies and other foodstuffs which are considered sundries. In many cases, up to 80% of the sales in these stores consist of products of a non-pharmaceutical nature. This occurs in spite of ample opportunity to purchase such non-pharmaceutical products provided through the numerous convenience stores that are allowed to open on Sunday. To compound the problem, the absence of a restriction on the number of employees working on a Sunday or holiday allows some drugstores to dedicate extra help for the benefit of sales of these non-pharmaceutical products.

In the proposed amendments that have been introduced, the government has not addressed the problem of large drugstores opening on Sundays. The proposed legislation also fails to put a restriction on the number of employees allowed to work on a Sunday. These drugstores in all practical terms have turned themselves into general stores selling lawn furniture, lawnmowers and a wide variety of other items.

The recommendation of the UFCW is that clauses 3(2)(c) and 3(2)(d) of the present act be amended to read as follows:

"(c) the total area used for serving the public or for selling or displaying to the public in the establishment is less than 2,400 square feet.

"(d) the number of persons engaged in the service of the public in the establishment does not exceed at any time the number four, including the pharmacist, who must be present in the establishment during all of the business hours."

Currently, there are many drugstores with a square footage of 2,400 square feet or less in many communities in Ontario that provide ample opportunity for the population to receive needed medication or other prescription products, particularly in the case of emergency. Additionally, prescriptions and other medications can be obtained at various hospitals and clinics where an on-site pharmacy is open on Sundays.

The limitation of four persons including the pharmacist to be engaged in service to the public would allow the prescription or other medication needs of the people of Ontario to be fully met. Our recommendation would require a pharmacist to be present during business hours in the establishment in order to attend to the prescription and other medication needs of the people, which addresses the real reason for drugstores remaining open on Sunday.

The fourth area of concern is the enforcement of the legislation. Under the present act, there is a provision for maximum fines of $50,000 upon conviction for illegal Sunday opening. Also, municipalities or the Attorney General of Ontario can apply to the Supreme Court of Ontario for an injunction to close an establishment that is opening illegally. However, there are no minimum fines. In many cases, the courts are imposing fines of $300 upon conviction. This is hardly a deterrent.

Under the present act, only two parties, the Attorney General of Ontario and the municipalities, are allowed to file for an injunction. Unfortunately, these two parties are in many cases not aware of violations or are not interested in filing for an injunction.

The proposed amendment by the government would impose a minimum fine of $500 for the first offence and $2,000 for the second offence. We fully support the principle of a minimum fine; however, the proposed fines are far too low. We believe the amount of the proposed minimum fines will not deter retailers from opening on Sundays. In fact, a retailer's profit for one day could easily surpass the amount of the fine.

Under the proposed legislation there would be no change with regard to who can apply for an injunction. As a result, we foresee the same problems of little enforcement and no action continuing. In order to address problems relating to the minimum fine being an insufficient deterrent and the lack of enforcement, we recommend the following.

The proposed amendment of the minimum fine under subsection (3.1) be modified to include, "For first offences, the minimum fine for conviction be $10,000, and for subsequent offences, the minimum fine for conviction be $20,000."

Under subsection 8(1) we are proposing that it be amended to read, "Upon the application to the Supreme Court by any affected or interested party, the court may order that a retail business establishment close on a holiday to ensure compliance with this act or regulation under this act."

At present, legislation similar to UFCW's proposals exists in Quebec, allowing affected parties to apply for an injunction. This legislation has proved to be both workable and effective.

According to a report by the Metropolitan Toronto task force dealing with the issue on Sunday shopping, the cost of enforcement in a single case, beginning with the investigation of the retail business premises and concluding with the laying of the charge, was approximately $70,475 in 1989 in terms of personnel hours alone. The projected annual cost in terms of personnel hours for enforcement was approximately $109,762 for 1990.

We believe higher minimum fines, combined with the threat of an injunction filed by affected parties, would be an effective deterrent to retailers who want to open illegally on Sundays. As a result, effective enforcement and the threat of enforcement would reduce the costs as outlined above.

The fifth area of concern that we have deals with the definition of a retail business. Under the present act, the definition of a retail business does not include club warehouses such as Price Clubs. This flaw allows giant stores in the guise of membership clubs to be open on Sunday. The proposed amendment that the government has introduced has not addressed the existing problem relating to the definition of "retail business." As a result, club warehouses will continue to operate on Sunday.

It is our recommendation that in order to prevent the circumvention of the act by establishments such as Price Clubs, clauses 1(1)(b), (c) and (d) of the present act should be amended to reflect the following:

"(b) 'retail business' means the selling of goods or services by retail to any member of the public, including a member of a club or co-operative or any other group of consumers.

"(c) 'Retail business establishment' means the premises where a retail business is carried on. Any space or stall in markets, particularly in covered markets and flea markets, shall be considered to be a retail business.

"(d) 'Principal business' means that portion of the business which accounts for 80% of the retail business establishment's gross sales."

We would also like to bring to the committee's attention some general concerns that we have, and the first of those is to suggest strongly to the committee that Sunday shopping and Sunday working have nothing to do with cross-border shopping. Canadians are going to the United States in record numbers and these numbers continued to grow even during the period in which stores were open in Ontario on Sunday.

In British Columbia, where Sunday shopping and working has existed for a number of years, the existence of open Canadian stores has not slowed traffic to the United States. Cross-border shopping trips in British Columbia increased 400% between 1987 and 1991, in spite of widespread Sunday openings in the province. On a national basis, Statistics Canada reported a 15.2% increase in shopping in the United States in January 1991 over the same month in 1990.

In reality, there are many reasons for the growth of cross-border shopping: the recession; the high level of the Canadian dollar; high taxes in Canada, especially federal taxes; the introduction of the goods and services tax; the promise of cheaper goods and easier border transit put forward by the federal government to boost the Canada-US free trade agreement, particularly during the 1988 election campaign; reduced duties on US-made goods under the free trade agreement; lower prices in the US resulting from economies of scale, razor-thin profit margins, currency advantages, lower taxes, restricted social programs, the absence of regulations and lower energy costs; lower gasoline prices in the United States; reduced enforcement of Canadian laws and collection of duty and taxes at the border; reduced confidence in Canada by many Canadians; and US investment in advertising designed to attract Canadian shoppers.

Cross-border shopping is causing the loss of billions of dollars' worth of economic activity for Canadian business—sales of retailers, orders for manufacturers, and business for service companies coming from both consumers and other companies. Many thousands of Canadian jobs have been lost in the retail manufacturing and service sectors and countless other jobs are threatened.

While it is essential to stop or at least slow the flow of cross-border shopping as quickly as possible, it is important not to develop Band-Aid solutions or quick fixes that will not last. More importantly, wide-open shopping and working on Sundays will not solve the problem of cross-border shopping.

Sunday shopping and working and tourism is another point that we would like to raise. According to the proposed amendments to the Retail Business Holidays Act, the tourist exemption as proposed would be granted by the municipality only where it is essential for the maintenance and development of tourism. As previously stated, the proposed criteria for the tourist exemption are far too broad and far too general and would provide too much leeway for municipalities to operate as the sole decision-makers. As a result, the exemption as proposed would lead to wide-open Sunday shopping and Sunday working.

Clearly the government has not achieved a balance between the establishment of the principle of a common pause day and the development of tourism. However, by accepting our recommendations we believe the recreational, entertainment and cultural needs of tourists can be met without opting for wide-open Sunday shopping and wide-open Sunday working.

We also would like to leave with the committee our feelings concerning Sunday shopping, Sunday working and the family. The amendments provided by the government would lead to wide-open Sunday shopping and working, affecting a significant number of workers and their families in Ontario. We believe these workers and their families have a right to a common pause day. Retail workers and their families are directly affected by Sunday shopping and Sunday working. That is more than two million people in Ontario. In addition, police, transportation, public workers, maintenance staff, delivery drivers and other support services for retailing, which represent another 250,000 workers and their families, would also be affected by wide-open Sunday shopping and working on Sundays. Ontario needs a common pause day for workers and for their families.

In conclusion, our goal in the UFCW has always been the enshrinement of a common pause day for retail workers, for workers in related sectors and for their families. The amendments to the Retail Business Holidays Act proposed by the Ontario government, while representing a move in the right direction, would fail to ensure that this goal is met and would serve to open the door to a further erosion of the common pause day.

We firmly believe that by accepting our recommendations the maintenance of family values and the establishment of a common pause day can be realized. UFCW Canada is prepared to work with the government of Ontario and other groups to develop and implement lasting, workable solutions which serve to establish a common pause day and at the same time strengthen the economy of this province and benefit all the people of Ontario.

The Acting Chair (Mrs Haslam): I would like to offer our sincere thanks for coming here today. Looking at the time, I have two people already on the list. I am going to ask that each questioner keep his questions brief and we will ask that for the answers also, because we only have five minutes in which to complete this presentation.

Mr Daigeler: May I say that I am very impressed with your brief. I have been a member now for a little bit more than three years and quite frankly I think your brief strikes me as one of the best in terms of being very concise, very direct, identifying problems and putting forward very useful and precise recommendations on what you would like to see happening. I am not necessarily saying I am in favour of all of these things, but I think what you have done—in fact, I am going to use your brief as an example for some other interest groups that may wish to make representations on other matters as well.

That being said, you referred to presenting your case obviously on behalf of your membership. Sometimes in the press, and I guess by others, it is said that it is the union leadership rather than the union membership putting these views forward. How do you consult with your membership so you can arrive at these proposals and say you are speaking on behalf of your membership?

Mr Evans: We have a number of local unions in Ontario that represent the 70,000 members we represent, and the locals range in size from 13, being the smallest, to 45,000, being the largest. They have different methods of doing it.

If you were to look at the largest, being the most difficult, they hold regional stewards' conferences, regional educational conferences. I have attended many of them, as has Brother Kukovica, and the Sunday shopping issue is always a major issue, and has been, particularly in the last eight or nine years. The membership is solidly behind these proposals.

I appeared on a television program recently, and they had sought out a part-time food store cashier whom I have never met in my life before that day. She, quite frankly, was a better spokesperson on behalf of the issue than was I.

The Acting Chair: I am just going to stop you there because I am trying to allow a minute. Mr Carr, I am trying to keep it to a minute, so if you can ask a question in a minute.

Mr Carr: Yes, I will be very brief. I want to thank you for taking the time to come and do an excellent presentation. I had a chance to listen to Tom for I guess about two hours at our last Conservative convention, and I appreciated his help at that time as well. He was there to give input. I see him laughing. He probably did not tell too many people he went to a Conservative convention, but he was there to help out, and I thank you.

The Solicitor General said the purpose is to provide for a common pause day in Ontario. Very simply, do you think he has succeeded in doing that?

Mr Evans: With the proposed legislation?

Mr Carr: With his legislation.

Mr Evans: Not unless these amendments that we are recommending are adopted.

The Acting Chair: That was great.

Mr Evans: And I might say—

The Acting Chair: It was almost okay. Fine, go ahead.

Mr Evans: I might say that our organization believes we are not in the business only of identifying problems but also to attempt to identify solutions.

The Acting Chair: That was very good.

Mr Fletcher: Cliff, thanks for being here. It is an excellent presentation. It is nice to hear from the people who are going to be affected by this legislation, primarily the working people of the province.

I have had an opportunity to talk with many of your members at labour council meetings and also at the UFCW walkathon, and what you are saying is what I have heard from many of the members.

You raised an interesting point; you raised many interesting points. I really enjoyed the recommendations and I can support many of them, and we are going to be listening as we go around the province. One of the things you did raise was the cross-border shopping issue, and I would like to tackle that right on. I know that many members of the opposition, when we were forming our committee to travel, wanted to hit many border towns to try to show the correlation between the two.

Stores are open in the US. You have already partly answered this quite well. Is it going to have an effect on Ontario retailers as far as Sunday shopping is concerned?

Mr Evans: Fortunately or unfortunately, I have been in this business and in this union and its predecessors for going on 40 years. Cross-border shopping was never an issue until the high dollar, the high interest rates and the programs developed by the current federal government were imposed on the people of Canada. I cannot factually tell you that I have done an exhaustive survey and have a finite answer, but I think in many instances the cross-border shopping, especially in the province of Ontario where I talk to people on a regular basis, is a revolt against the GST. Now, if you go cross-border shopping you will find out that dairy products are cheaper, children's clothes are cheaper, booze is cheaper, gasoline is cheaper, and they attract them across the border with those loss leader advertisers. So the federal government is well in control of the solution to the problem to bring cross-border shopping to a grinding halt and, as a matter of fact, to turn it around and go the other way.

The Acting Chair: I believe Mr Poirier wanted to just end with 15 seconds.

Mr Poirier: Yes, thank you, Madam Chair. Congratulations, it was an excellent presentation, and being a francophone, I was impressed that you would do it in both official languages of Canada. I was intrigued by the Tory blue and the Liberal red, I must admit. Thank you very much.

Mr Evans: Jean, we were running out of paper, that is what happened.

TOURISM ONTARIO INC

The Acting Chair: We would now ask that a submission from Tourism Ontario, Mr Roly Michener and Mr Bill Biggs, would come forward.

Mr Michener: Thank you, Madam Chair. Regrettably Mr Biggs could not be with us today. He operates an integrated retail business establishment in northern Ontario and, fortunately, he has been very busy of late. So I am here to represent Tourism Ontario.

Tourism Ontario is a private non-profit federation of tourism and hospitality associations whose more than 7,000 member businesses account for a sizeable portion of the commercial lodging, food service, hospitality, recreation, travel, and transportation services available in Ontario. This submission is supported by the following member associations of Tourism Ontario: Attractions Ontario; Hotel Association of Metropolitan Toronto, whom you will hear from immediately following this presentation; Motels Ontario; Northern Ontario Tourist Outfitters; Ontario Convention and Visitors Association; Ontario Hotel and Motel Association; Ontario Marina Operators Association; Ontario Motor Coach Association; Ontario Private Campground Association; Ontario Ski Resorts Association; Resorts Ontario; and 11 Ontario travel associations.

The social and economic importance of the Ontario tourism and hospitality industry is very substantial indeed, and I would refer you to that page in the submission which outlines just how important it is to the economy of this province. Our federation believes that in a free and democratic society the public should have the unrestricted right and freedom to choose whether and where they wish to shop any day of the week and at any time of the year. Thus retail shopping should be permitted throughout Ontario where and when retail business establishments perceive the need to provide it.

Similarly, Ontarians should have the unrestricted right to work, earn incomes, and profit from the production and sale of goods and the provisions of services any day of the week.

Retail shopping is an integral part of the tourism experience, and represents a significant portion of the value of all tourism expenditures in Ontario. Most retail shopping, dining out, touring, sightseeing, and recreation takes place on weekends. Clearly, the majority of Ontarians and visitors to Ontario favour unrestricted retail shopping on Sundays and holidays as part of family activities, and I would underline that.

Tourism Ontario is of the firm opinion that unless and until the government of Ontario is prepared to recognize these fundamental rights, freedoms and marketplace realities by abolishing the Retail Business Holidays Act, Ontario is destined to continue to lose billions of dollars worth of annual tourism and retail sales to bordering American jurisdictions which are wide open for retail business on Sundays and holidays.

Further, whereas we see some merit in Bill 115 and commend the Ontario government, particularly the minister and Ministry of Tourism and Recreation, for endeavouring to recognize the value and importance of tourism in this legislation, in the end analysis we fear it will result in costly and time-consuming administrative burdens and litigation as municipalities, retail business establishments and organizations endeavour to interpret, comply with and apply the proposed provincial tourism criteria in the context of a common pause day.

Regrettably, the inconsistencies, confusion and conflicts outlined in the proposed amendments to the Retail Business Holidays Act and pursuant regulations may not result in the desired positive interface and co-operation between the public and private sectors to realize and capitalize on the tremendous economic and social benefits of retail shopping as an integral part of tourism throughout Ontario.

Therefore, we would respectfully request that members of the standing committee on administration of justice seriously consider the following changes which should be made to the proposed Retail Business Holidays Act amendments and regulations in this regard. They are as follows:

Under regulations:

Tourism criteria: Subsection 1(2), tourist area characteristics: The list of characteristics for a qualifying geographic area should be expanded to include the following tourism criteria: tourism in the area has historically been an important part of the local economy, and provides goods or services necessary to tourist activities in the area.

Subsections 2(1) and (2), retail business restrictions: This whole subsection is redundant and blatantly discriminatory and should be removed from the proposed regulations. The number of persons serving the public and the floor space occupied by a qualifying retail business establishment should have no bearing on its ability to meet common tourism criteria.

Paragraph 3(1)2, tourism season qualifier: These time periods will vary within a designated tourist area, as will the length of tourism season for various types of qualifying retail business establishments for a wide variety of market-driven circumstances. Therefore, we recommend that this qualifier be removed from this subsection.

Subsection 3(2), exemption application procedures: Again, we would make the same comment as we did for subsections 2(1) and (2), namely, that they are openly discriminatory.

Retail Business Holidays Act amendments:

Empowerment of local municipal councils: Clause 1(1)(aa) of the Retail Business Holidays Act, 1989, should be amended to permit all local municipal councils within a district, county, metropolitan or regional municipality to enact bylaws to permit retail business establishments in each local municipality to be open on holidays for the maintenance or development of tourism. It is duplicative, unnecessary and unfair to burden metropolitan or regional municipal councils with applications from local councils regarding designated tourist area exemptions, as is currently the case.

Council's obligations, subsection 4(7): Municipal councils should not be granted discretionary power through which they can refuse to pass a designated tourist area bylaw permitting any or all retail business establishments which meet the provincial tourism criteria and that apply for exemption to be open on Sundays and holidays.

Council's decisions, subsection 4(8): To make a given municipal council's decision final on whether or not it wishes to pass a bylaw to permit retail business establishments in a municipality to open on Sundays and holidays for the maintenance and development of tourism defeats the whole purpose of it having such authority in the first place. That is to suggest unequivocally that no legitimate reasons or causes could ever be presented to a municipal council which had refused to designate a tourist area under a tourist area bylaw exemption, regardless of merit, including future development of tourism infrastructure or ventures within said municipality. Surely, in a democratic society, which the government of Ontario is committed to for all of its citizens, such a draconian clause should be withdrawn.

Procedures of councils, clause 4(9)(d): Municipal councils should not be granted the power to limit the number of applications from retail business establishments that they will consider in a given year. Businesses should be free to apply for the exemption at least once every calendar year.

Cabinet regulations, clause 4(10)(a) to 4(10)(d): The provincial cabinet should clearly articulate these regulations as part of Bill 115. It is unfair and unreasonable for public and private sector interests to be asked for comment on this bill without the benefit of clarity in this regard. We see no reason for the Ontario government to usurp or duplicate the authority accorded municipal councils under this act except to provide direction and simplicity in the required content of applications and the capping of fees for the processing of applications.

Classification of retail business establishments, subsection 4(11): We are unalterably opposed to any such vague and discriminatory authority being granted to the crown or municipalities under this act.

Contents of bylaws and regulations, clause 4.2(a) to 4.2(f): The Retail Business Holidays Amendment Act, 1989, established similar parameters which were arbitrary, potentially discriminatory and altogether unworkable for many municipalities and retail business establishments in them. We would strongly recommend that clauses (a), (d) and (f) be withdrawn from this section of the amended act because they are inconsistent, undemocratic, discriminatory and unfair.

Transitional rules: Whereas Bill 115 purports to support and protect Ontario's tourism industry through the provision of province-wide tourism criteria to exempt qualifying retail business establishments from Sunday and holiday closing requirements, it also establishes a minefield of obstacles and potential obstacles to the realization of these laudable objectives as previously articulated in this submission. Therefore, it is completely unreasonable to require that all municipalities in Ontario comply with the transitional rules laid out in Bill 115. Rather, we would forcefully recommend that subsection 6(2) of the Retail Business Holidays Amendment Act, 1989, as constituted by the former government, be retained as transitional rules for the purposes of the Retail Business Establishments Statute Law Amendment Act, 1991.

Common pause day: The concept of a common pause day in Ontario is outdated, outmoded, unnatural and misplaced. In our contemporary and pluralistic society tens of thousands of Ontarians must work at all hours of the day and night throughout the week in resource industries, in the processing, manufacture, packaging and distribution of all manner of products, and in the provision of a broad range of goods and services to our citizens and others. While some people rest, others conduct business and provide services.

The Ontario tourism and hospitality industry must provide value-for-dollar quality products and experiences and good service on an uninterrupted basis to patrons from domestic and foreign markets 7 days per week and 365 days per year, with some seasonal and geographic limitations. The market appeal of our industry is driven by the demand created for its products, experiences and services in an extremely competitive international market, and the supply of them by willing entrepreneurs, professional management and staff, and to a very substantial extent by various Ontario government ministries and agencies. We must provide these products, experiences and services to our patrons when they want them or risk losing them to other competing jurisdictions. Thus the concept of a common pause day is totally alien to our industry and to many other segments and sectors in our economy.

Tourism values: We are often asked what constitutes tourism. Tourism is the direct supply of goods and services to facilitate business, pleasure and leisure activities 40 kilometres or more away from the home environment. It covers a broad range of products and services including: transportation, that is, airline, auto, motor coach, rail and marine; accommodation; food and beverage services; live and participatory entertainment, ie festivals, events, culture and the arts, athletic competitions, business and social gatherings; conventions, meetings and symposiums; amusement activities, including those of a leisure nature, recreational and educational; and to a very significant extent, retail shopping in all of its dimensions.

All manner of activities are encompassed by tourism, such as visiting friends and relatives, urban and country touring and sightseeing, soft wilderness and wilderness lodging, camping and leisure pursuit, historic and heritage site visitations.

The Ontario Ministry of Tourism and Recreation, with assistance and support from the private sector in tourism, has carefully segmented its substantial tourism marketing initiatives to create the greatest possible public awareness of and demand for the products, services and experiences offered by our industry in our target markets throughout the year.

Retail shopping is a major tourism activity in Ontario. In virtually all of the research which has been conducted of resident and foreign visitors' travel in Ontario, retail shopping constitutes one of the top three tourism-related activities. In 1988, for example, retail purchases represented $2.2 billion of all tourism expenditures in Ontario. Direct jobs in that year created by the retail sector amounted to the equivalent of 29,000 full-time jobs or 14% of the total direct employment in the tourism sector. The total impact of tourism-related retail purchases in 1988 on tax revenues generated by the province was $366 million for Ontario, $134 million for Ontario municipalities, and $602 million for the federal government.

The majority of all tourism-related activities, including retail shopping, takes place on weekends.

The Ontario government, through the Ontario Ministry of Tourism and Recreation, invests a substantial portion of its multimillion-dollar annual tourism marketing budget in the active and aggressive promotion of retail shopping and touring in the province. Non-resident visitors are encouraged to shop and to stay in Ontario through a very productive provincial sales tax refunds for visitors to Ontario program, which was established by the province in 1977.

Sunday and holiday shopping has become an economic necessity for many thousands of Ontarians as they struggle to balance working realities with personal and family responsibilities. It is also a primary tourism activity for families and individuals who travel to and within our province, and who combine shopping with entertainment, sightseeing, touring, dining, recreational activities, festivals, and events.

The province of Ontario and all municipalities in the province benefit directly and considerably from tourism expenditures. Both levels of government are constantly searching for new and incremental sources of revenue to fund all manner of social services, enhanced and enriched education for our citizens, better health care, improved roads, and affordable housing. Government recognition and protection of tourism values and the operational realities of our industry at both the provincial and municipal level will enhance significantly the ability of government to provide said services for our citizens.

While we commend, once again, the efforts of the minister and the Ministry of Tourism and Recreation to recognize the value and importance of tourism in Bill 115, we are very concerned that the full potential of our industry as it relates to Sunday shopping as a major tourism activity will not be realized unless significant amendments are made to the Retail Business Establishments Statute Law Amendment Act.

We respectfully recommend therefore that you, the standing committee on administration of justice and the government of Ontario, seriously consider all of the facts and recommendations which we have rendered in this submission.

Mr Poirier: What very direct, to-the-point recommendations pertaining to the definition of "tourism"—what do you expect to see if things remain the way they are proposed as per who decides what and where and with whom pertaining to what is a tourism-related business?

Mr Michener: In this bill, sir?

Mr Poirier: That is right, yes.

Mr Michener: We expect to see a hodgepodge. We expect to see ongoing litigation in the courts as retailers endeavour to force their rights. We expect to see municipalities wrestling with this interminably and having a great deal of difficulty in ascertaining just what they should be doing in all of this to enhance tourism in their respective jurisdictions. I would bring you back, once again, to one of the recommendations we made, and that is that specifically this committee consider granting local municipal councils the right to make the determination as to what constitutes a tourist area exemption, and hearing depositions directly from, hopefully, qualifying businesses within the local municipality. As things now stand, for example, in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, if one of the cities within Metropolitan Toronto wishes to enact a tourist area exemption, it would have to go to Metro council. This is going to create enormous problems for a metropolitan council in a city the size of Toronto, and we would strongly urge that you consider making that a local option in the truest sense and permitting local councils, ie, the city of Toronto, the city of North York, etc, and franchising them to make these determinations locally.

Mr Carr: One of the concerns I had that I expressed to the minister just before this is, what would happen if we end up with a patchwork effect, if one municipality opens and another one does not? From your perspective, what would happen to a tourism business that was adjacent to an area that was possibly open and his was not? What impact do you think that would have on the tourism industry in the municipalities that were closed?

Mr Michener: Very good question. I think it would have a very direct impact and it would be to the detriment of tourism in the adjoining municipality. There is no question about it, because we do know very well, as I mentioned in the brief, that retail shopping activity constitutes one of the top three tourism-related activities of people who are travelling and visiting with friends and relatives and so on throughout Ontario, so it would have a very direct and unfortunately a detrimental impact on businesses in the affected municipalities.

Mr Fletcher: Just before a question, I have a comment. Looking at your brief on page 8: "It is worth while noting that of more than 10,000 inquiries and complaints with the employments standards branch...fewer than 15 were related to the right of retail workers to refuse work." Knowing the workplace, with the present legislation, I do not think I would have complained either. I would have been put under a lot of strain and stress. That is one of the things that I am trying to get at: the employment standards changes that protect the rights of workers to refuse work have been strengthened, and I know your group is not happy with it. Your brief is very good. It is to the point, and I do sympathize with some of your concerns, but not all, and the one that I am having a problem with is the right of workers to refuse.

You make some assumptions in your brief. On page 15, you are talking about people who are available for work and they want to work. They want to have the right to work. "Many of these people and others are or would be happy to work in a retail business or retail business establishment on Sundays and holidays." That is hard to accept as an assumption, that that is a way a lot of people do think.

The Chair: Do you have a question?

Mr Fletcher: I am just going on like Mr Sorbara. "If employees in our industry are treated with dignity and respect by employers whose businesses are so dependent on staff attitude"—I agree with you that whenever I am in a tourist area, that is what usually does sell the place to me, but not all employers are benevolent and not all employers are going to treat their people with respect, and I think that is one of the reasons that the Employment Standards Act has been changed, to protect employees in that way.

As far as your industry is concerned, as you do say that all employees are protected under the Employment Standards Act, would it have a great effect, having that piece of legislation in where employees are protected, if there are so few people who are going to complain and if the employers and the business people are so benevolent? That does not really matter, the changes to the Employment Standards Act. That is not going to kill the tourist industry.

Mr Michener: Well, let me put it to you this way: If you walked into a restaurant and there were an insufficient number of people available there to serve you at a given point in time, would you be happy? Would you be likely to return to that restaurant?

Mr Fletcher: Since you asked me the question, that is another assumption, that people are going to use the law in the way you see it. As you said before in your brief, people who are working in the tourist industry know they are there for that specific reason and their performance is what does bring the people back. So I am saying to you it is not a crucial factor in the tourist industry. I do not think you will—

Mr Michener: Well, we believe it is, and we also believe that management must reserve the right to schedule work and work schedules. That is a fundamental premise I think in any business, but particularly in our business. We have to be there when the customer calls. We have to have appropriate service available when the customer calls, and as we mentioned in our brief, people who work in our industry willingly accept the fact that they are going to be working variable hours throughout the week, including, in many cases, Sundays and holidays as well.

Mr Fletcher: If we have time, Mr Chair, I will come back to the question at the end.

Mr Daigeler: The minister when he was here earlier made much about consultation that has taken place. I just would like to hear from you to what extent and what way your federation has been involved in the preparation of this legislation. What was the consultation that has taken place before the drafting of this legislation?

Mr Michener: The consultation entailed the minister and ministry staff preparing a number of options for our consideration in terms of provincial tourism criteria that might be considered. Beyond that, we were consulted, as were most of the other groups that will come before you, by the Solicitor General's office directly. We met with the Solicitor General, met with tourism officials at the same time, and officials from the Ministry of Labour. We were presented by the Solicitor General's office with a series of criteria to consider, a series of options to consider in terms of employment standards. That was the extent of the consultation. We were asked for our views and we willingly gave them at the time.

Mr McLean: When I saw Bill 115, I felt the criteria that are laid down with regard to tourism would include pretty near everything. I see today you have added a couple more, and I am not so sure they would be necessary. In your opinion, what stores would remain closed if a council wanted to pass a bylaw in the city of Windsor to have open Sunday shopping? Could they not do it now?

Mr Michener: No, nothing over 7,500 square feet would likely qualify under this bill.

Mr McLean: But everything under 7,500 would, whether it is a shoe store, clothing store, whatever?

Mr Michener: I am not sure. I could not say that with total authority either, but anything over probably would not.

Mrs Haslam: I was interested in your comments on page 5 about a council's decision and to make a given municipal council's decision final. What type of appeal process would you like to see in place if you do not like to see the municipal council's decision being the final one?

Mr Michener: I think that within the realm of municipal councils, if indeed the empowerment is with municipal councils, an appeals mechanism has to be struck.

Mrs Haslam: You would like the appeal process kept within the municipal council?

Mr Michener: If that is where the empowerment is going to be, yes. If the empowerment is going to be provincial, then it would be provincial responsibility.

Mrs Haslam: Could I ask for a clarification on that, please. Here you are saying, "To make a given municipal council's decision final defeats the whole purpose of its having such authority in the first place." What I am saying is, if you do not want the final decision left at a council level, are you asking for an appeal process, and if you are, I would like to know what kind of appeal process you want to see. You are saying the appeal process should still be at the municipal council level.

Mr Michener: I think it has to rest with the level of government which is responsible for enacting bylaws in this case, and that would be municipal council.

Mrs Haslam: For clarification, I am just asking what kind of an appeal process you perceive?

Mr Michener: I do not know. Perhaps you should go back to the Solicitor General's department and ask the people who drafted—

Mrs Haslam: That is what this committee is for, to ask you, and that is why I am asking you.

Mr Michener: We just think it is far too arbitrary to say that the decision of municipal councils is firm and final, however it is struck, one side or the other of this act. We think there must be an appeals mechanism struck within this legislation which permits municipalities to hear appeals. How frequently, how many, and from whom, I do not think anybody has thought their way through, but we just think it is far too arbitrary for municipal councils to be forced, in the first instance, to make a firm and final decision that is binding and non-appealable on an issue as important as this.

Mrs Haslam: But you would like an appeal process kept at that level?

Mr Michener: Sure.

The Chair: Thank you, Ms Haslam. Thank you very much, Mr Michener.

Mr Michener: Thank you.

Mr Poirier: How many subs was that, Karen?

Mrs Haslam: Not subs, clarification. It was the same question; I just wanted to make darned sure of the answer.

HOTEL ASSOCIATION OF METROPOLITAN TORONTO

The Chair: We now have representing the Hotel Association of Metropolitan Toronto, Mr Edward Robinson. Mr Robinson, I am sure you saw from the previous submission, we basically have about half an hour. Take that time whichever way you wish to. Typically it is half an hour for your presentation and half an hour for questions. Please commence when you are ready, sir.

Mr Poirier: Half an hour for everything, including questions.

Mr Robinson: I have not started and you are fighting about it already.

Mr Poirier: I say clarification.

The Chair: Clarification. Half an hour divided typically in half.

Mr Robinson: Okay, I get the message. We will make it half an hour.

Mr Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, my name is Edward Robinson. I am the executive vice-president of the Hotel Association of Metropolitan Toronto. We have 115 members and represent 30,000 employees in the Metropolitan Toronto area.

Our industry is, and remains, on public record as being in favour of unrestricted Sunday and holiday shopping as a vital and integral part of the entire tourism infrastructure. We also believe it is the inalienable right of every Canadian to work, earn income and profit from the production and sale of goods and services regardless of the day of the week.

We believe the government of Ontario in its wisdom is prepared in a positive and substantial manner to recognize the value and importance of tourism in this proposed legislation. By the year 2,000, if not sooner, tourism will be the largest industry in the world, bar none. It is already Ontario's largest private sector employer and the largest industry in the service sector, accounting for 70% of all new jobs.

Ontario has recently experienced and—unfortunately, with the way the world is going, free trade with Mexico looming on the horizon—will continue to experience substantial losses in industrial and manufacturing jobs. Tourism, if properly managed and nurtured, is the only industry poised to pick up the slack in this sorry unemployment scenario.

We urge you, the standing committee on administration of justice, to convince the provincial cabinet and government caucus that the diversity of factors which encourages tourism and travel to and within the province should be reflected in the proposed criteria for tourist area exemptions and permit substantial retail business activity within these areas on Sunday and holidays.

The committee heard and will hear from various tourism groups the importance and indeed the vital nature of tourism for our province and country. You have just heard from Tourism Ontario, a federation of which we are a member, all of the facts and figures relating to tourism and its extraordinarily positive effect on the province's economy as it relates to jobs, foreign exchange, etc.

Tourism Ontario, in this extremely well-thought-out brief, also addresses the regulations as they pertain to tourist area characterization, retail business exemption, etc. Rather than attempt to reinvent the wheel and reiterate its compelling analysis of why Sunday shopping must be allowed, I would like to briefly talk to you about tourism in general.

Tourism as an industry rarely receives a big level of public acceptance and recognition commensurate with its vital share of economic activity. One of the major reasons for this is the lack of hard statistical data on the true value of the industry. Indeed, most existing statistical systems, government and private sector alike, fail to adequately document the full scale, scope and impact of tourism-related activities.

This lack of documentation of tourism's broad impact on economies, societies and indeed tax revenues leads in turn to a lack of understanding and sympathy by politicians, public policy officials and the general public towards the industry. Similarly, privately or publicly funded entities dependent on tourism visitations may not receive adequate data about their industry or related tourism industry elements to plan, manage or market effectively.

Many nations, Canada being in the forefront among these, still place all their emphasis and their public policies on agriculture, mining, raw resources and manufacturing as the countries' major sources of economic strength, failing to further the economic power of tourism and the service industries in general. Indeed, most provincial governments and the federal government spend billions of taxpayers' dollars subsidizing agriculture, mining and manufacturing, while the tourism industry seldom requests and hardly ever receives grants or subsidies of any description. There are indeed some exceptions to this.

It is a well-known fact that the tourism sector has historically received far less extensive treatment in national statistical programs than the basic industries with which most politicians are familiar. It is therefore axiomatic that one gives short shrift to anything one knows little about. In fact, tourism activities are often perceived as being frivolous and therefore of low priority, regardless of their high employment levels and foreign trade earnings.

That Sunday shopping is an issue up for public debate at this time clearly proves this point and illustrates the lack of understanding and awareness politicians, civil servants and the general public have of tourism and the vital role it plays in both domestic economies and the overall world economy. It would be fair to say every Third World developing or fully developed nation in the world recognized long ago the vital importance of this ubiquitous industry.

Sunday shopping is a very emotional issue. It conjures up visions of fathers and mothers being torn from the bosom of the family, of heartless employers holding guns to the heads and threatening the jobs of employees, of empty church pews, etc. Nothing could be further from the truth. Sunday work has been an acceptable and time-honoured profession for hundreds of thousands of hotel and restaurant workers in Ontario and Canada from the day the first inn opened its doors.

Hotels stay open 24 hours a day 365 days a year, usually only closing when the wrecker's ball comes to claim it. Thousands upon thousands of people, such as those employed in the running of essential services, telephone, hydro, airports, etc, also work on Sundays. The point is, the world does not come to a screeching halt on Fridays at 5 pm and reopen for business on Mondays at 9 am.

Between the middle of 1989 and today, at least 8,000 employees in my association of 30,000 have been laid off. Any one of these people would, I submit, gladly work at any job every Sunday in the year rather than accept unemployment insurance or welfare. We are the only industry capable of reducing welfare rolls significantly. Nurture, encourage and protect this industry and watch it perform miracles in reducing unemployment. Put up roadblocks, such as the elimination of Sunday shopping or tax us to death, and suffer the consequences.

We therefore urge all Ontario municipalities to work with our industry in recognizing the social and economic benefits which tourism in all of its dimensions, including Sunday or holiday shopping, brings to hundreds of communities throughout Ontario 365 days a year.

Mr Poirier: Mr Robinson, if the provisions go along the way the government wants to right now, what do you see happening in the tourism sector?

Mr Robinson: The problem as we see it at the moment is the ambivalence of a lot of the provisions proposed by government. As I say, we are in favour of wide-open Sunday shopping. Every survey ever conducted by the Metropolitan Toronto Convention and Visitors Association clearly reflects shopping as being in the top three things people want to do on Sunday in Toronto.

The name of the game is competition. We have to remain competitive in the tourism industry among the world, North America especially. The moment we become uncompetitive—as we are now with the high dollar, with the GST, granted, and we have heard that—we will lose untold jobs in the industry. We will also lose our industry.

The tourism dollar is extremely discretionary. It goes where the value is best, and we know that. Every time we take a vacation, we plan our vacation and we go where our money buys the better deal. This does not change province to province or country to country. So we are concerned with what is proposed, with the confusion which will result from a bill which is totally unclear.

Mr Carr: I want first to thank you for your presentation. I suggest with it now being left up to municipalities, you are going to have to be a part of doing this over and over again. Just in that regard, what is going to happen to a lot of members of your association is they are now going to have to go to municipalities and lobby for what they would like to see. Have you been able to piece together how much, in terms of time and manpower, that will cost to do that? How do you see it happening?

There have been some comments by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business that this is nothing more than red tape. I wonder what your comments are. How much effort will it be for members of your association to begin the lobbying process that will inevitably go across the province now?

Mr Robinson: Red tape, nightmare, passing the buck—we see all of these things happening. It is going to be difficult. We have limited manpower and resources. We simply want governments at all levels to use their common sense about this problem called Sunday shopping. We do not want it to be further politicized. This is a political football. It is being passed around from province to municipalities. The federal government has been blamed for most of the ills of cross-border shopping, so we see it as being more a political football and a very emotional issue than one of reality.

The reality is that Sunday work and Sunday shopping are with us and will be with us for ever. The point I made in my brief is that every one of us enjoys, when we have Sunday off, somebody else's work on that Sunday, whether it is watching television or a ball game or going to see the Blue Jays. It does not really matter. It is here; it is to stay. No one forces people to work. So what I say is, let's remove the emotion from this issue and look at it the way you should look at it.

Mr Mills: My response is that I think our government recognizes the importance of tourism to a degree at the present time that has never been recognized before. You say governments do not care about tourism and I think that we really care. We do care and I think that is reflected in the proposed amendment to the legislation.

I would like to thank you for your presentation. We are here to listen to briefs, to people like you, with an open ear and hopefully to fine-tune the legislation further down the road. This is a draft amendment, and we are listening and we will be looking at everything. But I want to reaffirm that in our government one principle that is not negotiable is the fact that we are committed to a common pause day and that common pause day commitment was made prior to the last election and probably was a big issue in that election. We are here, so I will presume that most of the people who supported us are in support of the policy.

The Chair: Have you got a question, Mr Mills?

Mr Mills: The question I have is, and I am entitled to a preamble to get to that question—judging by the flexibility that you give to our absent friend over there—do you not see anything positive in the tourism criteria that we are proposing to introduce in this amendment? Does it not satisfy you in any way at all?

Mr Robinson: First of all, I think if you read my brief, I did not say that governments did not care. I said they did not understand tourism.

Mr Mills: Well, I think we do.

Mr Robinson: I do not really think you do. Really and truly, tourism is an extraordinary industry which is very little understood at all levels of government. So, having said that, what was your question?

Mr Mills: Do you see anything positive at all in the tourism criteria? There must be something.

Mr Robinson: In what is proposed in Bill 115?

Mr Mills: Yes. Can we make it work?

Mr Robinson: Well, from what I have seen of it, I would have to preface my remarks to say that I think it can lead to tremendous confusion. I think this business of a common pause day is anachronistic. It is outdated, it is old-fashioned. Maybe we have had it for ever in Ontario, but that does not mean it is not time to look at it again.

This bill protects only retail workers. What about the hundreds of thousands of other workers who work for government who must work on Sundays to provide essential services? Why do you not protect them or bring out a bill to protect them? Why only retail workers? You are totally inconsistent with this.

Mr Mills: I can answer your question. We protect retail workers because we see in those folks the people who are most affected. They are not unionized. They really have not much protecting them. They are really low-paid, and they are really at the mercy of the employers.

Mr Robinson: I think that is nonsense, Mr Fletcher. That is absolute nonsense.

Mr Mills: No, Mills is my name. Fletcher is gone.

Mr Robinson: Mr Mills, I am sorry. I really think that is—

Mr Mills: Thank you very much. I am not going to get into an argument.

Mr Robinson: We do not take advantage of people. There are laws which prohibit that.

Mr Daigeler: Thank you for the presentation. I must say, though, coming from a European background, I am a little bit struck both by your presentation and the earlier presentation which see so little connection between tourism and what I consider to be the concept of pause and leisure, ease, enjoyment, beauty, not doing anything. Quite frankly, I would have thought that tourism is very much related to that, and that as people in the tourism industry you would see a tremendous role for moving away from that emphasis on work and perhaps re-emphasizing recreation and leisure and let's work less.

There is a tendency in Europe to shut all things down on Friday afternoon. I am really surprised. Some of my relatives stop working now on Friday afternoon, and they are off the whole weekend. We seem to be going in the opposite direction.

I must say I am wondering a little bit. You said that the third priority of tourists who come here is shopping. May that be because there is nothing else to do and is it perhaps our role to create some attractions that will bring tourists there?

Mr Robinson: But does that mean you do not want them here on Sunday because everybody goes on vacation?

Mr Daigeler: No, but I am saying I think there is a relationship between—and I personally support the idea of a common pause day—a pause day and tourism and leisure and recreation. I think there is a relationship. I do not think you can just say "Let's just throw it out."

Mr Robinson: I understand where you are coming from. However, you come from Europe, and I guess you are probably a skier and had some of your finest moments on the slopes on Sundays—

Mr Daigeler: Right.

Mr Robinson: —which is a major day of activity in Switzerland or throughout Europe. Somebody has to provide those facilities. That does not mean that people work seven days a week. It means that they are off Mondays and Tuesdays instead of Saturdays and Sundays. It means they are off Wednesdays and Thursdays instead of Saturdays and Sundays. What I am saying is that the idea that Saturdays and Sundays are sacrosanct is long outmoded and outdated. Saturdays and Sundays are two days of the week where a tremendous amount of business, especially in the tourism industry, is conducted. You cannot close every hotel on Sundays. Most business people check into hotels Sunday evening to be ready for Monday morning's work. Somebody has to provide those facilities to cook a meal for them and to make their beds.

Most people go on vacation—and I doubt anyone here would dispute this—and include Sunday as a day of their vacation. Wherever they go, Disney World, Disneyland, Sunday is a big day. We make the most of it. Someone has to provide those services. Those people who work Wednesday through Sunday get Monday and Tuesday off. That is how it has been working in the industry for years. Nobody works seven days a week. That is against the law in any event. It compensates for it. Everybody loves weekends, but those of us in the industry who work weekends get another two days off. Families do not suffer. People who work Sundays are not bad, wicked, evil or perverse, contrary to some of the comments we have been hearing. They are law-abiding citizens who look after their families.

Mr Carr: I would take it one of the major competitors for the tourism dollar would be US citizens who potentially could come over here or go, for example, in New York state and stay in their own area. What are your statistics on the number of Americans as a percentage of the tourism that affects your association, and how do you see this affecting them if we were to remain closed? Do you have any idea? It might just be a guesstimate, but I wonder if you could fill us in. I guess the gist of it is, are we losing American tourist dollars because of being closed on Sunday?

Mr Robinson: I think it would be catastrophic. I really could not give you a figure, but as I mentioned earlier, for people who go away for a weekend, Sunday is 50% of their weekend. The Eaton Centre is an attraction. It is a world-wide recognized attraction. People do not only want to shop there; they want to see it. It is like the CN Tower, perhaps Ontario Place, the dome: it has a name about it. If we remove these attractions then we limit again the number of people who want to visit Toronto.

It goes back to the old days where everything closes on Sunday. The visitors can go elsewhere. There are all kinds of other places competing successfully for the tourism dollar. This is what scares us: that every time we lose a customer he may go somewhere and like it better, find it cheaper and never come back, and spread the word. That is already happening. Our hotels are extremely hard hit this year. Thousands of people have lost their jobs. We just do not need anything else muddying the tourism waters and making it difficult for people to enjoy Toronto, which is what this may do. We know you all care, we know you are all responsive, otherwise you would not be here. We recognize that and appreciate it, but you have to see that it is not just an issue of Sunday shopping. It is far more than that and it is far greater than that.

Mr O'Connor: I want to thank you for coming here today and giving us your submission. There are quite a number of things I do not agree with—in fact, perhaps even somewhere close to the majority of it. In the legislation we are looking at we are trying to come up with a piece of legislation that is going to protect the worker. You, in fact, on page 3 mentioned your workers. Your workers quite often are those single parents who would like to have that common pause day. What we are trying to do is come up with some legislation that enshrines that common pause day and that right for that individual. That is what we are looking at.

What I would suggest, and perhaps to you as a representative from the tourist industry, is help us in the tourist criteria and try to help us to find that area and maybe recognize the fact that we as legislators want to protect the worker. We have a role to play here and protection of the worker is important. That is something that we are seriously looking at.

As far as the tourism criteria, we are looking for some advice and we want to be serious about this and discuss this. You have not talked about the criteria an awful lot in here. Sunday shopping is not the issue, you are right; a common pause day is the issue. That is what we are trying to look at. In the tourist criteria, is there anything that you think can be used to enhance the protection of the tourist criteria that are there now? That is where I would like some creative thinking, because you have pointed out the people who are affected by it. We recognize that and we want to protect those people as well, but let's try to help the industry here; let's come up with something to designate the tourist criteria that need to be put in there.

Mr Robinson: My comment would be, why do you have to have a common pause day? I said it earlier: If an individual works in a hotel Wednesday through Sunday, he is given two other days off, Monday or Tuesday. Why does it have to be common? I said that was an outdated notion, and I believe that. People do have pause days. I said the idea of a common pause day, which is being floated here and is a political issue, is out of date.

By bringing in legislation which muddies the tourism waters, by bringing in stops which could affect the visitation of people to Toronto, you are not helping the employees. They are already at risk, and at high risk. Already at least 8,000 jobs have been lost directly because tourism is down in Toronto. I am just talking about Toronto in my little association of 30,000. You know the figures because you see them on your welfare rolls. All of those people moved to unemployment insurance and then on to the welfare rolls. That is where they are right now.

We are the biggest employers of minorities, women, youth, native people in Ontario. The minute the economy turns around and we start filling our hotel rooms, we bring all those people back off welfare immediately, because we employ them. So we want your help in supporting tourism, not in muddying the waters and bringing in common pause days and making it difficult for the visitors—the tourists—to enjoy themselves or have free access to the city, to do what they want to do.

Mr O'Connor: I sure hope that the members of the Legislative Assembly consider the fact that protection of the worker and 36 hours of rest is not outdated, because I think protection—

Mr Robinson: I never said that.

The Chair: Thank you, Mr O'Connor.

Mr Robinson: I never said that. You know I did not say that.

The Chair: Thank you, Mr Robinson.

Mr Robinson: Thank you very much, ladies and gentlemen.

CHINESE COMMUNITY FOR THE FREEDOM TO WORK

The Chair: Do we have the delegation from the Chinese Community for the Freedom to Work? Thank you. We have approximately half an hour, Mr Woo. Please feel free to use that time as you wish. Typically, people use approximately half for their presentation and then half for questions from the members of the committee. Please feel free to start when you are comfortable in doing so.

Mr Woo: My presentation will be simple, but some of the arguments may not be that sweet, at least to some of you, to hear. My name is K. K. Woo, organizer of the Chinese Community for the Freedom to Work, which is a petition movement asking the Premier to repeal the Sunday shopping law.

As of now, we have gathered over 40,000 Chinese Canadian signatures, signed, mostly, by the grass-roots people, such as homemakers, unemployed workers, students, restaurant cooks, waiters, waitresses, grocery cashiers, senior folks and garment and factory workers.

Though it started out as a grass-roots movement in the Chinese community, we ended up getting over 200 Chinese organizations' support, not just in the province of Ontario but also across Canada. For example, the Chinese Canadian National Council is in complete agreement with our emphasis on the freedom to work and the right to choose.

I am going to talk about our petition beliefs, because I feel it is very important so that you see where we come from. It is important also because, before we ask people to sign their names, they must understand what the petition is about. So for those who have signed the 40,000 Chinese individual signatures and the 200-plus Chinese organizations, here are the following beliefs:

1. The right to work: We believe that the right to work is a basic human right and no law should be made to infringe it.

2. The freedom to choose: We believe that the freedom to choose when to work is a basic individual freedom, that no law shall be made to violate it. It is good that we are seeing the proposed legislation which protects workers who do not wish to work on holidays or Sundays, but what about those who prefer and choose to work on Sundays? Can the government trust individuals' ability to choose and decide? That is the question.

3. The provision of subsistence: It is of utmost importance that we state this point, because we really believe that the provision of subsistence for ourselves or our family is regarded as something sacred and honourable in the Chinese culture. The less government interference, the better.

4. Family shopping days: We believe that Sundays and holidays are habitual shopping days for most Chinese families. We would not like to see a street like Yonge Street all closed.

5. Chinese community shopping needs: Since Sundays and holidays are important business days for Chinese workers and employers alike to make a living and to serve the shopping needs of the Chinese community, in our free economy we really would like to see the community needs and the marketplace settle the issue of Sunday shopping.

6. We believe that full employment enables us to be productive residents of Ontario contributing fully to the province.

7. During these difficult economic times, as we all know, the law, in our viewpoint, threatens our livelihood and employment. On this point, we do not question the motivation of the present government to put in such a law. We believe you started out from something well intentioned. But our perception and the feeling of the effects are that the law affects our livelihood. We all know that this is a time of unemployment and underemployment and not a time of full employment.

The last point is public opinion. We feel the government should respect the people's will and expressed opposition to the act, as shown in most public opinion polls.

Regarding the present status, if you come to our community you will find that we are nervous and confused about both the present and the proposed legislation. Even the police are making contradicting interpretations about the law. Right now in Chinatown you have police running around, playing the role of a judge they do not even know of, telling us what the law means. Some police will tell us, "If you close one weekday, then we'll let you open on Sundays." Some people say, "That's not so." Then we have some other police telling us: "If you're operating a bookstore it's okay to open, but don't let me catch you selling pencils and stationery. If you don't hide them, I'll give you a ticket." So that is the way it is now in Chinatown.

To conclude, I am here today to inform you of our viewpoints and position, because we believe an informed government is an enlightened government and legislation that reflects the people's needs is enlightened legislation. This is our way of supporting the government. We are grateful that you provide us this opportunity, and please feel free to contact me or other members of the committee if I can be of any further help. And one last note, if political realities dictate that there be some kind of Sunday shopping legislation, let's formulate it in a way that causes least inconvenience to our livelihood. Those are my comments and I am open for any questions.

Mr Daigeler: Thank you very much for your presentation. I was wondering, in your tradition or in your community, is there such a thing as a concept of a common pause day?

Mr Woo: Not really, other than in the general statement we work hard and we play hard. Other than that, there is no such thing as specific. But we know the importance of having a balanced life. We believe that, and we place great value in family togetherness. But I am seeing some danger here that when we use the term "good for the family," if that is the case, maybe one day we will have a law banning divorce, which might even do better for the family.

Mr McLean: I thank you for your petition and your comments. Is Chinatown open now on Sunday, mostly, or just specific stores?

Mr Woo: Mostly, but nobody dares to say, "I am open because I have the right," or "I know the law so well that I can open." There were stories that some new residents or new immigrants were watching out for the police and then they were screaming that the wolf was coming, and then they found out it was only a taxicab driver with a cap or something who resembles a policeman. So that is the comprehension and it is a very nervous and tense atmosphere, and I urge members of the committee, if you have time, to come down on Saturday and Sunday, particularly on holidays, and come in and take a look at how nervous they are, and talk to them.

Mr Mills: I was under the understanding that certain segments of Chinatown now are designated a tourist area. Is that correct?

Mr Woo: That is the general notion. I think those people have a greater confidence opening, those people within that so-called designated tourist area and who are selling tourist-related material, which is very specifically defined. I guess you cannot sell shoes or clothing, even though one can claim it is for a gift. So it is pretty confused and we do not really understand the law, both the present and the proposed one.

Mr Mills: It was my understanding that there was an area designated as tourism, Chinatown, and all I was going to say to relieve any anxiety you may have about the legislation changing that is that what is in place now will stay as it is. There will not be an application needed to be made to get the tourist designation, because what is in place now is in place. If that is going to help you, your worrying about this, that you think the right to work, the freedom to choose a day, is in jeopardy, it is not.

I feel very restricted in this way of questioning. You ask the question and then you cannot say any more and it is not really conducive to good debate here.

The Acting Chair (Mrs Haslam): But I am giving you leeway right now, Mr Mills, and it is because I can see agreement from other members. So I appreciate what you had to say.

Mr Mills: I was going to say some more things too, but I cannot.

The Acting Chair: Well, no you cannot, not until I offer that same opportunity.

Mr Poirier: Mr Woo, with what is proposed, the way municipalities will have to decide what qualifies as a tourist business, what do you see happening in your community? You seem to point to confusion right now. Could you explain to me what you would see happen if the present propositions come forward so that municipalities decide, "Your business is tourist-oriented but not that one." What would you see happening? How would you react?

Mr Woo: I believe the criteria of tourism is a good step if the legislation has to be in place somehow, because it helps to reduce some confusion. At least there are some certain criteria, which we did not have before, thanks to the hard work of people in the Solicitor General's office, who have kindly met with us. I am giving them a compliment that I feel they deserve.

But the thing is that I cannot answer the question. For example, people say: "Okay, now we are in the tourist area and we are being approved by the city council or any municipalities, but can I sell clothing? Can I sell shoes?" That I do not know how to answer. I do not know whether anybody can tell me. Those are our concerns. We say, even though we are qualified as a tourist area, are we only limited to those "tourist-related merchandising services"? That is an example of confusion that I do not know how to answer. I do not know whether anybody in the room or any staff from the Solicitor General's office can shed any light. If we can, I think it would be acceptable, because then we can always try to apply. There is a way. We worry that there is no way to apply, because, stated clearly, we are out of luck, "Why did you choose to go into the shoe business or clothing business?"

Mr Carr: Thank you for not only taking the time but for the amount of work you must have done to get the signatures. I applaud you for trying to get the information out to the members of your community.

One of the questions I have is along the same lines, that if we make it a situation so that they are going to go before councils with regard to getting exemptions, we have heard from different associations that say the red tape is time-consuming and very difficult and they have better things to do with their time to try and survive in business than be sitting in front of politicians, which certainly can be very tough at times. What extra problems are there for your community—I am thinking in terms of language—in dealing with, say, Metro council? They are confused. Is part of it not knowing what to do or how Metro council will operate? Is that what you are trying to say the difficulty will be?

Mr Woo: That too. We really do not know who to contact. You will notice that in this case our organized groups in the Chinese community are not that vocal, I think partly because they do not know what to say or to be happy about or to be angry about. We just do not know. We find it difficult to understand the legislation. We find it more difficult to see whether we should apply to the Metro council or to city council. Unfortunately, most of us believe that: "Hey, we know the cops. They won't give us a ticket." I do not think that is really too valid a point.

Mr Carr: This is not another question, but if it would help, I know you offered to get together. I would be pleased to try and help you out as best I can afterwards. So maybe we could do that, depending on what happens with the legislation. I think all members would be willing to do that, but I would be pleased to help out.

Mrs Haslam: Or somebody from the ministry. I am sure he asked for a ministry clarification and the Chair—

Mr Carr: Well, no, if they have to go to Metro council, the ministry is not going to help them to go to Metro council and things like that.

Mrs Haslam: Oh, that too, yes, but right now for the confusion.

Mr Woo: So it is not city hall we are talking about now.

Mr Carr: Yes. I am saying when you do have to go city hall, if in fact so many members have to go before municipal council or whatever, we would help out and I am sure any of the members would be pleased to do that.

Mrs Haslam: Your local MPP.

Mr Woo: Also, I noticed—I even flipped through the whole agenda—there are very few participants from the Asian community, whether they are Koreans or Indians. I cannot read their minds, but I do know that probably some of us do not want to attract unnecessary attention. I think the fact I am here maybe hopefully would dispel some of that doubt. It is unfortunate that we are not more vocal, so we have our responsibility that we should bear as well. But I am very grateful for the opportunity to be here.

Mr Owens: Mr Woo, I do not know if you can provide the committee with an answer today and you may want to go back and speak to your colleagues in the community, but I would be interested to know what kind of recommendations you would be wanting to see to help us make this legislation more culturally sensitive to groups like yours and other groups out there in the province that have expressed similar concerns such as you have.

Mr Woo: Two suggestions, one general and the other one specific. Let me go with the general.

I feel that it would really help if some members of this committee continued this kind of consultation process with members of the Chinese community by including coming on Sundays for dim sum and chatting informally about what they feel. Do they really feel that strong, or you might even find that some of them are really scared, thinking life is already difficult enough with the recession.

The other specific recommendation is that maybe we should put more attention to the local—I think it is good to pay attention to protecting tourism. Maybe you people can also pay attention to the local community needs. I think that might help, or at least that might be productive in terms of being culturally sensitive.

It is really disappointing for me to see there is no Asian output there, even a more vocal output. We have so many organizations there and just everyone seems to be watching for, waiting for something more concrete. I think by this time you might be too late.

The Chair: Thank you, Mr Woo. Further questions? Mr Poirier.

Mr Poirier: Maybe they are like MPPs, Mr Woo; they always like to keep a low profile. Who knows?

I look at your petition beliefs here, and to follow up on the question that Mr Owens had, what I read in your petition beliefs, I see recommendations as to what you would like to see. Reading between the lines of your petition beliefs, it would seem to say that you do not believe, or maybe the principle of a common pause day does not, pardon the expression, rest well with the cultural traits of your community in the sense that for you a pause day does not necessarily have to be common with the Sunday. Do I read that correctly?

I am trying to interpret what you are asking us. I am trying to look at the possible recommendations following your request for how we can help to make it better. What do I see? Can you interpret for me your petition beliefs? If you had to write the law or rewrite the law or make some amendments, what would you add or subtract from what is proposed? Would you remove the common pause day provision? Would you give total freedom to choose whenever you want to open, whoever wants to open, wherever one wants to open? Is that what I read in your petition beliefs?

Mr Woo: Number one, to respond to your question, we believe it is important, as I said before, to have a balanced life, both work life and non-working life, to relax and to be with the family.

Number two, the "common pause day" is really a new concept because for most Chinese, although we have a lot of Christians and I am one of them, it is a new concept.

We are here to express our viewpoint. But we want to be part of the mainstream. We do not want the law to be specifically written to protect us as a group of Chinese. We believe that position is both dangerous and not conducive to national unity. We are open to any refinement so that there will be some kind of "common pause day" or some kind of rest if the community needs are being served. That is as specific as I can get without getting into partisan politics.

Mr Poirier: You still want the freedom to open on Sunday, though, do you not? Is that what I understand?

Mr Woo: Yes.

Mr Poirier: You want to decide if you open on a Sunday, yes or no?

Mr Woo: We prefer to be able to work on Sundays, yes, unless you or other members of the committee can tell me, that for the overall province it is just not fair or not viable or not proper to open on Sunday because it carries certain disadvantages which outweigh the freedom to choose and the right to work.

Mr Poirier: Okay, thank you.

Mr Carr: The only other question I had was with regard to when you put this 40,000 petition together, would that have been people who were in all segments of the industry? Did you go after specifically somebody in the tourism area, for example, or was it anybody in particular that you got? How did you get all these names?

Mr Woo: We mostly gathered those names from Chinese communities in Chinatown, the downtown district, in Mississauga, in Scarborough. Those are the major areas.

Mr Carr: So they were not just people in the industry, say, the tourism-related industries like hotels and so on? They could be in any industry?

Mr Woo: Yes, they could be in any industry. What we do is we tell people to sign their name if they agree with the petition letter which stated eight beliefs. Those people who do agree sign their name.

We do not really actively persuade people to sign it, for one thing, because of the lack of manpower and, second, we believe that our beliefs are so commonly shared that we really did not need to do that much. So nobody got paid to be a volunteer. We put up some tables in shopping malls and every time the police came and the shops closed, at least temporarily, we could see there would be an increase of signatures during that period.

Mr Mills: Mr Carr touched on a couple of things I was going to mention. The 40,000 signatures are not necessarily 40,000 signatures from people that are in small business. They would be perhaps people who are employed in the hospitality industry. Would that be correct?

Mr Woo: They might be.

Mr Mills: They might be. But they are not so-called bona fide businessmen, these 40,000 signatures?

Mr Woo: It is open to the public, so—

Mr Mills: The public, okay. Having said that, what are we talking about in the people that you are representing? My perception of the type of store you have is small, probably less than 7,500 square feet, and the people who work there are mainly family or relatives. Would I be correct in that assumption?

Mr Woo: Maybe half and half.

Mr Mills: Half.

Mr Woo: Yes, some are family—

Mr Mills: But they are not big store operators?

Mr Woo: No.

Mr Mills: Do you have any big ones over 7,500 square feet, bigger than a Shoppers Drug Mart?

Mr Woo: Maybe very few, Chinese supermarkets. I do not know. My mathematics or my judgement is just not that great.

Mr Mills: I am trying to help you come to grips with this amendment in that perhaps your perception of it is a little different than what it is all about. Perhaps that would explain why the Asian folks are not coming forward too much, because they do not see this as a threat to their way of life because they are all small, mainly family people.

What the thrust of this is, we are trying to protect the retail worker per se, and I do not think many so-called retail workers fit into the category of the type of business that you are representing here as opposed to what the general idea is: A&P, Loblaws, that type of thing. These are people who would be family, relatives and you would be a very close-knit group in a small store. Would that be the general idea of the type you are representing?

Mr Woo: I think we too employ people who are not relatives. But your statement is well taken. I guess I get your point.

Mr Mills: Yes. I just think, sir, in all fairness to you, that your concerns maybe are a little bit overrated, and that really explains the absence of your fellow compatriots here. Maybe I will talk to you afterwards. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, Mr Mills. Thank you very much, Mr Woo.

CANADIAN SHOE RETAILERS ASSOCIATION

The Chair: We now have a presentation from Ms Sharon Maloney, who is the president of the Canadian Shoe Retailers Association. Ms Maloney, I notice you have been here with us for a little while, so you know what the routine is. Take as much time as you wish to. It is entirely your own, but typically it is half for your presentation and half for questions from the committee members. Proceed as soon as you feel comfortable in doing so.

Ms Maloney: Thank you, Mr Chairman. I would like to thank you and members of the committee for giving me this opportunity to meet with you today. My apologies. Unfortunately I do not have a brief for you because of very short notice. I will endeavour to provide you with a brief later this week, and if there are any questions that are not answered today, I would be happy to come back again or answer directly any questions you may have.

Perhaps I could just give you a brief history of our association. The Canadian Shoe Retailers Association is a national trade organization. We represent in excess of 2,500 footwear retailers across the country, with our largest membership being in the province of Ontario. Our membership is made up of family shoe stores, independent operators and chains. We do not represent discounters nor do we represent department stores.

The association has been actively involved, I would say, for approximately 50 years in this province in fighting Sunday shopping. I was past executive director of CAOSS, which is the Coalition Against Open Sunday Shopping. I am currently a committee member of Fairness for Families. As such, I have had alone probably five years' experience watching this issue, from the time when the Conservative government considered introducing new legislation to open up Sundays, to the time when the Liberal legislation was brought down, to date.

I think our members could be of interest to you. I have heard a lot of discussion today about workers. I have heard a lot of discussion about large employers. What I have not heard very much about is small employers, independent operators. The gentleman who was here from Tourism Ontario talked about the fact that there is no necessity for people to work seven days a week. In point of fact, with our membership, that is the very reason why they have been so aggressive in fighting this legislation. Most of our members' businesses are family-run businesses, which means they are already working six days a week. If they are forced to open because of competitive pressures, because there is Sunday opening, they will be forced to open seven days a week. It is very clear in their situation that they will not have the luxury of being able to stagger their hours because anyone who is aware of small business recognizes that one of the most important things to small business is the fact that the independent operator or the owner be in place, and that means even if they curtailed their hours, they still would have to be there seven days a week.

We applaud this government for making its attempt to bring in this new legislation. We recognize how difficult the issues are. That being said, we do have concerns with the legislation. We recognize that they have tightened portions of it by including in the preamble to the act the recognition of a common pause day. We recognize that they have made it tighter by introducing tourism criteria that were lacking in the previous legislation. We also recognize that only retail businesses can make application for a designation, which we think is positive.

That being said, the legislation in our view has two major flaws, the first being the retention of municipal option. It is our understanding that there is concern or there was concern when this legislation was being drafted with the recent Court of Appeal decision which endorsed the municipal option. We have always been proponents of provincial control on this issue, the reason being that we believe if you do not have some form of consistent application, you will end up with a checkerboard treatment of the issue because of the variety of interpretations which can be created and implemented by various municipalities. This in our view is particularly so when the tourism criteria which have been proposed are reviewed. Unfortunately, we feel that the tourism criteria are so broad you will in any case end up with a varied interpretation of the criteria. As well, in many instances, if not in most instances, you will end up with wide-open Sunday shopping across the province.

We believe that the intention of this legislation and this government is to preserve a common pause day. We believe it can be done, but it can only be done if those two areas are addressed and if the general guiding principle is tightened in the legislation.

I would like to comment as well on the fact that different communities have been telling the retail community it should be open on Sundays. I have heard today people from the tourism community. I have heard people from the development community. Unfortunately, rarely has the retail community been surveyed. The material I have provided to you today is the only survey we are aware of where the retail community itself has been surveyed. I think its results are quite revealing. I also would suggest to you that if the retail community was surveyed, the majority of the retail community would not be in support of wide-open Sunday shopping.

It is particularly important to note that our association is the only retail trade association that I can see you are going to be hearing from. There are a couple of reasons for that. Unfortunately, Retail Council of Canada, the association I am sure you are all aware of which represents retailers across the board, is not in a position to come and give a brief to you because of a conflict within its own particular association. Moreover, there are very few retail organizations which are trade specific, ours being one of the few. As well, because we are retail specific, we do not have the conflict within our membership which some of the other trade associations do, and our membership has been telling us overwhelmingly, I suppose for over 50 years, that they do not support Sunday shopping.

I might add that the membership we have in other provinces across the country is also of the same view. Unfortunately, because of the size of our organization we were not able to lobby as effectively as we would have liked in those other jurisdictions. But our members in Alberta and British Columbia, which are often held up as examples of the great success of Sunday shopping, have repeatedly told us both in polls and in conversations with me, my members and board members, that they are finding it extremely difficult to operate in that climate, especially if it is a family-based business and even if it is a franchise, because franchise operations are usually limited to three or four people. So despite what is being held out as being a wonderful environment, in our view it is not the case.

I hope, as you go through the province and you hear from the various trade and other organizations, that you bear in mind there is a community that you may or may not be hearing from, and that in some way you find out from that community, other than the footwear retail community, what its views are on this issue. Thank you.

Mr Poirier: I read with interest this brief, which really is brief which is good. We are talking here—correct me if I am wrong—about the difficulty of opening seven days a week and the fear of even seven days a week and 24 hours a day. Obviously this is an extreme scenario.

If you are getting away from the principle of a common pause day, what prevents a family-run business like the ones you represent—and from what I read in number 1 here, sales on Mondays and Tuesdays are virtually non-existent—from closing on a Tuesday or Monday and not having the pause day to be common?

Ms Maloney: There are two problems, the first of which is competitive pressures. If your neighbour down the street is open, you are going to be open because I do not know a retailer who is not afraid of losing that possible sale.

The other problem is, if you are operating within a mall, you do not really have that luxury. Even if you have provisions in the law, which we currently have, which prohibit a landlord from using undue pressure to force you to open, the reality of the marketplace is such that if you do not open, either your lease will not be renewed or the amount of rent you have to pay or user fees that you are going to have to absorb are going to be increased. There are a variety of subtle pressures that can be brought to bear on retailers and force them to open.

Mr McLean: You have certainly brought a new perspective to this afternoon's committee hearing, and I am very pleased to hear it. I hear quite often in the riding that I represent it is the small business people that work six days a week already. There is only so much money to go around in the week, and they think six days a week is enough as well, and I think the same thing. The problem is with the legislation. It is not tight enough to make it fit with what we would like to see.

The city of Orillia passed a bylaw to allow Sunday opening. I am willing to say there are not 10 stores that have opened, although they could all be open. But there are not 10 stores, because most of the businesses are family.

You certainly have brought a different perspective to it, and I would like to see more follow-up on this very line because there are an awful lot of family businesses in Ontario that work six days a week and do not need the seventh one. I find that the legislation is not going to allow those people, when you get city after city declaring open—it is going to filter down that those small businesses are going to finally have to open. That is where I see the problem.

Ms Maloney: I agree. I might add to that, especially if you start looking at the border communities, many of our members are located in the border communities, and I know there has been a lot of attention paid to the correlation between cross-border shopping and Sunday shopping. In our view, there is no correlation. You have all heard the variety of reasons and we agree about them. One of them specific to footwear is the differential in tariff treatment between ourselves and the United States.

That being said, we are of the view that one of the ways of enhancing border communities is to maintain those independent businesses, that it is really the independent operator who can have and has the potential of being more creative, of participating in the community. Traditionally they are very active in their communities. If they are lost, then you really are going to have a problem. To impose Sunday opening on them is to impose another operating expense where there will not be additional revenue, which we feel ultimately will mean that this market, which is already small—the independents only have 25% of the overall national market—is going to be further eroded, to the detriment of all of us, in our view.

Mr Fletcher: I will get myself organized here. Thank you, Sharon, that was a very good presentation. I understand the concerns you have with small business employees who mostly are family members. I am just wondering about the municipal option. When you are talking about it, would you like to see it totally thrown out, or do you have some suggestions on how to make it work, if it were up to you?

Ms Maloney: If there were a Santa Claus, frankly, I would prefer to see this kept at the provincial level. When I was part of CAOSS, that is really what we were advocating: leave it at the provincial level. That is the only way you can control the environment and be able to resist the variety of interpretations we think clearly would come with municipal option.

That being said, I understand the sensitivities that anybody would have in drafting legislation, given the current decision of the Court of Appeal. I am not in a position to argue the pros or cons on that. If we are working within an environment where there is going to be municipal option, then there has to be some kind of check to the powers that are created by doing that. That means either you have an appeal process from the municipal level up to a board delegated to deal with the issue specifically, or you have an appeal process to the OMB and you have certain people sitting on the OMB responsible for dealing with this issue.

Mr Poirier: On that very point, one of the difficult things legislators have to cope with is the provisions of the Charter of Rights and the Constitution, between what we would like to see and what we must write in a law. Because nobody, no matter which party, likes to sit down, spend a heck of a lot of time listening to people and whatever, then write down a law, only to get it chucked out of the court. Lord knows it is enough trouble to write it down. You do your best because these days every time you write a law you have to think, will it withstand the ultimate test of the Supreme Court of Canada?

In light exactly of what courts seem to have been deciding pertaining to this, it seems to become more and more impossible to think of a law that applies province-wide no matter what the issue is. What I am saying also in this particular domain—and I gather from your initials you are a lawyer yourself and obviously must be familiar enough with the type of decisions that have come forward and probably will come forward even more directly from upper courts pertaining to this dossier. Do you honestly believe that a provision for a province-wide set of rules, whichever ones they are, would really stand a Supreme Court of Canada test pertaining to Sunday shopping?

Ms Maloney: Yes, I do.

Mr Poirier: On what are you based?

Ms Maloney: Again I will qualify my response, because my expertise does not lie in the Constitution. There are two reasons I say I think it could stand. First, I think there was room within the parameters of the decision that came down to allow for provincial authority on this issue. Second, I think the degree of change that has been created in this new amendment, especially with the attention now being placed on the tourism criteria—in other words, we have gone from an act where we had a variety of distinctions being created in the retail community to an act which has said, “We’re going to throw out a lot of these variations and some of the qualifications and what we’re going to say is that it’s based on tourism.” That is a new peg on which your hat can be hung to justify the interpretation of this bill and allow it to withstand a constitutional challenge.

Mr Poirier: You think it will.

Ms Maloney: I think it could. I always qualify my answers.

Mr Poirier: You must be a lawyer.

Mr Carr: Thank you for taking the time to come here. One of the questions I have is how it will affect your members if in fact we end up with side-by-side municipalities, one open because it is classified under a tourism exemption and the other one closed. What do you see happening? Do you see the one that is open, your members saying, “We’re still not going to open because the neighbouring one is closed”? Do you then see the neighbouring groups being hurt? How will that happen if in fact we do have competing municipalities, one open and one closed, side by side?

Ms Maloney: That is a very negative and very real possibility with the legislation as it currently stands. That is why we were so opposed to the municipal option in the first place, because we knew once you started bringing in that type of legislation, you would set up a whole host of competitive pressures.

Mr Carr: Then it will snowball.

Ms Maloney: That is right. I think the intent of this legislation and the fact that they have brought in tourism criteria has certainly narrowed the field. It has not narrowed the field sufficiently and in order to prevent what you are suggesting, it has to be much tighter than it currently. Otherwise you will end up with that situation and it will put a lot of pressure on retailers, not just footwear retailers but any retailer who is residing in the jurisdiction who may not, frankly, want to open, but when he sees that he is losing sales is going to have to start agitating and ask his respective municipality to give him a designation as well. So in effect, if you do not draft it clearly enough and tightly enough, you will have not avoided the very problem you have set out to try to avoid.

Mrs Haslam: I am so impressed. You seem to have such a handle on this. I have been looking at this and you really zero in on what is good in the legislation. You have certainly emphasized where you feel we should be tightening it up, and I would like to go into some of those things that you have been saying.

Mr Mills: One item; you said “some.”

Mrs Haslam: Well, there are so many in the criteria and that is where I look. I come from Perth county and Stratford has a festival there. I am in a very tourist-oriented area, so these criteria are very important to me and how we write them up and how they allow exemptions in a particular area such as mine. So I will pick one area, and this is not the one I would maybe choose for my own riding but is one that seems to be batted back and forth here today, and that is, in particular, the size and the number of people. Now that is in your subsection, so that once you have met the main criterion of a geographical area and once you have met the main criteria for a tourist exemption, then you start looking at the size.

I wonder if you would like to comment on that. I will preface this with a few more remarks. One of the other recommendations, and this came from the UFCW, was for the drugstore to be 2,400 feet and four people, including the pharmacist. So I would be interested to know what you felt would be something we could look at in this area.

Ms Maloney: Let me divide, your question if I may. I would like to answer it.

Mrs Haslam: Oh sure, go ahead. I can only ask one question, though.

Ms Maloney: On the one hand dealing with pharmacies and on the other hand dealing with the other aspects of it.

Mrs Haslam: No, I am saying that is what has been said. I would like some input from you there.

Ms Maloney: Okay. My comment with regard to the pharmacies, first of all, would be that one way or the other we have to return to a level playing field in regard to the grocery sector. My recollection of this issue has been that the reason we have all ended up here today is the very large exemption which was given to the pharmaceutical sector, as well as the fact that in the current legislation, even as it stands, there is a broad definition of “sundries.” That has allowed the pharmaceutical sector to go into an area that is hotly contested by the grocery sector.

One way or the other, be it by size or be it by a restriction of the definition of product which can be sold by the pharmacies, that has to be addressed, because I think until it is addressed, you are going to continue to have very strong lobby groups and with some merit, I think, given the clear differential that is operating between pharmacies and groceries advocating that there be a change and that there be a complete removal of common pause day legislation.

In so far as there is a size restriction within the tourism designation, I have difficulty with it from a retail perspective, and the reason I do is that it is very difficult to decide whether somebody is offering something for a tourist on the basis of how big it is. I do not think that retail breaks down on the basis of how large you are in providing certain services.

I also think that within these communities it could create a lot of difficulty. Suddenly we are going to have one store that is selling boxes, and it is 4,000 square feet, and the store across the street is selling the same commodity but it is 4,500 square feet, but it cannot open. I see that fraught with hazard.

You are shaking your head.

Mrs Haslam: I just need clarification, because that is not what I understand.

The Chair: Thank you, Mrs Haslam. Mr Poirier.

Mrs Haslam: Ask for clarification, Mr Poirier.

Mr Poirier: I would be willing, out of charity, to give my time so that she can ask her clarification point. I mean, she has such a way of putting it through. Go ahead. I will give my time to Mrs Haslam.

Mrs Haslam: That was interesting, on a clarification. Thank you, Mr Poirier. What a wonderful gentleman you are.

I wondered about clarification from the ministry, because that was not my understanding. There were other criteria to be met and size was not only that. What I wanted to know was clarification on that particular point. It was not that two stores of different sizes could sell the same product; there were other criteria to be met.

Ms Maloney: Okay. The proposal, as I understand it from UFCW, is that there be a limit within the tourism designations that only stores below 4,000 square feet could operate. What I am saying is that if you have a retailer who is operating within an area that has been designated as a tourist area, on top of that you are adding a new level of requirement, which is that you cannot operate if you are greater than 4,000 square feet.

In that situation I can see a lot of conflict developing between some retailers who are operating within that area but cannot open because they do not meet the size restriction. I see that as problematic, although I recognize perhaps from a drafting position why it is being introduced. But certainly for our members, I think, it would be problematic, because if I have a member who is selling footwear out of a location that is 5,000 square feet, and may be selling athletic footwear, he cannot open, but his colleague across the street is selling the same footwear but is only 2,500 square feet. That creates a lot of problems.

Mrs Haslam: Okay. Thank you for that clarification.

Mr Carr: One of the questions I have is one of your comments about the different retail groups that will not be represented here, presumably because they are divided on the issue; whatever percentage, they do not feel they speak clearly. As a result of some of the groups that are going to be affected and are not going to be represented here—and you are lucky, I guess; in your group there is a consensus—is there any way that you see getting around that, or are we just going to make the decisions? We wonder why it is a tough decision when the groups affected cannot even decide. Is there anything else you would suggest could be done, or do we just leave out a significant portion of the affected people who are not going to be represented? Having dealt with it yourself, how would be the best way to handle it?

Ms Maloney: I think realistically the only way you can deal with it is if you attempted to survey some of that community directly, because otherwise you are really not going to be getting any exchange. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business does have independent retailers within its membership, but it is again not specific. The retail council is specific, but it is not specific just to small retailers, or apparel and footwear, and it does have a conflict. I think really the only way you could achieve that is to have a survey or a poll done, either through the CFIB or through ourselves or some other group that has some liaison with them.

There are other sectors. For example, the apparel trade does have a trade association which represents the exhibitors and they interface a lot with the apparel retailers, so you could go that route in terms of their trade shows to be able to canvass them and find out what their position is on this issue.

Mr Carr: It is just that it is very difficult. I guess you have gone through a lot of problems and a lot of organizations are going through the same thing.

Ms Maloney: Alternatively, this last survey that was done is another source of polling again the retail community. I think what is important is that whoever is being used is objective and is not bringing to the survey positions on the issue.

Mr Owens: Ms Maloney, in your one-page handout, in point 3 you make a very interesting point about retail operations that take place in malls. This has been a problem that I have had in dealing with some of the small business people in my riding. If we were to pass this legislation as is with the tourism designation and a mall lobbies and is successful in winning an exemption for the area, then if you have your mom-and-pop operation, which I similarly agree is already open six days and does not want to be open the seventh day, what kind of protections could you see the committee recommending to ensure that this retailer is not going to be in violation of his leasehold provisions and have it cost him additional moneys?

Ms Maloney: I think the problem with that is that you can put very stringent restrictions into your legislation, but they will always and can always be circumvented. The only way of avoiding it was and continues to be to have common pause day legislation which is based more on the different retail communities than on tourism. Having introduced the tourism criteria into the equation, it is next to impossible, in my view, to safeguard it. You can tighten up the provisions that are already in the act, perhaps provide a fine process in the event that a landlord is shown to be abrogating or breaking the legislation, but the reality is that most retailers will not put themselves in a position, be they small or large, to go head to head with their landlord.

Mrs Haslam: Thank you very much, Ms Maloney. I was very impressed with your presentation.

REGIONAL MUNICIPALITY OF YORK

The Chair: Mr Oakes, you have been with us a little while, so you will know a little bit about what is happening. We have your submission, so please feel free to read however much of it you wish to, and hopefully it will leave some time for questions from the committee members. Please proceed when you are comfortable in doing so.

Mr Oakes: Thank you very much, Mr Chairman. I would also like to thank the members of the committee who have stayed to this late hour. I hope I can make your dedication worth while.

I represent the regional municipality of York, which lies immediately north of Metropolitan Toronto. It extends from Steeles Avenue in the south to Lake Simcoe in the north, and from Durham in the east to Peel in the west. It is included in the area that is now known as the greater Toronto area. Obviously we are going to be affected by what happens in Metropolitan Toronto, as well as what happens to our neighbours on the east and west. I personally have been engaged in processing applications for exempting by-laws since 1975, when this legislation first came into effect.

I want to deal first with a couple of matters of principle. We feel that it is helpful to understand anything if it is accurately described. I must, with great respect, say that to describe this legislation as providing a common pause day is simply not accurate. A common pause day, in ordinary parlance, would mean a pause day available to all in common. This legislation does not do that at all.

I am not taking any position as to whether a common pause day would be a good thing or a bad thing. I am simply pointing out that this legislation does not accomplish it, and could not accomplish it unless the ambit of the legislation were very considerably widened. The legislation applies to only one area of economic activity within the province: retail businesses. It ignores all the others. It is simply intellectually dishonest to promote this legislation by saying it provides a common pause day.

The second point I want to deal with, again on principle, is workers' rights. The legislation purports to give workers in the retail business industry an absolute right to refuse holiday work. There are two points to be made here. First, following from the first point, the protection is given only to workers in retail business establishments. Workers in other areas of employment are not protected by the legislation.

Second, the act protects the rights of workers in the retail business area who do not wish to work on holidays. There are no doubt many workers in this category. Our municipality extends up to the Holland Marsh. Just to take one example, the Dutch Reformed Church is very strong in that area and followers of that persuasion are very much opposed in principle to religious holiday work, and they are protected by this legislation.

However, in the public hearings which our council conducted on this legislation it became apparent that there are many people who are willing to work on holidays. Many of them came before our council in support of applications by individual businesses and areas for the holiday opening permission. The rights of these workers are unduly restricted, in our submission, by the mandatory closing provisions of the legislation. I say that because the retail business is traditionally a business where people who wanted to work on holidays were afforded an opportunity of doing so. By closing certain of these businesses on holidays, these people who are prepared to undertake holiday work, are willing to undertake it and, in some cases, rely on it for income, are unduly restricted, in our submission, in the areas of employment that are open to them.

If the mandatory closing provisions were deleted but the right of workers to refuse holiday work retained, the legislation would protect the rights of both categories of workers. This would be in the spirit of the former One Day's Rest in Seven Act, which provided mandatory time off for workers and which also provided, if I recollect correctly, that—I am not sure of the exact wording—where possible or where practical, the time off was to be given on Sunday. It protected the rights of the worker in that regard, but it said nothing about making businesses close. So if this act could be structured along the same lines, it would be in the spirit of that former legislation.

In regard to the municipal option, I do not think our council particularly likes the way it is structured by this legislation. But our council, the York regional council, also feels that if there is to be a decision-making body which will decide which businesses can remain open, then it wants to be part of that process. It does not want to be excluded from it.

The next point is floor area and staff numbers as providing criteria for holiday opening. I think even the most cursory examination or consideration will indicate that there really is not anything in the floor area of a store which argues in support of its being open or closed on a holiday. As soon as you put any floor areas into the legislation and establish them as criteria, you are going to have stores that have slightly more floor area and are not different in any way, shape or form, except for a few square feet, from the other stores and will be wondering why they are being discriminated against. I am not criticizing the 2,400 square feet, because if it were 2,500 or 5,000 or any other number, in principle you would be left with the same result.

Why should the employee in a store that has 2,400 square feet and who is willing to work on holidays be told he cannot do it when an employee in a store having slightly less than 2,400 square feet is afforded the right? It also makes a rather awkward enforcement problem for police officers in the stores that are on the borderline or the boundary. They do have a difficult problem which maybe has not been apparent to you people: they have to go in there with a tape measure. You are going to have to prove in a prosecution that the store is outside of the permitted square footage area. In an Eaton's or Simpsons department store, sure, it is easy, but in stores that are close to the border it is a very difficult enforcement problem.

The criteria, I might say just in passing, ignore ownership. You could have a chain operation with any number of stores. As long as they were all within the criteria, they could open, whereas a single family-operated business that was just slightly over the permitted floor space would be required to close.

The next point I wish to make is the effect of the law on medium-sized businesses. I should state the basis of my knowledge. For the past 16 years I have been getting telephone calls, letters, visits from people, invitations to go out and inspect their businesses. I have had to go out throughout the regional area and inspect a great many businesses where people have applied for the holiday opening. Over the 15 or 16 years that the legislation has been in effect, I have picked up some information on the subject.

Something that has been stressed to me is that the act has a rather severe effect on medium-sized businesses. Establishments that meet the floor space criteria are not very much affected because they are permitted to stay open. Similarly, the very large establishments have the physical size which enables them to do dollar-wise and customer-wise approximately the same volume of business in six days that they could accomplish in seven. If they can attract the customers, they have the physical size to handle them, enough cash registers, enough space so that they are not getting excessive lineups and the people are not unduly inconvenienced.

But the medium-sized businesses, and a number of them have pointed this out to me, are not in that category, especially in the food business. They simply do not have the floor space to enable them to accommodate seven days' business in six days. It seems to be a feature of your average retail customer that he or she will loiter for long periods of time in the aisles. But once they get to the cash register, they object to standing. They want to get through. If they have to stand what they regard as an undue length of time they will not come back. The point has been made to us that there are these medium-sized businesses with perhaps three or four cash registers that simply cannot physically accommodate the seven days' business in six days, and if they are required to close on the seventh day they will be adversely economically affected.

The point has also been made to us that some of these businesses cater to what is termed sometimes as the ethnic clientele. They sell specialty products, and the people who want those products will drive relatively long distances to get them. Some people will drive 20 miles to get the right bread they prefer, or the right cheese. They will not do it on a weekday; they simply have not got time after work. Apparently they are reluctant to do it on Saturdays, because there are so many other things they have to do on Saturdays. Sunday, for some of these people, becomes a more relaxed shopping experience, and they will take the drive with the family. If the business is not permitted to be open on Sunday, the customer is inconvenienced and the business will lose customers.

The next point relates to the public hearing, which is a requirement of the statute. The initial 1975 legislation had no requirement in it that the municipal council had to conduct a public hearing or a public meeting before it passed an exempting bylaw. Perhaps this was because the Legislature realized that in Ontario bylaws can only be passed by municipal councils at public meetings. The meeting of a council that passes a bylaw has to be a public meeting.

The 1989 amendment required a public meeting as a condition precedent for the passage of the bylaw. The present proposed amendment deletes that but requires a public hearing. Any lawyer will tell you that the two terms are not synonymous and that the legal requirements relative to a public hearing are much more onerous than the requirements relative to a public meeting.

This was the consideration that the Legislature was faced with in 1983 when it was considering the Planning Act. Initially it had been proposed that an official plan and a zoning bylaw could be adopted by a municipal council only after a public hearing, and as a result of the representations that were made, the word "hearing" was changed to "meeting." I do not know why the word "meeting" is proposed to be deleted in this current amendment and the word "hearing" substituted, but I would respectfully suggest that you go back, if you want to have any provision of that kind, to the word "meeting," because if you introduce the word "hearing," it is going to be productive of legal challenges based on procedural requirements that the law mandates when hearings are required.

The statute presently requires publication of notice of the public meeting at least 30 days before the meeting is to be held. There are two points I would like to make here: If you are going to have a public hearing or a public meeting requirement, it would be advisable to put in something about notice. Specify what notice has to be given, because if you do not, the legislation will be subject to challenges on the basis of insufficiency of notice.

I am not saying that the 30 days is a good requirement. It is perhaps appropriate if you are dealing with a very large-scale application for an exemption, say in the case of a large shopping mall. You would want to give adequate notice so that there would be a wide dissemination of the proposal, and people would have a chance to prepare their arguments for and against. But many of the applications that come before the council are for very small business establishments that have only a very limited local effect. In fact, a surprising number of applications are for one-day special event-type things: a charity promotion, or something of that nature.

These people uniformly are not aware of the 30-day limitation, and they come to you two weeks before the event or three weeks before the event or even 30 days before the event, and many of them are applications which I feel the council would consider favourably if they were permitted to do so. But these people have to be told, "Much as we like what you are trying to do, we cannot accommodate you because you have not come in time."

The 30 days in practice for a municipality, when you look at the requirements for preparing an advertisement, putting it in the newspaper and then waiting for the next municipal council meeting, can stretch to almost two months. If a guy comes in today and says, "My meeting or my event is going to be 30 days from now," there is no way. Even if he gives you 40 days, it would be very, very tight. So it is much longer than 30 days, and I do not know what the answer is.

The suggestion I am making is that if you are going to have a meeting requirement, perhaps you could consider replacing the 30 days' notice with a requirement for newspaper publication of the notice to provide the public, in the opinion of the council, with reasonable notice, something of that nature, which would enable the council to discriminate. When they get, say, a large-scale application, it would give more notice, and when it gets a small application for a very limited time—you know, the merchants in Stouffville want to be open on July 1 for the strawberry festival or something of that nature—they could deal with that on shorter notice.

Charity functions: The statute makes no provision for permitting businesses to be open on holidays in connection with charity functions where the proceeds are to go to charity. I have had, by coincidence or not, four of these applications in the last 10 days, and in no case did they come with the required 30 days' notice. They were simply unaware of it, and we have had to tell those people, "We cannot do it for you." I do not know whether council would or would not have done it, but the point is it was not even able to consider it because the 30 days were not there.

I am wondering if perhaps you could give consideration, if you think it is justified, to exempt charity functions—you would have to define it—from the closing provisions of the statute, because it is a fact that in some of the malls or some of the business areas, the merchants do get together and say, "We will stay open on this Sunday or that holiday and donate the proceeds to some charity." It is not accommodated in the statute at present.

Flea markets: The act makes no provision specifically for flea markets. These bazaar-style events—in the initial brief, my secretary spelled that "bizarre" but it has been corrected; there may be some argument as to which word is appropriate, but they are bazaar-style events—are usually held on weekends and holidays, and in certain areas they become very popular. In our area, the Stouffville flea market has gained an almost province-wide reputation. We have had calls from as far away as Ottawa from municipalities wanting to know how we are dealing with flea markets. We are considered to be an authority on flea markets because the Stouffville flea market is in our area.

If the mandatory closing provision is to be maintained, perhaps consideration could be given to flea market exemptions. The stalls in the flea markets are usually quite small, well within the size limitations set out in the act, but the type of merchandise does not always correspond with the types of merchandise that are permitted by the act to be sold on holidays. You have people selling old coins, postage stamps, that kind of thing, jewellery, junk jewellery and things that the act does not permit to be sold on holidays, and if you take them all out of the flea market, sometimes the result is that the thing is not viable.

The tourism criteria: I would like to say here, in principle, that it has always been a mystery to me why the rights or privileges of the ordinary resident of a locality were dependent on what is perceived to be good for tourists or visitors. It just does not make any sense really, when you look at it dispassionately. If a thing is good or bad, it should be good or bad for the full-time resident of the area, and not because it is good or bad for a tourist. His rights should not be dependent on the tourist.

The initial statute in 1975 authorized the enactment of exempting bylaws where the exemption was deemed to be essential for the maintenance or development of a tourist industry. This provision produced litigation and, in the end, simply did not work. Its failure to work, in my submission to you, was not because municipal councillors did not know what a tourist was. They knew what a tourist was and they knew what tourism is, to the same extent as anybody else knows it. It did not work because the criteria were inappropriate, and I am not saying that any other criteria or condition would have been any more appropriate.

If you go back in time, you will recall that in the very early days the death penalty was mandatory for every offence, even the most trivial. Juries dealt with that by simply refusing to convict. You saw the same thing more recently in the case of the abortion prosecutions. In my submission, what municipalities did with the tourism criteria or condition was the same thing. They would get an application that the local people wanted to support, that they with their knowledge of local conditions wanted to support, and they simply strained the language and did violence to the language of the condition. They made the condition do what they wanted to do anyway, whether it was appropriate or not, and that kind of thing is still going to happen. I do not think the proposed regulations are going to change that at all.

The provision or the condition was taken out of the legislation in 1989, in my understanding, because it simply was not working and was bringing the law into disrepute. The 1989 legislation left it open to the municipal councillors with their knowledge of local conditions to make their decisions on whatever basis seemed to them to be appropriate. We are now introducing the tourism concept again, and I am afraid the result is going to be exactly what the result was in 1975. It is not going to work.

The Chair: Thank you, Mr Oakes. We have pretty well run out of time this afternoon, so I would like to thank you very much for your very considered presentation and, before closing, make a couple of announcements to the committee members.

They are very simply that the first stage of our cross-province tour will start on Wednesday. We should be ready at 4 o'clock. The clerk informs me that there will be a bus taking us to our next locale Wednesday at 4. If anyone is going by means of his own transportation, would he please inform the clerk of that, either there or at any other point in our committee's road show.

Thank you very much. We will be adjourned until 9:45 tomorrow morning.

The committee adjourned at 1759.

RETAIL BUSINESS ESTABLISHMENTS STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT DES LOIS EN CE QUI CONCERNE LES ÉTABLISSEMENTS DE COMMERCE DE DÉTAIL

Consideration of Bill 115, An Act to amend the Retail Business Holidays Act and the Employment Standards Act in respect of the opening of retail business establishments and employment in them.

Étude du projet de loi 115, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les jours fériés dans le commerce de détail et la Loi sur les normes d'emploi en ce qui concerne l'ouverture des établissements de commerce de détail et l'emploi dans ces établissements.

The Chair: We are having hearings into Bill 115, the Retail Business Establishments Statute Law Amendment Act, and this morning our first witness is Ms Penny Dickenson.

Mr Mills: Before you get to the first witness, I would like to place a motion on the floor.

The Chair: My apologies, Ms Dickenson.

Mr Sorbara: Are you going to withdraw the bill?

Mr Mills: No. The motion concerns the order of speaking and the procedure for speaking. I think that yesterday we all experienced some degree of difficulty with follow-up questions. The questioning became disjointed, disorganized, and it did not really make much sense.

My motion this morning is that after the presentation by the presenters we have at any given time an amount of time left, and I am moving that this time be equally shared by all three parties, that this time be monitored and that the time allocated to each party will be used at one thrust. In other words, the official opposition talk, finish, and then we finish, because I find that it is very frustrating to try and get some intelligent rapport or dialogue going when I can only ask one question and logically I am expected to follow up and I cannot. So I would move that.

The Chair: I can certainly understand your viewpoint, Mr Mills. That is a change from what the subcommittee had originally suggested. I wish we had discussed that with the other folks before the proceedings this morning.

Mr Sorbara: That is a reasonable approach to it. I thought that was what we were going to do anyway, but if we put that in the form of a motion, all the better. Let's do that. If it is different from what the subcommittee decided, let's reject what the subcommittee decided and get on with it. I just would add, not to vary the motion—I think we are going to support the motion, Mr Chairman, if you want a recorded vote—to encourage flexibility on the matter.

For example, if Mr Mills is asking a series of questions and there is one little item that occurs to me or a colleague of mine or a member of the third party, the Chair would, with the indulgence of the person who is leading the question, allow that question to be asked. We are not here to go to war with the government or the governing party or the government members over the Sunday shopping bill. We think this bill is defective in a number of places and we hope to bring that out through the testimony, but I think we have a degree of co-operation here that can allow us to abide by the motion as presented by Mr Mills, and I think we should vote on that and then get to our witness.

The Chair: I do not think we need a vote if that is substantially the consensus. So that will be our procedure. Mr Carr, are you in agreement?

Mr Carr: Yes. I was just going to say, as Gordon said, that it was a little bit frustrating because you would look at the person and want a follow-up and you had to be quiet and let him go on and then wait for him to come around again. I have no problem.

Mr Sorbara: Mrs Haslam is going to announce that she is going to have to leave for a cabinet appointment.

Mrs Haslam: Mr Sorbara, I am so surprised that the Chairman lets you get away with this.

My comment was on this particular idea. I would like to know if we are going to say, "Well, there is a follow-up that is coming." The usual preamble is getting to be a little frustrating. If we are going to say, yes, that somebody else has one little point to ask, I would ask the Chair that he watch very carefully for the long preambles—

Mr Sorbara: You may be Solicitor General this afternoon.

Mrs Haslam: —and does he recognize people or not.

The Chair: Excuse me. I think we have achieved substantive agreement on that point.

PENNY DICKENSON

The Chair: Ms Dickenson, first off, my apologies that there was this delay at the outset of your time. You have approximately a quarter of an hour. Please use that time as you wish. As you have guessed, no doubt, from the discussion, the members of the committee are very eager to pose questions to you, to seek more information than is in your written or probably in your verbal submission, so whatever time you have, typically half of that time for questions would be appreciated.

Ms Dickenson: All right.

The Chair: Please go ahead when you are comfortable.

Ms Dickenson: I have a really loud voice, so if I start blowing your ears off, it is because I am not used to speaking into a microphone.

Mr Poirier: Go into politics.

Ms Dickenson: I do not know. We have company meetings like this.

I really appreciate the opportunity to address this committee. I am really intimidated. I have been in Toronto 21 years. I have never been to this building and it is absolutely beautiful so I am a little bit nervous. However, I have a very personal perspective to present to the committee plus I have a bit of a business perspective because of the business I tend to be in, so it kind of crosses over.

To keep things simple for the record, I will advise this committee that I am very much in favour of Sunday shopping in Ontario. From both a business and personal perspective, I would like to share with you my beliefs relative to Bill 115.

I am a strong believer in the freedom of choice in all venues of life. I am very frustrated by the legislation placed on our nation, which is seemingly in place to override our individual choices relative to our individual needs. If I want to shop on Sunday, that is my choice. It is not the government's choice. If the store owners feel there is opportunity for prosperity on Sunday and wish to open, that is their individual call. It is not mine. It is not the government's. If the store employee does not want to work on Sunday, that is his choice, not the management's, not mine, not the government's.

This really is about the freedom to choose, to live our lives seven days a week as we wish and as fully as we wish.

The government talks of establishing a common day. I say, what nonsense. I wrote to Peter North on this issue and was told about this common day, which totally confused me. The province is made up of diversified industries which operate seven days a week and ethnic groups that choose to worship on different days, which makes such a day, a common day, impossible.

So why are we bothering? Let us choose. What right does the government have, other than to encourage fair employment practices whereby counsel can be given to companies as to how employees can be given attractive incentives to work on a Sunday, as long as the choice remains with the employee?

I have not written this down, but I had a chance to talk to a gentleman who worked in one of the retail stores when we had Sunday shopping for a short period of time. The company had come up with a very creative package for this individual. He was free to work on Sundays. He liked to work on Sundays. The store was open from 12 till 5. Retailers generally have just Sunday off. If you are working in a retail store, that is all you get. You get one day. You do not get two-day weekends. What they had done with this gentleman is, if he worked from 12 noon till 5 o'clock, he was able to have two consecutive days off during the week that were agreed on between him and his manager, plus he was paid a whole day's wage. It was a hell of a deal and he was happy with it.

There are ways, if we all sit down and start talking to each other, that this can be worked out without the government's intervention.

Times have changed. We live in a province where living costs can only be met by two people working in a household. Women are no longer home and Saturday is just not enough time any more. Sunday gives us breathing time. Saturday need not be so frenzied.

I am a single working girl. I travel in my job. I am very busy. I find that Saturdays are just crazy with my trying to pack everything into one day. I really want Sunday shopping as an option in my particular life. That is my very personal, emotional plea about Sunday shopping.

Moving on to the business part of my piece, for the past 17 years I have had the pleasure of promoting tourism to Canada. Primarily my job is to lure our American neighbours into our country, to enjoy our facilities, to take advantage of what we have to offer. Yes, there is a lot of press about what we have to offer being very expensive, but everything they offer in New York, Los Angeles and San Francisco is also expensive. There is still a tremendous opportunity here for Ontario as far as tourism is concerned, if they would just start marketing us on a more positive basis.

The tourists experience our wonderful resources and the country reaps the economic benefits of their spending. I think you would have to be pretty naïve to discount the revenue that tourism brings into the country. It is reported as the second largest industry in Ontario. We cannot stop the growth of tourism into this province.

Sunday shopping is an added incentive for US travelers to visit Ontario in the summer, and an absolute necessity for drawing visitors here in the colder months when things to do in urban centres are very limited. Yes, you can bring them for the theatres. They are coming in for the weekend package. They are coming in for Saturday night to see the Phantom of the Opera or whatever program happens to be here, and they wake up Sunday morning and, "Let's go home because there's nothing to do in Ontario."

Weekend-package business is a primary source of income for our hotels and resorts, and on Sundays our tourists find themselves with noses flat against store windows and doors shut up tight for the day. Families travel together. Families shop together. What can we offer our downtown visitors on Sundays?

The economic impact on our province, just by offering an additional day's shopping, is very significant. Hotels, restaurants and attractions all benefit, as does the province.

Ontario must take advantage of every opportunity to reap its share of these tourism dollars. Once a $15.5 billion industry, tourism to Ontario is decreasing. Now is not the time to close the doors on our visitors. We must recognize and fulfil their needs, open up all our doors every day. Otherwise potential visitors will continue shutting their wallets and minds on travel to Ontario.

In conclusion, rescinding the Sunday shopping privilege paralleled the Ayatollah Khomeini. I feel he moved his country back into the Dark Ages, and I feel that is exactly—somewhat, maybe I am exaggerating—what Sunday shopping, the rescinding of that law did. I almost drove off the road the day I heard the radio announcement that they took away something I really liked.

Again I was made to feel victimized and helpless by lessened legislated choices in and about how I live and enjoy my life, and that is why I am here today. I am fighting back. I am mad as hell and I am not going to take it any more, and I am not going to take it quietly. I am going to continue the push to have Sunday shopping in Ontario.

Further procrastination and discussion on store openings on Sunday are paralysing us economically, and the found dollars being used on lawyers and in courtrooms debating this issue can surely be better spent. Why not spend those dollars promoting Ontario as the place to stop, shop and stay?

Sunday opening decisions should be left to the people. Unless our government has walked in our shoes, worked at our jobs and sat at our dinner tables, it cannot possibly make decisions on our behalf. I want to shop on Sundays. I want the government to allow me this privilege. I appeal to this government to stop wasting further dollars on this issue. It makes absolutely no economic sense. Ontario needs to move ahead. We need to march with a new drummer in step with today's times.

Mr Sorbara: I want to welcome you, Ms Dickenson, to Queen's Park and suggest to you that you should come to see us more often in this building.

You said you have spent a good deal of your life encouraging tourists to come to Ontario. If the only stores that are open on Sunday are stores that cater and are recognized as tourist establishments, people catering to tourists, would it be fair to say that, in your mind, those in the province who are more affluent would have an opportunity to shop as they wished on Sunday, and those who are less affluent among us would find severe restrictions on their ability to shop on Sunday?

Ms Dickenson: Shopping on Sunday for me is not a measure of being affluent or not affluent; it is a measure of convenience. That is a personal perspective.

Mr Sorbara: But if I am a tourist—

Ms Dickenson: Perhaps in a tourism situation. The affluence of the shopper is the affluence of the person's ability to travel to the destination. It is a further incentive. If they are coming here, they have the net disposable income to travel. They have some net disposable income to spend some sort of money on spending, maybe buying something in the stores, or what brings them into town to go to the restaurant that might be open because they are in the retail store. Affluence is definitely a factor when it comes to travel. There is no question there must be net disposable income. But from a personal sense, it is not that. It is a convenience issue for myself, being an Ontario resident.

Mr Sorbara: For about nine months the courts prohibited the provincial government from regulating in the area of Sunday shopping. The incumbent government had suggested that would bring about a substantial deterioration in family life in the province. During that period, did you notice the quality of family life in Ontario deteriorated a little bit, a lot, none at all, or do you have no opinion on that?

Ms Dickenson: Again I can only speak in the first person. It changed the quality of my life considerably. That is so subjective. It is exactly what my presentation is about. I cannot speak on behalf of the other families in Ontario. I noticed there was less traffic out on the streets on Sunday. I have made comments about that. That would simply be a personal thing on my part, and I really cannot answer on behalf of all the other people out there.

Mr Sorbara: Do you think that if people shopped on Sunday, family life would deteriorate in the province?

Ms Dickenson: Oh, heaven's sakes, no. We have designated areas that are open because they have been designated as a tourist area, like the Unionville, and I guess Queen's Quay, and those particular shops are designated tourism areas. Again, that designation is subjective. If I think my store is a tourist store. I can designate it as such. Nobody should be able to do that unless he has worked with me for 365 days, I guess.

I go up a lot of times on a Sunday—because I have the freedom, I am more relaxed on Sunday to shop—to Unionville. I go down to Queen's Quay, and it is jammed with families, kids running around in strollers, people having a good time. Yes, if they have gone to church in the morning, they still have a lot of time to do what they want. I think things that are done together as a family are more important, as long as you are doing things together.

Then that gets watered down. What about the families whose husband or wife has to work Saturday and Sunday? Let's get real. This province is open seven days a week. Somebody drives the buses and the planes and everything. I travel on Sundays sometimes if I have sales meetings early on Monday morning. Somebody gets me there. Somebody in the hotel books me in. We have to grow in this province and recognize that this country does not just stop on Sunday.

We have to let people choose. On a number of issues, I am very much a freedom of choice person, and shopping is no different. I want the freedom to do what I want to do on Sunday. I am not saying we have to force people to work, because that is not what freedom of choice even means. Let us sit down and let us give employers and employees the chance to work together so that everybody wins. That is the way it has to be right now.

I am frustrated from a personal sense. From a business sense, I cannot help but think that this would help my business of bringing Americans into Canada to spend their money, if we could offer them Sunday shopping. We are losing out in so many areas.

Back to tourism again. It is decreasing and we have got to give them something extra to come for. It may not turn it around, but let's not put any more roadblocks in front of these people. Let's open it up. We have nothing to lose and we have a chance to gain. Why would we stop ourselves or close our minds to that opportunity? That is not the way business works. Business succeeds because they open up and go after new opportunities and new horizons. You cannot stay the same. If your profit runs on a loss like this, you cannot do that. It will eventually foul up. You cannot stay the same.

It is time Ontario moved ahead on this particular legislation. Obviously, I feel quite strongly about it.

Mr Mills: Do we have time for questions?

The Chair: No, we do not. We just used the time.

Ms Dickenson: Am I done?

Mr Mills: Mr Chairman, this is absolutely unthinkable if you say that we have no time left.

The Chair: I do not believe we do.

Mr Mills: What is the point of being here?

Ms Dickenson: I probably talked too long.

The Chair: Thank you very much, Ms Dickenson.

Ms Dickenson: Thank you everybody. Have a nice day.

Mr Fletcher: You did a marvellous job. Do not worry about it.

The Chair: We have a number of witnesses to follow. All in favour of a 10-minute recess? Opposed? Carried.

The committee recessed at 1008.

1019

PEOPLE FOR SUNDAY
ASSOCIATION OF CANADA

The Chair: We have a deputation from the People for Sunday Association of Canada. Is it Mr Kingdon? Despite the lateness, Mr Kingdon, you still have half an hour, give or take, and you can use the time however you wish, but typically there will be time allotted for the various caucuses. I would suggest that perhaps this time we could start with the Conservative caucus and rotate from there.

Mr Kingdon: My name is Les Kingdon. I represent the People for Sunday Association of Canada. The People for Sunday Association was formerly known as the Lord's Day Alliance and is in its 103rd year of seeking to preserve Sunday as a common pause day.

While the government is addressing this subject, nevertheless we are of the opinion that the proposed legislation does not address several important issues.

First, we would draw your attention to price clubs. There are a substantial number of these now operating and announcements have been made of expansion. These are retail outlets which operate under a membership theory and are very large outlets. We believe they should be included in the legislation to curtail their Sunday and holiday activities.

The legislation proposes allowing drugstores up to 7,500 square feet the right to operate on Sundays. It is a ridiculous situation to argue that drugstores require anything such as the square footage which is proposed. The legislation seeks to provide an opportunity to acquire health care needs. Certainly this can be accomplished in a much smaller store, and we would urge you to consider limiting drugstore size to 2,400 square feet. This is the footage similar to convenience stores and provides more than sufficient space for providing health care needs.

There are other areas which are not covered by the legislation, and we know from our experience that obtaining enforcement is virtually an impossibility.

One of the areas with which we are concerned is that of flea markets. There is no attempt to legislate their activities. There are many which operate seven days a week. There is a preponderance of outlets which operate on Saturday and Sunday. Our understanding of a flea market is one where inexpensive and/or secondhand items are sold. Many of these markets are supported by merchants who on Sunday simply move their stocks to a flea market, thus enabling them to sell on a Sunday. One can purchase, apart from legitimate items, such articles as sporting goods, bedroom suites, organs, new wearing apparel and a host of things too numerous to define.

Another area which we feel the legislation should address is that of alternative Sunday entrances. How can a manufacturer condone that he is obeying the law when on Sundays he uses another entrance? Once you are inside the premises, it is exactly the same as is used on the other six days of the week.

In the past year we have had sales of fur coats and clothing being offered to the public on Sundays in locations such as hotels and on the grounds of the Canadian National Exhibition. In many cases, this is a sale of goods by out-of-town wholesalers who defeat the legislation with this practice.

The legislation places upon the municipality the responsibility of ensuring that an exemption is warranted and guidelines have been provided. The unfortunate part of this situation is that once a municipality grants an exemption there is no recourse other than an individual or organization to take the case to court for a decision. Under the present arrangements we can assure you that many exemptions should be challenged, but where will the funds come from for these challenges? We would suggest to you that municipalities are not infallible and that there should be a provision for a provincial board to examine and give or withhold the right to the exemption. I recognize this is a difficult area, but I would suggest to you that a provincial board of some description, other than the Ontario Municipal Board, would be the place for this to take place.

We do not believe the proposed legislation in any way can be deemed to be what the public is seeking. Many of the suggestions which we are making have been made on many occasions at meetings with various ministers.

Whatever your decision may be, we would draw your attention to the enforcement of the act. For many years we have run into situations where a police department may not agree with the legislation and therefore simply states that manpower is unavailable for enforcement. We cannot accept this argument for, as an example, police forces are always available to enforce the law against the Magdars of the province. It is essential that the Solicitor General instruct the police authorities that he demands they enforce this important legislation.

To enact the legislation in its present form will invite controversy, and we will have a similar situation that will become so intolerable that the government will be forced into introducing new and more meaningful legislation.

Mr Carr: First, thank you very much for your presentation. When your association originally started was the reason for having Sunday off based on religious reasons?

Mr Kingdon: Originally it was started by the Presbyterian Church in Ottawa and was recognized as a religious organization. Over the years that has changed to the point where we recognize the human values that are involved, and today we are interested in human values as well as the religious aspects.

Mr Carr: So one of the reasons for having Sunday off is because of the Bible taking the seventh day off and so on.

Mr Kingdon: Originally, but not today.

Mr Carr: One of the things many people see happening is that there will be a snowball effect with the tourism exemptions being so broad that municipalities will start to allow certain areas to be open—for example, Windsor will allow the entire town to be open—and the neighbouring municipalities and suddenly it will all open. Is that your perception of what will happen? How do you see that unfolding if the legislation stays the way it is now?

Mr Kingdon: I think the case of Windsor is an outrageous exception of the law. The law requires that there be historical or architectural references, and there is nothing in Windsor that would enable you to open the entire city for it. If this is allowed to stand as a tourist exemption, then it is going to spread all over the country. We had the same thing existing in the Sault, and in other centres around the province there has been a move towards this.

Mr Carr: If the legislation stays the same, you foresee, based on your best judgement, that there will be wide-open Sunday shopping in most areas.

Mr Kingdon: There is an alternative to this. They can be challenged. That is the point I made earlier, that the challenge must be made by an individual. We challenged the first bylaw that was passed and spent $30,000, only to lose the case. If you get the situation developing over the province of cities opening up, then there are going to be challenges, but I question who is going to have the money to follow up on these challenges. We can do a certain amount, but we certainly could not think of taking on entire municipalities all over the country.

Mr Carr: One of the other things that many people fear will happen is that there will be some municipalities open and some that are not, and that is going to be very confusing for people. How would you see that, in light of your presentation? Obviously you would not be pleased with a situation like that.

Mr Kingdon: The domino effect is going to take place, there is no question about that. It is the old story that I have something you do not, and you want what I have. You are going to have municipalities side by side. In some perhaps there will be strong convictions, but in most cases I think they will bow to the political pressure and give in and have open Sundays.

Mr Carr: I know. One last question. You touched on the resources of the police department and I was thinking of a place like Toronto, where we have double the murder rate in one year and violent crimes are up something like 30%. What the police are saying is, "We're having a tough time catching the sexual assaults, the break-ins." I went out with the people in 31 Division and on a Saturday night they were about 41 calls behind, so if you call at 1 in the morning you probably will not get somebody to arrive until 7 o'clock, even if you say, "There's somebody breaking into my apartment now." How can you justify to the public, with these violent crimes going on, saying that we are now going to have police going up and down Spadina checking to see who is or is not open? With our limited resources, what would you say to the public on that?

Mr Kingdon: I agree with your comments completely that crime must be sorted out in the order of importance. I would certainly not argue for police charging somebody for being open on a Sunday as opposed to a murder or a break-in or anything of that nature.

Let me give you an example, which is perhaps the best thing. There is a drugstore in the west end of Toronto. This was when the drugstores were not included at the 7,500-square-foot level. I noticed that parked beside the drugstore was a police cruiser. I went up to the officer and asked him if he had checked the drugstore for being in violation of the Retail Business Holidays Act. He said, "No, I'm doing some work here on some exams I've got coming up." That is an example, and I grant you it is an exception. Nevertheless, there are police officers available in most cases on a Sunday.

Mr Villeneuve: Just a short question: You touched on flea markets. I gather you would close those down completely on Sunday.

Mr Kingdon: By no means. We have no objection to flea markets if they stay to the one day a week and if the goods being sold are inexpensive or secondhand goods. But flea markets today, as you know, are simply a matter of merchants finding another way of selling on Sundays.

Mr Mills: Before we get into questioning by our members, I would like to ask, Mr Chair, that we call forward Mr David Spring, legal adviser to the Solicitor General, to clarify a point that Mr Kingdon made about price clubs. I think it is important for all committee members to have that clarified at this point. Mr Spring, I understand the ministry has or is in the process of taking steps to clarify the so-called price clubs. I wonder if you could tell the members of the committee exactly what is contemplated.

Mr Spring: Certainly. My name is David Spring. I am director of legal services for the Ministry of the Solicitor General.

Price clubs as we understand them operate on the basis that memberships are sold. The argument is thereby made that you are not a member of the public; you are a special person, if you will. You are removed from the guise of being a member of the public and are thereby entitled to shop in a store, in this price club, on Sunday. It is the view of the Ministry of the Attorney General, of which I am a part, that this is simply a retail sale in another guise, a retail sale being a sale to the ultimate consumer or the end user and that a member of the public who purchases a membership entitling him or her to shop on that day is none the less a member of the public.

The proscriptions in the Retail Business Holidays Act simply say that a retailer cannot sell or offer for sale any goods or services therein by retail or admit members of the public thereto. It is our view that in fact those persons who are being admitted to price clubs on Sunday where goods or services are sold or offered for sale which do not fit the prescribed inventories are in fact members of the public and that the price club premises in fact constitute retail business establishments in so far as goods or services are sold therein by retail. I repeat that retail is a sale to the end user or to the ultimate consumer.

It is our view therefore that price clubs are caught by the legislation. We have in fact advised a number of police forces to this effect. Given the more widespread concern about the issue that has been evinced here before the committee and in other areas, I think the ministry could very well consider, in concert with the Ministry of the Attorney General, issuing some form of generic advice to police forces across the province advising them of our view. If we should be proved wrong through prosecutions, then we would look at it again, but our opinion is fairly firm that price clubs are in fact caught by the legislation.

The Chair: With your indulgence, Mr Mills, I believe Mr Sorbara has a question of Mr Spring on this point.

Mr Sorbara: Thank you, Mr Chairman. I am glad you allowed that because this is a new and unexpected line of testimony. I would like to ask the witness precisely what studies the ministry has done to come to this conclusion. The reason I ask that is I have done some investigations myself into the operation of the price club. While it certainly is the case that some of the so-called members of the price club are members of the so-called general public who are looking to buy in large volume to get the lowest possible price, generally because they are large families who cannot afford more expensive items—again, these are the poor in our society—a good number of the customers of the price club, from my investigations, are operators of small convenience stores and operators of, say, small nursing homes who buy ketchup in big jars, a big case of toilet paper, big cases of paper towels and all sorts of things. They are small business operators themselves. In fact, I would suggest to you that if you went to a price club on Sunday and you saw the thousands and thousands of people who go there and you did a survey, a good number of those customers would be people who are operating small businesses.

The reason I ask you what studies you have done is that if the Ministry of the Solicitor General is proposing to do court battle with the price club phenomenon, I suggest to you that you are on your way once again to the Supreme Court of Canada to define a terribly narrow point of law which is going to close off yet again an avenue for people, including very small businesses, getting the economic opportunity they need to get, and I would strongly advise against it.

Mr Spring: In fact, we are aware there are different varieties of clientele in these price clubs. Some have wholesalers' certificates. I would suggest that a number of those types of clients you have mentioned, even though they are small businesses, still qualify as members of the public in so far as sales to them constitute retail sales.

Mr Sorbara: Nothing prohibits a wholesaler from delivering to, say, a small convenience store on a Sunday. The difference here is that those small convenience stores are saving the cost of delivery by going out and purchasing themselves and generally at a lower price.

I have done investigations that establish that no one is allowed into the price club on Sunday without a membership card, establishing that they qualify and are excepted from the general public.

Mr Spring: I would just elaborate briefly on the point that there are a number of varieties of clientele. Some of them are undoubtedly, shall I say, members of the public who engage in buying by retail, and to that extent price clubs fall within the ambit of the legislation. Some of their operations probably do not fall within the ambit of this legislation.

Mr Sorbara: I guess what I am saying to you is that if in this environment—

The Chair: Could we leave that at this point, Mr Sorbara?

Mr Mills: Some of my caucus members would like to speak.

Mrs Haslam: I had a question in a couple of areas. On page 3 of your presentation you said, "We would suggest to you that municipalities are not infallible and that there should be provision for a provincial board to examine and give or withhold the right of the exemption."

Should the tourism criteria be adhered to by municipalities and they decide to have a particular area open or they decide conversely to turn down a particular store or a particular area, it is your contention that an appeal process be put in place, and if so you are suggesting it go to the provincial rather than the municipal level.

Mr Kingdon: The municipalities are left in the position of being the final voice in this matter, and they can either pass a bylaw or not. Either way, there can be an objection to it, and the only procedure open to any individual is through the courts. It would be my suggestion that it would be a much more feasible way to have them apply to some sort of appeal board; not necessarily the Ontario Municipal Board, but a board set up specifically to handle challenges under the Retail Business Holidays Act.

Mrs Haslam: Okay. That was one of the options I was interested in. The other question I had was that I did not know if you were aware that over 60% of drugstores are over 2,400 square feet. I have many small communities; I have a village of 1,200 in my riding. So if we bring down that square footage, we are looking at closing 60% of the drugstores in communities, and I would be left with a community without a drugstore. I just wondered if you were aware of that and why you wanted it brought down.

Mr Kingdon: There is no question that it is an evolutionary process that has taken place over the years where the common pharmacy a few years ago was around 2,400 square feet. Then it went to 5,000 square feet and then in the last legislation to 7,500 square feet. To sell drugs or to fill prescriptions there is no need for that amount of space. So what have they done? They have added grocery items. There is a store, as a matter of fact, that even goes so far as to have a freezer department in it. I ask you, is this what the government is looking for in a drugstore? Or are they looking for—

Mrs Haslam: But I asked you, can I have a community without a drugstore if we bring that—

Mr Kingdon: The drugstore, in my opinion, if it is a drugstore, is to fill pharmaceutical and health needs, and 2,400 square feet should be sufficient for that. It is unfortunate, if there are 60% as you say—and I am not going to quarrel with your figures—that are over 2,400 square feet, but in my opinion they should not be allowed to open.

Mrs Haslam: That was what I wanted to know. Thank you.

Mr Fletcher: Thank you for appearing today and taking an interest in this piece of legislation. One thing you did mention was law enforcement. I know that the member opposite, Mr Carr, also mentioned it. When we talk about law enforcement it always seems that we focus on Toronto as being the centre of the province, when it is not. In fact, if you come to my community, Guelph, and you see a police officer walking the streets or on his or her beat, they will investigate. This law is not made specifically for Toronto. I know you know that. I know you are cognizant of that fact, but it just gets to me when I hear members of the opposition and also some other people talking about Toronto as being the barometer. I do not know what law enforcement agencies are like in Toronto, but I do know that in other parts of the province they will investigate, and I know you did not mean to just pinpoint Toronto as being the centre.

On another point, getting back to the drugstores, if we have so many drugstores that are within the limit, are you suggesting something like roping off areas, which did not work that well in the past?

Interjection: How do you do it?

Mr Fletcher: Yes, how do you cut them down to 2,400?

Mr Kingdon: The roping off situation was used by many stores a few years ago, and the government in its wisdom decided that this was not a suitable way to handle things. We had a complaint recently from a store which has been roping off for many years and still is. The police have told them this was acceptable. We drew the attention of the police to the section of the act that prohibits roping off.

I do not think that roping off is the answer because if you have seen roping off as it has been done, you know you line up a few Coke crates along the front and you can go around them or over them or whatever you want and get what you want and make a purchase.

Getting back to your question of enforcement, let me use a couple of examples, one being a police force which examined a store, and I called them the day following and asked them what they had found out. I was presented with an advertisement showing that these people had a bylaw granting them the right to stay open. What had been presented to the police was actually a copy of the advertisement calling for a public meeting. The police accepted it as being evidence that they were qualified by bylaw. This is the sort of thing that concerns me, that the police are not knowledgeable and, second, that they do not enforce where there are violations.

Mr Fletcher: Is that province-wide or is that just in the city of Toronto?

Mr Kingdon: I think it is province-wide, yes.

Mr Fletcher: As I said, I know that in my community people were charged and the police were doing their job. But let me get back to the square footage. As far as the square footage is concerned, there are buildings already built for drugstores. We cannot expect drugstores to go out and rebuild smaller stores. I agree the roping off does not work. Do you have a suggestion? That is what I was asking, do you have any ideas of how you would like to see it handled. If so, maybe we can implement them.

Mr Kingdon: The Pay Less Drug Emporium in Brampton made a presentation to the region of Peel council where they had prepared some sort of device. I have not seen it, so I am not thoroughly familiar with it, but it was some method of closing off the store completely. I presume it was something like a folding curtain that could be put in place and close off a part of the store. Something of that nature is going beyond roping off and gives a permanency to it that roping off does not give. I think that would be a way in which they might be able to confine the 2,400 square feet.

The Chair: You only have a couple of minutes, Mr Sorbara.

Mr Sorbara: I take it you find the government's proposed bill better than no legislation at all regulating Sunday shopping?

Mr Kingdon: A qualified yes.

Mr Sorbara: But you would like to see them do a number of things, including deal with price clubs and flea markets. We have been talking about drugstores, and that is where I would like to concentrate. If the government really wanted a common pause day, would it not be just as simple to say a drugstore of any size can remain open except that they can just sell prescription drugs? Is that not the purpose for allowing the drugstore exemption?

Mr Kingdon: I think it is, but I think it is impractical to think that you can open a drugstore and have an area available to the public where they can walk around and pick up whatever they want, whether it be outside the prescription or health needs or not.

Mr Sorbara: But one could say, "We're available to fill emergency drug prescriptions." That is the only basis for the drugstore exemption, is it not? All the other stuff that Shoppers Drug Mart sells on Sunday, including hair dryers, chocolate bars, Christmas cards and birthday cards, all that stuff really does not come within a necessary exemption, does it?

Mr Kingdon: Can I ask you the question, do you think a drugstore would be willing to accept regulation of that type?

Mr Sorbara: No, I do not. On the other hand, I asked you do you think it is fair to tell a drugstore that is 8,000 square feet that it is not allowed to stay open and yet its competitor which is some 501 square feet smaller can stay open? Would you consider that fair?

Mr Kingdon: I think the argument is a false one, that drugstores have brought this on themselves.

Mr Sorbara: Is it not true that the drugstores simply want to stay open not so much to sell drugs but to capture some of the Sunday market?

Mr Kingdon: That is right.

Mr Sorbara: Do you disagree with the existence of a Sunday market?

Mr Kingdon: It depends on, I suppose, what your opinion is. As far as we are concerned, Sunday should be a day of rest, and a day of rest means that everything should be closed down except those stores which are essential.

Mr Sorbara: Sports facilities?

Mr Kingdon: No, I think this is a part of recreation and should be accepted.

The Chair: Thank you, Mr Kingdon, for your very informative presentation.

Mr Kingdon: Thank you.

DYLEX LTD

The Chair: We now have from Dylex, Sharad Mistry and Carol Cox. I apologize for our tardiness, Mr Mistry and Ms Cox, but I am sure you have also seen how the proceedings go. You may spend whatever amount of time you wish of the half hour for your presentation and then there will be questions, starting with the official opposition.

Ms Cox: Terrific. Thank you very much. What Sharad and I are going to do, if you would not mind, is that we will both give our presentations and then open up for questions to both of us.

My name is Carol Cox and I am vice-president of human resources for Dylex Ltd. Dylex, as many of you may know, has close to 1,600 stores throughout Canada and North America, employing 21,000 people in both retailing and manufacturing.

Among our divisions are Bi-Way, Suzy Shier, Thriftys, Big Steel, Tip Top Tailors and Fairweather. For the record, we support Sunday shopping.

The mission of the human resources function at Dylex is to attract, retain and grow effective employees. In this regard, retailing is unique by offering a variety of opportunities and work schedules, which include full-time, part-time, flex-time, evenings and weekends. We attract people of all ages, especially those entering the workforce for the very first time.

Retailing serves, really, as an incubator for those just getting started, sometimes without prior experience or developed skills, and frequently with only limited education. Many a future entrepreneur has started a successful career which began as a part-time employee in a retail store.

We offer employment throughout the province, indeed throughout the country, from small rural towns to major metropolitan centres and shopping malls. In effect, we reach out to the grass-roots levels of communities to attract employees and customers alike.

It is important to remember when debating the very critical issues in question which are often raised about Sunday shopping, for example, the desire of people to shop on Sunday and the willingness of retail employees to work on Sunday, that these questions are not limited to theoretical answers. Dylex has long and extensive experience right here in Canada in those provinces which resolved these matters long ago. Further, the experience in virtually all of North America also tells us, without doubt, it works and it works well.

In Vancouver, for example, people are not forced to work on Sunday, any more than they are asked to work on Saturday or Tuesday or any evening. It is an established matter of free choice for employees to choose among the wide variety of schedules that we offer. As a matter of record, it is not a problem for us to find employees to work on Sunday. Many times people are more than willing to volunteer to work. Again, I want to refer to our knowledge and experience gained as a national company and years of experience with Sunday openings in other progressive provinces of Canada.

In Ontario, when Sunday shopping first became permissible last year, a number of our employees working in various stores requested a Sunday schedule because another day of the week, perhaps a Tuesday or a Wednesday or even a Thursday, was better suited to a day off for them for their personal and family needs. It is evident that in a diverse society, growing more diverse every day, there is no one single day of the week that everyone favours to have off. In fact, we detect no consensus whatsoever among our employees to favour a particular day off, including Sunday.

It is of interest that a number of college and university students applied for Sunday work in the brief days when stores were legally open in Ontario. The Sunday schedule was ideal for young people trying to balance the demands of getting an education with the need to earn money through selected part-time employment, employment which helped to pay for their education. That convenient avenue of opportunity of course is now denied to Ontario students.

Employees in virtually every other field of endeavour have the freedom of choice, as responsible adults, to work or not to work on Sundays, as their jobs and personal plans permit. Manufacturing plants, to be productive and healthy, provide employment on Sunday. People are able to work on Sunday in the hospitality industry, the mining industry, transportation, health care and communications. The list is as endless as the geographic locations where no 19th-century restrictions exist. As workers, as family members, as consumers, the citizens of Ontario are entitled to choose for themselves whether they want to work on Sunday or not, and our employees have that choice and have always had that choice and have the same selection of options available to them as the vast majority of other Canadians.

Dylex favours Sunday shopping. We also believe very strongly in the fair treatment of workers. That is very much a priority for us. We support the proposed amendments to the Employment Standards Act which are allowing workers to refuse work on Sundays or holidays. We also support guaranteeing 36 continuous hours of rest time in any seven-day work period. We also support strengthening the role of the employment standards officers in dealing with employee grievances.

Mr Mistry: My name is Sharad Mistry. I am vice-president of financial services for Dylex. Carol talked about some of the human resource issues regarding Sunday shopping and Dylex. I would like to give you just some brief background on the financial side of Dylex.

Dylex has 799 locations throughout the province and that represents 55% of the Canadian locations. It is fair to say that Dylex operates in virtually every mall in Ontario. Our sales in 1990 totalled approximately $800 million in Ontario alone. We are a major employer, employing something like 18,000 people across Canada and approximately 10,000 in Ontario. In 1990, $37 million was expended by Dylex and approximately 70% was in Ontario.

How does Sunday shopping affect Dylex? Sunday shopping is not a new issue in Ontario. It has been around for some time. However, there are three factors which have now come on the scene which have really made the retailers' section of the market difficult.

Introduction of the GST: The manufacturers sales tax did not apply to the clothing industry. Therefore, we had a full 7% increase in our products. We have estimated that we have lost something like $47 million in sales in Ontario just attributable to the GST.

Cross-border shopping: This is becoming a very hot topic now. We have estimated that we have lost something like $110 million, based on something like $2 billion that goes across to the United States. We have estimated something like $110 million in sales.

Increased US competition in Ontario: The Gap and Price Club are American-based, very well financed, having the strength of the US market coming into Canada.

How will Bill 115 affect Dylex?

Potential job losses: While the government has a duty to protect workers, it has also an obligation to promote economic growth and remove barriers that prevent people who want to work from doing so. This is particularly true in the post-free-trade era and it has become more evident during the recession. The passage of Bill 115 will weaken our ability to preserve our market share and return to a profitable position, which will affect the employment levels.

Decreasing competitiveness: Bill 115 worsens our ability to respond to challenges posed by the introduction of the GST, the aggressive marketing practices of the US retailers in Canada and the increasing levels of cross-border shopping. Just as an example, I would like to read a letter that Carol received from a subsidiary of K Mart corporation from Buffalo called Pace Membership Warehouse. Pace Membership wrote to Carol.

"I am writing to you in response to an overwhelming influx of your employees at our warehouse in recent months. I would like to have the opportunity to discuss the select employee group program with you. I will be calling you soon to discuss the details further."

This is a US-based warehouse membership club which is asking a retailer to send its employees over there to shop.

Ms Cox: On Sunday.

Mr Mistry: It is very aggressive. It is on Sunday.

Mr Sorbara: You don't have to send them; they're going.

Ms Cox: It's frightening.

Mr Mistry: Planned capital investments in this province have decreased, primarily as a result of the recession. But if Bill 115 goes through, getting financing to expand our operation in Canada is going to be more difficult. If we are not profitable, the banks are going to be finding it difficult to lend us money on that basis, and in the fashion trade we are constantly looking at our stores and renovating our stores to keep up with the trend that the consumer wants. It is an expensive proposition and it makes it a little bit more difficult.

Our major concerns: Carol already went through all the information on Dylex's position as far as the employees are concerned. Just to summarize, we had no difficulty in getting employees to work on Sundays. A lot of our employees are students, and working on Sundays means they can devote more time to studies during the week. It does not disrupt their week's schedule.

Fairness and consistency: Again, other sectors of the economy—manufacturing, hospitality and mining—are permitted to open on Sunday. For us to remain competitive, I think we should have the same opportunity. Another example is that Drug World, which is one of our subsidiaries, is appreciably the same as Shoppers Drug Mart, and yet we have difficulty in getting that to open on Sunday.

The future of Canadian retailing: If Ontario is to preserve a Canadian-owned and a distinctively Canadian retail sector, the government must enable Dylex and others to respond to the challenges posed by the large American-backed chains. We would like to feel that the provincial government is with us and not against us in this effort.

Mr Sorbara: I have a question or two, for Ms Cox first. As I understood your testimony, you said you were supportive of the provisions in Bill 115 dealing with worker protection.

Ms Cox: That is correct.

Mr Sorbara: I am surprised actually that a director of human resources would say that. I do not want to try to convince you to change your mind. I have a special interest in this: I was the author of the predecessor. How many people work in a typical Dylex store on a Sunday, or any other day? How many employees?

Ms Cox: We have a variety of sizes—10 people. We have a Thriftys store that might have one or two.

Mr Sorbara: Let's take a store that has 10 employees regularly, including Sunday, and the store, under whatever law, is allowed to stay open on Sunday. If on Friday at 11 o'clock those 10 employees phoned you and advised that they were not coming in on Sunday, what would your response be?

Ms Cox: I guess I, as the store manager, would be alone in the department. I would call my district manager in and I would call some other store managers to see if they could give me some help.

Mr Sorbara: And if they could not?

Ms Cox: If they could not, I would open up the store by myself.

Mr Sorbara: With one person. Would you take any retaliatory action or would you discipline those employees or would you feel that you should have a right to discipline them?

Ms Cox: Sure I do.

Mr Sorbara: Are you aware that under Bill 115 you would be prohibited from taking any action whatever, even a reprimand?

Ms Cox: What we read in the bill that goes with the extended powers was nothing like that. If employees actually call up with no reason—

Mr Sorbara: If you read the bill, the bill provides that the employee has an absolute right to refuse so long as notice in excess of 48 hours is given to the employer—I say Friday at 11 because I am assuming the store opens at noon on Sunday—and that any attempt to coerce or reprimand or to discuss the refusal would be a violation of the laws of the province of Ontario. Are you aware of that?

Ms Cox: No, I am not. That is not how the research that has been given to us on the act—also, we do our schedules a month in advance and people agree to the schedules in advance.

Mr Sorbara: Notwithstanding the agreement to work on Sunday, the employee is given an absolute right to refuse, subject to the 48-hour requirement. That is two days' notice.

Ms Cox: Whether it is a Monday or a Tuesday also? Just a Sunday?

Mr Sorbara: Only on Sunday. An employee has an absolute right to refuse to work on Sunday. As a human resources officer, do you think that is the basis for sound human resources management in an organization like Dylex?

Ms Cox: If you have schedules people are hired on—they agree they are more than willing; they want Sunday work—and then they turn around and say, "I refuse, and you have to give me a different schedule," then we have to make some serious decisions about whether we can afford to carry them on the payroll and have them in that, if we do not have enough time. We will have to hire people who are willing to work on Sunday.

Mr Sorbara: Except that the people you hire to work on Sunday continue to have an absolute right to advise you 48 hours before the shift starts that they are refusing to work, and the bill prohibits you from taking any action whatsoever in response to that.

Ms Cox: In other words, you are saying that if somebody is hired for Sunday work—let's say their schedule is Thursday, Saturday, Sunday—he can state on Thursday that he is going to refuse to come in on Sunday forevermore and there is nothing I can do about it?

Mr Sorbara: That is right.

Ms Cox: There is no way I can support something like that, but that is not how I read the—

Mr Sorbara: That is what the bill provides. The current act, the act in force right now, would not allow them if they were hired to work on Sunday to then refuse, as the assignment would be deemed to be reasonable because they agreed to work on Sunday and that is what they were hired for. But the proposed act gives an absolute right for the employee to refuse to work on Sunday, notwithstanding that the employee was hired to work on Sunday.

Ms Cox: Would we not have cause to say the employee was misrepresenting himself and came to us under false pretences?

Mr Sorbara: Not under the bill as it stands. I have no other questions.

Mr Carr: First, I want to thank you for making the presentation. It is very helpful.

As I understand it, you have about 10 people in each store who would be working on any given Sunday, and all 800 would be open on a Sunday, so we are looking at approximately 8,000 people who, if stores do not open, will not be able to earn an income on a Sunday. How many of those people will lose their job completely? I assume you would not be able to earn money on Sunday, but you would still keep them from Saturday. With the numbers being what they are, you now would not need those 8,000. I will ask you, Mr Mistry, with the financial background, how many people do you see losing their jobs if in fact you have to stay closed right across the province on Sunday?

Mr Mistry: First, you have to understand that a lot of the employees we have who work Sundays are part-time employees and they either work in the evenings or they could work on the weekends. The schedule for store operations, as Carol mentioned, would be done in advance to see what our needs are, and with the current recession it is difficult to isolate exactly how many of the job losses we have had or where we have not taken on people relate to Sunday as opposed to the current recession we are experiencing.

Also, the part-time employees go through their cycles; if somebody leaves, we will just not hire someone else to take his place.

Mr Carr: But it would be safe to say that 8,000 people will not be able to earn income just in your stores alone if stores are not allowed—

Mr Mistry: If we were allowed to open on Sundays, I would say that 8,000 people have the potential to earn an income.

Ms Cox: What is happening in Ontario to retail in general and Dylex in particular is that we are having a tremendous struggle. The recession has gone on much longer than when we thought we would start coming out of it. We have continued to have devastating returns. I have humungous competition from the States. Pace was just one example. If you travel along the QEW on a Sunday, the lines going into Buffalo are horrific. We are hit with the GST, which has been a real problem for us. We are hit with the lack of our prices being as competitive as in the States.

We have put in salary freezes across the entire country with all our Dylex employees, and we are doing everything we can to hold on to jobs and not to lay off people. We are taking a very hard look at our expenses. We have been cutting down on store hours in the malls. In addition, we have been working with the developers in the malls. We have been working on trying to get some help on rent and rent subsidy and things like that—everything we possibly can do to stay in business.

Dylex has 10% of the Canadian market in retailing, and if we cannot make it, it really bodes very badly for what the future of this province, this country, is going to be. What we are asking you to do is to take a look very seriously at this Sunday shopping issue and stop holding us back from being competitive in the 1990s.

Mr Carr: What you are saying is that the problems are different hurdles. There is one here, and then you go on to the next one, and cumulatively you are unable to compete. What you are saying is, "Please don't put up another hurdle."

Ms Cox: Exactly.

Mr Carr: One of the chaps at Hudson Bay Co yesterday gave some definite figures on how much it will lose if Sunday shopping is not allowed. Have you, Mr Mistry, as a financial person, been able to piece together what the losses will be for your company if all of the 800 stores have to remain closed on Sunday?

Mr Mistry: No, I do not have those numbers.

Mr Carr: It is just too difficult to be able to piece together with all the factors, I guess.

Mr Mistry: We tried to do some comparison with what happened over the period that Sunday shopping was open, but with the current recession it is difficult to isolate the numbers for that.

Mr Carr: You cannot take your figures from Quebec and say they are down 10%, too. You cannot say to this committee, "If we don't open on Sunday, it's going to cost Dylex X amount of money." That is just too difficult to do, is it?

Mr Mistry: It is too difficult at this point.

Mr Carr: But you are saying your best guesstimate is that it is going to hurt. The figures are already in the red, the $3.2 million and the $16 million and so on, all the figures. There probably will be more losses as a result.

Mr Mistry: Are you saying there will be losses just due to Sunday shopping? It is one of the factors that will come into play.

Mr Carr: If stores remain closed Sunday, do you see it hurting your bottom line?

Mr Mistry: It will hurt our bottom line.

Mr Carr: You just do not know by how much?

Mr Mistry: I cannot even estimate.

Mr Carr: I have one final question, as it relates to the protection of the workers. When this legislation was brought in, the Solicitor General said the big reason was to protect the workers from having to work on Sunday if they chose not to. As one of the largest employers, what you have been able to see is that the number of people who are saying, "I don't want to work and I'm being forced to"—in your case, there is not anybody in that situation, being forced to work on Sunday. I think you said you would even like to see strengthened the penalties for any company that does say, "You will work, otherwise you'll get fired."

One of the concerns has been how to enforce that. Do you have any suggestions to this committee about how to enforce that? I sense from your presentation that you are good corporate citizens and that you do not want to force anybody. I think one of the persons at the press conference said that if you force somebody to work on Sunday and a customer comes in and sees him with a long face because he does not want to be there, you are not going to get that customer back. What about some other companies that might not be as good with their employees in good employee relations? How do you see us helping to protect those workers that might be forced by an employer?

The Chair: If you could answer briefly, Mr Mistry.

Ms Cox: Maybe I should. First, we would be happy to hire those people from the other companies. I think the normal process of going through the Human Rights Commission or employee standards group ought to be sufficient, where employees know they can openly complain and get something done about it. Government has set up the processes to do that without anything additional needing to be done. I think the employees are pretty well educated. Certainly in our experience people are very well educated and they know due right of process.

Mr Fletcher: Thank you for your presentation. I am pleased to see you do support the employment standards regulation no matter in how convoluted a way Mr Sorbara tried to explain it. As far as the legislation is concerned, if a person does refuse to work on Sundays and you do discipline him, he has the option of going to the employment standards officer. It does not mean you cannot discipline, it just means they do have that option.

Mr Sorbara: On a point of order, Mr Chairman.

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, please. We are not—

Mr Fletcher: There is a grievance procedure and that is for all retail workers, so you probably understood that a lot better before.

When you talk about job creation, let me just read to you something from Loblaw's Supermarkets when it did a presentation to this committee on Bill 113. These are not my words; these are from Loblaw's.

"The proponents of Sunday openings expound at great length hypothetical forecasts for increased sales, tourist dollars and job creation. Our experience with extended hours and opening additional evenings has proven that jobs are not created as a result, and we can categorically state that we do not anticipate any additional staff requirements in the event of Sunday openings. Rather, work schedules will simply be adjusted for existing employees to compensate for the extra day."

I think you were saying something like that, that it is not going to create a lot of jobs. What it will do is prevent people from working Sundays. Your work schedules will change so that people will not have to work Sundays. If there are Sunday openings you will change your work periods to allow for that extra shift and perhaps hire some additional staff but not a great number of additional staff. Is that right?

Mr Mistry: Well, if we have this—

Mr Fletcher: I heard your answer to Mr Carr. I know what you said.

Interjection: Let him answer.

Mr Fletcher: I did not ask a question.

Interjection: If you are just going to give speeches, you can do that in the house.

Mr Mistry: I was just going to say that if we have this 36-hour rest period, our work schedule may not allow us to work with the people there already; we may need to hire additional people. The probability of a student wanting to work on a Sunday is probably a lot higher than one of our full-time staff who has a family and does not want to work on a Sunday.

Mr Fletcher: This could be a part-time student already working who may want to work on a Sunday.

Mr Mistry: It could be a part-time student working, but if they have the opportunity to work on a Sunday and leave their week clear for their studies, it is an option they can have.

Mr Fletcher: Let me give you one more piece of information given to us yesterday by the Canadian Shoe Retailers Association. From western Canada, Sunday shopping, they reported that only between 15% and 20% of their sales occur on Sunday, and that sales on Monday and Tuesday are virtually non-existent. That is with the experience in western Canada, where they have had Sunday shopping for 10 years or so.

Mr Mistry: Okay, yes, but now you have Buffalo 90 minutes down the road—

Mr Fletcher: We have always had Buffalo.

Mr Mistry: —on a Sunday. You are giving people an option on a Sunday to go down to Buffalo to shop. If they are going to spend their dollars, if they had the opportunity to spend in Ontario, why not?

Mr Fletcher: As far as the cross-border towns are concerned, let's look at British Columbia. They had wide-open shopping, and trans-border shopping increased in British Columbia with wide-open Sunday shopping. It is not so much the fact of when you can shop, it is the cost. You have already addressed that; I know you did. Thank you, I do not have any more questions.

Mr Mills: I will be brief. There are other members of my caucus here who want to talk.

I must say that when this Sunday shopping business came up, I took it upon myself to go into the malls in my riding where your stores are in fact situated and I asked the people in there pointedly, "Do you want to work?" "No, I don't want to work. I want to shop but I don't want to work."

There are a lot of people who cherish Sunday or a common pause day as a family day, and that is a very real thing in the province of Ontario.

I know your companies represent 55% in malls. If you were to open on Sunday in that mall, do you not sense some sort of pressure on the other stores in that mall to open and the other workers there who really do not want to work? I know that in most of your stores, Bi-Ways in particular, it just seems to be all students, but the other stores have mature people working. But the pressure on that mall would be such that those people would lose their family day together. Do you have any thoughts on that effect, what it would do?

Ms Cox: It is hard to comment on what other companies are doing. There is no question, though, that certainly if you have 55% of the mall open, you do feel some pressure to open yourself because of the traffic and the chance. The experience we have seen in the short period of time that malls were open was that many stores were closed, oftentimes smaller stores, where the chains were not. So I think to say every single one feels it needs to be open would not be accurate, and not every one of our stores was open. It depended on the section or area they were in. Conceivably there were some that, if there were several stores nearby, maybe only one in an area was open.

Mr Mills: Would there not be some pressure from the mallholders to put some pressure on leaseholders that, "If you open, this store will open and this store will open," because I believe some of the malls are on gross. That bothers me about the family day that a lot of people cherish, that whiplash effect.

Ms Cox: I cannot comment on the mall developers' and the mall managers' position.

Mr O'Connor: I want to thank you for coming today. I believe that a lot of what you are talking about relates more to some of the other problems and ills that face the economy today: the recession, the GST. Of course, you have a friendly government here that did not tax that tax with its first bill in the House, which we are quite proud of.

Interjection.

Mr O'Connor: Yes, we left a little bit more money in there for the consumers out there. In any case, we are in very difficult times and we admit that as well.

You talked about support for the employee. Do you feel you speak for all retailers in that aspect? We did have a presentation here yesterday by the shoe retailers that of course did not support the Sunday shopping issue. They were more concerned about the common pause day, and realizing the fact that there is not any extra money in the economy whether you are open that extra day of the week.

Ms Cox: I do not know how the shoe people can say there is not extra money in the economy when we think we are losing $100 million to Buffalo.

Mr O'Connor: Cross-border shopping is the issue you are trying to spell out for us, not necessarily the Sunday shopping issue.

Ms Cox: At an awful lot of our stores, like Thriftys and Bi-Way, people will shop on Sunday in those stores instead of going across to Buffalo. It is not worth the gas money to do so. These are not expensive stores for people to shop in, so we do think we would keep people here in Ontario.

The Chair: Thank you, Ms Cox.

Before we have our next presenter, I would like to make mention of the fact that on our schedule this afternoon we have at 2 pm a presenter called "to be confirmed." "To be confirmed" has changed its name to Paul Magder Furs.

We have, I believe, a presentation from the Metropolitan Toronto Convention and Visitors Association.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Chairman, just before we go to our next presenter, if I might raise a point of order with you, it arises out of the discussions that took place during the presentation of the last witness. I believe that we as a committee must agree on what is actually in the bill. We can have different views about that, but surely we must not allow ourselves to misrepresent the legislation to the witnesses who come before us. My submissions during the presentation of the last witness—

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, I appreciate your concern. I understand what you are wanting to make—

Mr Sorbara: If you will allow me just to—

The Chair: On the other hand, I cannot arbitrate upon what is and what is not in the bill, and to some degree there is always going to be interpretation on that.

Mr Sorbara: But, Mr Chairman, if I might just finish my point.

The Chair: I would suggest that, while we are going to have slightly different questions and preambles to those questions, I think that is certainly in order and I think we should spend our focus here with the witnesses who are before us.

Mr Sorbara: If you might let me complete my point, sir.

The Chair: We have already had witnesses waiting an undue amount of time, one of whom is in front of us at the moment.

Mr Daigeler: Mr Chairman, on a point of order—

The Chair: On that same point of order?

Mr Daigeler: Yes. I have not heard the point of order. Have you heard the point of order?

The Chair: I have not heard the entire point of order, Mr Daigeler. However, it is also my right to cut discussion. I think we have an obligation when we have witnesses in front of us. I believe that after the witnesses have finished we can raise points of order, but it is only polite, when we have people waiting for us, when we are substantively behind schedule, to pay attention to the fact that we have people waiting for us, and wherever we have issues such as Mr Sorbara's, we could deal with them at the end of the morning's proceedings.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Daigeler is absolutely right. Once again you have not allowed me to even put the point of order before you.

The Chair: I had heard enough that I was wishing to rule negative.

Mr Sorbara: You have the right to rule here, but certainly you do not further the ability of this committee to deal appropriately with this bill. I could make the point to you in about two minutes, sir.

The Chair: I have ruled, Mr Sorbara. We have Mr Innes in front of us. If you wish to discuss the issue further, we can do that at the end of the morning's proceedings, please.

Mr Sorbara: Can you just tell me on what point of order you ruled? What was the point I was making to you, sir?

The Chair: Can we discuss this further, later?

Mr Sorbara: I am at your disposition. I am just asking you what you ruled on. What point of order did I make and what did you rule on that point of order? What was your decision on it? I have not even had an opportunity to present the point before you. That is my problem, and that is the problem Mr Daigeler raised.

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, you were bringing up an issue about an interpretation of the bill on which there was a difference from the government caucus. I believe those kinds of points should be discussed in detail in a clause-by-clause consideration of the bill.

Mr Sorbara: No, sir, indeed that was not my point of order.

The Chair: Given the extent of the bill and the time we will have to discuss that, I am sure that will be a lively and interesting discussion, but I am also sure it is one that the witnesses do not need to be directly involved in the heat of. Can we proceed with the witness in front of us?

Mr Sorbara: I acknowledge your right to rule on a point of order. I just can advise you that was not the point of order I was about to make, but I accept your ruling, for what it is worth, which is not very much, sir.

The Chair: If it is not, sir, then could we discuss that at the end of the morning's proceedings? Mr Innes, please.

METROPOLITAN TORONTO CONVENTION AND VISITORS ASSOCIATION

Mr Innes: Thank you, Mr Chairman. My name is Richard Innes. I am the vice-president of marketing for the Metropolitan Toronto Convention and Visitors Association. The association is a non-profit marketing and sales organization representing some 800 companies comprising Metro Toronto's tourism industry, an industry which accounts for more than 103,000 person-years of employment and generated some $2.5 billion in tourism expenditures in 1990.

Our mandate is very simple. It is to create business by attracting visitors to Metro Toronto. Our goal of generating increased revenues for the community, maintaining jobs and remaining competitive is the foundation of our position on the Retail Business Holidays Act.

The MTCVA has gone on record many times in the past as being supportive of Sunday openings. We feel the current legislation is both inadequate and inequitable and that only shops in certain tourist-designated areas can open Sunday, while, for example, the country's number one tourist attraction, the Eaton Centre, is excluded.

Based on the tourism impact model that was developed by the firm Laventhol and Horwath, shopping accounted for $514 million in tourism revenue in Metro in 1990. In another study we commissioned, Goldfarb Consultants measured travel behaviour and motivation. Shopping ranked as the highest top-of-mind association with Metro Toronto among residents of our prime US and Ontario markets and second as the reason to visit our city.

Cities such as Vancouver, Calgary, Buffalo, Boston, Chicago, Detroit and New York all offer visitors Sunday shopping. In order for us to compete against these markets, we must offer a similar position.

The association, as part of our 1991 marketing plan, is placing increased emphasis on promotion of retail shopping as a lure to out-of-town visitors. Queen's Quay Terminal, for example, is one of our members and has aggressively pursued the out-of-town market. With the ability to sell on Sundays, Queen's Quay Terminal credits shoppers from outside Metro with more than 26% of its retail business. Similar opportunities would be available to other retailers in Metro to attract out-of-town revenues through Sunday openings.

This forces us to conclude that should shopping on Sunday become a reality in Metro Toronto, our visitors would take advantage of it and leave additional visitor dollars in Metro during a weekend stay, thus maintaining and creating jobs. Saturday and Sunday are key days for visitors who travel to Toronto. Hotels offer weekend packages to stimulate business and convention delegates, enabling them to either arrive prior to the start of a convention or remain after to enjoy the city. Sunday becomes a prime day for these visitors to exercise their desire to participate in the single most significant activity they enjoy, that being shopping.

The MTCVA believes Sunday shopping is good for Metro Toronto and its $2.5-billion tourism industry. It would provide added revenue to the community, stimulate employment and, more important, allow us to be competitive in the tourism marketplace.

The key point to consider is that shopping draws tourists. In order to remain competitive, we must have it. Without it, the tourist industry suffers directly through loss of share of market. This affects employment not just in the retail sector but more importantly in the hospitality industry, an industry that is made up of unskilled and semi-skilled labour in hotels, restaurants and attractions, placing added pressure on the welfare roles.

My organization, ladies and gentlemen, representing the tourism industry in Metro, urges you to consider the policy that is before you, the act that is before you, to remember the tourism industry and realize that it has added impact, not just on the retailers but on the balance of the tourism industry, not only in Metro but also in the province.

Mr Sorbara: I am looking at the third page of your submission, and I am looking at the first set of statistics, which show the number of visitors in Metropolitan Toronto over the past four years, beginning with 1988. You show a steady decline and a stabilization for 1990 and 1991 at 16.7 million. Could you explain what these figures mean for the retailing sector and for your sector generally, the hotel, hospitality, tourism and retailing industry for Metropolitan Toronto?

Mr Innes: The decline is indicative not only of this city but also of the industry. There has been a decline in the number of visitors travelling in general. We have experienced the decline in past years, more so last year, and we hope to hold the line this year. But it has an impact directly on the hospitality industry in terms of loss of jobs. The rule of thumb is that every 5% drop in hotel occupancy accounts for 3,000 jobs lost in the hospitality industry or hotel industry directly. I could not comment on what effect it would have on the attractions, restaurant or retail, but we would assume that it would have an effect.

Mr Sorbara: Recently the Hotel Triumph in Toronto closed with a loss of several hundred jobs. Is that an indication of the state of the industry?

Mr Innes: Yes, sir.

Mr Sorbara: You said that Queen's Quay is allowed to open but the Eaton Centre is not allowed to open. Can you explain why the distinction is made between the tourist attractiveness of Queen's Quay and the tourist attractiveness of the Eaton Centre?

Mr Innes: I can comment that the location has a lot to do with it. On the lake, Queen's Quay Terminal is a popular spot for tourists. There are a number of other activities they can do and enjoy on the waterfront, whereas the Eaton Centre is located in the downtown core, located in closer proximity to the majority of hotels in this city. I guess, because it is constituted as a retail section or a retail area, it does not warrant the designation of a tourist area.

Mr Sorbara: The Eaton Centre is every bit as much a tourist attraction or a tourist destination as is Queen's Quay, and they are both retailers, are they not?

Mr Innes: Correct. I would go so far as to say that in terms of the number of out-of-town visitors who walk through the doors, at the Eaton Centre they would be significantly greater than at Queen's Quay.

Mr Sorbara: Would you agree with me that the retailing at Queen's Quay is on average at the higher end than the Eaton Centre, which has the Dylex stores and the lower-priced stores as well?

Mr Innes: I could not comment on that. I think there is a greater selection of specialty stores at Queen's Quay that could be more expensive, and a more mainline array of products available in the Eaton Centre.

Mr Sorbara: If there was greater freedom in Metropolitan Toronto to decide what hours, if any, it wanted to allow Sunday shopping, would you expect that every retailer in the Metropolitan Toronto area would want to open on Sunday?

Mr Innes: Under the classification of a tourist designation?

Mr Sorbara: No, just open. Let's assume, for example, that Metro said any store that wants to could open between 10 and 6. Would you expect that every retailer would open?

Mr Innes: If you are asking my opinion, I would say no.

Mr Sorbara: Would you expect that a great part of the retail workforce would be coerced into working on Sunday against its will?

Mr Innes: No. The hospitality industry, as you know, is an industry that is one where when you decide you want a career in the hospitality industry, Sunday is a day of work. The hotels do not close on Sunday. Attractions do not close. They are part of our leisure activity, and so on entering the hospitality industry, it is a given that it is a day of work. Scheduling is done so that you have a day off or days off, but Sunday may be a day that you work.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Daigeler has some questions, sir.

Mr Daigeler: I really just wanted to know how you feel about the proposed tourism exemptions and the process that is being set up. When we were talking to the minister yesterday, I thought he was extremely flexible with regard to the possible definition of tourism. He went so far to say that whatever promotes tourism can also fall under this exemption. I think he really was inviting the tourism industry to be creative and use that exemption as widely as possible. Do you have any comments on that? Are you prepared to do that? What do you say with regard to the definition of tourism that is being put forward?

Mr Innes: From a marketing standpoint, we know tourists. We know that their activities vary. We know that when they shop they are not just looking for souvenirs. Shopping is an activity. It is almost like strolling about, which is a category that Tourism Canada defines in its marketing plan.

In terms of where the tourist wants to stop and exercise that right, it could be any number of things. In terms of where the minister's position is—we are appreciative of his ability and his willingness to be open with our industry—where we find it difficult is that it will ultimately be up to a municipality, which could in fact enforce or veto any kind of proposal that is put forward. How long is a piece of string? I think that will be where the minister may be open, encouraging us to be creative in how we designate tourist areas. The local municipalities may not be.

I think what designates a tourist area and what does not is a very subjective issue. Our position is that open shopping for tourists will increase our share of the market, will increase our ability to draw visitors, and will therefore enhance the number of people who come to visit Metro Toronto.

Mr Daigeler: Are you therefore, like many other groups, arguing for some provincial appeal board that may have the ability to overrule municipal decisions?

Mr Innes: I am not arguing for that. I think that may be an option that would allow a local area, a business development area or an attraction area that has a shopping complex in it the opportunity to appeal and to provide its case, to deliver numbers—how many out-of-town visitors come through its doors on a Sunday—and to justify its ability to open or be closed on a Sunday.

Mr Carr: Thank you for taking the time to come here this morning. One of the questions that arose yesterday with one of the groups that came in—I think it was the retail shoe group—was that it said the reason we will not hear very many presentations from some of the retail groups is that they are divided. Their organization cannot get a clear mandate to come before this committee and present because they are divided, whether it be 50-50, or it does not have a clear mandate.

You represent some 800 companies. How have you been able to ascertain that what you are putting forward here in the brief reflects the vast majority? What is the process you use to ensure that all 800 companies are represented and that you get a mandate to do this?

Mr Innes: We represent the industry. This industry has come before our board. We have representation on our board of directors from every sector of the organization. As representatives, whether it be with the convention service company or the attractions council, they have all talked at length with their constituents. This is the feedback that we have got and that we have been directed, approved at the board level of our organization, to come forward with. For many years now, that has been the position.

Mr Carr: So you believe you have a mandate to represent the 800 companies, as you have done.

Mr Innes: Yes.

Mr Carr: I noticed the words that you use, "The current legislation is inadequate and inequitable." What do you say to a Solicitor General who says that this piece of legislation is going to be good and that this is the way we are going to proceed, and yet you have people representing 800 companies in the industry saying it is not? To use your words, it is "inadequate and inequitable." What do you say to the Solicitor General about that?

Mr Innes: Although the Minister of Tourism and Recreation has tried to do his best to make that a major part of the bill, it has been limited to the retail sector. I do not think the issue of the loss of employment or the loss of market share as it relates to the visitor market has been weighed in terms of the significance it plays in the total economic wellbeing of our province. That is how we can come to this hearing and represent our industry with those facts.

Our industry is very much an invisible industry. It is more than just the person who checks you in at a hotel, takes your bags and cleans your room. The ripple effect of the tourism industry is significant. We now have made major steps with the federal government in realizing the importance of our industry. We are making major steps with the provincial government. The Metro government recognizes and invests significantly in our industry because it realizes the payback. I think our point would be that tourism is important, that tourism suffers.

Mr Carr: What you are saying is that the government does not understand your industry essentially, right?

Mr Innes: I think so; fully understand it.

Mr Carr: I just happen to agree too, quite frankly, for a lot of industries, as a matter of fact, not just your own, but I will save that for a speech for the House.

One of the concerns people have is that with different municipalities doing different things you are going to have some municipalities open and others closed. How do you see that affecting some of your members? Some of your members will be happy with that. Do you see that happening, or do you see all opening as the domino effect happens? Where do you think we are headed, and how will it affect you?

Mr Innes: I am here representing Metro Toronto, and if Metro government approved openings then it would not be an issue.

Mr Carr: But if, for example, Peel opens, do you think there will be pressure on Metro to open? Do you see that happening, or do you see it being in isolation and the people of Metro just saying, "No, we're going to decide"?

Mr Innes: Again, I come at it from a competitive standpoint. We have members in Peel. We have members in all the regions of southern Ontario, in fact—out-of-town resorts and what have you. If, for example, a competitive destination allows it and our destination does not, that puts us at a disadvantage.

Mr Carr: Even worse than you are now? If everybody is closed it is bad enough, but if Peel opens and Metro closes, then I suspect it would really hurt you.

Mr Innes: I could not go as far as to say Peel, because I look at the tourism product. I have to look at what is there.

Mr Carr: They would be here anyway.

Mr Innes: And there is not a lot in particular in that region.

Mr Frankford: In your list of cities on the front page, you do not have Montreal. Can you tell us about the situation there?

Mr Innes: I cannot. I do not know the situation in Montreal. In terms of a city destination, when we do extensive research with our visitors, both in the Ontario market and in our US border cities, Montreal, as a city trip, does not enter as a major competitor for us.

Mr Frankford: But in its Sunday policy, is it wide open or is it not?

Mr Innes: I do not know the situation in Montreal.

Mr Frankford: It surely is a very competitive market for us and if they were open it would, by the arguments you state, have a competitive edge.

Mr Innes: Yes. Again, I go back to our research and look at the number of visitors who, when asked, "When you would like to go on a city trip, where would you go?" say that Montreal falls very far down on the list. So we would not categorize Montreal as a prime competitor to us. I cannot comment on—

Mr Frankford: But in terms of Sunday shopping, if they had it, by the arguments we hear, they would have a competitive edge.

Mr Innes: I would think so, yes, they would.

Mr Frankford: But you are not sure if they do. You are not sure of any pressures in Quebec to change or how this legislation compares with—

Mr Innes: No.

Mr Frankford: No. So this would suggest that it is not that simple and, in fact, what one is talking about is more competition in terms of prices and the level of the dollar.

Mr Innes: I do not understand that.

Mr Frankford: What makes us competitive as a shopping destination, I would suggest, is certainly to a considerable degree, which we cannot ascertain, dependent on the level of the dollar, not dependent on Sunday shopping?

Mr Innes: No, sir. Visitors come here from the US to experience the city. We are the number one city of choice when they want to go on a city trip in all our border US markets. People would rather come to Toronto before Chicago, New York, Boston. They rank us and we have quantitative research to substantiate those figures.

Mr Frankford: Despite our lack of Sunday shopping, they still feel that way.

Mr Innes: You look at the numbers in terms of the decline of visitors and that is where we have an issue. As we lose those visitors, we lose our share. We need every competitive advantage we can as we go against our competitors.

Mr Frankford: And clearly it is coinciding with the high value of the Canadian dollar. These figures can also be well correlated with the value of the Canadian dollar.

Mr Innes: They have some, yes.

Mrs Haslam: I am going to take umbrage at one of your comments, because you said the Eaton Centre is the country's number one tourist attraction. You must know that I come from Stratford, and that has the Stratford Shakespearean Festival, and I know how much we gain from the tourist trade and how many visitors we have. So I am going to ask you for proof of that, because I personally think we are.

Mr Innes: The Stratford festival is a good standing member of our organization.

Mrs Haslam: Very true. That I would like to go into. You do not feel we understand tourism, and I would like to take umbrage at that too, because I believe the minister has shown by bringing forward these criteria how concerned he is, how interested he is and how much he understands because of those criteria. Have you seen the criteria that are in place in this proposal for tourism?

Mr Innes: Yes.

Mrs Haslam: You have. Would you add anything to it? Would you delete anything from them?

Mr Innes: I think the whole issue is in "designated." What is a designated tourist area and what is not? That, very simply, is what we need to determine. If we can come up with an agreement that designates a tourist area, that is our secondary position. That is not the ultimate position this industry would like to be in. I think wide-open shopping is where we—

Mrs Haslam: No, I am not talking about wide-open shopping. I am talking about designation of a tourist area if the area has historical or natural attractions, the area has cultural or ethnic attractions, the area provides a concentration of hospitality services; four, five, six, I could go on. I do not like to waste time.

Mr Innes: It is very broad and very open.

Mrs Haslam: You would like it tightened?

Mr Innes: No, ma'am.

Mrs Haslam: You would not like to see it tightened. You would like to see it broadened more? Because we have already had representation here saying it is too broad. So when I mark down, "He thinks it's too broad," now I am saying you do not like it this broad, you want it tightened up.

Mr Innes: No.

Interjection: He wants it broader.

Mrs Haslam: You want it broader? You want the tourism criteria—

Interjection.

Mrs Haslam: Mr Sorbara, I can ask my own questions. Boy, you are beginning to bug me. You want these a little broader in tourism criteria.

Mr Innes: Ultimately, yes. Wide-open would be great. That is not on the table.

Mrs Haslam: No, no. You want wide-open tourism criteria.

Mr Innes: Ultimately we do not need it. Opening on Sunday would give us what we want.

Mrs Haslam: But you represent a convention and visitors association and you are saying you do not want to have a tourism criterion in this legislation?

Mr Innes: We need a tourism criterion. That is the best-case scenario. Correct?

Mrs Haslam: Okay, because I like that. I am going to ask you a couple more questions. How much time do I have, Mr Chair?

The Chair: Two minutes.

Mrs Haslam: Are you in favour of allowing workers to refuse Sunday or holiday work?

Mr Innes: I cannot comment on that. I have explained that the tourism industry is an industry in which everybody works on Sunday. That is part of the deal.

Mrs Haslam: Are you in favour of guaranteeing 36 continuous hours of rest time in any seven-day work period?

Mr Innes: In the tourism industry?

Mrs Haslam: No. Are you in favour of guaranteeing 36 continuous hours of rest time for employees in any seven-day work period?

Mr Innes: Again, I cannot comment on that.

Mr Fletcher: You are an employee. How do you feel?

Mrs Haslam: Are you in favour of strengthening the role of employment standards officers in dealing with employee grievances?

Mr Innes: Again, that is not why I am here. I am here to promote—

Mrs Haslam: But that is part of this legislation and I just wondered if you had looked at that and had an opinion.

Mr Innes: I do not have a comment on that.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Chairman, I wonder if I might ask the indulgence of this committee to ask the witness one more question?

Interjection: No.

Mr Mills: The question I have to ask is not to the gentleman who has made the presentation, but about how we are going to deal with legal staff. Throughout this hearing we have legal representatives from—

The Chair: I am sorry, sir. Are you suggesting that you do not have a question for the witness?

Mr Mills: No. I am going to use my time up to ask this question but I do not want to ask—

The Chair: With the forbearance of Mr Mills, thank you very much, Mr Innes. It is very generous of you to come and join us.

Mr Innes: Thank you.

Mr Mills: I am unfortunately forced to use our time up to ask a question, which I do not think is right. I think that we, during the deliberations as we go on tour, should have the opportunity to call legal staff forward from the tourism ministry, from Labour and from the Solicitor General, and their explanation to clarify some particular item should not be my time because I have asked. Previously, I asked the director of legal services to come forward and that came off our time. I do not think that is fair because everybody has benefited from that.

The Chair: Thank you, Mr Mills. I will consult with the clerk on this issue and, depending on that consultation, I will also, I am sure, consult possibly with you and you can discuss that with the other subcommittee members.

BEACHES BUSINESS ASSOCIATION

The Chair: We have in front of us a representative from the Beaches Business Association, Ms Suzanne Beard. Ms Beard, thank you for joining us, and our apologies for the delay in our deliberations. You have a quarter of an hour. Please feel free to use that time as you wish. Typically, the members of the committee would like to ask questions of you as well. Go ahead.

Ms Beard: I want to thank you first of all for giving us the opportunity to present our presentation. My name is Suzanne Beard. I am chairman of the business association down on Queen Street. It is a contingent of 288 businesses that are overwhelmingly in favour of Sunday shopping.

We encompass a variety of commercial and non-retail businesses intent on surviving and thriving during a highly volatile economic period. At a time when small business is being engulfed in recession and collapse, we hope the government will reinforce the voice of the people.

Since the opportunity for Sunday shopping has been denied us, the Beaches Business Association has been left with no option but to make an application for tourist designation. We pursued this avenue of action for the sole purpose of securing Sunday shopping. That is the mandate of the Beaches Business Association. It is not our wish to promote the Beach any further, to increase any traffic that is not already there. We wish only to capitalize on the traffic that is currently there.

Over the past seven years, the business association has been denied three separate applications for tourist designation under the old criteria when other municipalities have granted exemptions to places like Unionville, Woodbridge and Cullen Country Barns, none of which have the cultural, historic or geographic beauty of the Beach area. A survey prepared by Decima Research in 1989 listed the Beach as one of the top 10 tourist destinations in Toronto, and none of the other three I have just mentioned are included in that list.

During the trial period of legal Sunday shopping, we had overwhelming support from businesses, residents and the tourist trade, and the 15% to 25% increase in sales during a seven-day week was not experienced when the trial period was revoked and we were forced to maintain sales averaging on a seven-day work week. The increase was not recovered during six days. This equates to a loss in revenue of approximately $15,000 for a small business and a revenue of $7,500 in taxes to the government.

We think common sense and common knowledge would suggest that business is here seven days a week and that we only want to take the opportunity to serve the existing business that is there.

Since over 15% of our businesses are operating in a food service capacity, we have a natural flow of traffic and we want to capitalize on this. The variety of industry that supports the Beach ranges from long-established restaurants and services to unique gift and clothing. Many businesses support handicrafts from areas like India, South America, things that are outlined in the current legislation, while other businesses encourage unique and unusual merchandise that can be purchased closer to home.

Specialized shopping activities catering to visitors and residents alike abound in the Beach. Independent merchants would like the opportunity to serve these people.

We are situated in a prime real estate market and an aesthetically beautiful area of the city constantly being used in advertising as an idyllic spot. The value of our location is recognized by residents, visitors and businessmen alike. An article in the Sunday New York Times, March 31, 1991 issue designates the Beach as a world-class destination for visitors. We are obviously recognized outside of Toronto as a being destination for visitors.

Annual festivals surrounding the Easter parade, the Beach craft show, the Midnight Madness and the Beach Jazz Festival, which was just last week, offer continuous appeal for the area and are anticipated by tourists and residents wanting a unique experience.

Of the 288 businesses within the boundary of the BIA, we are, in the majority, owner-operated businesses. We represent the crux of retail life on Queen Street East between Woodbine and Victoria Park. Our annual budget includes support for local community and recreational events. We encourage maintenance of buildings and street presence and we employ a vast number of local full- and part-time help. An informal poll of employees showed 51% of full-time workers and 63% of part-time workers lived in the Beach area they worked in. Closure on Sundays has resulted in a high number of staff layoffs.

In conclusion, we want to acknowledge that we are aware of public sentiment on our application for a tourist designation in the Beach. However, the mandate of the Beach BIA in making the application is to re-establish Sunday shopping, period. It is very clear from public response at a general meeting we had that the residents are also supportive of this mandate.

Mr Poirier: You have explained to us the difficulty of being asked to be designated as touristic because somebody else in a subjective position decides that you do not deserve or that you do not qualify to be touristic. What do you feel if the current Bill 115 comes forward? Do you feel this is going to maintain or change what you have perceived already with this difficulty of being designated touristic?

Ms Beard: Basically, we can meet the criteria that are laid out with the exception of one point, and since there are several you can choose from, we are well within the boundary of the criteria that are being proposed.

Mr Poirier: Yet you have been refused.

Ms Beard: Not the proposed criteria, the old criteria.

Mr Poirier: Yes. So you understand that you are subjected to the decision of where one municipality may say you do not qualify whereas somebody else may qualify.

Ms Beard: That is quite correct.

Mr Poirier: So how do you feel about that?

Ms Beard: It is not fair. We qualify as well as any of the places that I suggested. I think I pointed out that in the Beach we have a geographic location that far surpasses Harbourfront in terms of natural beauty. We have at least four annual activities that happen in the Beach that are anticipated by people both from around Toronto and around the world. The jazz festival is a perfect example. There are people who come from all over Canada to see it.

Mr Poirier: If I understand what you are saying, you would prefer not having to go through these hoops and circles to demonstrate that you are touristic.

Ms Beard: Yes.

Mr Poirier: You would want to have the free choice of saying: "Hey, we know what is good for the Beaches. We know what we want. We would like to be able to decide without outside intervention when we want to open and how we want to open." Is that correct? Is that a fair assumption of what you want?

Ms Beard: I think that is a fair assumption. Yes.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Chairman, I have one final—

The Chair: We have only 15-minute presentations. Mr Carr.

Mr Carr: Thank you very much and thank you for your presentation. I was interested in how this new legislation will change—the last time you did not get the designation, did you think it was because the people making the decisions were opposed to Sunday shopping? What was the reason you feel you did not get it the last time?

Ms Beard: There was one element of the criteria which established the definition of "tourist" which has always been a stumbling block for our application. They had insisted that 25% of the people who are visiting our area, and the sales that are generated from that 25%, be from outside an area of 40 kilometres. We do not believe that the tourist has to come 40 kilometres to visit another area to be considered a tourist.

Mr Carr: So with that being removed, you feel you probably will get it this time, do you?

Ms Beard: I cannot see that there is any major obstacle in this application. I think we basically meet the criteria that the new proposed law is suggesting.

Mr Carr: I guess my feeling was that if that criteria are removed, it might be a little bit of extra work, because you now presume you are going to have to go and present your case. But if that was removed, which this legislation will do, there will probably be a pretty good chance that you will get it next time?

Ms Beard: I would hope so.

Mr Carr: With the situation now, you are going to have to go to the council. Is that going to take a lot of time, or how do you see that working? Is that something that would be fairly easy to do, to present your case, and presumably then get the designation? Or does it take a great deal of time to go before Metro council? Are they backed up for months? Have you any feelings on that?

Ms Beard: We have in the works right now an application for a temporary tourist designation, which we requested be for a year. It was denied us. That decision came through fairly quickly. I would assume if criteria are laid down which allow us to qualify, there should not be a lot of dancing around.

Mr Carr: What I am worried about is that there are so many different areas and communities, and agendas being what they are, that councils are going to spend more time on this issue than they will—it will be interesting to see, and I guess nobody knows right now, how far it will be before they get a chance to hear. Is it going to be a backlog of six months before you get a hearing? Is it going to be very quick or what? I guess that is something we do not know.

Ms Beard: I hope they would understand that we have not made the application frivolously. It has been done in earnest. We basically have done as much research as we possibly can to substantiate that business in the Beaches does need Sunday shopping.

Mr Carr: When you dealt with council in the past, they did not go in order but took it on a first come, first served basis? They did not say, "Well, here is one that looks legit, so we deal?" Is it a first come, first served basis?

Ms Beard: I believe that is the way it is done—first come, first served.

Mr O'Connor: Thank you for coming here today. One area in this legislation, of course, is the level where the exemption is being looked at in the municipal option. Do you feel the municipal option you have to meet is being handled by the right tier of government? Do you think it should be left with the local municipality or do you think it should be put to the upper tier, which is Metro Toronto?

Ms Beard: I really cannot answer that. I do not know.

Mr O'Connor: Do you feel that from Metro Toronto you would get a representation, from your presentation, giving you a tourist designation?

Ms Beard: I do not think they can ignore the facts. I think we are recognized as a tourist area. The thing missing from the Beaches is the actual designation.

Mr O'Connor: So the tourist exemption option there is fine the way it is in the legislation?

Ms Beard: We certainly appreciated it and it has allowed us to present our case in a very favourable light, yes.

Mr O'Connor: Do you think there needs to be an appeal? The way it is stated now is that council has the final decision. Do you feel that is appropriate?

Ms Beard: Yes.

Mrs Haslam: Believe it or not, Mr O'Connor has asked the question I was interested in. I am always asking about the appeal process.

1210

Mr Frankford: I declare an interest because I live in the area and I have daughters who have worked in some catering establishments.

Mr Poirier: So if you shop, you are not a tourist.

Interjection: On Sunday?

Mr Frankford: In accordance with whatever laws.

The questions I would ask have mostly been asked, but I gather you are really quite happy with the tourist criteria in the legislation.

Ms Beard: The proposed criteria, yes.

Mr Frankford: It would seem to fit quite well with what is happening there, although as you say, possibly the 40-kilometre—

Ms Beard: My interpretation of the way you have defined the 40 kilometres is that you have to meet the first part of the criteria before the 7,500-square-foot criteria, which extends to no business in the Beaches; that is, within the Beaches business improvement area. It is a criterion that has to this point been a crux in our application, but it is really—

Mr Poirier: It is a non-issue.

Ms Beard: It is a non-issue. That is exactly right, yes.

Mr Frankford: You heard the previous presenter, from the Metro convention association, talking about the Eaton Centre?

Ms Beard: Yes, I did.

Mr Frankford: Do you feel you would be in trouble compared with big, well-financed interests downtown?

Ms Beard: You mean if everybody was allowed wide-open Sunday shopping or everybody was designated?

Mr Frankford: Or even using the tourist criteria.

Ms Beard: No, I do not. I think the Beaches offers a much more unique shopping and cultural atmosphere than you will get at the Eaton Centre. The Eaton Centre is promoted all over the world, so it is going to be a place people will want to visit. However, I think we offer something entirely different from that, something over and above the good shopping that we have. We have good restaurants. We have a beautiful locale. It far surpasses what people could expect at the Eaton Centre.

Mrs Haslam: I would like to go down there. Will you take me tomorrow?

Mr Frankford: Yes.

Mrs Haslam: Bob is going to take me there tomorrow. I have never been there.

Ms Beard: Good.

The Chair: Thank you very much, Ms Beard.

STONeworks

The Chair: Our next presentation is by Ms Susan Day from Stoneworks.

Ms Day: I am from the Beaches too.

The Chair: As you have seen, we have about a quarter of an hour and you can divide the time as you wish.

Mr Poirier: There is something about the Beaches people.

Ms Day: Yes, we are mouthy.

Interjection: You said it.

Mrs Haslam: You fit in well here.

Ms Day: I am Susan Day. With my sister Sandy, sitting over there, I own a retail shop in the Beaches called Stoneworks. I am only one small retailer. I have owned my business for five years. I am not an expert on the ins and outs of the law, either the old law or the proposed one, but I have become enmeshed in the issue by the mere fact that I bought a business in the Beaches, and I have numerous opinions on the subject.

A little background about my store: We employ between six and eight people at any time, including our mother. We have recruited her. We are currently closing on Sundays, much to the dismay of our customers who have gotten used to shopping in our store on Sunday over the years. We used to be open illegally. Then there was no law, so we were cool. We have always been open, but the hassles by police now are not worth it. They are coming around every week. We did not like going to court the few times we were charged in the past and feeling like common criminals. Being in there with all the people who trespassed and beat their wives and everything else was no fun, so we have decided to close. It is hurting our sales, especially this summer when we rely on an increase in tourist traffic to boost lagging summer sales from regular customers.

During all the time we opened Sundays, our staff understood that they could refuse to work that day. In fact, they can refuse to work any day. As modern and sensitive employers, we realize our employees must have control over and input into many aspects of their jobs or they will not feel good about working with us. We let them determine the kinds of hours they want. We are not rigid about shifts. On Sunday we opened for shorter hours, usually noon until 5. This seemed to suit everyone, employees and customers alike.

The sole reason we ever opened on Sundays, legally or illegally, was to serve our customers. They wanted the convenience of Sunday shopping. We gave it to them. Most of our customers are Beaches area residents. However, on weekends we do see an influx of visitors, or tourists if you want to call them that, to our area. But at Stoneworks we believe totally in customer service, which to us means giving the customer what she wants. Without this philosophy, our business will wither and die.

On Sundays we had three main types of customers. We had the singles, either two women out for a day of brunching and browsing or a sole young person out shopping on her own for a new dress for a party or whatever. We had couples, young or old couples sharing a leisurely day out in the Beaches. We had families, usually young, with kids, finally enjoying some shared time off and taking a look in the stores for items they needed, whether they be gifts for their friends or just items they needed to choose together, to make decisions on.

None of these people seemed too concerned with a common pause day. They were doing what they wanted to do on any given Sunday—shop. They chose to come into our store. Neither were my employees too concerned with a common pause day. Only those who wanted to work that day did so, and if there was a shortfall, Sandy or myself filled in. It is our own business. We work hard for it and we are very concerned about what goes on in our store at any given time. We are always there.

I feel the proposed legislation, just like its predecessor, will discriminate against retail business. No other industry has such restrictions imposed on it, except perhaps the serving of alcohol in licensed establishments, and they are allowed to do it seven days a week. If retail workers needed a legislated common pause day, why not the workers in the food industry too? Do retail workers qualify for special consideration? Are their customers more a hassle to serve than drunks in bars so that they need a special day off all at the same time?

I submit that labour standards already protect workers, all the workers in this province, regarding the maximum hours they work and the provisions for bonus pay if they exceed those hours.

I suggest you legislate bonus pay for retail workers who work on Sundays if you are that concerned about it, but do not legislate their day off. To be fair about this, better to close all the restaurants and bars on Sundays, as well as the racetrack. I find it ludicrous that someone can get drunk in a bar and go to the track and lose all his money, but cannot buy a birthday card in my store, or that he can go home and use the shopping network on TV.

I feel the new law, like its predecessor, restricts commerce and the free market system. Many retail businesses like my own need to be able to serve their customers when their customers are there to be served. By being closed on Sunday they often miss the biggest opportunity of the week to serve their customers. Sunday was often our best day of the week. It is now Saturday. That is when people are off work. That is when they are out trying to shop. We and many retailers are losing sales opportunities and the government is losing retail sales tax revenue.

I feel the government is interfering in the personal lives of Ontarians. By legislating a common pause day, albeit only for retail workers, people are being told what to do, or rather what not to do, in their leisure time. Government is assuming everyone has family and friends nearby with whom to spend time on Sunday. Life today just is not like that. Only 16% of families today fit the traditional nuclear family scenario, with dad working and mom at home with the kids. Today shopping is a leisure activity for many people, both singles and families. Today Sunday shopping is a necessity for many busy people. Single mothers especially complain in my store about the inconvenience of our being closed that day.

Under the proposed legislation, tourists are singled out for special recognition over citizens of the community. It is okay for tourists to shop on Sundays, but not the people who live there. If you are lucky, like the Beaches, and you might fit into a tourist designation, then your residents will be able to shop in their community. But it seems to be discriminating against the citizens by granting special recognition for tourists. I know the industry is suffering and I support the tourist designation aspect of this law if it is the only way to get around this.

Going back to what Suzanne was being asked about, who will grant the designations, I am concerned that Metro council will deny our application because our councilman worries that we do not have the infrastructure in our community to support an extra influx of people. When it is left in the hands of any legislative body, there is always a chance it will find other reasons why something can be denied. I just think the tourist thing is discriminatory. How will we even know they are really tourists?

There is no need for a law regulating hours of business for the retail industry. That is my opinion. We always get caught up in the tradition, the old "it's always been that way" thinking. Scrap the law altogether. We do not need it. To guarantee a common pause day for retail workers, a small segment of employees in the province, will inconvenience the consumer, imperil the health of many small and large retail businesses, restrict job growth, turn off the tourist who probably does not like being told where he can or cannot shop, and alienate workers in other sectors who are not protected by common pause day legislation.

On May 22 we held a community meeting in the Beaches to discuss a tourist designation for our area. Residents and business people attended, as did the police, our alderman, our councilman and our MPP, who is Frances Lankin. The residents made it very clear they do not favour a tourist designation simply to allow stores to open Sundays. The words "tourist designation" strike fear in their hearts—more people visiting our already crowded area on weekends. Conversely, the residents overwhelmingly supported wide-open Sunday shopping. They like to browse in the stores in their community on Sundays and they like the jobs provided for their sons and daughters.

Frances Lankin heard these articulate, intelligent constituents, people who have voted for NDP candidates both federally and provincially for many years. These are NDP supporters and they do not like the proposed legislation any more than the retailers do. At that meeting I asked Frances for a fresh approach to this issue. The people are obviously unhappy with the current trend to common pause day legislation that will discriminate against so many and favour so few.

I am just one small retailer. However, I see my business and businesses like mine are the future of retail in Canada. We are growing and we are taking strides to educate and train both ourselves and our employees. All the courses we take, the seminars we attend and the books we read stress customer service, catering in all ways to customers as the only path to success in the 1990s, and we know that the demise of the department store is a good example: no service, no customers. Everything about this proposed legislation defeats the purpose of that. This legislation merely protects people who do not want to work one day of the week, while penalizing all the people who do.

Mr Sorbara: I just want to tell you, Ms Day, that this probably will be the most refreshing submission this committee will hear. It is certainly to date the most refreshing submission the committee has heard, at least in my view. One of the most refreshing points in it is that one can have voted for the New Democratic Party, continue to support the New Democratic government, and believe that the people of the province are mature enough to look after what they do and what they do not do on Sunday on their own without the interference of government. I thank you for that because I think the points were made clearly and eloquently and with a kind of conviction that we do not often hear before committees of the legislature.

I particularly want to say that you are a business person who probably, under this law, will get a designation and will be able to open, and it was refreshing to hear a plea on behalf of the store just two blocks to the north or two blocks to the west which will be put in a terribly uncompetitive position by being forced not to be able to participate in that market. Is the emerging sense within the people you do business with, and that is not just the Beaches, but the various associations you belong to—I take it you sell retail clothing.

Ms Day: Yes.

Mr Sorbara: What else?

Ms Day: Gifts, stationery and toys.

Mr Sorbara: In your professional association, I take it there is a rapid shift in the ground towards the position that we can look after this business of competing in the marketplace ourselves without the interference of the government trying to determine the winners and losers in the Sunday shopping debate. Is that the case?

Ms Day: Yes, I think the retailers are not being listened to. It is my opinion, for what it is worth, that the government has the ear of certain unionized retail workers at the expense of everybody else. There are some workers who do not want to work on Sundays and their concerns seem to have been blown out of all proportion.

Mr Sorbara: You have, for a small store, a pretty big workforce. Have any of your workers ever been put in a position where, against their will and over their objections, they have been forced to come in and work in your store on Sunday?

Ms Day: No.

Mr Sorbara: Would you ever think you would be in that sort of position?

Ms Day: No. It is not the way I run my business. I would not have employees very long if I tried to operate that way.

Mr Villeneuve: Ms Day, thank you for an excellent presentation by a real person running a real store. We have a lot of theory—people come here with great theories—but you have hit the nail right on the head.

Discrimination I have found most interesting because you are a taxpayer and live in the area, and yet if you do not happen to be catering to the tourist industry, you will not be allowed to open. I think you raise a very good point, that you are being overlooked and you may become part of the cog in that wheel that says you are allowed to stay open, but not because of what you do; it is almost in spite of where you are. Maybe you could comment a little more on that, and also on the fact that the community is a strong community, that you are contributing to that community and yet outside people come and dictate a great deal, and in so doing discriminate.

Ms Day: I just think we need a whole fresh approach to the issue. I do not know why we are all so worried about telling retail when it can and cannot operate. We were talking about Montreal—someone was asking—they do not have Sunday shopping in Montreal. They cannot open after 5 o'clock on Saturday in Montreal, and they cannot open Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings past 6 o'clock in Montreal. It is crazy, laws in this land that have been on the books for ever and we think: "We just cannot throw them out. We will have to just rearrange them a little bit and try to make them a little bit looser. We do not need to say, "This area can be open and this can't," on one day of the week when it is legal to be open any time you want on the other six.

What other crime is there in this country? You cannot murder anyone any time. That is wrong. You are not supposed to steal any time. But one day of the week it is illegal to go shopping, or illegal actually to open your doors because the customers do not get charged; the retailer does. If you made it illegal to shop—it is like drinking in the park.

Mr Villeneuve: We very much have the Big Brother syndrome here. I think the more we go on with that, the more alienation there will be from the business community. I think we are seeing it now. How would you feel if eight of your employees decided to unionize? Do you feel that would create a split between management, yourself, owners and—

Ms Day: No, because I do not operate my business in that way. We are all together in the decision-making. We share our information with our employees. We are small, so we are able to do that. If the employees do not want to work, they do not have to. I have people who want to work two days a week. I have people who want to work every other week full-time. I have people who only want to work on weekends. I had a student I had to lay off. Saturday and Sunday was when she worked and I did not have enough hours any more. It is a give and take thing. There are times when you are stuck and you need someone to come in. They did not really want to, but they will. Then you owe them the favour or something else that they want the next time. That is how I run my business.

Mr Villeneuve: Would most of the retail stores in your area be non-unionized?

Ms Day: Oh, yes. They are all independents or franchises.

Mrs Haslam: I have a couple of things. Do you think Sears is as understanding in running its business as you are as a small family business?

Ms Day: They are larger so it is harder. I used to work for Simpsons. I worked for Simpsons for 17 years and I know what it is like to work for a large retailer. I would probably feel like the retail employees in a large store if I was sitting on that side of the fence right now, "Don't make me work on Sunday."

Mrs Haslam: Do you agree with allowing workers to refuse Sunday or holiday work? Obviously you do, because you allow them to do that.

Ms Day: Oh, yes.

Mrs Haslam: Do you agree with guaranteeing 36 continuous hours of rest time in any seven-day period?

Ms Day: I think that is reasonable.

Mrs Haslam: Do you agree with strengthening the role of the employment standards officer in dealing with employee grievances?

Ms Day: Yes.

Mrs Haslam: When you mentioned that your busiest day now is Saturday, because that is when people are off, to me that was an opposite view to take. You are saying your busiest day is when people are off work and yet you want wide-open shopping so they do not have that busiest day, so they do not have that opportunity for the whole family to go shopping.

Ms Day: It is like the hospitality industry, as the gentleman from the Metro convention board said. If it is a real-world scenario and retail is open seven days a week, when you choose a career in retail—it might just be a part-time career and it might be just temporary—you know those are the rules of the game in retail. Most people do not work in retail. Retail serves people. It is a service industry, so just like a restaurant that is open seven days a week, because people eat seven days a week, it has become that shopping is an activity that people do and we are trying to tell them when they can do it.

Mrs Haslam: I find it very interesting that the impression is given that certain people believe it should be open seven days a week. Mr Sorbara, do you believe it should be open seven days a week?

The Chair: Mrs Haslam, Mr Sorbara is not one of our witnesses.

Mrs Haslam: I am sorry, Mr Chair.

The Chair: Do you have a question for Ms Day?

Mrs Haslam: I do have one more. Under the previous legislation you found it even more difficult. Are you in agreement, then, with having this type of tourist criteria opened up a little bit or would you like to tighten it up a bit?

Ms Day: I like the way the legislation is right now. To tell you the truth, I am one of the authors of the submission that went to the Solicitor General by the Beaches business improvement area, and the criteria that are laid out now are very close to what we suggested. I am quite pleased. I feel like I had a hand in this.

Mrs Haslam: I am sure you did.

Mr Mills: I would just like to make a couple of comments if we have any time left. How much time have we got?

The Chair: Are they comments to the witness?

Mr Mills: They are. I would just like to thank you for being here. In my employment years I have worked for some real oddballs, and I would have loved to have worked for you because you seem such an ideal employer.

If everybody was like you, the need for the legislation we are trying to introduce would be lessened a great deal.

I would just like to say to you that contrary to what your belief may be, this legislation is draft legislation. We are here to listen and I am listening. Apart from the ideology of it, that we are committed to a common pause day, there are lots of areas I am prepared to listen to and take forward at a future date. I thank you for coming.

Ms Day: Can you tell me why you are committed to a common pause day for retail workers only?

Mr Mills: We are committed to a common pause day for retail workers because traditionally the retail worker is the one who suffers most in Ontario. Traditionally, and I do not say this condescendingly, they are less educated.

They are more vulnerable to tactics by employers—not like you, I might say. We have identified them as the most vulnerable of workers in Ontario, so our legislation is designed to protect those we see as the most vulnerable. I must go on to say that we have not sprung this on people. It was part of our election mandate and we are really following up on what we said in the election.

Ms Day: Small business is vulnerable too.

Mr Mills: I would imagine that since we won the election, some people support us.

The Chair: We will be resuming at 1:30.

The committee recessed at 12:32.

AFTERNOON SITTING

The committee resumed at 1332.

TOWN OF GEORGINA

The Chair: Our first witness this afternoon is Mayor Robert Johnston from the town of Georgina. I apologize, Mr Johnston. I think some people are a little late coming back from their lunch hour.

Mrs Haslam: Those who are here are very interested and are worth much more than those who are not.

The Chair: We have approximately half an hour. I am sure your colleague probably briefed you a little bit about what has been happening. Take that time in whichever way you wish, but typically it is half of that time for your presentation and the other half for questions from committee members. Please feel free to start when you are ready.

Mr Johnston: My name is Bob Johnston. I am the mayor of the town of Georgina. I have held that position since December 1, 1988. For the 13 years prior to that, I was the editor of the local weekly newspaper in Georgina.

The town of Georgina is a regional community at the north end of York region, roughly 40 miles north of the eastern side of Metropolitan Toronto. Our municipality has a population of 32,000 people, who are spread over some 200 square miles and three communities, Keswick, Sutton and Pefferlaw. The northern and western municipal boundary is Lake Simcoe, giving us 30-plus miles of shoreline. From the early 1890s, much of that shoreline has been developed with summer cottages and a variety of tourist businesses spread along the lengthy shorefront community and in the town's major communities.

We are a municipality within the riding of MPP Larry O'Connor. We had to get that in.

Our municipality has a long and well-recorded history of being a tourist area. Champlain, one of the early European visitors, decided in 1615 to spend the fall and winter in the area of our community. In his journals, he referred to Lake Simcoe as the Lake of Stakes, a direct reference to the winter activity of ice fishing. Our municipality is the ice fishing capital of Canada and some 60,000-plus fisherpersons enjoy the sport during the months of late December through mid-March each winter. Georgina has won the right to host the 1992 world ice fishing championships, which will occur next February at Jacksons Point.

Tourism has played a large and valued part in our enjoyment of the lake and the economic prosperity of the communities that front on Lake Simcoe. In 1870, a railway ran to Jacksons Point to haul ice to Toronto. In the 1880s, the Metropolitan and Toronto Electric Railway was pushed north of Newmarket and then on to Jersey, Medina, Roches Point, Island Grove, Willow Beach, Jacksons Point and finally into Sutton, Sutton being the northern terminus of this line. Both the railway and electric railway also opened the shoreline to the development of high-class summer havens, typical for much of the earlier part of this century. Today, the Briar's Resort and Convention Centre and the Georgina Inn remain as world-class resorts dealing with people from across the country and throughout the world.

In the middle of the 1970s, a local clothing store merchant, Angelo, who runs a store in Keswick, began working towards having his store and others in Georgina opened on Sunday. This was granted in 1978. Since then, we have been a designated tourist area under the Lord's Day Act and the subsequent legislation, and our stores have had the right to be open. Merchants have been the only ones who decide whether they wish to open or close. With nearly 14 years of continuous Sunday openings, I can honestly report several facts to this committee.

There is no common response among stores as to who is open or who is closed.

Our biggest food store, Verdoold's IGA in Sutton, remains closed despite direct competition from a smaller chain store and numerous convenience stores being open. The store remains closed because of religious decision. This store not only has expanded its operations but five years ago moved to a new location and opened one of the largest independent IGA stores in Canada.

We have one of the largest fireplace stores, the Mason Place, which does major advertising across southern Ontario promoting the variety of products it sells and installs. This store is also closed because the owner has a religious conviction.

This independent decision of merchants is not unique or only based on religious grounds. The hardware store in Sutton remains closed on Sundays, even on long weekends, while another opens. The Canadian Tire store did open for several Sundays but decided to be closed despite the fact that the hardware store some 300 feet north remains open from 10 am to 4 pm on Sundays. There are a number of stores that opened to serve customers on Sunday and then after varying periods of time have closed because their owners felt there was no additional service or business being created.

In Sutton and Jacksons Point, we have had for most of this time two drugstores, Eustace's and Luke's, one in each community. These are your traditional drugstores with in excess of 2,400 square feet serving a variety of drug, medical and beauty aids, cards and wrapping paper. The two fathers, and then the two sons, have competed for years. These two stores for years had agreed among themselves to have one open and the other closed. In fact, the store that was closed had a sign in its window directing shoppers to the other store some three miles away.

We have major tourist businesses, including Dawson's Marina and Crate Marina in Keswick. These are large cruiser and boat sellers, both with international reputations for the sale of costly and outstanding performance boats. As well, we have Quinn's Marina in Pefferlaw, which sells and manufactures large boats. Dawson's and Crates's sales rooms are open, while Quinn's are closed most Sundays of the year.

In Pefferlaw, we have a well-known and respected furniture and appliance store, Bodley's. This store, now in its fourth generation, is a high volume store that remains closed on Sunday, despite the fact it sells products to people living throughout the entire greater Toronto area.

As well as the normal commercial stores, we have a number of talented residents who provide unique manufactured products. Again, we have some who have their sales offices open and some closed. Robshaw in Baldwin and Baker's Furniture in Pefferlaw are local cabinet and carpentry shops which make handmade cabinets, curio pieces and other wood furniture. Robshaw is open and Baker's is closed. They are some 10 miles apart on or just off Highway 48. They compete with the regular furniture stores both within and beyond our municipal boundaries.

We also have an unusual combination of businesses. In Keswick we have a Sears store warehouse. This is open Sunday afternoon, but the Sears catalogue stores in both Sutton and Pefferlaw are closed. The Sears store shares space with a travel agency and the Pefferlaw store is in a convenience/junior department store.

What stores open, or do not, do so for a variety of reasons, some religious and some financial. I must indicate that in some of the final months before Christmas we did find that some merchants who are normally closed did open on Sunday afternoons. That could have been because of the huge amount of advertising being done by some of the larger malls in municipalities to the south of us, which were open due to the existing legislation. This year, under the new legislation, these malls will not be open on Sunday.

One statement about our commercial business is that few are open beyond normal working hours. The majority of the stores are open Monday to Saturday from 9 am to 6 pm and are only open late on Thursday and Friday nights to 9 pm. Sunday hours are divided, with some open 10 am to 4 pm and others open noon until 4 pm. Our municipality is not a place that runs lengthy open hours seven days a week. The only businesses that are open late are the convenience stores.

The time of year has not been a noticeable factor in which stores are open. During the late spring, summer and early fall, the highest tourist business seasons, we find a few more stores open, but that may be 10 or 15 at most across our entire municipality. Several stores are open during this period only—ice cream stores, hamburger restaurants and vegetable or fruit markets.

As part of the previous council decision under the old legislation, the only days our businesses are closed are Christmas Day and New Year's Day. All other holidays have been removed from the restrictions. These stores are open on summer holidays, May 24, July 1 Canada Day weekend, August 1 Civic Day weekend and September 1 Labour Day, but on other holidays are closed or on reduced hours. Thanksgiving, Easter Friday and Boxing Day do not have as many stores open.

I guess one of the things that remains an anomaly is that several of the stores still close Wednesday afternoon. This is a hold-over and fewer stores are taking that, but there may be as many as 20 which still close on Wednesday afternoon. Our business people are quite independent-minded.

In the proposed legislation, our municipality falls within most of the definitions of what you may consider as a tourist area. There are several areas that would cause our municipality considerable problems if they were introduced.

My first concern is if the legislation tries to impose limits on what type of store may open. Should the furniture store be closed if it sells on commission local water colours, pastels and paintings or other pieces of art, while next door a clothing store that sells swimwear is open? Should the grocery store that sells food items and also a variety of summer picnic material be closed because the local person decides to do his usual shopping on Sunday? How can we allow a Becker's, Mac's or other local convenience stores to be open, selling a variety of food products, and not allow the supermarket chain to be open? There should be a municipal or area-wide shopping designation allowed by the local municipality, and I stress that it should be the decision of the local municipality, not the regional municipality.

I believe, as do our business associations, and we have four of them—the Georgina Board of Trade, Sutton and Jacksons Point business improvement areas, and one business group, the Uptown Keswick Business Association—that a community-wide designation should be possible.

To discriminate from having a business open would be arbitrary and therefore extremely controversial or require such massive legislation that it will be almost impossible for comprehension. To try to define what business many of the stores are in is often difficult, as merchants have a variety of merchandise and services available.

One other factor that appears true across our municipality is that in Keswick, our largest community of 12,000 people, there are the largest number of businesses open on Sunday. In Sutton we have a number that are open on Sunday, and in Pefferlaw almost all are closed.

The majority of Sunday workers in our municipality are students under the direction of store owners or senior managers.

This question of who works depends on who owns the store and the size of the store. Many of our businesses are family operations, and while we find the second generation running them, in other cases part-time staff are brought in. The Keswick IGA and A & P and Sutton Foodland bring in part-time staff under a few senior manager-owners. In the case of some drugstores, the shifts of pharmacists are just expanded to have some working Sunday shifts.

The majority of the Sunday workers are high school students or college and university students who get their hours on Friday night, Saturday and Sunday. Many of these employees find this is an excellent opportunity to return to their parents' home for the weekend, earn some money and then return to their colleges or universities Sunday night or Monday. There are as well a number of merchants who provide the sales force every day they are open. This means that one or other of the partners is at work on Sunday. Wages in our municipality are low. We have no major industrial manufacturing plants and even regular salaries at stores are below those of the municipalities to the south of our municipality.

Our municipality has social problems. I would not be able to think that these, in any way, can be directed to the effects of Sunday store openings. There is stress on business people who have to be open, but that market and your personal beliefs are major factors which weigh on the decision, not that you have to be open because your competitors within the community are. There are no precise figures of family problems of business people.

Our community is still small enough that I know personally many owners of the businesses throughout our municipality. Many of the larger businesses that still serve our municipality have been around for generations and have been living with Sunday shopping for the past 14 years. We have a number of small boutique businesses that have opened and closed for a wide number of reasons. There is, to my knowledge, no great social breakdown by business people or the families that are and have been open for Sunday shopping during the past 14 years. The greatest complaint that I have from these business people is the amount of taxes they must pay and charge their customers, whether those are the taxes of the municipality or levied by the province or the federal government.

In our community, we have those who claim that the family is falling apart. Some of them urge council to provide more youth facilities. A place for youth to hang out is the number one request by both young people and their parents. You will notice this request is for a place for the young people, not their parents, to hang out, a place for young people to go to associate with others in their own age group.

During the past two years I have participated in the opening of three new church congregations in Georgina. The church attendance is lower than in previous generations, but we do not have any churches closed or even contemplating closing. As I have pointed out elsewhere, some business people are very involved and strong believers in their own churches and refuse to be open on Sunday.

We are a working example of what does happen over a period of time when Sunday shopping is in place. The community does not break down, social ills are not greatly compounded and businesses do not all have to be open to retain their share of the local business.

Our business community is fragile in that a great amount of residents' shopping occurs outside our municipality. A great number of residents work elsewhere and do some of their shopping there. The second major impact is the major malls which exist in Newmarket, some 10 to 15 minutes away from the majority of our residents. Our business people do successfully compete in service, price and quality; they have to. We have an 800,000-square-foot mall, with three major chains, in Newmarket, not to mention the variety of other stores in that community.

The existing legislation can be improved. I must admit that I have not attempted to review the entire piece of legislation being proposed. I am more interested in the general concepts of the legislation that business and tourist areas should be open. This has my full support.

The legislation can be modified to ensure that employers have limited ability to demand that employees at any level work on a common pause day. The legislation can be made to ensure that any employee working on a common pause day, be it Sunday or whatever, should be paid double time.

There should be no discrimination. It should be allowed in tourist areas such as ours that one be open or another closed. That should not be by type of store or size of store. The communities of store owners must be recognized, not the individual store. In today's economy we need to leave the decision to those who pay the bills. The merchants themselves can and will make the decision because they must make a profit.

We have found no single line of reasoning that can describe what has occurred in our municipality to explain why some businesses are open and some are closed on Sunday, except that of the choice of the particular business person. We want that to be left to the business person to decide, and we want the decision to have tourist shopping left to the local municipality to decide.

I thank you for your time and interest in our true Sunday shopping experience.

Mr Sorbara: I want to say a word of welcome to Bob, the mayor of Georgina, one of the municipalities in York region.

I just want to say to my colleagues on this committee, while York region is generally seen by the public to be an area of dramatic growth, with thousands and thousands of new homes and new factories and new businesses and new shopping malls, the municipality of Georgina is one of those areas where the economy is far more fragile and where development has not occurred at the pace that it has occurred in other parts of York region and other parts of the GTA. The economy is one that really requires that provincial governments pay attention to the reality of what the people there are saying. I am delighted to hear the mayor make the submissions that he has.

I take it that you are not asking the provincial government and this committee to recommend that we take steps to make sure that the mall in Newmarket is closed on Sunday so that your businesses can have a bigger chunk of the market on Sunday. Is that the case?

Mr Johnston: Right. I want the local municipality to decide. Let Georgina decide what it wants within its boundaries, Newmarket decide, Aurora decide, Whitchurch, Stouffville. Let the community—because it is the local councils that are elected by the people within that community—decide.

Mr Sorbara: You already have the responsibility to set store hours under the Municipal Act. Is that not the case?

Mr Johnston: Yes, sir.

Mr Sorbara: Your one quarrel then with the existing legislation is that the upper-tier municipality has the authority to set Sunday hours and you think that should be at the local level.

Mr Johnston: My concern is that because of some of the pressures being put on some other municipalities that do not wish to open, they may feel that there can be no community that has a tourist-wide. We are within that thing saying, please leave it at the local municipality level.

Mr Sorbara: By the way, this example of Georgina is yet another example of what I mean when I say that Ontario becomes the playground of the rich on Sunday. Lots of stores can open in Georgina on Sunday because of the tourist designation, and those who have cottages up there or those who can afford to travel up there for the day get to shop in those stores. Of course, the local people as well get to do that, but if you are living in downtown Toronto or downtown Kitchener or downtown Ontario and you do not have the ability to travel freely, then you are, in a sense, a second-class citizen.

Mr Chairman: that is the only question I have. I would like to put you on notice that when we finish with this witness I will be raising a point of order for consideration of the Chair and it should just take me about two or three minutes after this witness.

Mr Daigeler: Actually my question was similar to that. Has the regional municipality at the present time hindered you in your store openings?

Mr Johnston: No, it has not. Fortunately, the region's other mayors and regional councillors who sit have been very supportive of Georgina's position, but should it be put to them where they have to decide yes or no, that is what I am very concerned about: that eight other municipalities will decide what is going to happen in our municipality.

Mr Carr: I want to welcome you here and thank you for the presentation and for the fine brochure. You certainly have a gorgeous area highlighted very nicely by this and we wish you all the best.

I take it then with the present legislation—and you have spoken obviously with some of the owners in your area as well as other councillors—you will be moving very quickly to designate your area “tourist” and you feel that probably you will get support for that.

Mr Johnston: Yes. Within the terms I have seen, we qualify under five of the six and we will be making that subsequent move. Our council had voted previously to re-affirm that position, and certainly once your legislation is ready we will be moving forward.

Mr Carr: Was there a great deal of debate? Was it a close vote or was it something overwhelming?

Mr Johnston: It was 9-0.

Mr Carr: Nine-nothing. I used to play a lot of hockey games 9-0. Unfortunately I was the guy who let in nine. Otherwise I would not be here. So with the situation as it is then, you obviously feel you have overwhelming support from the community.

Mr Johnston: Yes.

Mr Carr: Essentially this new legislation will make it such that your area will be open, so you really do not have too many problems with the legislation then.

Mr Johnston: No, I do not, sir.

Mr O'Connor: It is a pleasure to have one of my mayors here before me today. Welcome, Bob. It is a wonderful brochure showing everybody all the fine things that we do have up in the north part of my riding, which is terrific.

Just a couple of different questions, perhaps, to try to draw out some points. That tourist designation that has been set aside, I know I had met with one of the BIAs and the question came up at that point in time about the tourist designation. Do you feel that the criteria highlight all the necessary points, or do you think there should be anything added or deleted from them?

Mr Johnston: I think it covers a wide variety of the things that probably would look to tourism: We meet five out of six, so that leaves me some comfort.

Mr O'Connor: One other area of the legislation refers to an application asking for support by the chambers. When you have talked to the BIAs and the downtown business association, were they aware of that and are they comfortable with that?

Mr Johnston: Yes. Every time I have appeared before either the BIAs, the Georgina Board of Trade or the Keswick uptown businessmen, they have all spoken in support of it and the continuing on, basically because very few of the merchants feel they are pressured into being open. Most have made their decision one way or another already and do not see it that we need to have it totally closed or totally open.

Mr O'Connor: In those discussions, were there any problems relating to the employment standards aspect of this legislation in the protection for the workers? Did they highlight any problems with that at all?

Mr Johnston: There was no discussion in my presence about employees, basically because the legislation is not forward enough yet for them to be looking at it and considering it.

Mr O'Connor: I think, because of the area, the employees probably realize—

Mr Johnston: A lot of our employees—I guess to make the point even more succinct—are university and college kids who come home to their parents for the weekend and they get to work 16 hours in two days as opposed to working Monday to Thursday night. One of the things I wanted to make sure you knew is that a number of them find it much better to come home and work on Saturday and Sunday so they do not have to work Monday to Thursday night while trying to go to college and university.

Mr O'Connor: On the bill's aspect of upper-tier government, do you feel that could have a negative impact in Georgina or do you feel that York region realizes the importance of the tourism aspect of your municipality?

Mr Johnston: I am sure that York region as a whole understands the position of Georgina as a tourism commodity. My concern so much is that there are only two members out of Georgina on a 19-person council. That does not give us much towards a vote should we get into some hard knocks, and already our region has had some very long and difficult discussions of municipalities which do not want to be open, and we have neither the political might nor the right as the region.

Mr O'Connor: In that aspect then, because in the legislation the municipality has the final decision, do you think there should be an appeal process and could you perhaps give us a suggestion?

Mr Johnston: I think if you leave it with the local municipality, those are the people who are elected locally and they can make the decision.

Mr O'Connor: Good. Thanks, Bob. I appreciate that.

Mr Frankford: I think it is a very interesting presentation, and it is very nice to get a perspective that is not as Torontocentric as the ones we had this morning.

I was interested about the drugstores where I understand there are two that have a co-operative arrangement.

Mr Johnston: They have had it for years. One is in Jacksons Point; one is in Sutton. One would be open one Sunday and the other would be closed, and they would switch back and forth, despite the fact they represented two different chains and were for all other purposes very competitive, but they had this arrangement so that both would not be open.

Mr Frankford: So it really shows that they feel they need to provide a service, but they are not staying open to get every last buck.

Mr Johnston: Right, and I think that is the case of a lot of businesses. After the legislation was passed, there were a number that opened because they felt they had to be open because everybody else was open, but after three months, even with that legislation, a lot of them went back to the way they had been before.

Mr Frankford: Is it just these two pharmacies we are talking about, or are you aware of any broader arrangements?

Mr Johnston: Those are the two pharmacies I am most aware of.

Mr Frankford: It would be interesting to know how widespread that sort of thing is in the province.

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, does your question involve the witness?

Mr Sorbara: No, it does not. I was just waiting until Mayor Johnston was finished.

The Chair: Thank you very much, Mayor Johnston for a very interesting presentation.

Mr Sorbara: I just bring up this point of order because I think as we begin these public hearings we are taking an unusual course, if not a course that is without precedent in the province of Ontario. We are hearing submissions on a bill that is under the auspices of the Solicitor General and the Ministry of the Solicitor General. My understanding is that it is at least parliamentary tradition in Ontario that the committee be attended by either a minister or a parliamentary assistant from one or more of the ministries that are involved. Here we have a bill—

The Chair: Mr Mills is here.

Mr Sorbara: I will just complete my remarks here. We have a bill involving three ministries: the Ministry of the Solicitor General, the Ministry of Tourism and Recreation and the Ministry of Labour. Generally the custom in these sorts of things is that if a parliamentary assistant is going to participate in the hearings and in the committee consideration, he absents himself as a member of the committee and joins you, sir, at your left hand, and someone else substitutes for that committee member.

As I look around the room, I do not see any of the three ministers. I am surprised that they are not interested in the bill. I do not see any of the parliamentary assistants, save and except for Mr Mills, who is not sitting here as the parliamentary assistant defending the bill and answering specific questions.

I do see some officials from the ministry, and that is in keeping with tradition, but I would expect that we would have, for a bill that is so controversial, some political representation here in the room monitoring these hearings and participating in the hearings in a way that has become the custom in the province. I would ask you, sir, if you would inquire of the ministers or their parliamentary assistants whether they are going to continue to make themselves scarce during these public hearings.

Mr Mills: I wonder if I might—

The Chair: On that point of order?

Mr Mills: Yes, on a point of order, Mr Chairman, if I might respond. As you probably are aware, many committees sit at this time. We are very stretched out in numbers and it is not possible to have a parliamentary assistant from Tourism and Recreation and from Labour here, together with me. It is not possible at the present time to get a replacement even for me, and that is why I am sitting here and not there. I realize that on Bill 17 Mr Wessinger sat there, but we just do not have the luxury of personnel. Some people are still away on holiday.

Mr Sorbara: If I could just comment further, it is the government which organized the committee schedule for this week. The government, and certainly the government House leader, certainly knows the tradition that these bills are carried before committees with the assistance and presence of either the minister or the parliamentary assistant. We have people taking time out of their holidays and coming here and making presentations before this committee. We have asked people to make submissions; we have advertised all over the province. The fact that some NDP members are still on holidays should not be the excuse. We should have at least one parliamentary assistant participating as the political spokesperson of the government for these committees, and if that has to be Mr Mills and if the government members on the committee have to be reduced by one, so be it.

I see six members over there. The tradition of parliamentary assistant or minister carrying the bill on behalf of the government is well established here in this place in our committee work and should not be abandoned now simply because some people are on holidays.

Interjection: Mr Chair, I do not—

Mr Sorbara: Just let me finish. This is the final time I am going to make the point.

The Chair: Mr Sorbara.

Mr Sorbara: I do not want to interrupt the hearings. People have taken their time—I see Mr Magder in the room, and I want to get on with the hearings, but I also would like the Chair to send an urgent message to the three ministers that they should be here for their bill or their parliamentary assistants should be here to represent the government on the bill. In the absence of that, the message to the province is that the government, notwithstanding that it is having these hearings, does not give a whit about what the public has to say about the Sunday shopping bill.

Mr Fletcher: On the same point of order, Mr Chair: Mr Sorbara has made a few comments that the ministers do not care. That is not true; they do care.

Mr Sorbara: Well, where are they?

Mr Fletcher: They were here yesterday, and I know Mr Sorbara had to leave early yesterday, even though there were other witnesses here he did not hear, so obviously you do not have much faith in this and you do not care that much about it yourself.

Mr Sorbara: If you want to make a political point out of this, go ahead. I am just bringing up a point of order.

Mr Fletcher: As far as the New Democrats being on holiday, that is not a fact either, Mr Chair. We are strapped for people, but that is not because people are on holidays.

As far as the parliamentary assistant being here is concerned, the parliamentary assistant is sitting at the table participating in this. It does not matter where the people sit, they are here, they are listening and they are participating and they can carry back any message. A person sitting up front cannot hear any better than a person sitting here.

The Chair: Thank you, Mr Fletcher. Mr Sorbara?

Mr Sorbara: I would just say to Mr Fletcher that when a parliamentary assistant—

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, please.

Mr Sorbara: —he does not question the witnesses.

Interjection.

Mr Sorbara: I am just explaining a tradition to you, my friend.

The Chair: We have had the experience in the past while we were hearing on Bill 17 that Mr Wessinger, I believe, at that point sat with the other government members until such time as we got into clause-by-clause. Where Mr Mills sits is entirely his prerogative, but the issue you bring up is several-fold. There is the question of where Mr Mills sits and the question of participation of parliamentary assistants or political participation from the other two ministries involved. If you would like to put that request in the form of a motion, we could certainly debate that and decide upon it.

Mr Sorbara: I move that the Chair of the committee urgently request of the Minister of Tourism and Recreation, the Minister of Labour and the Solicitor General to either attend at the hearings or direct that one or more of their parliamentary assistants attend at the hearings—

The Chair: Thank you. Discussion on that motion?

Mrs Haslam: Mr Chair, on a point of order.

Mr Sorbara: Let me just finish the motion—on behalf of the government. I just point out that Mr Mills, sitting on the committee, is not here as a parliamentary assistant on behalf of the government.

Mrs Haslam: Is that part of the motion?

The Chair: Mr Carr, I am sorry. You were trying to raise a point of order, Mr Mills. Were you wanting to pursue that or can Mr Carr speak?

Mr Mills: I would just like to point out that although the Minister of Tourism and Recreation and the Minister of Labour are involved, as is the Solicitor General, I think it is a fair statement that the bill belongs to the Solicitor General.

Mr Sorbara: Sure; that is right.

Mr Mills: I do not really see that the presence of a parliamentary assistant from those two ministries is necessary.

The Chair: Mr Mills, that is not a point of order, that is a question of debate about the motion. Mr Carr?

Mr Carr: I just want to say very briefly that it may be a bit of an oversight that some of the parliamentary assistants were not there. There are short numbers and maybe it was not thought of, so I do not think there was any intent. Because it was the Solicitor General's bill, obviously the government probably knew he should be there.

I do not think it was anything where it was intentional, but in light of the fact that it does have so much of an impact on tourism and so many of the representatives who have come before us are from tourism, I think it would be worth while just asking to see if the parliamentary assistants of Tourism and Recreation and Labour can make it. It may be the case that they are preoccupied with other bills. There may be Labour bills going on in the standing committee on resources development where they are shepherding them through and I am not aware of that.

The other thing I would suggest is that somehow, and I am sure the members of the government in the committee will impress it upon them, hopefully there would be some type of mechanism so that we can impress upon the parliamentary assistants who may be tied up on other bills exactly what has happened. It may be just a case of this committee informing them when a particular group does come in. Maybe it is possible for parliamentary assistants to come in when we are in Toronto when there is a group that might be affecting them.

I will support the motion. Hopefully there will be an opportunity to come and sit in, and if not, if they are in for other reasons, at least we will know that.

The Chair: Mr Sorbara and Mr Carr have already spoken to the motion. Mr Mills did as well on a point of order. I recognize Mr O'Connor and Mrs Haslam. I am wondering if it is possible for us to limit this discussion to some degree, because we do have witnesses waiting for us. Mr O'Connor first.

Mr O'Connor: I would just add that I find that this committee, because we do not have a parliamentary assistant here sitting to your left and in fact he is a member of the committee, is refreshing, because we have a committee that is open to changes. They are not defending the legislation but are therefore open to changes. For the witnesses who do come here to find that this government is open to change and not necessarily defending what we are trying to say I find very refreshing. I am glad Mr Sorbara brought that to light. And for the members who were here and continue to stay here for the majority of the day, I think these witnesses appreciate that as well.

The Chair: Mrs Haslam and then Mr Sorbara, and hopefully we can wrap up this discussion.

Mrs Haslam: I agree with Mr Carr, but for the same reasons Mr Carr has given, I will not be supporting the motion. I think the wording is not what I would like to see in this particular motion. I have no problem with making our ideas or our suggestions known to the ministry, but I will not do it in this manner and in this wording.

Mr Sorbara: I would have hoped that the members of the committee would have joined me in supporting the motion so we could get the matter dealt with. The great irony is that we do have the parliamentary assistant to the Solicitor General here and he could participate in another context, and I do not see why the government—I see the presence of the chief government whip in the room. I do not know why you or anyone would find that offensive.

We are beginning a province-wide tour and the tradition has been that a parliamentary assistant represents the government, with all due respect to my friend the member for Durham-York, because it is a government bill before the committee. That is not a bad tradition. It is a good, healthy tradition. The parliamentary assistant is then able to speak to issues that arise about the bill on behalf of the government and help the committee in its deliberations. So I would once again ask for your support. We can get this matter dealt with quickly and then we can get on with our business.

The Chair: All in favour of Mr Sorbara's motion? Opposed? The motion is defeated.

PAUL MAGDER

The Chair: I would like now to call up Mr Magder of Paul Magder Furs. Mr Magder, I believe we have half an hour, and you can please sit down wherever you wish, sir. You can use that time however you wish. Typically, people divide it in half, half of the time for your presentation and half for questions from all of the committee members. Please feel free to start when you are comfortable, sir.

Mr Magder: Thank you for having me on such short notice. I appreciate that. Believe it or not, I have been involved with this particular issue for probably 12 years.

Mr Poirier: I believe it.

Mr Magder: I mean, some of these people may have been teenagers at that point; I do not know. The only nice thing is that everybody keeps getting younger as time goes on.

However, my personal position on this law is that it is wrong. There is so much wrong about it, and unfortunately I believe the present government is taking a bad law and making it worse.

I believe Sunday is special to a lot of people, whether on religious grounds or not religious grounds. However, I do not feel the government has a right to tell you when to work and not to work.

I think there is need for a law. I think government should make a law. I will give you an example, Dufferin Mall. I was discussing this issue years ago with this small businessman. He said: "I don't want to work Sunday. I have to be open till 10 o'clock every night, including Saturday, because my landlord"—I think one of the big stores is in the mall, I forget which, K Mart or whatever—"says those are the rules. The big store wanted it that way, so all the little stores have to go along." I think this is despicable, because just as much as I feel you have a right to work Sunday—I feel I have that right and everybody has a right—you should have the right not to work.

It is funny. All governments, including this present government, seem to be overlooking this issue. I think one of the most serious problems is the malls, where storekeepers are forced to stay open who do not want to be open Sunday. I think if they want to regulate hours, 9 to 6 five days a week or six days a week or whatever, they have some kind of semblance of being open, but I think this is where the government's direction should be.

Their direction is correct as far as protecting people from being forced to work is concerned. Of course you should not be forced to work, but I cannot see why they cannot do—I believe in the restaurant industry they have a choice of picking any day and I think this might be the approach.

I think there should be a law. In Massachusetts, with the blessing of the churches and the unions, they have made a law which most people seem to be happy with. No law is going to make everybody happy, but imagine when you have the church and the unions agreeing with it. I cannot see why we cannot take this approach. In Massachusetts, you must pay time and a half wages on Sunday, which I do in my particular case. I think everybody should be paid time and a half, because Sunday is special. If you want to make it a little more costly to do business, that is fine. If the business is there, everybody is happy in the end anyway. Also, merchants I believe are protected from being forced to open on Sunday, and of course workers are protected from being forced to work.

We would probably wind up with the same result in Ontario if we had a similar law. Not everybody is open. We seem to have a funny idea in Canada. If you allow stores to open, everybody has to be open. This is nonsense. There is no way in the world I will work Saturday evening, and yet in the United States a lot of stores do open in the evening. I do not want to work Saturday evening. I choose not to. I enjoy working Sunday, because my customers seem to be happy on Sunday, especially tourists.

In fact, I was in Rochester last week, and it was interesting. I was shopping, and I could begin to see the problem. It is nice when you are on a holiday to go shopping and spend a little time, because today shopping is difficult. There is so much to choose from and you are trying to make the right decision. When you are on a vacation is a good time. To go shopping at night I think is absurd.

Two years ago, when I had the injunction placed against me by the city council—which I won, but of course then they got the Attorney General after me and of course I could not fight that; I was ordered to close or else—personally, I suggested, "Well, close Chinatown." I happen to be in Chinatown, in case anybody is not aware. Howard Moscoe did not know I was in Chinatown, but I am in Chinatown geographically and in court evidence and everything else. I am in Chinatown, but in my particular store I sell clothing.

It is funny. This law says I can sell tobacco products that kill people, that is fine, but do not sell clothing. For the life of me, I cannot see why the government has not done something about—we all know tobacco kills, whether you smoke or not. I know it nearly killed me years ago. I do not think I would be around if I had not quit, because I could not breathe so well. Fortunately, I quit. However, it just shows you how absurd this law is.

I ramble and ramble. I think we need a law that protects workers and protects merchants from being forced to open, but we do not need a law that stops people from working or businessmen who are trying to make a living. I have a family also. My children work for me. I am in a tourist area. You know, I am trying to make a living just like anybody else. The present law is wrong.

There is one point here. There are maybe 50 people in this room. The irony is that the government calls it a common day of rest. It is funny, common law and everything else. This particular law probably does not affect any more people than maybe me and one or two other people here, because any parliamentarians—you are allowed to work Sunday, and you do. You electioneer on Sunday. In fact, I had a writer who says how many times he works Sundays preparing speeches for parliamentarians. He thought how ridiculous this thing is.

In case you people are interested, I have many people who work for the present government, the previous government, who buy coats from me because they feel I am right. They do not like the government telling them when to shop or work. In fact, even in the NDP office, believe it or not, people come down and buy coats from me—

Mr Poirier: Not on Sunday.

Mr Magder: On a Sunday or during the week, because it is a like a free choice issue. Now this is my position. We need a law, but at least bring a fair law. Do not bring a law that picks out only retailers. For instance, why are people in the duty-free shops forced to work Sunday? I have checked this out by the way, and they do not get time and a half. People say, "Well, the airports are federal property." Nonsense. It is in Ontario. I mean, you charge provincial taxes there. You do not relieve them of provincial taxes. So I think this is a bunch of garbage.

So I could go on and on and on about this. I think the government should stop charging anybody under this law now. The law is a mess. You have got a law that is created on behalf of special interest groups. You do not outlaw drunk driving because of special interest groups. You outlaw it because it is wrong. The law picks and chooses. It says you can be on one side of the street or you cannot be on the other. You are a tourist area. You are not. People come to Toronto. They do not come to Chinatown or Harbourfront. They come to Toronto, and then they do whatever they want to do. Why not let the marketplace decide?

Ten years ago, I approached Larry Grossman on this issue as pertaining to the tourist problem. I pointed out that we are suffering. The tourists would like to come to Toronto and do their shopping. He said, "Well, you know, we really sympathize with you, but we have the NDP pulling the strings here," and this and that. "Wait till we get in and we'll do what we can."

Mr Sorbara: You think it was bad then?

Mr Magder: Yes. Well, I thought it was bad, but it is worse now. It seems, instead of getting better, the Liberals took a law and made it a little worse, and the NDP are making it even worse, pardon my English, but worse anyway.

Mr Poirier: Worstest.

Mr Magder: The worstest, yes, unless something happens. The thing is, sure, ideally it would be nice to take off Sunday, but the thing is, we are living in the real world today with automation and computers and everything else. There is so much free time around. People love to travel, and a lot of Americans do like Canada, in spite of our high prices, and our prices are not high on everything. Of course, a lot of the blame is on the other level of government, why we have a tourist problem. But why not—you know, when we had Sunday shopping for a while, I started to see a lot more Americans coming into my store, and then all of a sudden—you come down Spadina Avenue. It is frightening. Saturday and Sunday, it is almost dead now. They have scared away most of the tourists, because between the GST and not being able to shop on Sunday—if we allowed Sunday shopping, there would be a little more competition. It helps keep prices down.

You know, you cannot protect everybody. This is the way the real world is. If a businessman gives good service, good attention—in fact, this is one reason people are also running to Buffalo. They say they get more courteous treatment. That has nothing to do with this particular meeting, but this is interesting, because on Sunday, you know, people have more time, they are more relaxed. I would say that the government's position, I feel they should stop charging anybody or everybody, and allow businesses to do business to survive, because we are in a terrible economic situation now. I mean, if you do not see it—

I was talking to the tax man the other day. He is fining me for being late with my taxes. I told him there is a recession on. You know, he does not know what is going on? You read every day, more business people going broke, and we employ people. Now we are not employing people. We are laying off everybody. That is sad. If you want to make a law, make a law, but make a sensible law, make a fair law. Do not make a stupid law. This law, as I said before, is a bad law being made worse. Now, if anybody would like to ask me any questions or make some comments, please do.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Magder, this is not confession period, but I should probably say to you that our government has sledged you just as much as any government in your attempts to maintain a Sunday marketplace. Do you mind telling the committee approximately how much money you have spent on lawyers and studies and court challenges and fines and your dance with the police on the issue of whether or not you could sell a fur coat on Sunday?

Mr Magder: That is a good point because this is another terrible thing about this law, how it harasses people. I have paid out $400,000. I presently owe my lawyer $150,000. I have not been making any payments to him for the last year. He continues to take the case and will work for me. In fact, he tells me to buy lottery tickets because hopefully that is the only way he will ever get paid.

What hurts me is I am just trying to make a living. I am a Canadian. I was born in this country and we were brainwashed with this Protestant ethic. You work hard, you will succeed. It was an honour to work. Now you say work is a four-letter dirty word. It is unbelievable. It does not make sense. No wonder our kids are all mixed up. You teach them to compete, you teach them to do this, you teach them to do that, then as soon as they grow up the whole world changes, everything changes. It is absurd. I possibly will be going all the way back to the Supreme Court of Canada again. The Supreme Court of Canada already ruled that the law discriminates.

There is another interesting point. How much, not only Paul Magder's legal costs—do you know how much it has cost the government? Probably millions of dollars, let alone thousands.

Mr Sorbara: In that $550,000 that you are liable for all together, I know, because I have followed the cases, that you have undertaken, you have financed a number of studies about Sunday shopping, polling and social research, etc. Have you come up with any research that indicates that the quality of family life or the quality of life in a society deteriorates significantly when people are allowed to shop and storekeepers are allowed to open their stores on Sunday in any jurisdiction in the world?

Mr Magder: Not that I know of. In fact, it is funny, the New Democratic Party points out that Sweden is a good socialist example. They happen to have Sunday shopping in Sweden. Of course, they do not seem to see that. It does not seem to have ruined the world there. In Alberta they have Sunday shopping. They did not come out with new laws to close up everything after the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that the Lord's Day Act was unconstitutional.

I think this is a myth. It is almost like religion. You go back and in every religion they had ideals. In the Jewish religion, for instance, you are not supposed to eat pork so it was incorporated into the religion. I do not know, I am not that up on it, but maybe 2,000 years ago it made a lot of sense. When Sunday laws came out 100 years ago, it probably made a lot of sense because kids were working seven days a week and everything else, but the world has changed—and maybe even back in the 1950s, at least you did not have a problem of unemployment. Everybody was working, Ontario was the greatest place in the world to be and they were bringing in 200,000 immigrants a year in those days.

But things have changed. Look at our unemployment rate now. People are dying to work. They want to work. I have a girl working for me and she used to work steady, she works Sunday now. She never used to want to work Sunday, but boy, she is broke and she needs the money and she wants to pay her bills.

Mr Poirier: So do you.

Mr Magder: So what is wrong?

Mr Sorbara: If you were allowed to open up your own store at will on Sunday, how much more employment would Paul Magder produce? Is it one or two or three jobs? How many people do you employ on Sunday?

Mr Magder: I think, if we had Sunday shopping in general—it is not just Paul Magder because I am open regardless, whether it is legal or not—you would create many thousands and thousands of jobs, part-time and full-time. It is a crime how the government—why pay people to go on welfare when they really want to work, because most people really like to work? Why not allow people to work? It does not make sense. This business of a common day, fine, you have made legislation better than the Conservatives and better than the past Liberal government to protect workers. Fine, but the trouble is, the Sunday laws punish the innocent, not the guilty.

I have always said this. If a driver is drunk and kills a pedestrian or has an accident, you do not outlaw driving cars. You punish that particular person. The trouble with the Retail Business Holidays Act is it punishes so many innocent people. I can show you where, believe it or not, the way it stands now, for instance, would they allow the municipalities to declare tourist areas? This is absurd. When Toronto declared Harbourfront a tourist area, the boss said the next day, "Okay, Mary, you've got to work Sunday." "I don't want to work Sunday." "You have to work Sunday because we're a tourist area." They did not make provisions to protect her from being forced to work. She said, "Will I get time and a half?" "No, you're going to take off a different day. You're going to take off Tuesday."

This is so absurd, a law that is supposed to protect people actually causes the exact effect that it is supposed to prevent. It does not make sense. I just wish this new government—I was hoping if we had a new government, maybe there would be a breath of fresh air.

Mr Sorbara: Stale air.

Mr Magder: The people voted against David Peterson. They voted against the Liberal government because they were fed up—federal politics too—with politicians who do not see the real world. Here the government said we were doing great, the boom province. In the meantime, we are going to hell fast. But the thing is, that was not a mandate to close up the stores on Sunday. In fact, you were talking about polls. All the latest polls say people want Sunday shopping, whether you agree with it or not. The people want it. For the life of me, I cannot understand why the government is bringing out a law that is against the will of the people, especially a people's party. The New Democratic Party is supposed to be more of a people's party, to the best of my knowledge, than any party. I wish they would act it.

Mr Carr: Thank you very much for taking the time. It seems you have been doing this for 12 years, so I guess you have taken a lot of time to do this, but I certainly appreciate hearing from you. I have heard a lot about you and seen you on TV.

Mr Magder: I wish it were all over, believe me.

Mr Carr: Yes, you are famous. One of the questions I have got is with this new legislation. There are some people saying that with the tourism exemption—I know your particular area was excluded the last time around. When I spoke to a couple of people they said the municipality, for whatever reason, found something that just did not click so they did not give the tourism exemption.

This one is much broader, where basically your area would be included and you could say virtually any part of the province could with the guidelines that are outlined. As a result of that, do you see your area being open when it goes before the municipalities? With it being as broad as it is, do you foresee your area getting an okay to open as a tourist exemption area?

Mr Magder: I see it for other strange reasons. Because of the oriental people there, they seem to do whatever they want. It is a very powerful group of people. But whether they will allow me to be open or not—in fact, when they wrote the Toronto bylaw for Chinatown West, in effect they wrote it for most of the Chinese merchants who were there at the time. Possibly, if there had been some furriers or clothing stores, maybe I would not be here, would not have this problem.

But I think this whole thing is nonsense. Toronto is a tourist area. Canada is a tourist area. We want tourists and picking and choosing—let the merchants work things out. If you force people to pay time and a half wages, make it a little more costly to do business, reward the people who wish to work on Sunday, I think the thing would work itself out pretty well, because where there are a lot of tourists, people are making money, they are going to open. But people are not going to open their businesses—I think in the suburbs, I cannot see why all these stores should be open. I think they would be losing money in most cases. But then again, I do not know. I know my business and I really have no right to tell them how to run their businesses.

Mr Carr: With these new guidelines, your neighbours and so on, do you feel your area will be pushing for tourism? It will not just be yourself? Now will you have a lot of support?

Mr Magder: We have a funny situation. We have so many different—we talk about this multiculturalism. I think it is a wonderful thing to keep everybody divided, really great, because it works perfectly. We have so many different nationalities and types in our area and besides, most businessmen are always jealous of each other and we do not work together. Seldom work together and some do not want to be open, some do want to be open. As I said before, I think you have taken a bad law and made it worse.

One thing I would like to say: This law, if it continues the way it is, will be thrown out eventually by the courts. Why waste all this money and time and bother? You have the opportunity to come out with a sensible law at least, because if you do not come out with a sensible law there will be no law, and that is worse. I think we all agree, it is not right to force people to work on Sunday. I feel they should be paid time and a half. You make it a little special, especially people who are getting $4 an hour or so, you pay them $6 an hour. I pay a lot higher than that, but so what? You are not talking about people who are making $20, $30 an hour or something getting time and a half, so everybody will win in the end anyway. But if you do not come out with a sensible law, you will eventually have it thrown out of court.

I will just show you how absurd this is. It probably violates the British North America Act. I will tell you why. There are supposed to be no tariffs or duties between provinces. Here you have Alberta Sunday shopping, British Columbia Sunday shopping, no Sunday shopping in Ontario. In Quebec, they handle it a little differently; now I think four people can work in a store or something like that.

The law is not a common law; it is nonsense. I drive by the domed stadium every Sunday to work. Why can you go to the domed stadium and work? You could play baseball or do anything you want but you cannot work in your own store. It does not make sense. It is not fair law.

Mr Mills: It is my privilege to thank you for coming, Mr Magder. I represent that breath of fresh air—well, one of the rays of fresh air that you spoke about in the new government—and we are certainly here to listen to everyone like yourself who has something to say. I remind you again, as I like to remind most of the people here, that this legislation is draft legislation and we are here to listen. However, we are committed to the common pause day. I happen to feel very strongly about family life and about letting families spend one day together. I have some grave apprehensions that if we did not have this in place, family life to me is so important and it would suffer.

Mr Magder: Well—

Mr Mills: Just one moment.

Mr Magder: Okay.

Mr Mills: I heard you make an interesting comment. You said, "Saturday night to me is a special night and I won't work on Saturday night." I wonder if you could tell me why Saturday night is special to you and why you will not work.

Mr Magder: Okay. I will not work because I am tired. It is the end of the week. I have had enough of business and fighting the creditors and the government and everybody else. I do not want to work Saturday night, I want to go out and enjoy myself or relax or whatever. It is funny—I would like to elaborate. My lawyer, when I lost—I have won and lost, you know. I actually won every time but then lost eventually—suggested I open up every night. Funnily enough, my staff do not want to work in the evenings, I do not want to work in the evenings and my customers do not like coming downtown at night. But Sunday I have no problem getting people to work; short day, everybody is happy.

Talking about family life, I wish you would come in my store when it is a little busier, maybe when the recession is over, and see. I feel so good on a Sunday. People go to church. Funnily enough, more people will go to church if you have Sunday shopping because they would go to church then go shopping and do whatever they want to do. But now they have not got time. They are driving to Buffalo and they are waiting at the bridge for the customs and they have no time to go to church. That is what I was trying to say.

But it is so nice. You get the younger middle-age or younger couple in and they are with their mother and their grandmother and a lot of elderly people. The only time the children can take them out is on a Sunday because they have busy lives, they are trying to make a living and working, and it is so nice. Funny enough, Sunday shopping will even help the family; it could help the family. If you want by law to protect them from being forced to work, fine. I have nothing against that, I think that is proper. But do not punish the innocent. That is the trouble with this particular approach. It is punishing. I have to make a living. I like my business; I like my work. At 55 years old, what am I going to do, start a new one? I have got computers but I do not use them. I was born the wrong time I guess. My kids are great at it.

Mr Mills: You never did tell me why you do not like working on Saturday night.

Mr Magder: No, because I am just dead beat by Saturday.

Mr Mills: There are a lot of folks who are dead beat on Sunday who do not want to work either.

Mr Magder: Fine, so do not work. If they do not want to work, fine.

Mr Mills: But we have to have some legislation to protect them because all the folks out there are not like you.

Mr Magder: I would agree with you 100% if you closed everybody and everything up. Be honest and be fair, but do not pick and choose certain stores, tobacco stores. Can you tell me why tobacco stores are allowed to open on Sunday, specified under the law? Does it make sense to you? Because, my friend, it does not make any sense to me. We all know tobacco kills. Not only does it kill, probably half the cost of our medicare system is because of tobacco products. Does it make sense to you, my friend?

Interjections.

Mr Magder: I guess they are worried about the tobacco companies or something. I do not understand it, it does not make sense to me.

Mr Mills: The difference is that we are looking—

The Chair: Mr Mills, we have run out of time.

Mr Mills: Oh, I am sorry. I beg your pardon.

The Chair: Thank you very much, Mr Magder.

Interjection.

The Chair: It is not fair at all, is it? Mr Daigeler.

Mr Daigeler: Just before the next person comes, are we finished with Mr Magder?

The Chair: Yes, we are. Thank you very much, Mr Magder.

Mr Magder: Is that it? Okay. Thank you for having me.

Mr Daigeler: I have a question, Mr Chairman, about how you wish to structure the presentations. We normally have half an hour. I have noticed you are extensively going over the half-hour and that way we are ending up rather late. Are you planning to do that and therefore we are extending the meetings?

The Chair: In fact, the last presentation was somewhat less than half an hour, and I beg people's indulgence because I ended up having to cut short the time for questions because of that. We started that last presentation some 10 or 12 minutes late because of the discussion about PAs, and this morning every presentation was within half an hour. They did not go over by more than a minute or so. The reason we were late was because, again, of other discussions. It is certainly not my intent for us to go past time.

GRAFTON GROUP LTD

The Chair: We now have a presentation from the Grafton Group, I believe Ms Bonnie Shore. You were here for part of the last presentation. Typically, presenters divide their time, the half-hour, between their presentation and also the opportunity of committee members to ask some questions, which I am sure people will be eager to do. Please proceed when you are comfortable.

Ms Shore: I cannot promise I will entertain you to the same level as the last speaker. However, I hope I will at least keep your attention.

My name is Bonnie Shore. I am the director of marketing of Grafton-Fraser. I am here today to represent Grafton Group. I would like to start the presentation by giving you some what I will call business information.

Grafton Group Ltd is a public holding company. We are listed on the Toronto Stock Exchange. Grafton Group Ltd has been active in the retail industry since 1853. Today, Grafton Group's principal business is retailing both apparel and footwear in Canada.

Grafton Group carries on its retailing business through two main operating divisions in Canada: the Canadian apparel through Grafton-Fraser Inc, and the Canadian footwear through Maher Inc.

Grafton Group Ltd has a total of 4,750 employees of which 2,167 employees are in Ontario. Grafton Group has 686 stores across Canada. We are located in every major city, and in Ontario we have 447 stores. The sales of Grafton Group in our Canadian stores in 1990 was $413 million; $200 million of that total was generated in Ontario.

Recent capital investment in Grafton Group companies over the past two years was in excess of $10 million in stores and an additional $5 million for a new head office that we built for our Maher division, so our total investment far surpasses $15 million over the last few years.

If you will make reference to page 2, I have tried to summarize and simplify all the elements of our business, so you will see all the chains, what our position is, the customer income and the target age. In essence, we could say we cover a very wide scope of the market and we are a very dominant retailer in the Canadian marketplace.

Now let's talk about the impact of this legislation on Grafton Group and, I will say, to some extent almost all other retailers in this province. Grafton Group's loss of revenue attributed to the restriction on Sunday shopping is as follows: In apparel it would be $4.5 million and in footwear $2.6 million, so the total is $7.6 million of lost revenue because we cannot open on Sundays.

I would like to preface the statistics by saying the figures are basically derived from our annual reports coupled with data we have collected over the period that Sunday shopping was permitted. We have pulled that out to give you a per-annum figure so that it is more effective for us to discuss it as it will affect our organization.

We think, with GST and consumer anxiety over the mounting deficit, sales are expected to be down between 10% and 15% in 1991.

Let's talk about lost tax dollars. In Ontario, per annum, from Grafton Group retail stores, we will not be able to collect a provincial tax, the 8% tax, which will give you a loss of $608,000, and in terms of the GST, the 7%, $532,000, giving us a total of $1.14 million not collected because we cannot be open on Sunday.

Grafton Group's lost wages to employees in Ontario per annum would be $1.25 million. The decreased number of employees at Grafton Group due to the Sunday shopping restrictions would actually equate 100 people. We are saying there will be 100 less jobs and there will be over $1 million less received by employees because we cannot open on Sunday. These extra jobs would definitely be filled if Sunday shopping went into effect, as statistically shown by the period we were open during Sunday shopping. We had to hire more; our wages went up.

Due to tourism and the convenience of Sunday shopping, the above losses are not recoverable during the rest of the week.

Sunday shopping restrictions in conjunction with other significant factors detrimental to the Canadian retailer, such as GST, increasing cross-border shopping and high levels of anxiety due to lack of confidence, are resulting in the rapid demise of the Canadian retailer.

Not only are Canadian retailers unable to compete due to higher taxes and wages than our US counterparts, but Canadian retailers are also hampered by the inability to offer the convenience of a seven-day shopping period. Hence, we see the constant and growing migration of customers to retailers based in the US.

Significant retail business is flowing out of our border towns. Our statistics are showing that our border towns are suffering to the tune of 20% decrease in sales as compared to only a 10% decrease in the rest of our markets.

While this amended legislation is intended to protect employees and their families, the consequences of this legislation will be detrimental to those same employees as it will increase unemployment in the retail sector and decrease the likelihood of any retail capital expenditures. We will not be building new stores; therefore, no new jobs. Not only no new jobs in retail, but no jobs in construction to build our stores, no jobs in the supplies necessary to carry on business or the merchandise manufacturing to stock our stores and the administration to carry on our business.

The fact is, we will be forced to focus on what we already own, and we will have to try to cut expenses, mostly wages, as much as possible. If we cannot make money, then the reality is we will not be able to invest any money.

We know that the objective of this legislation is to protect employees and their families. However, the summary of the results from a retailer perspective, if I can recap, are as follows:

There will be fewer jobs available, especially for part-time workers. Those are most often working women and students.

There will be increased layoffs. There will be no need for extra staff as we will not be open on Sunday. There will be less overall revenue and business; therefore, less staff will be needed.

We look at wages. There will be less wages paid. The overall wages earned will decrease because we are not going to be open on Sunday. Business has decreased, we are less competitive to the US and therefore retailers look first to tighten the wage dollar budget.

Taxes: less taxes collected. For GST and provincial taxes, there will not be any collection on Sunday. There will be a lower income tax due to less employment and a dramatic reduction of corporate tax, if any. At one point we may have said that would have been wonderful, but the implications are that we are not making any money.

There will be less flexibility available for workers and employees. In many instances, employees could better manage their family life and gain a new level of flexibility including Sundays, therefore having seven days to juggle the needed work hours to make a living.

As well, retailers are not flexible in offering what I will call a multi-day rest day, or two days off back to back, that is often needed in a stressful industry like retail.

There will be an increased overall number of bankruptcies in the retail sectors, as well as, I think you will see, more and more store closings.

It is not one of the above factors that will devastate the retail industry and severely hurt the province, but it is the snowballing effect that will catch the province off guard. We recommend that the factors and subfactors listed in the above will have a crippling effect on the province and will make it impossible for the survival of retailers.

We support the proposition that all employees have a reasonable rest period in the work week, that no employee should be forced to work on holidays or Sundays, and that the sanctions should exist to help ensure that no employee is forced to work Sundays or holidays.

However, we believe that these objectives can be met without forcing both retailers and employees to shut down on Sundays. We recommend that employees and employers be permitted to agree to any work schedule that is to their mutual advantage, providing no coercion is involved. Legislation, therefore, should provide safeguards to protect employees and yet also provide sufficient flexibility to permit those same employees the freedom to work on Sunday if they wish—I would like to really focus on that one line: the freedom to work on Sundays if they wish—and allow retailers to maintain a level of competitiveness that is absolutely necessary for survival.

The final page is a quick summation of the figures, so we will see exactly what is going to happen in this province as it relates to our organization: loss in revenues, $7.6 million; loss in taxes, $1.1 million; loss in wages, $1.25 million, and most important, a decreased level of employment to the tune of 100 employees.

Please feel free to ask any questions.

Mr Sorbara: Ms Shore, let me begin by congratulating you on your presentation. I think it was an articulate statement of the kind of competitive pressures that your organization, and virtually everyone else in the retailing business, is facing. Indeed, the world out there is changing dramatically as far as retailing is concerned, and the competitive pressures that retailers are facing are coming from very far away, given electronic shopping, given greater mobility, and given the competition that areas like Buffalo, Detroit, and Sault Ste Marie, Michigan, as well as other places, are launching towards the Ontario consumer.

I just want to tell you that we agree with that part of your submission where you express your support for reasonable protection for workers in respect of Sunday work. In fact, we believe the law that is currently in place provides workers exactly the right level of protection—that is, they can refuse unreasonable assignments of Sunday work. The law provides a mechanism to arbitrate when there is a difference of opinion and encourages the workers and their employers to work out an acceptable regime.

The bill that these folks over here are proposing would allow the workers in, let's say a George Richards store, who had agreed to work on Sunday—let's say the store has 10 employees including the manager—if the store opens at 12 noon on Sunday, to advise the owner, the employer at 11 o'clock on Friday that they had all decided not to come into work because they wanted to go and have a picnic and it was going to be a nice day and they did not want to work. If I were to tell you that under those circumstances you, as the employer, could take no measures in respect of that refusal to work on Sunday, what would you say about that law?

Ms Shore: In essence it would make a retail business very difficult. However, I will stress—

Mr Sorbara: Or impossible?

Ms Shore: Relatively impossible, I will say. However, when we were put into the position that Sunday shopping was allowable in this province, we kicked it in immediately and we found just that: Some of our employees were not comfortable, made the requisition. I myself and many senior managers at the very last minute pinch-hit, went in and opened the store. We will not be in a position of forcing employees to do something beyond their will. You cannot gain people's respect by forcing them to do something they do not want to.

Mr Sorbara: I am talking about the employees who have agreed to work on Sunday, who have said to you: "You can rely on me. I'm coming in on Sunday." Should the law give them the right to phone up on Friday and say: "Forget it. I'm not coming in"?

Ms Shore: If one understands the nature of the retail industry, one will understand that that is a given every day of the week, so we are kind of used to it and we usually have an awful lot of backup. What we did find when we were open Sundays was that we had a lot of part-timers, students coming in saying: "I would be most comfortable working weekends. Can you give me Friday night, Saturday and Sunday? I have to do homework during the week." I have absolutely no problem in finding enough staff who will not only choose to say yes, they will be available, but will want to work on Sundays. Those are the only kind of employees I want working on Sundays—people who want to be there. Otherwise, they are going to be completely unproductive to me.

Mr Sorbara: Good.

Mr Carr: Thank you very much for the presentation and thank you for laying it out very well, including the figures and so on. That was very well done.

The question I have is this. One of the concerns that has been voiced—and I think you touched on it just at the very end—is not so much the smaller retailers, but the larger retailers, the big, bad businesses out there forcing people to work, that would say, "You've got to work and that's it." One of the ladies yesterday spoke about it and said, "We don't want somebody in the store who doesn't want to be there because they're going to scare our customers away." How do you manage that in a company as large as that? How do you dictate that so you do not get a manager saying, "That might be corporate policy, what somebody said before the committee, but the reality is, I'm going to make this person work"? How do you get around that in a large company like yours?

Ms Shore: I think the most effective tool that retailers are finding in general is a strong sense of scheduling. What one has to make sure of is that you have balanced off your budget, you know how many people you can have and make sure that you have, like I said, the students who back you up part-time.

As well, we found there were educational institutions calling us and saying: "We'd like to do a co-op program. We'll work with you on the weekends." So I believe that if you have a strong corporate commitment to treating your people fairly, you present the argument to them fairly.

I was very surprised and pleased to see that a better part of our employees were prepared to assist us and actually quite enjoyed having Tuesday off to take a child to the dentist or, if their husband is on shift work or their wife is a nurse on shift work, that we can provide that level of flexibility, coupled with the fact that now I am in a position to give somebody a Monday, Tuesday off if they will work with me on a Saturday, Sunday. Although that is not considered a benefit or a direct incentive, it is a reality. We have seven days to juggle their 36-hour work week, which makes us much more functional. So I have no concerns that we can fill those positions very easily.

Mr Carr: So when the Solicitor General says, "This legislation is going to protect workers," in your opinion that is wrong.

Ms Shore: No. I can vouch for my organization, that we will build it into our corporate policy that nobody will be forced to do anything at Grafton Group that they do not want to do. However, the point I am making is that I think there should be a protection for the bad guy. It will not be us. We will make darn sure of it. We are too big, we are too effective with our people. However, for retailers in general, safeguards will always allow employees to feel a little bit more secure, a little bit more protected. We have never had problems with our staff. My guess is we never will.

Mr Carr: I see. You have given some of the figures here. The company is traded, so it is obviously public knowledge, but where are you at now? Are you in a loss position as a company in the last quarter, last year?

Ms Shore: Yes. Things have not been good in retail. I am sure I am not the only one standing up here and saying that things are quite bleak.

Mr Carr: So you are already in the red? You have reported losses over the last—

Ms Shore: Yes.

Mr Carr: Were they substantial—$3 million, $6 million—

Ms Shore: Yes, they are substantial. It is public knowledge as per our annual report, but things are not looking too sharp. I will tell you one thing, all these added factors are not making it easy on us.

Mr Carr: So these figures that you have would be on top of that, so if you are reporting a loss of whatever amount, these figures would be added to that?

Ms Shore: Yes. As I recommended before, we have very clear statistics. We had a feeling that something may go funny with Sunday shopping, so we kept statistics that really did detail how much we made, how much—

Mr Carr: Something went funny with the province. September 6—

Ms Shore: Those funny things, you have to protect yourself against them. So we did keep statistics for that reason, so we can literally open up the books and prove where we had to hire staff, how many hours they took, the kind of wages. As I recommended, we pulled them out to a per annum basis, so we could all get a better feeling of what that meant for a year.

Mr Carr: What would it mean to you if we end up with a situation where certain municipalities open and other ones do not? How would that affect the company in terms of scheduling of employees? Would you be able to shift employees if one is open and somebody wants to work? Could they shift stores and go to Peel if they are open and Toronto is not, or whatever? Could that be done?

Ms Shore: Let me suggest that “freedom” or “choice” to me sounds like a global word, as opposed to a municipality-type word. So my recommendation would be, either we are choosing to have choice or we are not going to have choice. How can you offer some municipalities some choices and others not? So I would suggest, as being sort of a national company, that basically “choice” is a big word that we would like to take in as a big company and see effective across. However, in view of the fact that business is tough and we need to make a buck, yes, we will do what we have to do to make money, but I think we recognize that if we are going to give choice, let’s give choice. If we are going to allow people to make decisions, let’s make it a province-wide appeal, as opposed to this region, this region, that region. How do I turn to my employees and say, “I’m sorry, for some reason this region doesn’t want you to have freedom, but if you and your family move there, then I can provide you work on Sundays”? A bit of a crazy approach to dealing with business. We try to do things globally or at least across the country, as opposed to little bits and pieces and factions.

Mrs Haslam: I am glad to see that you are in support of protection for the workers. Do you pay your students time and a half on Sundays?

Ms Shore: Generally we are not open on Sundays, obviously.

Mrs Haslam: When you were open.

Ms Shore: No, we did not. We are a company, we set our policies. We believe that Sunday is part of the work week.

Mrs Haslam: And that is how they are hired?

Ms Shore: Absolutely, and I will tell you one thing, the students were thrilled to have the opportunity to be hired.

Mrs Haslam: Do you support the changes to the Employment Standards Act which allow workers to refuse Sunday or holiday work?

Ms Shore: What I will recommend is our corporate policy. We will instate a corporate policy, but basically we will always go along with the law and never force anybody to do anything he chooses not to do.

Mrs Haslam: So if a worker wanted to refuse the Sunday or holiday work, that would be fine with your company?

Ms Shore: It would be fine with my company. However, I think what one has to think of is when one is hiring people one would want to implicate: “How many hours do you want? You’ve got seven days to juggle it. How do you think it’s effective to juggle it?” I am not going to fight with my employees. They will not be productive and they are going to mope around the floor and not bring me any sales. So sure, we are going to make them as happy as we feasibly can.

Mrs Haslam: You are in favour, then, if something comes up, of them being able to say no to the Sunday work with 48 hours notice.

Ms Shore: I cannot help but come back to the very fact that retail is such a tenuous business when it comes to employees that often something seems to pop up when you have that many employees. So it happens now and we cope. If it will happen then, we will cope. However, again, I would like to suggest that we will try to hire some people who choose, who want and who are excited to work on Sundays as opposed to Thursdays, because it works better for their personal schedule.

Ms Shore: You pay the same pay, then, no matter when they work?

Ms Shore: Absolutely. My feeling is, most people who work for us are happy to be paid and happy that we are in business and that is about the extent of things right now in the province.

1500

Mrs Haslam: You are a large corporation. Do you agree with guaranteeing 36 continuous hours of rest time in your seven-day work period?

Ms Shore: I think rest time is vital for all of us, as we know, otherwise you collapse. The way people choose to take their rest time to some extent should be up to them. Often at Christmas time, we will have students who will beg us to keep them on as many waking hours as they can stand in our store because they need the funds to support themselves. That is the reality of retail.

Ms Haslam: But you have no problem with someone who wishes to take that 36 continuous hours of rest?

Ms Shore: We will work to the very best we can to guarantee whatever it is that our employees need. However, I will recommend to you that if you were a retailer and you were standing in a store, you would have people signing up for more hours than probably are even healthy for them.

Mrs Haslam: But what I am asking is that you have no problem guaranteeing 36 hours of continuous rest.

Ms Shore: We will work within the law, absolutely.

Mrs Haslam: How much time do I have, Mr Chair? About a minute and a half? I will talk fast.

You have no problem with strengthening the role of employment standards officers in dealing with employee grievances?

Ms Shore: Not a problem with that at all.

Mrs Haslam: Have you looked at the tourism criteria?

Ms Shore: Yes, we have.

Mrs Haslam: Do you feel it is broad enough or too broad?

Ms Shore: It does not really make sense to us in the sense that tourists come in, and if they want to shop on Sundays—

Mrs Haslam: No, the tourist criteria for opening of a store.

Ms Shore: No, it does not work for us. It is a matter of handicrafts. There are just a lot of stipulations and restrictions that—

Mrs Haslam: So you feel it might be too limiting for you?

Ms Shore: Yes. It does not work within the confines of the business we are in. I guess again we come back to the issue of choice and freedom. If you are open, then you are open.

Mr Fletcher: A very good presentation. Thanks for being so candid. You tie in the Sunday shopping issue with cross-border sales. When I listen to what British Columbia is saying, British Columbia has wide-open Sunday shopping, but cross-border sales have increased even with wide-open Sunday shopping. It is not really the availability of a place to go shop; it is the price that comes into it. So the other factors are there, not just opening on Sundays in order to keep people from travelling across the border.

Ms Shore: I try to make clear that there are other issues, and one would be naïve to present Sunday shopping as the only reason. However, what I would like to put forward is that we are already up against taxes they do not have in the States. We are up against higher wages they do not have in the States. I can go on and on about the other things that are happening in this province. If we do not allow ourselves at least to be competitive in terms of the level of convenience of being open on Sunday, then I think we are really causing a very big problem in our province. You may choose to shop, you may decide that Buffalo is a little bit cheaper than here, but the reality is you cannot shop here. That is the way it is right now.

Mr Mills: I would like to thank you for your presentation. I thought it very interesting. What I would really like to get to grips with is how you came up with the figure for lost sales due to Sunday shopping, which is $7.6 million—and I do not have my calculator with me—shared among 447 stores.

Ms Shore: Basically, we drew on statistics from each of our divisions that was open during the period that Sunday shopping was available. It basically worked out to be somewhere between 3% or 4% of our sales extra, on top of normal business practices. We went back over a three-year period and checked the statistics to make sure we made sense. Obviously, I would not provide you with statistics that I could not fairly well back up. If you want a written summation on exactly how the information came about, I could provide that to you at a later date. I thought we might not have enough time to go through the mathematics.

Mr Mills: One quick final question. Do you or do you not agree that a certain amount of Sunday shopping is slippage from other days? How did you discern that the loss was specifically on a Sunday and not slippage from other days?

Ms Shore: We looked at the business we did on Sundays. Then we looked at the business we did regularly. We took more than a significant portion of that off because of slippage and gave the very least of what would be feasible. These are superconservative figures, because I did not want to come here blowing my horn if I could not back it up. In fact, just this morning, I got data from Maher that claimed that when they were open on Sunday, they did 20% of their business. Presenting you with that figure is unrealistic. Presenting you with potentially 3% is very realistic and very conservative.

The Chair: Thank you very much, Ms Shore.

ONTARIO HOTEL AND MOTEL ASSOCIATION

The Chair: We now have a presentation from the Ontario Hotel and Motel Association. Is it Ms Karabinos?

Ms Karabinos: I thought you were going to be afraid to pronounce it.

The Chair: You have approximately half an hour. Typically, people divide it in half, half for your presentation and half for questions from committee members, but you are free to use that time in whatever way you wish and to start when you feel comfortable in doing so. If you would like a glass of water, please feel free.

Ms Karabinos: I might just take a glass right now before I start.

First of all, I would like to thank you very much for this opportunity of appearing before you. As stated, my name is Diane Karabinos and I am the executive director of the Ontario Hotel and Motel Association.

If I could take a minute just to tell you briefly about who we are, we represent over 1,200 members who own and operate large and small businesses in the hospitality industry. These businesses are hotels, motels, taverns, restaurants, resorts and lodges throughout the province. The association members employ well over 45,000 people and this number grows during special holiday seasons.

We respectfully request that the members of the standing committee on administration of justice consider the following: that Ontario encourage tourists and visitors by having unrestricted retail shopping on Sundays and holidays in all areas throughout the province and as the market dictates, without any restrictions. OHMA is in favour of unrestricted Sunday and holiday shopping. We feel that unrestricted Sunday and holiday shopping is vital to our economy and the tourism industry throughout the province.

In a market-driven economy such as ours, consumers should be allowed the freedom of choice to decide which retail businesses and establishments they wish to patronize. The open and free market should be the final arbiter as to whether or not retail businesses function on Sundays and holidays, while still respecting the employment standards. Unfair and inequitable legislated restrictions are the worst form of economic blackmail in a free market economy.

As well, Ontarians deserve the right to work, earn incomes and profit from the production and sale of goods or the provision of services any day of the week. Economic prosperity generated in a free and unrestricted economy would benefit all Ontarians and their quality of life.

Retail shopping is an integral part of the tourism experience and represents a significant portion of the value of all tourism expenditures in Ontario. Most retail shopping, dining out, touring, sightseeing and recreation takes place on weekends. Shopping has even become a family outing, and the majority of Ontarians and visitors favour retail shopping on Sundays and holidays. The popularity of cross-border shopping shows that Canadians will travel to the south, not only because they perceive the product to be cheaper but for ease of access to these goods.

This industry is the largest private sector employer, and the service sector accounts for 70% of all new jobs. Tourism is responsible for the creation of 32 full-time jobs for every $1 million in tourism expenditures. We employ professionals, skilled and unskilled, and are the largest employer of women, youth and visible minorities. There is no other employer capable of this range of employment opportunities for permanent or part-time employees of professional service staff whose educational achievements vary from elementary through to college or university backgrounds.

Tourism generated in 1990 direct expenditures of $15.5 billion, with estimated total income of $22.5 billion and estimated total sales of $36.9 billion. It is one of the nation's largest generators of personal income, corporate, property, business and sales taxes to all levels of government.

The closures of retail businesses on Sundays have meant job losses to many, especially students who rely on this income for their schooling. Our members throughout the province are reporting a large drop in business. They strongly feel that the availability of Sunday shopping will alleviate even slightly the slumping economy. Of our members surveyed, 75% have said that closing the stores on Sunday has meant a decrease in revenue. We recognize there are other factors that have also contributed to the decrease in revenue, but feel that the freedom of choice to open and work at retail businesses on Sundays and holidays is a means to reverse this problem. This revenue to quite a few means survival, and unless retail shops are allowed to open on Sundays to draw tourists and visitors to their respective areas, many will have to close their businesses.

Obviously, the hardest hit areas are the border cities. Ontario will remain uncompetitive and continue to lose billions of dollars worth of annual tourism sales unless we change and allow unrestricted Sunday and holiday shopping.

The hospitality industry is faced today with many obstacles and increased operating costs. In order to remain competitive and recapture some of the lost business from our neighbours to the south, we must have the ability to compete on a level playing field. Bordering American cities are wide open for retail business on Sundays and holidays.

Bill 115 does have some merit and we appreciate the Ontario government's recognition of the value and importance of tourism in this legislation. We do, however, feel that the interpretation of the tourism criteria would create a lot of confusion, not to mention an administration nightmare in time and cost. To limit the timing for municipalities to declare themselves as tourist areas is also too restricting, as circumstances could, and most likely would, change at a much later date.

The concept of a common pause day in Ontario is outdated and discriminatory. Multicultural Ontario in the 1990s is populated with every religion and ethnic background, and to allow one faith, belief or ethnic custom to dictate the lifestyles of everyone is wrong. Our contemporary society shows that Ontarians work at all hours of the day and night throughout the week. Hotels, hospitals, transportation, just to name a few, must all conduct work 24 hours a day, seven days a week. While some people rest, others conduct business and provide services. Their professions are a necessity to any community, and I do not believe their quality of life is diminished by their work schedules. We must provide these products, experiences and services to our customers when they want them or risk losing them to other competing jurisdictions.

We appreciate that the proposed amendments to part XI-B of the Employment Standards Act recognize the operating realities of our industry. It is most important that all employers retain the right to schedule work and dictate work schedules.

In closing, I ask that you bring Ontario forward and that we become once again the province to lead. We have a tendency to live in the past, remembering how our mother was home in the kitchen and the smell of fresh baked goods greeted us as we returned home from school. But we all know how times have changed and we must also change, not only to keep up with the times, but to take a leadership role in this changing society. We will always remember the good things in the past, but we also remember that change is good and change is what keeps us alive.

I have often asked—and I still have not had an answer—what happened when the stores were open? Was the public ever surveyed as to what they felt? Were the workers asked? Were the shoppers asked? I feel we have to grow up. We always will want what our memories think is best, but does that mean we hold back progress? We are constantly being told that we live in a free world where we have the freedom of choice. The freedom of choice to open retail outlets on Sunday is not a luxury but a necessity, because to many it will mean survival.

I thank you very much for having this opportunity and I would welcome any questions you may have.

The Acting Chair (Mrs Haslam): Thank you. There are about 20 minutes left and that is about six minutes per caucus.

Mr Poirier: Could you describe to us briefly how what is proposed in Bill 115 pertaining to the tourist exemptions, as you know of it, would impact upon your association members? What do you foresee happening?

Ms Karabinos: You mean the impact of the municipalities having the—

Mr Poirier: Deciding this thing and from one variation to another and who gets what.

Ms Karabinos: What it will mean is that one area will be different. Say one community has designated itself as a tourist area in falling within the guidelines. Neighbouring residents will go into that area and will leave another area that will be destitute again because the municipality chose not to. People will travel 10, 15 minutes away, so as soon as you start putting a section—one pocket here is allowed to open; the next pocket will not. Residents of our province are now travelling to the United States. You can be sure they are going to travel to the next community if they need something.

Mr Poirier: Do you think some of your members, if not all of your members, wherever, may challenge local decisions made one way or the other?

Ms Karabinos: I would hope they would all appear, and I know they are appearing throughout the province on this issue. Quite frankly, as the lady who was before me mentioned, we agree it is not just the Sunday shopping that is affecting us, but it is very bad out there for our members. A lot of them are closing shop, so anything that will help them increase their business is a necessity.

Mr Poirier: Assuming that Bill 115 passes, and assuming you had this tourism designation mechanism as per what is proposed, would you see your members challenging in court, for example, if they got a refusal for a designation? Could you see that happening?

Ms Karabinos: I think it would really depend on the area and the members and the impact it would have on them.

Mr Poirier: Have you discussed that among your members?

Ms Karabinos: Ontario is a large province, and unfortunately what will affect us here in a jurisdiction in southern Ontario might be a little different in northern Ontario. When it happens, we have to look at each situation on its own merits.

Mr Sorbara: I think it is safe to say that the vast majority of your members are hurting very badly during the current recession. Is that not the case?

Ms Karabinos: That is correct, yes.

Mr Sorbara: And that in the greater Toronto area, convention business, large groups coming for one reason or other, is down very, very significantly over previous years?

Ms Karabinos: Yes.

Mr Sorbara: And in rural areas, given the increase in the cost of beverage alcohol, the GST, and the lack of high levels of employment that allows people to do a significant degree of travelling, your members throughout the province are suffering, perhaps, some of the worst economic times they have suffered in memory?

Ms Karabinos: Very much so, yes.

Mr Sorbara: I know there are a number of things that your association would like the government to come to grips with, including, my goodness, under the Liquor Licence Act, taxes, and under a variety of other things.

The interesting part of your submission is that you assert that your members, who operate restaurants and taverns and hotels and motels, would benefit if business entities that are not members of your association were allowed to remain open on Sunday if they wish. Why is that? Why do your members believe they will benefit by virtue of the fact that other stores, not members of your association, are allowed to remain open?

Ms Karabinos: We feel strongly that by stores being open, it will draw tourists out; it will bring people out of their homes; it will have people experience the outdoors, even. Somebody will come out and will go and stay overnight in a hotel, where they may not have if the stores were closed. I, say, in Toronto, would not say, "Well, I think I will take a drive up to Barrie and stay overnight till Sunday because they have the shops open." This way it encourages people to get out. It encourages people to go out into the province, because where they now have only one day to do it, they would have two days to travel.

Mr Sorbara: Can I give you an example of that? The Ramada Inn in Buffalo was advertising in Toronto a weekend package for a family of four to stay in their hotel at $55 a night for the weekend. For a family of four, that is two rooms. As soon as you got to the hotel, you as a Canadian were provided with a long list of stores that would take the Canadian dollar at par. Is that the kind of thing you are talking about?

Ms Karabinos: A little bit. That definitely is the border towns. We do have a member who has said his business has dropped to almost nothing and his competitor across the border is getting it all. Where we used to have American visitors come up for the weekend, they do not come any more. Yes, Sunday shopping is really only one of the issues. The cost of gas, the GST—there are many things that do affect it. But, yes, that is just one incident.

If you want to go to southern Ontario, if you want to go to eastern Ontario, it is the same. They have the border situation. If you want to go to northern Ontario, it is just as much a factor. In northern Ontario sometimes it is even more because the dollar is harder to come by, and to have that extra day that they can actually have their places open to draw more visitors there will of course help our members.

Mr Carr: Thank you very much for your presentation. On page 5 you were talking about the interpretation of the tourism criteria and how it would create a lot of confusion. Even in this committee it has created some confusion when we have all these municipalities. Is that what you meant, that now, even though they are fairly broad, municipalities are going to be interpreting them and there are so many municipalities that they are going to interpret them differently for whatever reasons, because they may have a bias or whatever? Is that what you are saying by confusion?

Ms Karabinos: Two ways. One is definitely that. I think we can all read a sentence and everybody will take it a different way. That is exactly what is going to happen. And who is to say why one municipality will qualify and maybe its neighbour will not? I think that is the other part. Somebody who is living on one side of the street in one municipality is going to question, "Why can they shop over there?" The average public does not understand a lot of the things, and in layman's terms they have to be told.

Then you are discriminating. It is just as easy to say it is either open for everybody or, as Mr Magder suggested, just close everything down. It is not fair to have it one way or the other.

Mr Carr: What did you mean by the administration nightmare in time and costs? Does that mean your association, your groups are going to have to go and lobby on this matter?

Ms Karabinos: No, I am thinking even more within the government, to monitor it. Again, who has the right to judge, to say, "Yes, you are correct"? My interpretation will be different from yours. Does that mean my interpretation is the right one and yours is not? Then you are going to be caught up in all sorts of legal battles, because maybe a municipality has strong feelings one way and somebody else has strong feelings the other way. So I see an awful lot of time being wasted in that respect.

Mr Carr: Unfortunately, I think this is just the beginning of that battle. Poor Mr Magder has been doing it for 12 years and 12 years from now we might still be battling the municipalities.

On page 4 it said that of your members surveyed, 75% have said that closing stores has meant a decrease in revenue. How was that done? Was that just an open-ended question?

Ms Karabinos: No, I did a survey a few months back where I went to my membership. I must say, if anyone knows surveys, that this had to be one of the most responsive ones. I believe I had about an 11% response to this survey. It was on all tax matters. It was, "Has the recession hit you?" This was one of the specific questions I asked. "Has Sunday closing affected you? Has it meant an increase in business or a decrease in business? Have you had to lay off employees because of this situation?"

Again, I gave them the option that they could say it was just because of taxes. And everything was listed. There really was not one area that was the result. It was a combination of everything that created this loss of business and revenue that in turn had made them lay off employees.

Mr Carr: Time still? Quickly?

The Acting Chair: You have about two minutes, Mr Carr.

Mr Carr: I just have one last question. A lot has been mentioned about how to protect the workers. Coming from an industry where people do work on Sunday, how do you see that working? Would there be any suggestions you would have to ensure that workers are protected? This whole legislation was to protect the one group, the retail workers, from having to work on Sunday. You are an organization that does work. How do you see that working and can we maybe pick up some tips?

Ms Karabinos: It all varies, but I think the biggest thing is that when an employee comes into our industry—I keep repeating the word "choice"—they have the choice. They know this is what the industry is all about and they still want to do it.

I think this is where the difficulty is right now, because we are in a transition where people maybe were hired not thinking they ever had to work on Sunday. I hope the day will come that when they go into a job, that will be one of the conditions, and they will have that choice and will say, "Yes, I will want to work." If they do not want to work, it is not to say they will not get the job. You know, you adjust your schedules accordingly and you suit it. Our industry is service-related. We want people to be happy and to service our customers and they have to be happy with what they are doing.

Mr Fletcher: Thank you for your presentation. I have just a couple of things. You said that with Sunday opening, tourists are going to flock in. So in my jurisdiction, Guelph, where I am from, if we open up the whole city for Sunday shopping we are going to be flooded by tourists?

Ms Karabinos: Would that not be nice?

Mr Fletcher: That is the assumption you made.

Ms Karabinos: I think it is an exaggeration when you are saying "flooded by tourists." I think it will increase the traffic into your city and into your area. There are other things that will contribute. The operating costs for our members or for any employer in this province are so exorbitant that they also contribute to the cost of goods. Sunday shopping is one thing; it is not a real solution to the whole problem. But we could lower our taxes, lower prices—

Mr Fletcher: Just lower prices could be more of an incentive for people to travel around, rather than opening on Sunday.

Ms Karabinos: I think if you had lower prices and they did not have the opportunity to take advantage of the lower prices—one hand washes the other. I do not really think there is one more important.

Mr Fletcher: Also, you were talking about the United States and its wide-open shopping. I have a little report here from a survey that was conducted by the Wilson Center in Washington, DC. When they asked questions of retail workers in the United States—"What do you value about your job? What do you really want?"—the highest priority from these workers was that they wanted their leisure time, their holidays and their vacations. That was the highest response. That received more priority than wage increases.

I have heard a lot of people come in and say, "Oh, people love to work on Sundays and holidays." I am not sure about that, especially after I read the results of this survey.

Ms Karabinos: If you will excuse me, I believe you said their vacation and leisure time. I do not think whether they work on Sunday or not would—

Mr Fletcher: Their vacation and holiday time, and Sunday is a holiday.

Ms Karabinos: To me that is not Sunday. To me, vacation and holiday time is time off work, be it Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday or Friday.

Mr Fletcher: Right, and if Sunday were made a holiday, that would be holiday time. As of right now, Sunday is really a holiday. That is what it is booked under, but I am not here to argue that one with you.

The other thing, when you talk about choice—I come to you for a job and you ask me, "Are you willing to work Sundays?" I say, "Well, no, I don't want to work Sundays; I really think Sundays are my time." Would you hire me?

Ms Karabinos: I think if you were qualified and you were the person I needed to perform that job, I probably would. I am talking on a personal level now. I cannot talk on behalf of my members on this.

Mr Fletcher: But you would not try to talk me into working Sundays or coerce me in any way to work on a Sunday?

Ms Karabinos: No, but I would like to think that any employee and employer work out a good working relationship and at some point in time they come to an agreement.

Mr Fletcher: Yes, it is nice to think that things work that way, but we know they do not always.

Ms Karabinos: I believe in fairy tales.

1530

Mr Mills: Thank you, madam, for being here. I listened. The legislation is draft. We are listening and taking into account everything that everybody says, contrary to any perception or misperception you may have.

I would just like to draw your attention to page 5 of your presentation, as Mr Carr did, when you say that "interpretation" of the tourism criteria will create a lot of confusion." I just wonder if you know, or have been apprised, that the criteria really came from the tourist industry. Are you aware of that?

Ms Karabinos: I am not fully aware. I would probably—and I hate using the word—assume you had input from the tourist area, although I do not know if it was exactly as the final outcome was.

Mr Mills: In developing the criteria, the government focused on the importance of community tourism and on the factors that have been demonstrated over time and in a wide variety of countries. We really looked in depth at that; this is not some wild stab in the dark about the criteria. I really wonder, when you say it could create confusion, when in fact the concept of the criteria came from the industry. I just wanted to make that perfectly clear to you, that the concept of the criteria is not a government idea of tourism but one directed from the industry.

Ms Karabinos: I think you may have misunderstood when I said "confusion." It was not just confusion for the resident there. I felt it would also create confusion at municipal and provincial levels of government as well.

Mr Mills: It is the intention of the government later on down the road—and we cannot do this now, obviously, because we have not listened to the people—but when everything is set in place, to provide municipalities and regional municipalities with guidelines to help them come to grips with this. I think the confusion perhaps is a little bit of a misconception in your mind, because we fully intend, once we have heard all the presentations and we have drafted the final legislation and the regulations, to make that information available to everybody and, in addition, it will make the universality of the criteria, whether it be in a little village or in Metropolitan Toronto. I would just like to leave you with that.

The Acting Chair: Thank you for your presentation.

Ms Karabinos: Thank you very much.

Mr Sorbara: On a point of order, Madam Chair: On the last submission the witness was right. Sunday in the province of Ontario is not a holiday under the statutes of the province.

The Acting Chair: Thank you for your information. I do not believe it is a point of order, but thank you for that information. You are so good at sharing information with us, Mr Sorbara.

Mr Fletcher: On a point of order, Madam Chair.

The Acting Chair: This had better be a point of order.

Mr Fletcher: Sunday will be a holiday after this bill is passed.

Mr Sorbara: No, that is not the case.

The Acting Chair: Thank you. Again, that is not a point of order.

Mr Sorbara: No, it is nonsense.

The Acting Chair: Thank you for sharing that with us, Mr Fletcher.

SUSAN MATTHEWS

The Acting Chair: I would now call on Susan Matthews. Ms Matthews, I would ask that you understand we are in some sort of time constraints, as usual.

Ms Matthews: I am an independent. I am not representing any—

The Acting Chair: Yes, I am just reminding you that we have about 15 minutes available for you and within that 15 minutes, your presentation and/or questions, if there is time.

Ms Matthews: Thank you. I think I can cover it in about two to three.

Madam Chair and committee members, my name is Susan Matthews and I reside in the east end of Toronto. I am here as a resident and a taxpayer to say that I am in favour of retail businesses being open on Sunday.

I have worked in the retail business for almost 30 years in one form or another and, as a resident of the Beach area, I am saddened to see the staggering number of business closures over the last year, to say nothing of other area businesses throughout the city and the province.

Toronto is no longer Hogtown nor Toronto the Good of yesterday. We are a magnificent, first-class city, playing at being cosmopolitan and losing millions of dollars a year in the process.

Employees who work in hospitals, hotels, security, entertainment, sports, food services and transportation, to name just a few, are expected to work on Sundays to provide service to the many consumers who choose to use the service when they want to or need to.

Retail is a natural progression to expand this service. People are willing to work hard, including weekends. Students are in desperate need of work to continue their education and the extra hours of Sunday openings would be a welcome addition to their financial needs.

As a city and a country, we have bent over backwards to welcome and assist people of all ethnic and religious backgrounds to settle comfortably in Canada. We should be equally concerned and accommodating of our existing residents by realizing that our modern lifestyle includes Sunday as day of doing for everyone. Should it not be an independent business choice and an independent resident's choice as to how we spend our Sundays?

People are desperately trying to hang on to family businesses, their homes or simply pay the rent and get by. Our high standard of living is extremely expensive in Toronto and we must be competitive with service hours, as well as our prices, if we are going to be successful in implementing free trade with our US neighbours.

Like a television with an on and off switch, we may choose to watch or not. We may choose to shop or not. Allow the residents and the taxpayers to choose for themselves whether their family will spend Sunday at play, work, shopping or the place of worship, or maybe a combination.

In our modern society, time is a valuable commodity and Sunday has become a day of positive activity, particularly when both husband and wife work full-time and Sundays often include shopping excursions. Retail is part and parcel of our modern lifestyle and an integral part of community life.

We have not lost our family values, we are simply moving with the times. Sunday shopping is a benefit. It is not a penalty. It is a positive change and it can be labelled as progress. I believe that we the taxpayers deserve the choice and I thank you.

The Acting Chair: Thank you. About three minutes each.

Mr Sorbara: Thank you, Ms Matthews. That is, I think, as succinct a statement about where we should be going as anyone has made before this committee. You said in your statement that you have been involved in the retail sector for almost 30 years.

Ms Matthews: Yes, I am unusually well-preserved.

Mr Sorbara: That is not where my question was going, although we could talk about that later. What kind of business, running your own business or working within a business? Can you tell us a little bit about that?

Ms Matthews: I have been a retail employee. Presently, I am involved in part-time employment, but for the most part I have been with major department stores and with two of the largest design groups, furniture sales, in Canada.

Mr Sorbara: We will not get into your comments about being well-preserved, but I guess you would remember a few years ago when virtually no major stores were open on Sunday. Is that not the case?

Ms Matthews: Ten years ago I would have fought tooth and nail not to work on a Sunday, I believe.

Mr Sorbara: Timothy Eaton would have—

Ms Matthews: Turned in his grave.

Mr Sorbara: —turned in his grave had his stores opened on Sunday. But the world has changed, has it not?

Ms Matthews: Yes, and he was a very, very astute businessman and I think he would recognize that you do not change and grow by thinking 30 or 40 years past.

Mr Sorbara: I tend to agree that we are a very different place now and life as we know it will not come to an end in Ontario if we have a great deal more freedom to make personal choices than we have right now, and certainly than we might have under this bill. But although you have attached a list of stores in the Beaches that are opened or out of business—

Ms Matthews: Yes, in fairness to the committee, you should know that was not compiled by me. That was compiled by, I believe, two university students who live in the area. They circulated it throughout the E2 real estate area generally because they were having difficulty getting jobs. It was in stores; it was in doors; it was in a variety of places.

Mr Sorbara: So obviously one of your reasons for coming before this committee is your concern about the terrible state of affairs with businesses in your own communities, with going out of business and bankruptcies and stores for rent.

Ms Matthews: I have lived in Toronto my whole life, Mr Sorbara, and I think it is very sad to see what is happening to family businesses, whether they have been around for a year or 75 years on Bloor Street.

Mr Sorbara: In a very personal way—

The Acting Chair: Mr Sorbara, I believe Mr Daigeler had a question. I do not even have time for Mr Daigeler's question because your time limit was three minutes, as I said. I am sorry.

Mr Sorbara: The government members are not participating in the committee, so maybe we could have their time.

The Acting Chair: Oh, Mr Sorbara, there you go again. Mr Carr, you have your three minutes now and we will go from there.

Mr Carr: Thank you. I will be very quick, and if there is a little bit of time maybe Greg could take it afterwards. You worked in the retail business and said that you changed your mind. One of the concerns that the government has expressed is not so much for the small stores but with the large stores that would force employees to work, and that people would be working against their will. I do not know if you worked in some of the large stores during that period of time, but what is your perception about that? Do you think that it is a valid concern?

Ms Matthews: Yes, I do. Somebody can look you squarely in the eye and say, "Certainly I would not hold it against my employee," but in the grand scheme of ladder-climbing in a very large corporate sense, I think we all realize that sometimes, with personality conflicts or someone who says, "No, I simply have the courage of my convictions; no, I will not work," maybe somebody will say, "They really do not co-operate; we will just hold them back." Yes, that is very valid. But I also think that it is part of the change that is necessary and yes, there will probably be some bumps and bruises, but it is no different from when the stores started to open at night.

Mr Carr: What about, then, the protection that we talk about for the workers that is part of this legislation? Do you think that it is good? Did you have any comments on that, the protection for the—

Ms Matthews: Protection for the employees is paramount, but more than the protection, I think, people desperately need and want extra income. They want to weigh the protection aspect, and the dollar aspect. I know a lot of people who are in that position.

Mr Carr: I do not know if I have used up all my time.

The Acting Chair: That is just about time, Mr Carr.

Mr Frankford: I have been a Beach resident and I earned my living there for a while until I got into this racket.

Mr Poirier: Now you work on Sundays.

Mr Frankford: I gather there are two objectives you would have. One would be preserving the character of the Beach, of Queen Street—

Ms Matthews: I live in the Beach but I am a Torontonion. To Beach people, I am not a Beacher. You have to be there 75 years-plus to be a Beacher. I love Toronto, I live in Toronto, and I am as concerned about Bloor West Village as I am about the Beach area. In my particular area, it does not matter whether it is Tuesday or Sunday, you cannot park there anyway.

Mr Frankford: So you do not like the idea of a tourist area?

Ms Matthews: I think it is brilliant. You live there, you have seen the T-shirts. If this is not a tourist area, who are all these people?

Mr Frankford: Yes, but you are uncomfortable with the tourist area approach in this legislation?

Ms Matthews: I do not care whether it is tourist or what it is. I just think it should happen.

Mr Frankford: Now, look at this list of businesses. Would you not agree that with many of these businesses it is a reflection more of real estate practices on Queen Street?

Ms Matthews: Oh, yes. The rents are exorbitant. But people have been there many, many years and are unable to survive because of the drop in business; they have not been able to keep their noses above water. One in particular that I know of—and I cannot speak for all because I do not own a business there—just said they got tired of sitting in the store when they could be sitting at home. They have simply closed their business, they are taking a six-month holiday, and they are going to reopen someplace else.

The Acting Chair: Mr Frankford, I am going to cut in here, if you do not mind, because I am looking at the time, and Mr Mills still has a question.

Mr Mills: Just a comment: On page 2 of your presentation—and I thank you for being here—you say that modern lifestyles include Sunday as a day of doing for everyone. I would really question that it is for everyone, because I am particularly concerned about preserving a common pause day as a family day, a day to get together, and perhaps a day to rest and not do anything. I do not really see that it is a day of doing for everyone. Another point you make is "independent business choice and an independent resident's choice as to how we spend our Sundays," that is, shopping. That would be a very nice philosophy, but when we want to engage in shopping, then it entails other folks to be of service to us and to work. I have a little difficulty with your choice of words there, that we want to be free to choose how we spend our Sundays. If you want to spend your Sunday hiking, I have no great qualms with that.

Ms Matthews: I work every third weekend. That is my choice, Saturday and Sunday.

The Acting Chair: Could you make it a question, please.

Mr Mills: I prefaced my comments that it was a comment.

The Acting Chair: I am just worried about you. I always worry about you, Mr Mills.

Mr Mills: I know you are worried about me, and you are not alone. Thank you very much.

The Acting Chair: No, I do not worry about you.

Mr Mills: I am here today really to put a point of view across about this legislation that I feel dearly about.

The Acting Chair: Is there a Mr John Winter in the audience? Then I am going to call a five-minute break, and I would like to start no later than 3:55. That certainly will allow enough time for the next presenter to be here.

The committee recessed at 1546.

BI-WAY STORES LTD

The Acting Chair: I would like to start now. We now have a presentation from Bi-Way. We have Mr Eric Paul and Mr Michael Sherman. Mr Sherman, do I understand that you will be starting?

Mr Sherman: No, Mr Paul.

The Acting Chair: Mr Paul, the way we have been organizing our time is that you have a half-hour for your presentation. You can use that entire half-hour or you can use any part of it. Whatever time is left over after your presentation is equally divided for questions or some comments from the parties here.

Mr Poirier: Within the half-hour.

The Acting Chair: Yes, within the half-hour. I was very clear on that, was I not?

Mr Paul: Within the half-hour. Thank you and good afternoon. I am not sure when you started this morning, but I am sure you have had a long day and I will try to be as brief as possible. As the chairman mentioned, I am Eric Paul, the chairman and chief executive officer of Bi-Way Stores Ltd and I have elected to appear today to voice my concerns about the proposed passage of Bill 115.

Bi-Way, as I am sure most of you are aware, has a long history of providing basic family apparel and household consumables at the lowest possible prices. In Ontario, Bi-Way operates 210 locations in large and small communities. Our sales revenues for last year in Ontario alone were nearly one-half billion dollars. Our customer base consists primarily of low-income families. These are the very people our government wishes to assist by providing better social services and economic programs. We employ approximately 35,000—that is, 3,500 Ontarians; maybe that was wishful thinking on my part—60% of whom are women. Well over half of these 3,500 people are under the age of 25. For many of these young people, mostly students and recent graduates, a job at Bi-Way represents a first employment opportunity.

Despite our history, quality people and our recent investment in technology of over $10 million, we have serious doubts about our long-term viability if government legislation prevents us from being competitive. The proposed legislation which forbids the people of Ontario from choosing whether or not to shop on Sunday and forbids businesses from serving their customers in the best way they see fit does nothing but make worse the already difficult retail realities of the 1990s. This unfair legislation, like any regulation or restriction in a market economy, ultimately results in higher costs of doing business, proportionately higher retail prices to consumers and reduced capital reinvestment in the economy of this province.

We estimate that Bi-Way will lose 5% in annual sales due to Sunday shopping restrictions, representing $25 million in lost revenues from Ontario alone. We plan no direct reinvestment as a result of these lost revenues and this real decrease in capital investment will directly result in our inability to create new job opportunities. I want to expand my business in this province. I want to create more job opportunities for Ontario workers. Yet I am hindered by legislation such as this. We cannot go on blaming the recession. We have to recognize the realities of the Canadian retail business and work together to help solve these problems, not make them worse.

It is true that Sunday shopping restrictions are not the only problem. Cost structures in Canada remain high as a result of the makeup of our social fabric, the lack of competition and in many instances the predatory pricing practices of multinational enterprises. To insure that Canada will be able to compete in the world economy, our costs of goods on a global and a free-trade basis must be competitive. I must add at this point that I think what we have seen in the marketplace is that we can buy our goods on a cost-competitive basis with competitors south of the border who are on average 10 times our size, business for business. But business must be encouraged to invest in people productivity and technology. We cannot be handcuffed by legislation that further exacerbates an already worsening problem.

Ultimately what I am saying there is that while we may be able to buy our goods on a competitive basis with those direct competitors, if in fact we cannot get the productivity out of our other assets, which is our physical environment and our people, we will not win. I believe we can get it out of our people. The challenge is, how do we get it out of those physical assets?

In Ontario, our tax base is not rising as fast as our need for social services and health care, particularly in light of our aging population. We are just as concerned as you are about reducing health care costs while maintaining adequate quality services. It troubles me that the higher prices to consumers which result from Sunday closures run counter to the stated goals of the provincial government. As a graduate pharmacist, I can appreciate the need for essential services. Essential services such as prescriptions can be provided by hospitals, prescription-only outlets or perhaps full drugstores on a rotation basis.

We currently operate a number of Drug World stores that are larger than the 7,500-square-foot limit imposed by this legislation. Drug World stores strive to provide low-cost prescription drugs to the people of Ontario. Drug World does this by keeping profit margins low and by selling prescription drugs in higher volumes. However, because of the arbitrary size restriction imposed by the Retail Business Holidays Act, Drug World stores are not permitted to open on Sundays.

Shoppers Drug Mart, which, I might add, is not 100% Canadian-owned and is one of Canada's largest sellers of tobacco products, is allowed to remain open on Sundays under the guise of providing emergency prescription services. Regrettably, Shoppers and other stores like it are not as focused on providing low-cost prescription drugs to Ontarians who need them. I ask you, whose interest does this legislation, the 7,500-square-foot limitation, really serve?

I emphasize again that Drug World competes on the basis of low costs. However, we could lower the costs of prescription services even further if we were allowed to compete on a level playing field with our competitors. If this government wants to provide low-cost prescription drugs to Ontarians, I submit that this arbitrary 7,500-square-foot limit be removed from the act.

Our own research indicates the people of Ontario want freedom of choice as to how they spend their free time. In fact, our customer base contains many dual-income households where Sunday becomes the only day the family can shop together. We strongly urge you to consider the opinion of all people of this province and respect the democratic process.

In conclusion, Sunday shopping has been a reality in the United States and parts of Canada for a long period. I have found no information that indicates that Sunday shopping, or the lack thereof, has a beneficial or a negative impact on the family unit. Does the government of Ontario really believe that the fabric of our society is so frail that it can only be safeguarded by enforcing a mandatory common pause day? I think not. On the contrary, a healthy economic environment with full employment will be the challenge of the 1990s in order to prevent further deterioration in our social structures.

Mr Daigeler: I just want to know who the owners of Bi-Way are.

Mr Paul: Bi-Way is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Dylex Ltd.

Mr Sorbara: I am concerned about the submissions you make on the question of the drugstore issue, the 7,500-square-foot limitation. Is it correct to say that generally, overall and given all your product lines, Drug World is a lower-cost facility than Shoppers Drug Mart?

Mr Paul: Yes.

Mr Sorbara: By what, 1% or 2% if you look at all the products?

Mr Paul: No, by a significant percentage. I would be happy to provide the members of the committee with the specifics, but I am not sure what part of the business you are referring to. Are you talking about the prescription part of the business, or overall?

Mr Sorbara: I am talking about overall. The point I am trying to make is that people with smaller incomes get a better deal at Drug World than they do at Shoppers Drug Mart.

Mr Paul: Let me give you some numbers. For those of you who appreciate the retailing industry, the gross margin per cent in a typical drugstore like a Shoppers Drug Mart is around 33%. Drug World is around 20%. That is a 40% reduction.

Mr Sorbara: If I were to do an analysis of your customer base compared with the customer base of Shoppers Drug Mart, I think it would be safe to say that your customers have more modest incomes than the customers of Shoppers Drug Mart.

Mr Paul: Yes, our research indicates that certainly we are heavily skewed to a lower-income demographic.

Mr Sorbara: The fact is that under this legislation, those with higher income will be able to continue to shop at their local Shoppers Drug Mart and the more modest income part of Ontario that shops at Drug World will not be able to shop on Sunday. Is that fair?

Mr Paul: I think that is a fair assumption.

Mr Sorbara: Do you think that is a fair law?

Mr Paul: No, I certainly do not.

Mr Sorbara: Have you made any submissions to the government or to the minister about why the arbitrary restriction of 7,500 square feet is in the act?

Mr Paul: Yes, my presentation today is a summary basically of a number of letters that have been written to the Premier and the minister regarding these issues.

Mr Sorbara: Have you received responses from the Premier or the minister?

Mr Paul: Yes, I have.

Mr Sorbara: And what have they said?

Mr Paul: Basically that they were considering all my suggestions and that they were going to committee.

Mr Sorbara: Would you like to hear today from the government members that they will remain open to changing the 7,500-square-foot arbitrary provision?

Mr Paul: I think it would be an insult to my efforts if I did not hear some kind of consideration from the government of the efforts of the people.

Mr Sorbara: I would like to hear from the government members as well, specifically in reference to the 7,500-square-foot provision, which is a clear example of where this bill is a preference for the rich and a burden on the poor. The rich get to shop in the stores they want to shop in and continue to have Ontario as their playland on Sunday, and poorer people with more modest incomes have the stores in their neighbourhood closed to them.

Mr Poirier: I look at the top of the last page that you have. It says, "It troubles me that the higher prices to consumers which result from Sunday closures run counter to the stated goals...." Could you expand on that? I find that interesting. You seem to say that if you are open seven days a week, including Sundays, you would be able to provide lower prices.

Mr Paul: In the retailing industry, for anybody who is a student of it, they call it the productivity loop, and certainly anybody who is up to date on survival in the 1990s will understand this. Basically it says that the higher the productivity of all your assets, the lower your prices can be, because it is a self-fulfilling situation. It is that kind of a process. In fact, if you eliminate one seventh of our productivity by allowing us not to be open on Sunday, which turned out on a per-hour basis to be the most productive day of the week in our environment, we are at a distinct disadvantage compared to somebody else who is allowed to be open for that period of time. In addition, somebody who is a loyal customer of ours who may need emergency prescription services cannot get them from the company he is supporting every day. They have to go somewhere else. I think that is patently unfair.

Mr Poirier: Fair enough. Sometimes you hear about the higher cost of doing business on a Sunday and that there is not an economic advantage to being open on a Sunday. What you are saying is contrary to what we hear sometimes. That is why I am interested to hear from you.

Mr Paul: I can appreciate there are issues about the right of the individual to work on Sunday, and I think this government has done some good things, in my opinion, with regard to labour practices, in protection of the worker, health and safety and many other areas, and I support all that. I think the good legislation—

Interjections.

Mr Paul: Whomever's it is. I think there is good value in that. I must tell you today—and I represent big business to this committee perhaps—that big business is more susceptible to the will of their employees than little business, because I cannot run 280 stores by myself. The only way we can run those stores is with good, effective employee relations and practices. Therefore, I think there are ways to buffer that issue, which has been one of the main issues of this government, and still provide the kind of open environment that will allow all of us to have freedom of choice. I guess that is my issue at the end of the day.

1610

Mr Carr: Thank you for taking the time to do that presentation. It was well thought out. I was looking at the first page, with regard to the 5% loss in sales, and I was wondering if you could tell us, if it is public knowledge, where your particular company stands now. Are you in a loss position, if that is public knowledge, and if so is it bad?

Mr Paul: Our company is not in a loss position for a number of reasons. The first reason is that we really are offering value to the consumer and in these difficult times many consumers are coming to us because they have no choice. We define our customers as two types of customers, apropos Mr O'Connor's remark which I just caught the edge of. We have them defined as no-choice and choice customers. We have an awful lot of no-choice customers at Bi-Way. If they do not shop with us, they go to welfare. That is their next opportunity. On the other hand, we do have some choice consumers, so I guess the economic times and perhaps some of the things we are doing are contributing to our success in the near term.

I am going to give this committee a retail lesson, if I may be so candid, and give you some numbers because these are real numbers, not on our business, but on survival. The number one competitors in this business, who are all coming from the US, have operating overheads as a percentage of their total business of 20% or less. There is not one Canadian retail operation, exclusive of food—I am not talking about food operators—that comes within 50% of that. If you had all your money invested in this province in a viable retailing entity and through legislation you are going bankrupt—a US competitor is allowed to move into your marketplace, open up a business here, run it however it sees fit, not worry about the six or seven days, have a 10 to 1 economic advantage on top of it all, and can be predatory-pricing just south of the border. What are you doing to us today? You are not allowing us to compete.

I think this government has to listen to industry. I will be happy to sit and open my books to you on a private basis and let you understand retailing. When we talk about the word "survival," sometimes at this committee and in what appears in the press, I get the feeling you think we are just using that as cannon fodder. I assure you that the malls are running today with a 20%—not quite a 20%, but almost a 20%—vacancy rate. The reason we do not really know what the vacancy rate is is that some people are sitting in the malls not paying rent, because the landlords would rather have a store that is filled than a store that is empty. We believe that is going to go up, and if that goes up, the tax base erodes, and that is the issue.

Mr Carr: It seems you have thought this out very well and you are a very intelligent individual. Why do you believe the government is proceeding if so much of this legislation is hurting you? What is your feeling of why they are proceeding in this manner that will hurt companies like yours?

Mr Paul: That is a difficult question for me to answer. Certainly I think there is an issue about the quality of life and the family structure, and certainly in difficult economic times we see it breaking down all over the place.

We are a company that probably sees it as quickly as anybody. We see it in our stores. I see it in shoplifting. I just see it in the nature and the number of people we are catching every day in our stores, and there are some pretty sad cases. They are not shoplifting because it is a frivolous thing. In many cases they are shoplifting necessities, and that is sad. So I appreciate the issues of social fabric in family life. Without a decent economic base there will never be a common pause day. That day will be used for the things you read about in the paper every day, which are not pleasant, because when the economic stress becomes so great people react in ways they never thought possible.

Mr Carr: One of the concerns the government has put forward is for large organizations like yours. It feels it has to protect the workers of large organizations, and we have heard from some of the other groups, your parent corporation, that talked a little bit about how they tried to address that. The perception from the government is that it does not have to worry about the smaller companies, that it is the big, bad large businesses. I was wondering if you could enlighten us as to how you see protecting your employees. You seem like a reasonable person who is genuinely concerned about employees.

Mr Paul: I do not know who claims credit for the bill, but despite that, there is good labour legislation with regard to safety, etc, and things of that nature can certainly be implemented to make sure that the rights of the workers are protected as far as Sunday is concerned. I have no issue with that because I believe we will not have a problem getting people who are industrious, who need a second income or a third income, or are students, or whatever it is, and will want to work. If we cannot get people because of that, then I will tell you what will happen ultimately: We will pay more.

Mr Carr: You would never force anybody to work on Sunday.

Mr Paul: It is a market economy.

Mr Carr: You would never force anybody to work on Sunday against his wishes.

Mr Paul: We believe our employees are five-day-a-week employees, whoever they are, our managers, assistant managers, whatever, and we just do not do that. We have not done it and we did not have any trouble finding people while we were allowed to remain open.

Mr Fletcher: Thank you for coming today. I am just looking at a couple of items. One is that you believe in freedom of choice. My choice is not to work on Sunday. You do not have a problem with that?

Mr Paul: Not at all.

Mr Fletcher: If I were your employee and you asked me to work Sunday and I said I would not work Sunday—

Mr Paul: Absolutely not; I would respect that.

Mr Fletcher: I am glad to hear that. Another thing is on the next paragraph, that you found no information that indicates Sunday shopping or the lack thereof has a beneficial or a negative impact on the family unit. Let me just quote from Loblaws, the food chain:

"The store business"—this is their quote, not mine—"is not a nine-to-five, Monday-to-Friday job. Converting it to a round-the-clock, seven-days-a-week environment will no doubt negatively impact our employees' obligation to family and religious beliefs and ultimately strain the employer-employee relationship. The traditional family is being buried and I would suggest that Sunday opening will be the shovel that digs the grave."

Perhaps I can quote once more from Lynne Arling, president of the Consumers' Association of Canada—Alberta Branch:

"The biggest argument against Sunday shopping is the social cost. One working parent on Sunday means families cannot be together for meals or activities. Surveys found senior citizens in nursing homes get fewer visits and fewer outings with their families in areas where Sunday shopping is allowed."

I am getting this information from people—as I said, Loblaws and also in Alberta where they have wide-open Sunday shopping—that there is a detrimental effect on the family unit. As you said, you see it all the time. You will see it in your business. There is an effect.

If I can carry it a little further, when we have a lot of students working, surveys have already shown that for students who are working, either after school or during the week, their marks are not as good and their performance level is down.

Mr Paul: You are a little younger than I am, but—

Mr Fletcher: Not that much, I will bet.

Mr Paul: —let me just make two comments to you.

In this society there are all kinds of people and I guess we can take them from the cradle to the grave. The reality is that the student who is financing his education is going to be concerned about his job and his marks and everything else, and the student who does not want to study and wants to do drugs or whatever else, or steal or shoplift—I cannot prevent that. I think good parental guidance and the right kind of upbringing can do that.

My issue in making the remark was that I have seen no statistical basis. I have looked at the research in the US, and everywhere I can find it, and I could not find anything substantive that showed the social fabric of the area, the country or whatever was changed dramatically as a result one way or the other. I am just saying to you that I could not see something substantive in a piece of research that is well documented anywhere.

Mr Fletcher: I was just looking at surveys, not statistical research that was done.

There was one other thing you alluded to when you talked about shoplifting. We open up Sundays. Does that mean we will have to increase the number of police on duty to handle the increase in shoplifting, which could occur because now you have seven days to shoplift instead of six? Public transportation: In the city I come from we do not have Sunday bus service. If we have to put in Sunday bus service to allow people to travel to the stores—

Mr Paul: Let me ask you the question: How is it that so many people without cars, transportation or any other means, can shop in the US? The stats that just came out today or yesterday—do you know how many million visits there were to the US last year?

Mr Fletcher: From Canada.

Mr Paul: Yes.

Mr Fletcher: These are people who are driving down.

Mr Paul: It was 52 million.

Mr Fletcher: I understand.

Mr Paul: Up 30%. I cannot remember the exact stat. I cannot remember if that was a first six months or a first nine months number. It is mind-boggling.

Mr Fletcher: My point is if there is wide-open Sunday shopping in my city and we have to increase bus service, my taxes go up.

Mr Paul: If you do not have the income there and you have the income in the US, you are not going to have a tax base. Which would you prefer to have, a tax base or no tax base? Because if they are south of the border, you have no tax base. I would rather have them and have a tax base. At least I could support my bus drivers, my workers and my society for all the other reasons. That is my concern, Mr Fletcher.

Mr Fletcher: Yes, but what I am saying is that throughout Ontario municipalities are going to have to pick up the costs of increased bus service, of increased policing, and day care facilities are going to be needed.

Mr Paul: Who do you think the municipalities have had their largest tax increases on? Who do you think the municipalities are taxing?

Mr Fletcher: Me.

Mr Paul: No.

Mr Fletcher: Yes.

Mr Paul: No.

Mr Fletcher: You are darned right.

Mr Paul: Absolutely not, sir. I beg to differ.

Mr Fletcher: Check my tax books.

Mr Paul: I would suggest to you that the retail industry and the landlords and the property owners have had the highest tax increases to support the services you are talking about.

Mr Fletcher: I am a property owner.

Mr Paul: In fact, I can give you a stat. Can I give you one stat?

Mr Fletcher: I will come back with a stat.

Mr Paul: Okay.

Mr Fletcher: Go ahead.

Mr Paul: We have communities in Ontario where the tax base went up 186% last year. They might have been unusually low before that; I do not know.

Mr Fletcher: The cost to the city of Mississauga to provide services to satisfy Sunday shopping is going to be $700,000 per year.

Mr Mills: Thank you, Mr Paul, for being here this afternoon. I just want to take up on what my friend and colleague said earlier, that we are here to listen. I have made a point at every presentation to say how we are listening here and I represent one member of the government caucus. I say it again, we are here to listen. However, there are some common principles that are not negotiable. One is the common pause day. That is not negotiable. The rights of the retail worker to refuse work is not negotiable and the tourism exemption is not negotiable.

On the regulations, whatever they may be, and whatever we may decide about sizes of stores, I would say we are listening. That is what we are here for, because if we were not here to listen, it would be a mockery of this exercise. I remember that when this Sunday shopping group travelled the province last time, one of our members had a duck or a chicken or something, and he said we were not listening, that we were here but not listening. Sir, we are listening.

I have to make that statement, because Mr Sorbara asked it on behalf of Mr Paul.

You do not know me, but I am very cagey on spending a dollar.

Mr Paul: We all are these days.

Mr Mills: I listen here to the cost of prescription services, and that is always a sore point in my mind. Maybe you can help me. Is there some sort of rule set in place among pharmacists that the dispensing fee is universal, be it Shoppers Drug Mart, Drug World or wherever, and that the flexibility is in the price of the drugs? I think that is important, because we are trying to reduce health costs, as you probably know.

Mr Paul: I guess you are dealing with a subject that is near and dear to my own heart.

Mr Mills: Yes, I presumed.

Mr Paul: Let me just tell you how I feel about it. There are no regulations governing pricing per se. There is a pharmaceutical association in the province and that governs the practice of the individual pharmacist. Therefore, whatever you establish as your prescription fee is what you can charge. That is what you charge the public, and that is the same fee the government will pay you on supported fees.

What I am saying to you is that because the Ontario College of Pharmacists is a self-serving body, and the people on that body are very self-serving to a number of the major retailers, Shoppers Drug Mart being one of them, it is obviously in their best interest to make sure the prescription fee, which is a very insignificant part of their profit equation, is pushed to as high a level as they possibly can.

On the other hand, in my particular business, I sell a different assortment. I sell prescription fees. I have health and beauty aids and things. I also sell apparel in my stores. It is a combination store. Therefore, I believe that in a free market economy not governed by that regulation I could reduce the cost of prescription fees 50%.

Today the government is paying because Shoppers Drug Mart sets the precedent. I do not know what the exact rate is today, $9.95, I believe, or something like that.

Mr Mills: It is $9.65.

Mr Paul: Okay, $9.65 for every prescription filled in this province. I tell you, sir, that is patently ridiculous. I do not know how many prescriptions you pay for annually, but multiply that by $5 and that is what you could save, in my opinion. That is a significant number.

The Chair: Thank you very much, Mr Paul. I am sure your presentation has been most enlivening. It certainly seems to have got a lot of response.

Mr Sorbara: I have a brief point of order arising, Mr Chairman, from the questioning of my friend Mr Fletcher of the witness. Mr Fletcher, for the second time, has read a quote which he attributes to Loblaws. Since his second reading of that quote, I have checked with representatives of Loblaws. I want to advise you, sir, that Loblaws is currently a member of the Committee for Fair Shopping and is currently taking a case to the Supreme Court of Canada which challenges the constitutionality of the Retail Business Holidays Act. The position Mr Fletcher is purporting to attribute to Loblaws is a quote from some five or six years ago and is no longer the position of Loblaws. I think it is inappropriate for him to continue to use that quote with the intention of suggesting to the general public or to this committee that the position of Loblaws in Ontario is as reflected in that quote.

Mr Fletcher: Mr Chair, on that point of order: I have a presentation from the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union. It was given to the Scarborough-Agincourt Provincial Liberal Riding Association in 1990. That is where I am getting it from.

The Chair: Our next presentation is from the Ontario Committee for Enforcement of Holiday Closing Laws. We have no presenter? I would suggest that we recess for five minutes, and if the delegation does not appear that we adjourn until tomorrow morning.

The committee recessed at 1628.

ONTARIO COMMITTEE FOR ENFORCEMENT OF HOLIDAY CLOSING LAWS

The Chair: I would like to call our committee hearings back to order. Do we have a presenter? Mr Adams, from the Ontario Committee for Enforcement of Holiday Closing Laws? Mr Kingdon would like to make a short note for that committee. My understanding is that it is not a presentation, though.

Mr Kingdon: Thank you, Mr Chairman, ladies and gentlemen. I am a member of the Ontario committee and Bud Adams was to have been here. Whether he is hung up in traffic or what I cannot tell you. I have tried to reach him by phone, and of course it is 4:30 and like all hardworking people he has gone. At least, the office is closed. So I am in the position of apologizing for the fact that Bud is not here, and perhaps there will be a time later on in the proceedings when he might address this committee.

The Chair: Thank you, Mr Kingdon. Any further business?

Mr Sorbara: It is regrettable we are not going to be able to hear at this point from Mr Adams, but we have heard from the Premier and he has announced that there is going to be a cabinet shuffle tomorrow at 9, so I want to say how nice it was to work with Mrs Haslam on this committee and wish her good luck in her new responsibilities as the Solicitor General, and Gord, sorry, and I want to say to Mr Fletcher, sorry you did not get considered this time around.

Mrs Haslam: We want to extend our condolences to you for not having a post either.

Mr Mills: I would just like to say, Mr Chairman, that quote about my colleague Karen is in the Toronto Sun, and you, as a baseball man, should realize that all the trades that happen are never mentioned in the press. Borders is supposed to be going to the Expos tomorrow, but that will not happen.

Mr Lessard: I wonder if we can get the agreement of all the parties that in the event that Bud Adams from the Committee for Enforcement of Holiday Closing Laws is available, the committee does agree to hear him at a time when it is appropriate to schedule him.

The Chair: Providing there is time available.

Mr Lessard: Yes.

The Chair: The clerk asked me a very simple question, which is, should he then jump ahead of other people who are presently on the waiting list?

Mr Sorbara: I would have thought not, Mr Chairman.

Clerk of the Committee: I have not been back to my office yet today, but my understanding from my office is that there is now a waiting list. There are more messages sitting in my office of people who want to get on to this schedule. At this point this schedule is jammed.

Mr Sorbara: I would just say on behalf of our caucus that while we really would enjoy hearing from Mr Adams, we think he should be considered along with anyone else, in that it would be inappropriate to bump someone from the agenda or rearrange the waiting list to accommodate Mr Adams.

Mrs Haslam: If he does show up, what about asking him for his written—

Mr Sorbara: Anyone can submit written documents.

Mrs Haslam: Yes, we have written submissions but we do not have his. What I am saying is, please be sure we ask for his written material.

The Chair: We resume at 9:30 tomorrow.

The committee adjourned at 1640.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

Wednesday 31 July 1991

The committee met at 0937 in committee room 1.

RETAIL BUSINESS ESTABLISHMENTS STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT DES LOIS EN CE QUI CONCERNE LES ÉTABLISSEMENTS DE COMMERCE DE DÉTAIL

Resuming consideration of Bill 115, An Act to amend the Retail Business Holidays Act and the Employment Standards Act in respect of the opening of retail business establishments and employment in them.

Reprise de l'étude du projet de loi 115, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les jours fériés dans le commerce de détail et la Loi sur les normes d'emploi en ce qui concerne l'ouverture des établissements de commerce de détail et l'emploi dans ces établissements.

The Chair: I would like to call our committee hearings to order. These hearings are into Bill 115, the Retail Business Establishments Statute Law Amendment Act, 1991, and our first presenter this morning is Mr David Shepherd from the Scugog Ministerial Association.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Chairman, if I might just for a moment, as our first witness comes up to the committee table—

The Chair: Perhaps I could allow our first witness to sit down.

Mr Sorbara: Sure, certainly. I am just going to be a moment or two. It is all very informal here. You need not worry. We just have a little bit of politics to take care of.

The Chair: Mr Shepherd, I will introduce you to the committee members in a few moments, after Mr Sorbara's comments.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Chairman, as you know, we have just received word of a very major reorganization of the executive council of the government. Our party certainly offers best wishes to Mrs Haslam, who just yesterday was a mere mortal sitting on this committee analysing Bill 115.

More important perhaps for the purposes of our work here is that we have had the appointment of a new Solicitor General and Minister of Correctional Services in the person of the member for Oshawa, Mr Pilkey. I know Mr Pilkey, prior to his election to Parliament, had been a mayor of a municipality in the province of Ontario. More important even than that, he may well have significantly different views on the matters we are discussing here today under Bill 115 than his predecessor, whom we wish well as well, as we do all the new MPPs who have been appointed and those who are now leaving the executive council.

I would suggest that in light of the appointment of Mr Pilkey, this offers a fresh opportunity to consider the matter within a context. I am not suggesting the government is going to wholly abandon its position, but I think it would be appropriate under the circumstances if we urgently invited the new minister to come before this committee to express his views on how we ought best to regulate the business of Sunday shopping and give all of us as members of this committee an opportunity to examine him, question him and have his views on the record of the committee.

The reason why I say that is that in my own experience, through five and a half years on the executive council of the province, although policy shifts were not immediately evident on day one of a cabinet shuffle, certainly the appointment of new ministers in new ministries often, if not always, indicated a new direction for that ministry and the matters for which it is responsible.

So I would ask you and I would ask the agreement of the committee that we urgently send an invitation, through you as Chair, to Mr Pilkey to come and testify. If that means that we have to sit an extra hour on one of our days or we have to forgo lunch and have him come here during the lunch hour or whatever, I think it would be absolutely essential that we do that. I would move that you issue an urgent invitation for the minister to come and testify before the committee.

The Chair: Is that a motion?

Mr Sorbara: Yes, that is a motion.

Mr Fletcher: We have no problem with that. How about we wait a couple of weeks so that he can be briefed on what is going on in his ministry, and closer to the end, when we are back in Toronto, perhaps that would be a time to get Mr Pilkey here. We have no problem with it, but just out of courtesy, give a person some time to get into the ministry, to find out what is going on. I know you said urgently, but—

Mr Sorbara: I would just say to my friend that we would leave the timing of that to Mr Pilkey, the Chair and our clerk to arrange a suitable time.

Mr Fletcher: It was the word "urgently."

Mr Sorbara: Yes, an urgent invitation. The reason I said we should vary our schedule is that we were advised by the clerk yesterday that our time is fully booked now. We have witnesses to fill all the time available. We could, if we chose, open up some additional time. I personally would like to hear from Mr Pilkey as soon as possible. Certainly, he will want to spend the next couple of days being briefed by his ministerial officials, but I do not want to hear the views of his ministry on this. I do not want him to come and tell us what his ministry thinks of Sunday shopping. I would like to hear from Mr Pilkey. So I would like the unwashed Pilkey, if you like. I am sure he will want to scrub himself up a little bit and apprise himself of a variety of issues. If it needs two weeks, that is fine. If it needs three weeks, that is fine.

We are in the midst of hearings. These hearings are very important. We have a lot of witnesses. We see already that the matter continues to be controversial. I think the cabinet shuffle offers us an opportunity to perhaps stake out some new territory on this very difficult subject. This is the gazillionth time that a parliamentary committee has had hearings on Sunday shopping. It seems always to be to the same effect. Perhaps this time, with a new cabinet—Lord knows, it cannot be worse than the last cabinet—and a new minister, we might have a new beginning on this subject.

So my motion is on the table, but I did not mean to say that he had to testify within the next day or two. We will have to make those arrangements. We cannot subpoena him. We cannot require him to testify, but we can invite him urgently to come here. This is now his bill and he has carriage of it along with his parliamentary assistant who, I reiterate, should be sitting up here and not over there.

The Chair: I think we have already discussed that with Mr Wessenger in the past.

Mr O'Connor: I am sure the clerk will work in her normal expedient fashion. I do not think you need to direct the clerk to be urgent in handling these matters. Because this particular legislation has three ministers involved in it and two ministers are still involved in it—no change has been made—perhaps we need not worry quite as much as the fears Mr Sorbara seems to be sharing with us today or his apprehension. I think in good time he will come before us and he probably would welcome the opportunity too. So I look forward to when he does come and I support Mr Sorbara's motion.

Mr Carr: I just wanted to take a quick minute to wish the new minister luck. I know he hopes it will be passed on to him. Also, with some regrets, I say goodbye to the former Solicitor General, who I know worked hard. I think I can appreciate what Mr Sorbara said at one of the other hearings: how you can be in cabinet one day and it all ends very quickly. So we wish him the best of luck.

I would encourage that we do get a chance to sit down with him at the most convenient time possible. Mr Pilkey, as you know from his background in municipal affairs, should be fairly conversant with this issue because it has been going on for such a long period of time. I would look forward to getting a chance to hear his views, because quite frankly I think it may change. The government has said it is prepared to listen to some of the presenters and change things, and this will give them a good opportunity to do it. A new minister coming in can say this is the new direction. So I look forward to it.

The Chair: Thank you, Mr Carr. Any further discussion? All in favour of Mr Sorbara's motion? Opposed? Carried.

The clerk suggests that either the 15th or the 29th of August is possible. It will probably require sitting early in the morning, but we can certainly extend that invitation and work out the details at a later point.

Mr Sorbara: My preference would be the sooner the better, because the 29th is very near the end of our hearings. If he chooses the 29th, well, he chooses the 29th. I would like to hear from him as soon as possible. But again, let's leave that to you and to the clerk and to the minister.

The Chair: I am not sure the timing is all that pressing in terms of Mr Pilkey. He rarely comes unwashed.

SCUGOG MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION

The Chair: My apologies again, Mr Shepherd. The workings of these committees usually run more or less smoothly.

Mr Shepherd: No problem. I have been on a few myself.

The Chair: Basically you have half an hour for your presentation. Typically that is divided between your presentation time and about half of that time for questions from the committee members, who I am sure will have a lot of vital questions coming from your presentation. Please feel free to start when you are comfortable.

Mr Shepherd: I have handed out a copy of the brief, presented by David Shepherd, secretary-treasurer of the Scugog Ministerial Association. I think the thing to do is to just go through it.

The introductory part just speaks of the Scugog Ministerial, made up of the clergy of the congregations in the Scugog township, which is the area around Port Perry, and it is Anglican, Baptist, Christian Reformed, Pentecostal, Presbyterian, Roman Catholic and United churches. We meet every month except for the summer. We have some ministries that we co-operate in through the area, and we get together for a combined worship service once a year, and then we do some discussion and prayer together.

The next section, the position of the Scugog Ministerial, comes from discussions we have had. I am here as a result of being contacted by Gord Mills's office about three weeks ago from a letter we wrote to them last September. In that letter we supported the New Democratic Party's stand that the provincial government bears the responsibility of passing legislation with regard to Sunday shopping. We also supported the New Democratic Party's stand that this responsibility should not be delegated to the municipalities. We believe the NDP took this stand when the Liberal administration passed such legislation, which delegated the responsibility to the municipal governments.

On the whole I could say that the Scugog Ministerial opposes the extension of Sunday shopping. We support the concept of a common pause day. We support the stand that people should have legislated freedom from their jobs to enjoy their family and their loved ones and simply to relax. We believe that on the whole the common pause day should fall on the same day for everyone so that families and loved ones have the opportunity to get together, the day being Sunday. It is a 1,700-year-old tradition of Christendom, which is when the Christian church became the official church of the Holy Roman Empire, which is Europe and the area around that. It is a long-standing tradition that the day falls on Sunday.

The legislation mentions a common pause day, but there is more than a common pause. I am quoting from the explanatory notes, and the same language appears in the bill. In the explanatory notes it says:

"Part I of the bill establishes the principle that retail business holidays are common pause days and that municipalities should not use their exemption power to permit retail business establishments to open on holidays except to maintain or develop tourism.”

0950

What I want to draw your attention to here is that the words “holiday” and “common pause day” appear very close together, but they are not the same thing. The meaning is not the same. “Holiday” means holy day, which is a time set aside for holy pursuits. I want to take you back through a little bit of a Bible study. In the Bible the Ten Commandments appear in two places, once in the book of Exodus and once in the book of Deuteronomy.

In Exodus it says:

“Remember the Sabbath and keep it holy. You have six days in which to do your work, but the seventh day is a day of rest dedicated to me, God. On that day no one is to work—neither you, your children, your slaves, your animals, nor the foreigners who live in your country. In six days I, the Lord, made the earth, the sky, the sea, and everything in them, but on the seventh day I rested. That is why I, the Lord, blessed the Sabbath and made it holy.”

It dedicates a day to God. It gives the opportunity for the faith community—these were people who have left slavery in Egypt and were now forming a free community out in the desert—it gives them the opportunity for holy pursuits. For those who are not within the faith community it gives the opportunity for rest and relaxation. The rationale in the Bible also says God took a break from work, and I think there is a strong implication that if God needs a break, then you and I need a break too.

The commandment stated the second time, in the book of Deuteronomy, is the same commandment, but there is more reasoning. It says:

“Remember that you were slaves in Egypt, and that I, the Lord your God, rescued you by my great power and strength. That is why I command you to observe the Sabbath.”

The issue in the book of Deuteronomy is freedom from slavery. If you are going to be a slave for somebody else, you are a slave, but if you are a slave to yourself, then you are still a slave. We are quite capable of enslaving ourselves and you know that from the major health problem of stress that people impose upon themselves. So the commandment gives us freedom from servitude to others, but it also gives freedom from servitude to ourselves. It also says, when it talks about giving rest to other people, and even the animals, that we are not to impose servitude on other people. So the issue is much one of freedom.

When you put holy day and common pause day together, I would encourage you to hang on to the common pause day, but I would like to stress the meaning of the words “holy day,” that it means a day set aside for rest and it is a foundation of freedom.

We are concerned about the outcomes of Bill 115, and one is that people will be compelled to work Sundays whether they want to or not. I think a lot of the current legislation is based on the idea that people have the right to refuse to work Sunday without fear of losing jobs or suffering disciplinary action.

Within and around the ministerial, and just about everybody I have talked to, I have not yet met anyone who says this provision could possibly be enforceable. I cannot see how it can be practical. I do not see, nor does the Scugog Ministerial, how you can make such a provision work, even if you legislate it.

There are many employers who respect the needs and convictions of their employees. This kind of employer needs no legislation at all. They respect their employees and they do what is right by their employees. But anyone who is determined to circumvent it would have, we believe, little problem. When you set up legislation or rules, you automatically set up a challenge of how to either circumvent the rule or break the rule and still get away with it. With the situation here, the need of the enforcement machinery, it would be just so expensive and so cumbersome that I do not know anyone who thinks it could possibly work.

I know that, listening to a news report a couple of weeks ago, there was an international meeting on justice, and the justice system of Ontario was a bit of an embarrassment to us because of the cases thrown out of court involving violence and so on that could not even get to court for the backlog. This legislation, I believe, is well intentioned but unenforceable.

We see that the legislation as it stands leads to the erosion of the common pause day, which is what we are after in the first place, by giving the municipalities the right to pass bylaws which designated applicants for tourist status as tourist businesses. In other words, as I read it—I got the legislation on Monday—the business applies to the municipal council for tourist status, the municipal council grants or does not grant tourist status, and that is it. It becomes effective on the passing of the bylaw.

At the same time I did not see anything—maybe I have missed something in the act—whereby municipalities revoke tourist status for businesses that do not qualify but currently enjoy it.

It just opens the way to more and more tourist-designated businesses. In effect, I believe, it also reverses the stand the New Democrats took in opposition. When the responsibility was delegated to municipalities, the New Democrats opposed that. It seems to me that what is proposed in the bill is simply a more cumbersome way of saying the same thing.

I want to draw attention to the responsibility of the government to govern. I know that in every congregation, perhaps not every Sunday but many Sundays during the year, we pray for the people who hold government responsibility because this is one of the very responsible tasks and one of the great tasks, and the tradition of the church has been to encourage prayer and support for the civil government. So we do this out of respect for the members and the heavy responsibility they bear. Within every Christian church the good Christian citizenship involves good citizenship of the domain you are in, the country and the province. We are praying that the government governs, so we are appealing in general terms to the provincial government to govern, and this means to set the standards within the area of provincial government's responsibility.

I want to go to the area of common sense, and again I have had wide consultation on this within and without the ministerial and I do not know anybody who does not think they can spend as much money in six days as they can in seven. We do not spend very much money on Sunday and it is two weeks to payday. Yesterday evening my wife and I were discussing how we are going to make it to payday.

The notion that seven days of shopping will result in a one-seventh increase in commerce, or any increase in commerce or business, really does not make any sense to too many people. What it does mean is that the same amount of commerce is done, only you take one more day to do it and deny people the opportunity to take a break.

The final part of this brief sets out, I think, a fairly clear alternative. It comes through the Beatitudes and it says simply that no one can be a slave of two masters, or no one can serve two masters. In the Bible you choose between serving God and serving money. If you serve God, then this makes money a tool in the service of God. If you decide to serve money, then you are going to fix up your gods and arrange your gods to serve your money.

When I look at the material I find some descriptions of the tourist industry which say that "tourism generated $15.5 billion in revenues in Ontario." That is one quotation. Another one says, "The most significant amendment we are proposing will provide province-wide criteria for an exemption to holiday retail closing requirements for tourism-related businesses." Finally, it talks about "the tourism industry; an industry which is one of the cornerstones of our provincial economy."

As you write legislation, we hope and pray that you choose not to serve money. We believe your deepest convictions would be serving God. We appeal to you to search the depth of your conscience for what you value, for the value of freedom and people, a time for people to lift up their hearts in a way of their choosing and, quoting from a song we are familiar with, "A place to stand and a place to grow." We appeal to you to put these considerations in the legislation.

Mr Sorbara: I do not think there is any doubt that the whole history of the regulation of retailing, of store openings on Sunday in Ontario, is based on the strong, deeply rooted Christian heritage of the province and the foundations of those laws emerge right out of that ethic which, as you point out in your submissions, go well beyond Confederation and the writing of laws in Ontario.

An objective analysis would say that this effort to try and create a common pause day is yet again the next expression of that, but Ontario since that time has changed dramatically. That is to say, not only do we continue to have strong Christian traditions, but we have a number of other religious traditions that are alive and well and part of the foundation of our culture in the province and in Canada. At the same time we have a strong secular, non-religious or, in some respects, atheistic tradition in Ontario that needs to be respected.

I agree with you that the best way to live one's life is to find one day in seven to rest. Why do you think a modern state like Ontario, a modern jurisdiction like Ontario, ought to choose between those who would see their Sabbath on Sunday, those who would see their Sabbath on Saturday and those who would see their Sabbath on Friday? Why would you continue to put the responsibility on the state to legislate that? Finally, why would you restrict the legislation to the retailing industry? Is it not true that if we really wanted to observe the kinds of things I think you are genuinely and powerfully arguing for, we would call for no work to be done in retailing, in manufacturing and the service industries on the Sabbath?

Mr Shepherd: I would like to take those one at a time. The first one was the Sunday? As I am coming as a representative of the Scugog Ministerial, which is a Christian group, appealing to you because you said your legislation cannot come out of one religious tradition because that is not the way the world is, does this make sense? You are saying it does make sense that there be a common pause day.

Mr Sorbara: No, I did not say that. I said we are expressing a bias here for the Christian Sabbath in a society that has good, strong Christian traditions but strong Jewish traditions as well; Muslim traditions as well now, and also secular traditions. Why should we continue to choose the Sabbath of the Christian tradition?

Second, why should the state do that? Why cannot the individual identify his preference and, much like an orthodox Jew, simply not undertake any work in complete compliance with the Scriptures you quoted?

Mr Shepherd: The reason a common pause day should be one day of the week, be it Friday sundown to Saturday sundown, which was the original Sabbath, or Sunday or Wednesday—say Wednesday noon to Thursday noon—is so that people have the opportunity to get together. If you have a family and everyone has a different day, then you do not have the opportunity to get together. Fundamental to the idea of a common pause day is that it is common. Whether it be Sunday, as far as I am concerned, is up for negotiation. There is a 1,700 year tradition of that, going back to the days of Christendom when Constantine became the first Christian ruler of the Holy Roman Empire. There is lots of tradition behind Sunday, but I do not know of any reason other than it is tradition.

Why it falls upon the legislators of the province to legislate is that this is the government of Ontario, this is the government of the realm. Nobody else can do it.

The Chair: Thank you, Mr Sorbara. I am sorry, we have run out of time. Mr Carr?

Mr Carr: Yes. First of all, I want to thank you for your presentation and also for the part in here that says quite often you pray for the NDP.

As we sit back and reflect, one of the questions I have would be along the same lines of what Mr Sorbara asked. If we are going to say that as a result of religious convictions we need to have Sunday off, is it based on the workers or would that also include the people who would then do shopping, who see it as a leisure activity? You are talking now specifically of the workers. Would it be okay for you if people themselves wanted to go out and shop?

Mr Shepherd: When you say "out of religious convictions," those are the religious convictions of Scugog Ministerial. We recognize they are not everyone's religious convictions. When you are legislating it has to be on the basis of what makes sense. We are saying that in the religious tradition there are things in here that make sense. We believe it makes sense to anyone. When people shop, when you have buyers, you also have to have sellers, and many of those sellers are employees.

This is not directly on Sunday shopping, but there is a great deal of child labour going on now. One of the original intentions of the original Lord's Day Act—there are Lord's Day people here who are more qualified than I am, but one of the things was to set children free from labour. When you are opening places to sell, then these places need to be staffed.

Mr Carr: But what you talked about with the day of rest, when you listed the fourth commandment and so on, is it just for the workers? It is not for somebody who went out and shopped? You are not saying that people should not be going out to shop as a leisure activity, that they should stay at home or whatever? That is what I was trying to get at.

Mr Shepherd: Yes. The original intent was to set everybody free from work. On a common pause day I take a pause. If I take a pause and you work for me, that means you take a pause too. You cannot say, "This is my pause day; you work." It seems to be consistent.

Mr Carr: That is where I think some of the other people have been arguing that if that is the case, then why do we have Blue Jays games where the parking lot attendants, the hot dog vendors, the baseball players—in fact, I remember when I played hockey for a living. I played Christmas Day in Sudbury in the Ontario Hockey Association, which is probably the most religious day in the calendar. I did not like that because I did not get the chance to go home. In fact, factories work Sunday, car manufacturers have seven-day shifts when things are going well and so on. What would you say to somebody who said: "Why are you just picking on the retail workers? Why don't we shut down the baseball and the theatres where people are working, the airlines and the hotels?"

Mr Shepherd: I cannot speak for the Scugog Ministerial on this one, because we are opposed to further extension, but we take a point in time now and my personal conviction is we have gone way too far on this already. I think there are people who are being compelled to work right now. You could not get home, you could not be with your family on a religious day. Well, you could have been with your family, but you had the choice between being with your family and being on the team. If you were home with your family, enjoying your family, you would have been blacklisted by the team. That is an awful lot of pressure to put on a young hockey player. So my personal conviction, just speaking for myself, is that we have passed a point. When we talk about erosion of the common pause day in the brief, this is nothing new. This has been going on for a long time.

Mr Carr: As a matter of fact, as I remember, we won 3-1. It was the best game I ever played. If I had played more games on Christmas Day—

Mr Shepherd: That was the compensation. What about the folks who lost?

Mr Mills: Thank you very much, David, for being here this morning on behalf of the Scugog Ministerial Association, which represents a large number of churches and the congregations thereof in my riding. I am very happy to see you here and to talk to you again after almost a year, when we discussed some of these very things during the election campaign.

Ministers have a particular role in society and today we live in a society that is fraught with divorce, with stress, with a general malaise that runs through families because of the time and the day we live in. I am just wondering, David, if from your experience as a minister, counselling people probably, you can expand. How important do you see the common pause day in our society today, in so far as renewing and keeping families together is concerned?

Mr Shepherd: It is a hard question to answer because so much of it is gone. It would certainly make it easier for families to be together. It would relieve the pressure of other alternatives. If people did not have to work, then they could be at home with one another. That does not guarantee they would be. You cannot guarantee what people are going to do. You cannot impose on people just because you give them the liberty to do it.

The original legislation, which goes back 3,400 years or somewhere thereabouts, says the community of faith takes the day and the sojourners among you can do what they like. It is a day that people could use for family pursuits, if they so chose, or if not, social pursuits. But I think it would help.

Mr Mills: I know you have a few qualms about some of the legislation that is in this amendment, but basically I believe you support the concept of this amendment to Bill 115.

Mr Shepherd: The common pause day concept, yes.

Mr Mills: The common pause day. You feel we are going the right way when we are trying to legislate freedom for people to have that day together.

Mr Shepherd: Yes.

Mr Mills: And you, sir, speak for the Scugog Ministerial Association and all its churches here today.

Mr Shepherd: Yes.

The Chair: Thank you very much, Mr Shepherd.

HUDSON'S BAY CO

The Chair: Our next presenter is Mr Agnew from the Hudson's Bay Co. I apologize for our tardiness. We had a little bit of business at the outset this morning.

The typical presentation, sir, is that you have half an hour. You can use that time however you wish. I am sure many committee members will have many questions for you, so could you leave some of that time for them for that purpose.

Mr Agnew: I think I can help you pick up some of the time you might have lost this morning. I will not take half an hour. I think our views are very well known to the committee in total, mainly because when this started in the fall of 1986 we were there and are still here.

As many of you know, the Hudson's Bay Co has believed for some time that Ontario does not need any retail legislation for Sundays. I suppose the last nine months of Sunday shopping pretty well proved that from a couple of points of view, not so much from our own business viewpoint, but certainly that the consumers at large viewed it as an interesting thing. The longer it went on, the greater it got.

I think it was widely reported in the press, certainly on Monday, and I will reiterate it for you, that in the nine months we were open, and that is the Bay, Simpsons and Zellers, we did over $100 million in business on Sundays. That is a significant amount of business. It tended to escalate, but that was to a certain degree part of the calendar, as it went through. We started in the second week of July 1990 and went through the fall season. As we got closer to Christmas, obviously sales became larger and larger.

It pretty well paralleled our experience in Alberta and British Columbia, where we have been open for at least 10 years now on Sundays, that the consumer likes it. It is the second-largest day of the week for us in absolute sales volume and the highest dollars per hour we have of any day during the week. I bring this up only from the point of view that we are in the consumer satisfaction business. They either like what we do or we have a major problem, and the consumer likes Sunday shopping. That is the business we are in.

I suppose the big issue that faces this committee, as opposed to other committees I have talked to, is that I think we are past the point of really looking at whether in fact this is a big social issue, or an issue at all. I think one of the things that maybe is not quite understood is that the retail business—and I am not just talking about the department store industry—in Canada, and specifically this province, has got some significant problems facing it that are multifaceted, but one of the key issues is that it is probably the largest single employer in the province. We alone, as one company with about 3% market share of total department store type of merchandise business, employ 23,000 people in this province.

I suggest to you that the problem we are facing is that we are a major employer. We have to find ways of employing more people. We are also a significant barometer, I think, because we serve all socioeconomic backgrounds and we know what our customers want and what they do not. It certainly varies by municipality and by region. That is one reason we advocated that decisions of this nature should be decentralized unless you were going to have a common pause day, which is fundamentally the purpose of this legislation.

We have a problem with a common pause day inasmuch as the legislation does not address a common pause day. It is allowing thousands of stores to open or potentially open. I will give you one example: If the municipality deemed that the Eaton Centre was in a tourist area, about 350 stores could open and 15 could not, and the 15 could not because of their size or numbers of employees. That happens to be Eaton's at one end and Simpsons at the other and a few larger stores.

It seems very difficult for us to get our head around a common pause day when in fact thousands of stores will be allowed to open because they are deemed a tourist attraction or something. To me that tends to be a bit of an oxymoron. We are allowing stores to open, but you want a common pause day, and you do not want a common pause day in other fields of endeavour or other businesses, if you will.

Our feeling is that if you want a common pause day, close everybody down. Successive governments have not taken that as being a great idea, so we end up with more and more stores being open. I guess that is where our problem on a common pause day comes in. We can live with that very nicely. Just shut the retail down.

The other thing is, what is 7,500 square feet? I do not know where a number like that comes from. The only thing we can point a finger at is that since there are only two stores in the entire Eaton Centre that are that size, other than department stores, where would 7,500 square feet come from? It happens to parallel the size of a Shoppers Drug Mart. Good for them, great lobbying, but again, the Shoppers Drug Mart is not a drugstore. A small Zellers is what in fact it really is.

This is where we have a discrimination problem. We really have a problem dealing with these inequities. If you have to have a drugstore open, great. That is no problem—have a drugstore open. But 60% of Shoppers Drug Mart business has nothing to do with drugs. In fact, 20% of it has to do with selling cigarettes. I will give them full marks. They have done a good job in terms of lobbying their position as being a drugstore, but again, I do not think it serves a common pause day situation. I do not think Shoppers Drug Mart or any major chain of that nature is an essential service.

I mentioned that jobs were an issue and they certainly are an issue in our company. Because the legislation was very clear and it was voluntary labour, we asked our staff who wanted to work. Roughly 30% said they did not want to work on Sundays; 30% indicated, "Yes, sometimes it would be a good idea," and 30% said, "We'll take all the hours we can get." Therefore, we had to hire about 75% of our contingent to work on Sundays, as a general rule of thumb, in most of our plants. It varied by store a little bit, but that amounted to 2,700 people who were working on a Sunday who were not going to work at any other time because we had the staff to fulfil those hours of opening. I would suspect that was pretty well true for every retailer that did in fact open, because it was voluntary, and if my numbers are correct, I think there were 15 complaints about having to work on Sunday that were lodged over that nine-month period.

We believe that is true. We started off, as I said, 10 years ago in two provinces on the basis of voluntary labour, and it certainly was not a problem operating our stores on that basis. If in fact it has to be entrenched in law that nobody can be made to work on Sunday, that is great. We have no problem with that. There certainly are a lot of people who want to work in this province and in other jurisdictions. There is no problem there.

I think in overall terms the issue we are faced with is really and truly an economic issue. It is about jobs, it is about successful companies, it is about cross-border shopping, it is about a lot of these things and, frankly, it has nothing to do with the Lord's Day Act. It has nothing to do with what you might or might not want to do as an individual on Sunday.

If you want to go to church, go to church. Nobody is making anybody shop. We are saying if you are in the retail business, open or do not open. It is your decision to make as a storekeeper or a consumer. Consumers, obviously, have indicated that is what they want to do.

If the agenda of the government is to have a common pause day, then have a common pause day, but do not have legislation that essentially is enabling legislation for anybody to say, "Okay, here's our idea, and every merchant in Lake Scugog is going to open for three months during the summer on Sunday." I certainly hope the merchants are open on Sunday. It is a little boring up there in November.

I think this is one of the problems you face. It is just that there are smart economic decisions to make, and I do not think that has anything to do with anybody's moral character. People are coming through the locks; I think you want to have your ice cream store open; end of story.

I do not think tourism is the issue here. You know, the Beaches have been open illegally for—I do not know—how long? As long as there have been stores there, I guess. They are open every Sunday in the summertime and they are not mom-and-pop operators. Big chains, the same ones that are in the Eaton Centre, are open there every Sunday and never prosecuted.

That was always our other problem, that the legislation was so complicated that the police frankly were not too sure who could be open and who could not be open. Currently, right now, you have Price Club open across this city and I ask you, who has done anything to shut them down? These guys do $1-billion worth of business, Price Club. You probably have never been in one, but I am just saying, go there. They are wide open on Sunday and they are busy. About 65% of the business is food and the rest of it is general merchandise, and they are building more stores. They have not been charged once and they are wide open.

So we are asking at the same time, what sort of position do we have in terms of enforcement of some of these situations? The logical argument would be, "Hey, if Price Club can open, then obviously Zellers can open because it has Club Z." A bit of a dumb argument, but certainly one we would be prepared to run out in court.

I think that is the other issue here too, that we are not the only retailer that feels this way. I mean, we are out there trying to keep, in total terms, 65,000 people employed, trying to keep some shareholders happy and trying to satisfy the customers, so we have to do what we have to do to run our business effectively and stay in business. Otherwise you end up being like Massey-Ferguson and going bye-bye, poof, over the border.

I think it is a very serious issue. Although it is called "Sunday shopping," there is more to this than just whether Sunday shopping for five hours is a big deal or is not a big deal. It is a major economic issue these days. I think the cross-border shopping thing is partially due to Sunday shopping, not totally.

We have a long way to go as retailers to stay competitive. Wal-Mart, the biggest retailer in the world, is opening in Buffalo. They will do $45 billion this year in revenue. They are going to do $100 billion by 1995, and if they jump the border, they are going to be an awesome size of operation, run totally out of Arkansas. They do not employ a lot of people. They do everything right and they could be an awesome piece of competition coming into the border.

We have to be competitive, but the interesting part is that when people are going over the border, they might be buying the odd T-shirt at the outlet mall, but what they are really buying at the outlet mall is booze, gas, cigarettes and food, all of which are taxed like crazy. The reason liquor and cigarettes are such a great deal down there is the taxation issue. It costs Rothmans and Philip Morris the same to make a cigarette; the rest of it is just tax issue, and this is where we have to become competitive. We really have to become competitive, but your research is as good as mine, and right now the bulk of the people are going over the border on Saturday night and Sundays. That is when they are travelling; they are not going over on Tuesdays.

I suspect that if I were a retailer in Niagara Falls I would be very concerned that I could not compete. Windsor at least had Sunday shopping. Kingston, maybe, will go. The city has indicated it will go, but I think these are major issues that these border communities have really got to be concerned about. It is not like sitting in Toronto and saying, "Boy, wouldn't it be nice if we could all lie around in our backyards all day." This is somebody's livelihood we are talking about and I think it is a major issue. If we are going to centralize the decision-making, then I think it has to be looked at very carefully. This is not a small issue any more; this is a major, major issue. I leave you with that.

There is certainly all kinds of information in the brief that you can go to. Our position is well documented, but I think times have changed since the last committee met and I was in this room a couple of years ago; a major change in government too, and obviously minister.

Mr Daigeler: I have two questions, the first one being, how does a corporation such as yours formulate a position such as the one you are putting forward and how does it arrive at the brief that you are putting forward?

Mr Agnew: How does it arrive? Well, I can give you the genesis of it. The original brief we submitted to a government committee in Ontario was in 1987.

Mr Daigeler: Perhaps I should clarify a little bit. What we were trying to find out is, who determines the policies?

Mr Agnew: The management committee of our company.

Mr Daigeler: And that would be how many people?

Mr Agnew: Oh, about 10, 12, and it is consultation, certainly, with a lot of store managers and various people along the way. In the case of the Ontario situation, we had—

Mr Daigeler: If I may interrupt there, in the formulation of this position or perhaps even of your other positions as well, is there any involvement of the workers that you have?

Mr Agnew: Yes.

Mr Daigeler: Or of the local store managers? Is it only the 10 people you were just referring to?

Mr Agnew: No. We decide on a position and it is basically taken out to the field for input to see who likes it or does not like it, and I would suspect that every decision is the same way. Everybody does not like every decision that gets made, rightly or wrongly, but at that point, it still goes out, and we decide that we think this is in the best interests of the company.

In the case of this specific issue, we had at that point about five years of experience in British Columbia and Alberta where we had in fact been open on Sunday. This was not something that we dreamt up and thought would be nice.

Mr Daigeler: I am a bit biased on this whole thing, and I will put it bluntly to you and see how you react to this.

Mr Agnew: Go ahead.

Mr Daigeler: I think you are quite right. There has been a shift in the view of the public on this matter, and I think you in particular, because I think you have been active in this for a long time, have been successful. But I am wondering whether we are not looking here at a social movement that is driven by a relatively few North American—and I stress the words “North American,” probably “American”—business interests that are corporate.

Mr Agnew: That is an interesting question. It certainly is a North American phenomenon vis-à-vis a European phenomenon, ie, Sunday shopping, no question about that, although it is kind of interesting that the same situation is happening over there in France and in Germany and in Britain to a certain degree. The same sort of bubbling up is starting to happen, although I give Europe full marks. They have a common pause day in Germany or in Vienna or wherever the case may be and the place is shut down like a drum.

Mr Daigeler: And it starts on Friday afternoon.

Mr Agnew: I am aware of it, but at least it is a true common pause day. We do not have a problem with that. What we have a real problem with is saying it is a common pause day and everywhere I go stores are open, legally or illegally. If I was in the grocery business, if I was a grocery chain, I think I would commit suicide. What can I not buy on a Sunday? Every corner is selling everything from soup to nuts, little stores to pretty big-sized stores. That is where our wheels fall off. We are saying, have a rule. We do not care what it is, but have a rule and everybody will stick to it.

We have no problem in Manitoba; the place is shut down like a drum. We have no problem in Quebec; the place is shut down like a drum. But there was enough movement there that at least Quebec said: “Listen, we understand you retailers. Tell you what we’ll do. We’ll give you night shopping and we’ll give you four Sundays in December, when it is the critical time for your livelihood.” At least we got four Sundays when we really wanted them and basically everybody in Quebec went, “Hey, that’s great.” We went, “That’s great,” too. We would like more, but that is fine. We will accept that.

I am saying, if you have to have a compromise on the thing, you say, when do retailers make all their money? Leaving food out of it, most retailers are breaking even or losing money for nine to ten months and in two months of the year they make it or break it. If they do not have a good November and December, they have major problems. I suggest that if we are looking for a compromise, then you say, “Fine, let’s let the guys do it at Christmas.” Certainly there is precedent on it in terms of night shopping. When we did not have nights to open, that was the first thing we could open in the month of December, whatever the rules were. It varied by province. But we are saying, have a common pause day, great; then shut them down—Price Club, Shoppers Drug Mart—unless there is a need to be used.

That is our opinion. Yes, we are advocating Sunday shopping, but we will accept the hard rule. But we have a lot of trouble saying, “You guys close, but we’re going to let a couple of thousand other stores open because they happen to be at Queen’s Quay.” Give me a break. When Sunday shopping came into effect Queen’s Quay stores almost went broke, because if I have a monopoly, I am going to have a field day. Let me be the only department store to open on Bloor Street or Queen Street or in Mississauga or something.

Mr Carr: I know what you mean by that. My wife went out to get some salad one Sunday, and she could go out and buy it, the market was open, but she could not buy the dressing for it. But she could if she went to the convenience store and bought it, so I know what you mean by its being confusing.

I was interested in some of your figures on the people working; I think you said 30%, 30%, 30%. The impression has been given by some of the government members, and in fact even the Solicitor General, that one of the problems we have is that business, and in particular the big, bad, large businesses like yourself, have been forcing people to work on Sundays, and I just want to clarify. I think you said that 30% want to work, 30% said, “We’ll do it sometimes” and 30% did not, and that as a result the 2,700 workers who would not be employed otherwise were all volunteers. So these were people who were not coerced into working. These are people you hired who would have no job as a result. Is that correct?

Mr Agnew: That is totally correct.

Mr Carr: Also, one of the big concerns I have is the 7,500-square-foot rule. Not being a lawyer, I would not want to guess whether that would seem to be fair, but I suspect that will be challenged. If in fact a municipality like Halton—let’s take my area—passes a bylaw very simply and makes Halton open because it is a great tourist attraction, and then as a result of each of the individual stores having to apply individually, the council says, “No, we don’t want to fill up our agenda with the Bay coming, the large stores that are going to come through; we’re not going to go ahead taking a look at these because it would literally fill up some of the agendas,” would your company at that point most likely be taking the law to the courts to decide about that 7,500?

Mr Agnew: I think if that scenario transpired the way you wrote it, we would certainly have to actively look at it. Again, one of the other problems we have with the act itself is that some of the requirements, in terms of applications—no appeal, da dum, da dum, da dum—are really sort of scary in terms of what you can or cannot do or might or might not happen in this type of situation at the municipal level.

Mr Carr: It is my feeling that if a region is going to say it is going to open because it is a tourist area, it is going to be a lot of time and money, from both the company's standpoint and the municipality's standpoint, to then sit and listen to it. If they want to open, for whatever reason, that is fine, but what do you anticipate happening with a number of municipalities that you will be dealing with having to go back? How much time—

Mr Agnew: I think it will vary. We did a lot of cruising around when we had the other legislation, long before it was in court, talking to the municipalities and the regions about this issue, and we talked one on one with the chairman and stuff about what we could or could not do. I think if you are going to declare a region a tourist area, subdividing it from that point onward does not really make a lot of sense. I mean, either you are open for business or you are not, and all of a sudden saying, "Wait a minute. Your store is too big. You can't really get the tourist dollar. That is for Harry down the block," really does make any sense, and frankly, it is not fair.

Mr Carr: What is your particular company's situation, if it is public knowledge? Are you in a loss situation right now?

Mr Agnew: Oh, no.

Mr Carr: So you are profitable now.

One of the things that has come up, even when we debated where we were going to go, is that the government side said it is not a cross-border issue. I think you are right. The big issues are the gas taxes, the booze tax. They are the biggest things, and in fact in this last budget they were all increased by this present government. So I think there is a lack of understanding of what is creating it. What would you say to the members who have said that this is not a cross-border issue, that staying open on Sunday has nothing to do with Sunday shopping? In fact, the former Solicitor General said that as well. What do you say?

Mr Agnew: I guess everybody has an opinion, but if you look at the statistics of when people are going over the border, as I said, I think it is 16% and change who are going over on Sundays. I do not think that is accidental. Obviously people have maybe got Saturday and Sunday off, but it is interesting; it is far higher as a percentage on Sundays than it is on Saturdays or Friday nights. I think that is partially the fact that they cannot shop right now. They are not just going over, living in Niagara Falls. They are going over from Toronto, Scarborough, all over the place.

Mr Carr: Do I have more time?

The Chair: No.

Mr Carr: I should not have said anything. You probably would not have caught me. Thanks very much, and good luck.

Mr Fletcher: I just have a few things. I agree with what Gary was saying about cross-border shopping and Sunday shopping not really being tied into it. But as you were saying, there are so many people going across the border, this problem with cross-border shopping—when there was wide-open Sunday shopping for nine months, people were still going across the border. It did not seem to turn them around.

Mr Agnew: I agree, but I think you would agree with me that the issue of cross-border shopping is a phenomenon of 1991. This was not a big issue in 1990. This is a fairly recent phenomenon. It has taken off like a rocket, essentially at the start of this year. Again, I am not advocating that Sunday shopping is the total issue here.

Mr Fletcher: I know you are not.

Mr Agnew: Saving money is the issue here, but I think at the same time that Sunday shopping, or competitive shopping on any day of the week, is critical to keeping prices down. The minute you have legislation to allow somebody to open and somebody not to, the guy who is open is going to get more money for his product; end of story. If you are running a corner store, you are making more money without any competition than if every grocery store in the city is open; end of story. It is just a matter of logic. I think that is really the issue, being competitive. We have to figure out a way of getting good value to the consumer that is equal to that of the United States.

Mr Fletcher: Sunday shopping alone is not going to do this.

Mr Agnew: No, but certainly I would say it is part of it. It is a significant part of it. It allows you to compete. Now you are giving the consumer no alternative, "I can't shop at all," never mind being competitive.

1040

Mr Fletcher: As I was going through your brief, you also mentioned—I understand your concern; I am just trying to get some facts cleared up—thousands of retail workers will not have jobs if you do not open up on Sundays—just during the time, if I remember correctly, the Bay did cut some staff not long ago.

Mr Agnew: It was in the spring of this year.

Mr Fletcher: Maybe it was reorganization or something.

Mr Agnew: Call it what you want. We reorganized and we eliminated 250 people.

Mr Fletcher: And that was during the time when there was wide-open shopping.

Mr Agnew: No, that was this spring.

Mr Fletcher: Okay, let me just give you a stat. This is not your store, but this is part of the retailers. Just after June 1990, when there was opening, there were 200 jobs lost at A & P, and that was with wide-open Sunday shopping. I have a problem when people come here and tell me, "If we open up Sundays, we are going to create jobs," because it has not been proven that happens and there are not really any data to go either way. I just know that people have lost jobs.

Mr Agnew: I will give it to you, whether you want it in writing or however you want it, but what in fact we actually did: how many people we did employ, who worked, how much money they made. Whatever kind of information you specifically want, I will get that for you, to indicate we had to hire, because our policy is simply that you cannot work more than five days a week. We do not allow overtime. That is rule 1. You can only work five days a week and you can only work 37 hours a week. If you are open seven days, you have got to hire people to work the days. It is that simple. We hired 2,700 people, period, to work the five hours, and we paid them a full day's work to do it.

I do not know what the other companies did. I do not want to talk about them. I can just tell you what our three companies did.

Mr Fletcher: Okay, that is fine. Where are the 2,700 now? Are they still working?

Mr Agnew: Some who are part-time employees would be still working, yes, with fewer hours, but the bulk of them are not working. Unfortunately, they happen to be the students, women, etc.

Mr Fletcher: Just one other thing, going back to cross-border shopping again. You have stores in the western provinces. In British Columbia, with wide-open shopping, the highest percentage of people cross the border to do their shopping. Again, I know it is not just the cross-border shopping issue, but it does not seem to turn it around when people are open on Sundays.

Mr Agnew: I do not think it will turn it around. It is part of our problem. But at the same time, if you look at the BC experience—I lived there for three years in the late 1970s—what is very interesting is that people were still buying their groceries in Bellingham. That was a long time ago.

Mr Fletcher: I remember when I was younger we used to go across the border also.

Mr Agnew: You bet. It was not a booze and cigarette issue.

The Chair: Could Mr Lessard have an opportunity to ask a question as well, Mr Fletcher?

Mr Fletcher: That is fine.

Mr Lessard: You talked about the percentage of people who decided they were going to work on Sunday and the percentage of people who did not want to work on Sunday. I was wondering if you had any sense of the percentage of people who may have felt they were working on Sunday because there was some pressure that they felt. Maybe they were not forced to work, but in their own minds they perceived that if they did not work on Sundays, maybe their employment would be jeopardized. I wondered if you had any sense of anything like that.

Mr Agnew: I personally do not have any sense of it, I think because of part of the situation, as you recall, when the court struck the act. It was certainly very widely publicized about (a) Sunday shopping and (b) the fundamental laws that were in place to forbid forcing anybody to work, plus the fact that the press was a very major player in this equation in terms of roaring around and talking to staff and all this kind of stuff. It was big news back then.

From my perspective, it was not an issue, because we had a corporate policy that was very specific. It had been on the books for years in terms of not forcing people to do things they do not want to do on Sunday, period. It had started out west, because the same issues had come up out in British Columbia in 1980.

Mr Lessard: So you support that provision of the legislation to protect the worker's right to refuse to work on Sunday.

Mr Agnew: Totally. I agree. If that is a concern, then I think you write it into labour legislation. I would also ask you write it into other fields of endeavour, as opposed to just retail. That is another thing we cannot quite figure out, why the great concern about the retail worker, yet there are no provisions for any other type of worker for not having to work on Sunday.

Mr Lessard: What about a provision to pay a bonus for people who work on Sundays?

Mr Agnew: That is fine. I guess that is your prerogative. I think that most companies probably do anyway.

Mr Lessard: Did your company pay a bonus on Sundays?

Mr Agnew: Yes.

Mr Lessard: What was that?

Mr Agnew: We paid them 7 1/2 and they worked five. It worked out to roughly time and a half. We paid them for a full day.

The Chair: Thank you very much, Mr Agnew.

TIP TOP TAILORS

The Chair: Our next presenter is Gordon Edelstone, chairman of Tip Top Tailors. As you have probably observed, we will have a lot of interest in asking you questions, so of your half-hour you could leave some time for committee members. Proceed when you are ready.

Mr Edelstone: Ladies and gentlemen of the committee, as has been said, my name is Gordon Edelstone and I am the chief executive officer of Tip Top Tailors. I have worked for Dylex Ltd, our parent company, for 22 years. I am an executive vice-president of Dylex and serve on the executive committee of the entire corporation.

I am very pleased to have been asked to be present today, because I believe that the consultation process is vital for the health of industry in general and to enable an atmosphere of understanding to develop between government and industry.

If I may take a moment to explain the history of Tip Top Tailors, we are truly part of the fabric of Canadian culture. There is probably hardly a Canadian who has not heard of us. We have been established since 1909, when David Dunkelman, who was a buttonhole maker—it used to be an honourable profession at that time—decided to make clothing for a living. He was probably the first in the country to be a vertically integrated unit, having both retail stores and his own factory. The company prospered throughout the years, but eventually foundered when the next generation of Dunkelmans took over around the end of the Second World War and the company was very slow to adapt to the new retailing. Tip Top was bought by Dylex in 1967 and after that has been consistently profitable over the years. The first loss appeared in 1990, and 1991 is also going to be a year of major financial losses.

Tip Top Tailors operates 187 stores in Canada, of which 76 are located in Ontario. We do about $200 million in sales in the whole of Canada and about $65 million of this is in Ontario. In this province we employ 1,112 people, of whom 665 are male and 447 are female. The bulk of our employees are between the ages of 20 and 50, but we do have 10 employees in the province who are between the ages of 70 and 79. Any visit to our stores will clearly show that we are an equal opportunity employer, because we have consistently hired people of every colour and every ethnic background.

Problems began to surface in 1990, when business began to drop consistently with the onset of the recession. As bad as 1990 was, however, things really took a dramatic change for the worse when the GST was introduced on January 1 of this year. In fact, we have some research—I just received this recently—that shows that in the first quarter of the year, men between the ages of 35 and 44, which represents the very core of our business, purchased 38% less than they did in the first quarter of the prior year. This is the climate within which we can now discuss Sunday shopping.

It has now become a truism that customers are furious at the federal government for the introduction of the GST and that this has now extended to an anger at all governments. People are only too anxious to revolt in any way they can. When Sunday shopping was stopped in Ontario, we handed these disgruntled customers a perfect vehicle to vent their anger. What started as a trickle of Canadian customers going to the US has now become a torrent. I believe the figure is $2.2 billion being spent across the border, which, by the way, would represent $175 million worth of revenue to the province if it were kept on this side of the border.

Whole families make a practice of going to places like Buffalo every week. I do not believe that many of them go specifically for men's clothing, but when they go to the various outlet malls, like the one in Niagara Falls on Military Trail—that is on the American side, of course—there is plenty of clothing there, and once they are in a shopping mode, they can easily pick up a few bargains in shirts, trousers or sweaters.

A law banning Sunday shopping might be a noble attempt at something, but I hope that this committee will recognize that such laws cannot be passed in a vacuum. We are not Albania, capable of putting up a solid wall around the province. As long as people have the right to cross the border and also have the right to take their money across the border, they will do just that if there is a good reason for them to do it.

It has been reported by the media on numerous occasions that some products in the US are absolutely available at 30% to 50% less than they would cost in Canada even after considering paying various duties, which many people do not pay anyway.

We in the clothing industry therefore find ourselves losing all the auxiliary purchases just at a time when we need every penny we can get just to survive.

I hardly need remind the committee that the more we encourage people to shop in the US, the more the public's confidence is undermined in all Canadian retailing, even in those of us who are in an industry that stacks up very well against the Americans.

The government of Ontario has proposed several amendments to the Employment Standards Act, and we support these amendments. We at Tip Top have never forced any employee to work on Sunday and never will. Our employees usually work a maximum of 40 hours a week anyway, so the problem of time off is not one that we are particularly concerned with.

We certainly do have a problem with the whole issue of tourist exemptions, which I heard Mr Agnew talking about. It is inconceivable to me that Toronto's Eaton Centre is magically transformed into a non-tourist attraction, despite the fact that it attracts more tourists than any other single facility in Toronto. Here we have the double whammy of Canadians being induced and given the opportunity to shop on Sunday in the US, while those Americans who come to visit Toronto and visit the Eaton Centre do not have the opportunity to do any shopping here.

I would like to spend a moment talking about the whole idea of Sunday shopping. I have watched people shopping in both Canada and the US on Sunday. Approximately 10 years ago, we had an outlet store on Dufferin Street. The law was not particularly enforced at that time. We used to open on Sunday and we did an extremely successful business. I went there just to see what was happening. I used to marvel at the number of people who came to shop in that store, and believe me they did not look downtrodden. They did not look like they were forced to come. Whole families used to come out together and they would laugh and joke while the suits were being tried on, and we smiled while they were spending the money. These were people who genuinely found it a great convenience to shop on Sunday. These are the very people we are driving away today.

On a personal note, I can tell you that I have three daughters, two of whom are married. The two married ones have full-time, difficult jobs. They truly resent not being able to do their shopping on Sunday, and anyone who tries to tell them they are better off now simply does not understand the reality of modern-day middle and working class life.

Another fact is that shopping today is entertainment for the masses. The malls are safe and they are comfortable. They can also be as cheap as you want them to be. Throngs of people go into malls to buy things they need anyway, and nobody forces them to buy anything else. They love to do it because it is cheaper than taking a whole family to the ball game. Going to a mall you can just buy an ice cream cone for the kids, and in some malls there is even entertainment in the form of rides. Those people who would have you believe that shopping on Sunday is a terrible thing have probably never gone to see the faces of the people who are actually in the malls. They are not suffering.

Now I would like to take a moment to discuss the impact of a company like Tip Top losing money. The first thing that happens is that we stop all capital expenditures because the preservation of cash is paramount at a time like this. We must keep our money in order to survive, because if we spend it and we cannot pay our bills, we will be out of business and then there will be no jobs for anybody.

The first thing that goes by the boards at a time like this is that we stop all renovations on our stores. Obviously we cannot do it for ever, but we can certainly do it for two or three years. Technically, since we say that a store's life is about 10 years, or the fixturing is 10 years, we should be renovating 10% a year in order to maintain the health of our stores. That would be between six and eight stores every year should be renovated in Ontario at a cost of roughly $100 a foot or $350,000 per store. That would be something between $2 million and $2.5 million that we should be spending on renovations that we are not spending now.

I am not sure exactly what proportion of these renovations stay in Ontario, but I think it is safe to say that the bulk of it, almost certainly over 90%, does come from Ontario since the labour is definitely Ontario labour and most of the materials are also local.

We are also not opening any new stores, which would cost the same as renovating an old store except that when we do not open a new store, we do not buy the extra merchandise that would be required for a new store, and obviously we create less employment because we do not need it.

It has been said that some members of the current Ontario government view businessmen as the enemy and do not care whether we lose money or not, that maybe it is a punishment to be down 10%. Let me point out the real danger that I see coming in this province if Canadian retailers become weak. It is clearly an open invitation for an invasion by US retailers. It is no secret that a US retailer trying to enter Canada today will be able to get lower rents from the mall owners than those paid by current tenants. We signed our leases three, four, five and six years ago when business was booming and the malls were completely filled. They had a very strong hand that they were dealing with.

Malls today either have vacancies, and many have 20% vacancies, or they have stores that are occupied but are not paying rent. They are simply allowing them to get away with it because they do not want to have those empty stores facing the public. These mall owners will give drastically lower rents. In fact it is very easy for a US retailer today, or even a Canadian retailer if he were so inclined, to get mall owners to pay all or a major portion of the renovation of the stores. They will not only give drastically lower rents, but they will give other inducements as well to a well-financed retailer.

Something else is not particularly well understood, that most American retailers have already covered the cost of distribution from the two coasts to the points along our border. The incremental cost of distributing to Canada is certainly far less than it costs us to distribute over a 4,500-mile string of land. An American only has to get the merchandise 100 miles farther north from his American warehouse, and he can easily be highly efficient in this distribution.

The same principle applies to the supervision of their stores. They have supervisors in the northern part of the US who can easily cross the border and come and supervise the stores here and return back to the United States in a short period of time, frequently or easily in the same day.

It should also be recognized that it would be very easy for Americans to severely reduce their income tax liability in Canada by charging their Canadian divisions for these various services at higher rates than they actually cost, thereby transferring the profits to the US where they are taxed at a lower rate than in Canada. It is my understanding that the federal government is aware of this threat and that it is expecting a major shake-out of Canadian retailers over the next five years.

At Tip Top Tailors we have a factory that produces virtually all of our suits and sport coats. The factory is located in Ontario on Weston Road right here in Toronto. We had attempted during a previous number of years to manufacture some merchandise in the Dominican Republic under a partnership arrangement, but we concluded that the quality was not to our liking and we are now attempting to manufacture everything ourselves. We are highly efficient and we have approximately 800 employees, all of whom are members of the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union.

If business should slide and we have to cut production by a mere 100 suits a day, which is 16% of the production, our fixed costs due to overhead will go up by between $1 and $2 a unit. As costs go up, Montreal manufacturing and overseas products become more attractive. As more merchandise goes to Montreal, our costs go up again, and I believe that if our production drops by 30% from current levels, our factories' continuance is in jeopardy.

What I have been talking about today is not a nice, friendly, philosophical debate. The livelihoods of hundreds of people are at stake in our company alone, and we are the pre-eminent company in our field. If we are concerned, you can bet your bottom dollar everyone else is even more concerned. I submit that Sunday shopping, while not being the total answer—I make no claim that everything is going to be solved by having Sunday shopping—is certainly part of the picture in helping us maintain our profitability. I must emphasize again that our profitability is the only way to guarantee the livelihoods of the people who work for us.

If there are any questions, I will be happy to address them to the best of my ability.

1100

Mr Daigeler: In the handout we received you refer to the fact that, on average, 13% of sales in Tip Top stores that were open on Sundays occurred on Sundays, and then you are saying that in suburban locations this figure reaches 19%.

Mr Edystone: Yes.

Mr Daigeler: Are these statistics, in your experience, across the province or is it basically the result in this area?

Mr Edystone: No, that would be across the province. I have to say that the whole issue of what closing on Sunday has meant to us is very difficult to measure because we closed at a time when the recession was bearing in on us. As to how much of the drop in business is because money is going across the border and how much of it is because business turned rotten anyway, there are many factors to that.

Mr Daigeler: In this case I am referring to when you were open. You are saying that you did about 13% of your business of the week on Sundays when they were open.

Mr Edelstone: Yes.

Mr Daigeler: That, you say, was a uniform picture across the province, whether that was Ottawa or wherever you have your stores.

Mr Edelstone: I do not have it broken down, but the differences were really between the suburban and the urban areas, higher in the suburban areas obviously. It is very convenient for families to be able to get to the stores. But yes, these figures were developed by our statistical planning department, so they are accurate.

Mr Daigeler: I am from the Ottawa area and generally the experience there with the Sunday openings was that none of them was too happy. Nobody seemed to be making too much money. If it had lasted, probably they would have closed on their own.

Mr Edelstone: I do not know that I would agree with that. I think what happened was that we gave it a very short experiment. For the first number of months that we were open, a lot of people were not even aware we were open. We are in the business. It is the core of our existence. We understand everything we are doing. There are a lot of people out there who do not care very much about whether we are open or closed and it takes them a while until they recognize that we are open on Sunday.

Certainly, when Sunday is available to them, my belief is that if we had been open for a year or two, Sunday would have become, as it is in the United States, the most productive day of the week. It is only five hours but the most productive per hour. By the way, that is one of the reasons we have never had any difficulty getting people to work on Sunday. Those who have religious convictions were always able to opt out. We never leaned on anybody for that. But many people did like to work on Sunday because it was very productive. A certain amount of their pay comes from commissions and they made money on Sunday. They were very happy to do it.

Essentially, my position is that Sunday is a time when people want to shop. There have been plenty of surveys that show people want to shop. It is convenient for them. My personal experience indicates that Sunday shopping is a very convenient time, not so much for older people like myself, but for younger people with families. They are frantic when they cannot. Fortunately, we have a few ethnic stores in the areas where my daughters are that they are able to go and buy their food and some other products on Sundays, but otherwise they would be desperate.

They come home at 7 o'clock at night on Thursday. They are tired. Yes, the stores are open. They do not feel like going to shop on Thursday night. They are tired and sometimes they have to work until 8 o'clock because they have stressful jobs. Sunday is a perfect time for them and they never felt they were downtrodden because they were shopping on Sunday. It was a perfect time for them to take the kids and the husband. The husband maybe walked around with the children. They went and bought some groceries and a few other things and they thought it was wonderful. That is my personal experience.

I have been involved with 10 stores in Chicago for a number of years and Sunday is exactly the same in Chicago as it is here. People are happy to shop on Sunday. It is a very convenient time for them. The only difference is that we have had more of a tradition in the United States of shopping on Sunday and people are used to it, so it becomes much more important to them.

Mr Daigeler: In the States, are those stores open during the week in the evenings?

Mr Edelstone: Yes, they are.

Mr Daigeler: Until?

Mr Edelstone: Until 9 o'clock. It depends on the mall, 9, 9:30. Usually, I would say 9:30 is the norm.

Mr Carr: Thank you for taking the time to come in and make the presentation out of your busy schedule. I was taken by three things you said. You said the livelihood of hundreds is at stake; that you have no trouble, that people like to work; and that people want to shop on Sundays. They are three statements by the chairman of one of the major retailers, yet the government members seem to be saying they know better than you and in fact, even though you have been in the business a long time, deal with it 24 hours a day, they know best, they know what the people want. What would you say to a government that says in spite of your statements—because it obviously does not believe them if it proceeds with this legislation—says it knows more about the industry than you do?

Mr Edelstone: We have a saying in our business that there are good questions and there are excellent questions. An excellent question is one for which you have the answer on the tip of your tongue. I think the public has clearly spoken, that they like Sunday shopping. I would be very happy as a retailer, believe me, if we could go back to shopping from 9 o'clock in the morning on Monday until 6 o'clock at night and be closed on Wednesday afternoon the way they were when I first started in the industry. When I first got out of university I used to travel out here and the stores were always closed on Wednesday afternoon. Some stores did not even open on Saturday. That would be okay with me.

The fact is that the type of life people are leading today—they need more hours to shop, absolutely. To try to legislate them back to the old ways, even in a partial way, I think is hurting us. As I said before, you might be able to get away with it if you could put a wall around the province, but you cannot, so people are simply saying: "I'm mad at all governments anyway. I need the products. I have the time today. It's convenient for me to shop, therefore I am going to."

It is not particularly pleasant to drive down to Buffalo. I do not know if you have done it, but I used to go once a month when I had some business dealings down there and it is a pain in the neck. But they do it every week.

Mr Carr: Yes, the only good part is that most people from Toronto drive by Oakville so they get to see Oakville on the way through.

Mr Edelstone: Yes, that is a very pretty part.

Mr Poirier: And where are you from, Gary?

Mr Carr: That is one good thing. One of the big concerns the government has, and I think it is a legitimate and a fair one, is about the workers who have to work on Sunday. We have heard from numerous employers who have come through here and said, "It is not in our interest to have employees out on the floor if they are not happy." The government wants to protect them. We have heard most businesses say, "That's fine, let's even work to protect them." In fact, one of the previous speakers said we should do it for other industries as well if we are going to do it for retail workers. What would you say to a government that says, "We have to close because we have to protect the workers?" How are you protecting your workers if you are going to remain open on Sunday? Can it be done and how would you do it?

Mr Edelstone: If we were going to open on Sunday and 80% of the people refused to work, we would have a big problem. It simply does not stack up with the facts. The facts are that there are loads of people out there who are ready to work on Sunday. If they are skiers or golfers, they take a Wednesday off. They can do a lot better with their personal time then. It just is not a problem. For those who are religious it is no problem, they can go to church on Sunday morning. The stores do not open until noon anyway, so I do not see the problem. I hear everything the government has said and I just have to say I do not agree with it.

Mr Mills: Thank you, sir, for being here today and talking to us. I wanted to just let you know that I would do my share to keep you in business. You know what that card is.

Mr Edelstone: Mr Mills, I thank you, my wife thanks you, my children thank you and my grandchildren thank you. Thank you very much. Did you shop recently?

Mr Mills: No, but having said that, I have a peculiar interest in the store in my riding. I go in there and I get to chat with the people. "How are things doing?" and they say, "It's terrible." I say, "Well, what's the problem?" They say, "People haven't got any money." I find it difficult to equate with you that Sunday shopping is going to resolve the problems of the industry when I think that the problems of the industry are the recession and the effects of the GST, because your own people tell me when I go in there to keep them going that no one has any money. Personally I do not quite see the equation between Sunday shopping if people have not got it on Friday.

Having said that, I suppose what worries me, and I applaud you and your company, is that you say you support the amendments to the Employment Standards Act; that you will not force anybody to work who does not want to; that you have a whole group of people who would willingly work on Sunday. My problem, and I would just like to get your comments on that, is that if we have universal open shopping on Sundays, will it not be expected of employers to demand that people work on Sunday? In other words, right now we have so many people who want to work on Sunday, but if it was the norm in all retail, food stores and everything, it would be expected of people to work on Sunday. It is then their right to say, "Well, I don't want to work on Sunday." Would they be able to carry on their life or do you not think that some coercion—cohesion—would be put on people that if this—

Mr Sorbara: It is coercion.

Mr Mills: Coercion. I am very sorry, I am not too up on different things.

Mr Poirier: Is English your second language?

Mr Mills: I have a funny accent but you know where I am coming from, that I am frightened that if we did not have this legislation the niceness you have dealing with employees would be really gone and it would be a case of either work or else you are down the road. How do you feel about that?

Mr Edelstone: It is an interesting question, but the fact is that in the west, in Alberta and British Columbia where it has been at least three or four years, it has not been a problem and our experience in the United States is that it is not a problem. There are always enough people floating around ready to work. I have never had anybody come up to me—and I understand this principle that maybe there is some gentle suasion that they will not be well thought of, that they will not be able to make any progress if they do not co-operate with us. But I think I have a way with our people. Maybe some of them will be cautious, but many of them certainly open up to me and I have never had people come and say, "This is a rotten deal and I don't like it and I don't want to do it," because even those people who work on Sunday generally work every third Sunday. It is not as if they have to work every Sunday. There is enough floating population that they work one and take off two and frequently, certainly around Christmas time, they are clamouring to work every Sunday because it is a very profitable time for them.

I would like to correct an impression you apparently have. I will not state that Sunday shopping is going to be the correction for the ills. There are many things that are wrong and difficult in the industry today. There is a recession on, there is a GST and there is another thing too: my belief is that there has been a fundamental change in people's attitudes towards material things and I think the industry is in for a shake-out regardless. All I am saying is that all these things are happening. It is weakening retailers, and just at a time when we are weak and we need assistance—and I do not mean weak in that we are making less money than we would like. We are actually losing several million dollars a year and if that keeps up for too long we will not be around. We need every bit of assistance we can get, and every dollar that leaves this province and leaves our stores to be spent in the United States would help us survive and we need that money right now.

Mr Mills: I just want to reinforce that we are here to listen and I am listening and will take note of all you say. Thank you very much for your presentation here.

Mr Edelstone: Thank you very much for hearing me out, and please spend money on that card whenever you can.

Mr Carr: The suit I am wearing is from Tip Top.

Mr Edelstone: This is a winner today.

Mr Carr: I want you to know that when I asked the kids on the front steps who came to visit me for questions, I thought they would ask about health care or education. The first kid put up his hand and said "You've got a nice suit."

Mr Edelstone: That is the best news I have had all week. If I had known I had two customers here I would have brought along a couple of swatches.

ONTARIO CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

The Acting Chair (Mr Cooper): Could we have our next presenter now from the Ontario Chamber of Commerce? We will allow you half an hour. You can divide that any way you want. You can make it a half-hour presentation or a short presentation and open it up for questions and comments. If you would please identify yourself.

Mr Carnegie: My name is Jim Carnegie. I am the executive director of the Ontario Chamber of Commerce and as such am serving today as the spokesman for our 168 community organizations representing over 65,000 businesses spread throughout Ontario. It is interesting to note on that comment that over 78% of our members are what would be qualified as small businesses with a heavy emphasis particularly in the retail trade. Our membership encompasses both small entrepreneurs, multinational corporations and retailers in communities throughout Ontario.

When Bill 115 and its companion regulations were introduced on June 4th of 1991, the Ontario Chamber of Commerce and its constituent community organizations were surprised and somewhat dismayed to read that our organizations had been given responsibility of dealing with an application for exemption under subsection 4(3) of the act. Paragraph 3(1)4 of the regulations made under the Retail Business Holidays Act, tourism criteria, reads as follows:

"If there is a chamber of commerce, a convention and visitors bureau, or a similar organization serving the area being considered, a letter indicating that the organization, or if there is more than one of them, one of those organizations, supports the opening of the retail business establishments in that area on a holiday."

The first note I would add is that in many of the communities throughout Ontario the responsibility for a visitors and convention bureau, while it may be run as a separate entity, is in fact a branch of the chamber of commerce, so we get hit by both sides of that. The other question, of course, is a definition of a "similar organization," and to the best of our knowledge there is no similar organization to the chamber of commerce. We are the only association of our kind in the province which represents the spectrum of business interests rather than the vertical interest groups that are the norm. As a consequence it would appear that particular section relates almost directly and exclusively to our organizations.

I might add that to have that type of information dropped on you from the blue, without any consultation either at the community level or the provincial level, without any suggestion that a rather dramatic change in norm was going to be undertaken, was not taken with great glee.

A survey of our community chambers of commerce and boards of trade indicated there was strong opposition to this regulation from our members. Strong opposition is a very kind and polite way of phrasing it—it actually ran all the way from dismay to shock. The Ontario Chamber of Commerce and its constituent organizations are not now, nor have we any interest in becoming, a quasi-regulatory body either for the government of Ontario or for any municipality, and we certainly have no desire to be perceived as such.

As an aside, Mr Chairman, I would point out that if the government of Ontario would like us to become a regulatory body for business, we would be delighted to accept the responsibility, assuming of course you give us the power to licence businesses so I do not lose all my members in the interim. We are not prepared to accept that particular role nor are we prepared to accept the legal implications that could flow from making these kinds of decisions or, even worse, the legal implications which could flow equally as readily by not participating in the fine line of the act and saying, "No, we won't comment, because we're likely to be subject to exactly the same litigation."

On behalf of our member chambers and boards, we strongly oppose the delegation of authority and ask that chambers of commerce be deleted from paragraph 3(1)4 of the tourism criteria regulation. In doing so, I emphasize again that a number of our visitor and convention bureaus are operated by chambers of commerce and boards of trade and suggest that in the main they probably are no more anxious than we to be subject to this particular section of the act.

In reference to holiday shopping, over a period of time our members' attitudes to the opening of retail establishments on Sundays and holidays has changed, and I think relatively dramatically. Our members adopted the following position in 1988:

1. That the Ontario government recognize the problem of individual municipalities' control over retail business holidays by maintaining uniform provincial legislation.

2. That the Ontario government reinforce Sunday as a common day of rest under the Retail Business Holidays Act and provide guidelines for municipalities for essential service exemptions, including tourism.

3. That the Ontario government be consistent in its legislation on whether or not Sunday is a holiday in both the Retail Business Holidays Act and the Employment Standards Act.

When that position was adopted in 1988, our sense of membership sentiment was that it was virtually evenly divided on the question of whether retail stores should be permitted to open on Sundays and holidays. Our members supported uniform, centralized regulations as they feared the domino effect that could occur if this matter was governed municipally. I think that was a very fair assessment at that time. In fact, many of our organizations were faced with an almost 50-50 dramatic split in their membership support between, for example, groups of downtown merchants and small merchants.

Following the province's flirtation with Sunday shopping, however, we sense a remarkable change in our members' views. While we have not conducted a recent in-depth survey, we believe that our members are still divided on whether they wish to open their businesses on Sunday. We note, however, that there is a distinct change in the attitude as to whether businesses should open on Sundays or holidays. That is to say that our members are now less concerned as to whether someone else opens on Sunday and seem to be coming to the conclusion that it should be up to the individual operator and not a matter of legislation. In support of this conclusion, we offer the following examples.

In April of this year, the Sarnia-Lambton Chamber of Commerce surveyed its members, not to determine if retailers should or should not be open on Sundays but rather to determine what the impacts might be and to see if there was a consensus that could be developed. Based on the results of their survey, the Sarnia-Lambton chamber concluded the following: (a) the loss of the Sunday option for retailers will have a significant impact on the local economy; (b) the majority of the surveyed retailers would prefer not to be open on Sundays; (c) an equal majority of retailers would insist that they should have the right to open on Sunday as opposed to having their hours legislated; and (d) the results would appear not to deviate should the decision be made to have this area come under a tourism designation.

In the next example, in May of this year the Thunder Bay Chamber of Commerce surveyed its membership on the question of Sunday shopping with the following results: 68% of its members indicated they were in favour of Sunday shopping and 65% said the marketplace should make the decision, not municipal or local governments. In a survey of 342 respondents at the Thunder Bay chamber's trade show, 70% indicated they were in favour of Sunday shopping and 85% believed the marketplace should make the decision.

The board of directors of the Kingston Chamber of Commerce adopted the following motion in June of this year, "That the Kingston Chamber of Commerce believes that retailers in greater Kingston should have the choice to open for business on Sunday." Some of the reasons cited for this motion were as follows: to service the tourist market that expects to be able to shop on Sunday; to be competitive with retail operations in the United States; to eliminate discrimination that currently exists against some categories of merchandisers, namely, fashion, jewellery, footwear and large groceries; to reduce government interference in business; to create new jobs; to provide freedom of choice—for consumers freedom to shop or not to shop, for retailers freedom to open or close, for workers freedom to work or not to work, for Christians the freedom to worship or not to worship, and for citizens the freedom to organize a family time or to spend time alone; and to allow these choices uniformly across the four municipalities that make up greater Kingston.

To us, these comments from such diverse communities across Ontario indicate a strong support for freedom of choice relative to retail business holiday openings.

Our members also believe that employees are appropriately protected in current legislation in that they are permitted to refuse Sunday work that they consider to be unreasonable and to refuse work that is in contravention of subsection 2(2) of the Retail Business Holidays Act. That is the work on holidays. We do not believe the proposed amendments are necessary or appropriate under those circumstances.

That completes my formal submission. There are a few comments I would like to add.

Again, in discussion with our members there is a growing feeling and a growing recognition of the fact that, ultimately, the marketplace is likely to be the largest determinant as to whether or not it is appropriate for a business to be open on Sunday.

I am sure you have listened, and we have certainly listened, to all kinds of business persons over the last few years. They are all concerned about the bottom line, they are all concerned about the recession, they are all concerned about their ability to survive under the economic conditions of today. The fact is that no business can operate for ever against the marketplace. If you cannot find the employees, Mr Mills, whom you are concerned about, you will not open, because you will not have them if those employees are, as we believe them to be, adequately protected by law. If the demand for your product, services or goods is insufficient, again, you will not be able to afford to be open on those days.

In fact, the growing sentiment among business at this point appears to be that this should be a matter of individual choice and it should be a matter that the marketplace determines to a very large extent.

1130

I thank you for the opportunity to appear before the committee. We would be delighted to try and answer any questions there may be in the time remaining.

The Chair: We have about five minutes for each caucus.

Mr Sorbara: Jim, you are suggesting that among the members and the individual surveys they have done there has been a dramatic shift in ground on this issue. Is that your own personal experience as you talk to other chambers around the province in your capacity as executive director?

Mr Carnegie: There is no question about it. As I say, the formal policy of the chamber was established in 1988. At that time, as you may recall, there was a lot of debate on this whole issue and the predecessor legislation. The general attitude at that time was that there was an almost perfect split, exacerbated particularly in those communities where you had a strong downtown business core and it was in direct competition with a newly emerging mall situation, usually in the suburbs. There was a lot of very high emotion at that time and battle lines were drawn pretty strictly.

In the interim, in most cases those malls have now gone into business and they are becoming a little more assimilated. A lot of the emotion has cooled down. Certainly, the individual reaction we are getting, both by survey and by comment—and, I might add, by phone calls and correspondence to my office—indicates that the attitude at this point is, “I would prefer that this be an option I can take.”

Mr Sorbara: I want to ask you about paragraph 3(1)4 of the draft regulations. That is the section that puts the chamber right in the middle of the decision as to who is and who is not going to open, because as I read this section as a lawyer, an application for an exemption cannot prevail unless there is a letter from the chamber or a similar organization. When we contacted your office basically to inquire about why the chamber would want to undertake this activity, you told us—and I am telling my colleagues on the committee—that no one had ever contacted you before this was drafted and no one had ever contacted you since.

Can you tell me and the members of the committee what this sort of responsibility might do to a local chamber of commerce if somehow you were forced to play this role?

Mr Carnegie: There is absolutely no question in my mind whatever that the potential effect of that particular section could result very readily in the bankruptcy or the complete demise of any number of my community organizations.

Mr Sorbara: Why is that?

Mr Carnegie: There are a number of reasons. First and foremost, as I had mentioned to you, there is still some divided opinion. We are a voluntarily funded organization. We are funded by fee membership. One of the quickest ways to lose your member and his consequent fee is to do something he does not like. That goes to both sides, that is, either giving somebody in your competition the right to do business when you do not want him to or, conversely, refusing that right to do business when he wants to. In either case, those sides are going to immediately withdraw their support of the chamber.

The other aspect which concerns us even more is the potential liability that might be faced. If I were a representative of a major corporation and it was my wish to open on Sunday and make application under this act and the chamber did not provide the letter of approval, I am quite sure I could turn my corporate lawyers loose and we could probably come up with a dozen different charges. I may or may not have an opportunity of winning in court, but it would have to be defended and, frankly, the budgets of chambers of commerce are simply not in the position to be faced with that type of expense. I would not even want to contemplate the result should a frivolous action of that nature result in a win for the complainant. This would be just the end of chambers of commerce.

There is no earthly way that the government of Ontario or any other governmental body can abrogate the responsibility of regulation to a voluntary, fee-supported organization, not without guaranteeing that source of fees. This is an absolutely impossible situation.

I must say we were also somewhat shocked and surprised—as flattering as it is for the chambers to recognize—to find that the government has said obviously we are the grass roots of the communities in Ontario by putting us in the act, but it is absolutely impossible for any governmental organization to put a regulatory authority on a voluntary organization. It simply cannot result in anything but disaster for us.

Mr Carr: Thank you very much for taking the time to do the presentation. I say to my friend Gordon Mills, who sits there listening, you are hearing from the chambers saying they do not want to do this. If nothing else happens, hopefully that will be taken back and very strongly conveyed. They were not consulted. They do not want to do it, and quite frankly I do not think this should be so. I am keeping track, Gordon, of the number of times you said, “We’re listening,” and I am up to half a dozen now.

I underline that an organization that does not want to do it should not have to do it and, quite frankly, should have been consulted before it was put in there. I will underline that. I think we have engrained that. I suspect we will get a lot of support for any amendment that members of this committee will put in to strike that out for your chambers. One good thing is that it is certainly impressed upon me and I was very shocked at reading that on page 2.

Having said that, one of the questions I have relates to the tourism exemption. Under the guidelines as they are laid out now, do you foresee over the next little while our having complete open Sunday shopping? Do you see it being a patchwork, with some open and some closed? What is your best guess?

Mr Carnegie: My best guesstimate at the moment is that we are going to be into a patchwork situation under this legislation and under anything in the immediate future. I believe firmly, and I think the bulk of my members believe firmly, that on this specific issue ultimately there will be no option but an open option. It was not that long ago that you could not have a ball game, could not go to a movie and could not do anything else on Sunday. Those views are considered archaic today. The fact is—I know you had testimony previously—that with the lifestyle today, particularly in Ontario in the face of competition along our borders, everything you look at in that direction tends to suggest that ultimately it is really going to have to be the marketplace that decides. But that is down the pipe.

Mr Carr: You have just underlined in the testimony that this is what your members like, that they are in favour of the market. Even those who may be opposed to it are looking at the numbers. They are saying they might still stay closed.

Say the local shop owner in some town does not have a big staff—it may be a family business—and does not want to work. Would you see, if the municipality opened up, the competitive pressures being there to open up?

It seems to me that by some of them saying they do not want to work on Sunday but that they favour that option, indeed some of them might stay closed and a particular individual who is running the store himself may say, “I want Sundays off.” Do you see that happening or do you see, because of the competitive pressures which are tremendous out there right now, them saying, “I don’t want to work but because my competitor down the street is open I am going to have to open”? What is your best guess of what your members will do?

Mr Carnegie: I think there is no question that there is certainly going to be some initial competitive pressure. Ultimately, there are going to be two deciding factors. One is whether or not it is an economically sound decision, whether they can in fact make a profit out of being open on Sunday. The other one is the particular will of that owner. In many of our communities in Ontario right now—I happen to know one where I happen to have a summer residence—it is the practice currently and has been traditionally of a number of the merchants that they still close Wednesday afternoon. That happens to be a time they want to close. That is an independent retailer's opinion and decision. He does it and he does it at his own risk of business.

Those decisions are going to be made as a combination of two things: the practicality of it and the will of the operator. There is no question whatever that in the initial stages, yes, there will be some competitive pressure or even a pressure that says: "I wonder what happens if I do. Does it work?" That is the divergence of opinion.

Mr Carr: There has been a lot of talk about protecting the workers and a lot of the groups have come through and said they can find a lot of workers. What about some of the smaller merchants? Do you think they will be able to find workers who are willing to work on Sunday?

Mr Carnegie: Absolutely. There is an infinite pool of potential workers, and I emphasize "potential." There are many cases in fact, and I can go by personal experience, where one party in a marriage has a full-time responsibility looking after the family, etc, becomes very confined, would like to get out and mix with the public and would also like to earn some pin-money, and would be absolutely delighted. This is where a lot of Thursday help and Saturday help is coming from, and certainly in those places where the stores are open, where a lot of Sunday help is coming from. That is a pool that cannot be tapped or is not tapped generally during the regular work week, so I do not believe there is likely to be a dearth of people available to work, assuming the option is there to have the job.

Mr Fletcher: Just a couple of things: I agree with you that people are changing their attitudes towards Sunday shopping, but the one thing that is remaining constant is that if you turn that question around, "Would you like to work on Sunday?" the figures are constant also; about 70% are saying no. That is one of the reasons the employee protection part of this is in there.

I notice in your brief you were saying that you believe the employees are appropriately protected in the current legislation, which is Bill 114, if I am correct. Let me just read to you what former Liberal MPP Rick Ferraro, who was from Guelph, said in March 1988 when Bill 114 was going through: "You have to work when the business is there. Employees are jeopardizing their jobs by refusing to work. An employer will eventually find someone who is willing to work on Sundays."

That is talking about the Liberal legislation that was introduced and a Liberal person is saying that, that there was no protection.

Mr Carnegie: That would not be the first time I have disagreed with a Liberal.

Mr Fletcher: It would not be the first time I have either. What we are saying is that the protection was not there. That is one of the reasons there is protection, and also because there are about 70% of people who do not want to work on a Sunday. As far as that piece of legislation is concerned, that is why the employment stand had to be reinforced. We have heard from a lot of retailers and a lot of other people that they do not mind that part of the legislation. It seems like the retail industry is still a little split on whether it wishes to open on a Sunday, even from your brief.

Mr Carnegie: There is no question that there is still a great split on that. Again, if you are dealing with human beings, you are going to have varying degrees of moral suasion. The legislation, clearly written, provides that you cannot have job loss as a result of refusal to work on Sunday. The protections do appear to be adequate. I will never guarantee that under the law there will ever be perfection. There will not be, because human beings are involved. But for the vast bulk, as long as the legislation has been designed to do the best it can to protect those who do not wish to do so, I do believe there is a sufficient pool of those who would like to—in fact are quite anxious to—take that opportunity. It is not quite the same black-and-white, cut-and-dried situation because you do not have to apply the moral suasion if in fact there is a legal and adequate solution to it.

It is awfully easy to take it to the very letter. The facts are that it is a fairly flexible workforce that we have in this province. We have certainly proven it in the past.

Mr Mills: I have one or two things I want to touch on, time allowing, and I am going to talk fast. Your written brief, I feel, is somewhat misleading. You say you were given the responsibility, and I do not think that in fact you were given the responsibility, to deal with an application. I think it is fair to say that you are known as a potential type of organization to give some support to an application. I know you were not specifically asked to play a role in this legislation, but I do believe that through Tourism, the broad base was touched with the chamber.

Mr Carnegie: Not according to the survey of our members.

Mr Sorbara: On a point of order, Mr Chairman: To accuse another member of Parliament, in Parliament or on this committee, of being misleading is unparliamentary. I think that equally applies where a member accuses a witness before our committee of misleading the committee. I object to that. His language is unparliamentary and inappropriate in this committee.

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, your point is well taken. I am sure Mr Mills would like to rephrase his question. It is not an issue of parliamentary privilege.

Mr Sorbara: It is a point of order under the standing orders, sir.

The Chair: However, it is an issue of hospitality which, as the Chair, I would like to ensure occurs. Perhaps you would reword your question.

Mr Mills: I have no intentions at all. It is just a phrase I used, that you said, sir, you were given the responsibility, and I do not think that is really what was meant.

Mr Carnegie: If the time were different, Mr Mills, perhaps we could debate that at length. I do not think there is any question that the legislation, as it is written, puts a requirement upon us that could in fact put us in a quasi-regulatory authority.

Mr Mills: I would just like to ask the role of the chamber. I spent several years on the council of the city of Barrie and it seemed to me that every night we had a council meeting and—you probably know the gentleman—Bob Hollywood was always sitting there. It was customary for the mayor, if something came up, to say, “I wonder what the chamber thinks.” Then he would say to Bob, “Bob, would you like to come forward and give your views on this?” So he would come up.

I remember one instance where a bank wanted to put a car in front of its premises on two meters for a month to advertise that it was giving it away. When we dealt with this at council, the mayor said, “Bob, what do you think about this?” He came up and said whatever; I forget now. I think in honesty that when the government formed this legislation it really saw the role of the chamber as I am trying to explain to you, “What do you think?”

I would ask you, Mr Carnegie, what sort of role you see the chamber playing in this tourism criterion or this legislation? Do you see that you are not having anything to do with it, or do you want a say on what happens?

Mr Carnegie: The role of a chamber of commerce is to represent the viewpoint of business. We will be happy to play that role and we will be very happy to participate in any way that is appropriate. It is not our role to be part of a regulatory process. If an application is not accompanied by this letter of authorization, we can only assume the application is incomplete and will not be dealt with. We are very happy to voice our opinions, and, as you pointed out so aptly, we do so.

We are extremely flattered that the government has recognized the role the chamber plays at the grass-roots level, but there is a quantum leap between being recognized as a voice of a community or a collective voice of business and playing a role at a community level, and taking a role as an unwanted regulator.

Mr Mills: I can see that.

CANADIAN TIRE DEALERS' ASSOCIATION

The Chair: Our next presenter is George Hayhurst, who is the president of the George Hayhurst Canadian Tire franchise. Are you speaking on behalf of Canadian Tire, the corporation?

Mr Hayhurst: The Canadian Tire Dealers' Association—the dealers, not the corporation.

The Chair: Please have a seat. Mr Hayhurst does not have a written submission, but I am sure has some points he would like to make. Then we will have the opportunity to pose questions in the remaining part of the half-hour. Please proceed when you are comfortable.

Mr Hayhurst: I look forward to voicing the opinions of the Canadian Tire Dealers' Association of Ontario. Surprisingly enough, I am here to speak against Sunday shopping as a member of one of Canada's and Ontario's largest retailers, Canadian Tire. I am the owner of one of Canadian Tire's 190 franchise stores in Ontario. While I cannot say that I unequivocally speak for 100% of them on every single issue, I have been their appointed spokesman on this issue for the past three years.

Before I begin with exactly why I am against Sunday shopping, let me say that the most important aspect of any law, and of this particular law, is fairness. Most retailers who want to be open on Sunday do so because they are worried they will lose market share to someone else, who by some quirk of the law is allowed to stay open or who openly defies the law and opens anyway and feels he will not be punished. So far most of them have not been.

This law that will be enacted by the government must make certain that Sunday closing means just that, and that those who violate the law are punished severely enough to make them stay closed. This includes drugstores, nurseries, furniture stores, sporting goods stores; whatever it might be, they all must be closed.

As a businessman, my major objective is to run my business as profitably as I can. While I am against Sunday shopping for many other reasons that can be argued up and down and all over the map, I am mostly against it because it is not profitable for my store to be open on Sunday.

How do I know this? I was open on Sundays from September 1990 until March 1991. While we certainly sold merchandise on Sunday, it was totally at the expense of Saturday sales, with a little bit of Monday sales too. In other words, in almost all of those seven months, sales on Saturday, Sunday and Monday were less than the previous year's Saturday and Sunday total. This was in spite of the fact that almost every Saturday during that period of time, we ran extra-special specials to try to entice our customers into our stores on Saturday so that we would not lose the Saturday business. But it did not seem to matter.

Worse yet was my cost to open on Sundays, because now people had to be brought in to service our customers, people you just could not totally cut from Saturday and Monday. Also, the lights were turned on, the power used, the water used, the cash registers running, cleaners cleaning, computers computing. Management staff, in particular, had to be spread out over seven days instead of six. In other words, my costs went up and my profits went down, and I had a lot of unhappy staff who did not want to work on Sunday, even though they came in as volunteers. It was a scheduling nightmare, with people knowing we could not make them work on Sundays.

So in a purely economic sense, Sunday shopping does not work, at least for most of the Canadian Tire stores in Ontario. I cannot see that we are different from our friends that want to stay open in that regard. What it is all about is market share. If we are all closed or we all are open, may the best marketeer win. The consumer does not have any extra money, so if it is spent on Sunday or Wednesday, it does not matter. He is not going to spend more because we are open on Sundays. He does not have any more. Perhaps, in these times, he has less.

The cross-border shopping issue is not a Sunday shopping issue. It is a price or a service issue. One of my best friends is a small building contractor who has bought many items in my store. When I asked why I had not seen him lately, he said it was simple: he could buy cheaper than even I would sell it to him—and I give him a special discount—over in Buffalo. He goes over there usually once a month, mostly on Mondays, because he says it is less busy over there on Monday, less crowded. That is where he buys most of his contracting items. For him, price was the issue. I believe that is why people shop in the United States, not because they are open on Sundays. They go there anyway, and certainly did so between July 1990 and March 1991, when we were open on Sundays. People did not stop going to Buffalo or wherever else it might be on Sunday during that time. They continued to go even though we were all open.

You know the expression, "Try it; you'll like it"? Well, I have tried it. I did not like it. It was just not economically viable for us to open on Sundays. We have proven that, so let's just get on with serving the customers as well as we possibly can six days a week. Really, that is the bulk of my submission. It is not profitable. We have done it, and it does not work.

Mr Daigeler: Thank you very much for this presentation. Quite frankly, it seems to be very different from what we have heard so far from the business community. Even the gentlemen this morning were arguing that Sunday openings have been a big success, financially speaking. The clothing retailers especially seemed to be arguing very strongly that they need this extra day.

Mr Hayhurst: It is very difficult for me to speak for everybody else.

Mr Daigeler: Where do you think that apparent contradiction seems to be coming from?

Mr Hayhurst: Well, I do not know why the Bay, for instance—I assume that is one of the people you are talking about.

Mr Daigeler: Well, Tip Top Tailors. They are all related; let's put it this way.

Mr Hayhurst: There is a difference between the types of merchandise we sell in terms of the way people will purchase it? I frankly doubt it. The people who have $400 a week take-home pay do not get any more because we are open on Sunday. If they spend it on Sunday, they do not have it to spend on Monday or vice versa.

I have some numbers here which I will give to you. For instance, we would do $52,000 on a Saturday last year. This year we did $42,000, and then the Sunday we did $12,000, but on the Monday we lost another $5,000. That would be a typical scenario of a weekend's business. It would just fall off drastically, particularly on Saturday, but Monday would also be hurt. These fellows who say they are getting back all their business by opening on Sunday—I do not know what their figures were for the Saturday. We all know that business has been very difficult in the last year anyway, but taking into account the GST and all that,

I am still down, and it cost me more money to open on Sundays when we were open.

We certainly had people in the store. In fact, some days it was quite busy in there. But Saturday—I am sure most of you have been to a Canadian Tire Store on a Saturday. Years ago you would go in there and it was jammed. You could not get in the place.

Mr Sorbara: Awful.

Mr Hayhurst: Well, it is not awful any more. I wish it were awful any more, but, gosh, last Saturday it was pretty slow. But on the Saturdays when we were also open on Sunday, it was deadly. We were sending cashiers home, sending people home. There just was not the business. Obviously, we were trying to balance our Saturday and Sunday staff, but there are certain people and certain items that you just cannot totally replace on a Saturday. You have to have them there both days, particularly the management staff. That is where the difficulty is.

Mr Poirier: I am really confused now after your testimony, because just about everybody else from business has said just the opposite, like the Bi-Way and the other chains and whatever. I am really trying to understand what is happening. Why would Canadian Tire seem, after a number of days of witnesses, to have such a completely different picture from what we have heard from stores similar to yours? I specifically asked questions of owners and whatever, and said—again, intrigued—"How can you say that if you open up on Sunday, it makes more economic sense, it lowers your cost per day and Sunday becomes one of your better days?" Of course, you are quite correct that there is only a fixed amount, but if the customer prefers to spend it on Sunday as opposed to a Monday or a Saturday, hey, we cannot tell the customers—hell, the customer is king. The customer is queen. I would assume that business would want to be sensitive to what the customer wants to do.

I am really confused as to why what you are experiencing is so damned different. I am a regular Canadian Tire customer, my wife works for Canadian Tire, and I am really confused about—

Mr Hayhurst: I cannot honestly speak for the other fellows. Make sure you understand me. I did not say Sunday was a poor day. It was not a poor day. It just watered down the other days, particularly Saturday.

Mr Poirier: Because a lot of them said that Sunday became their better day.

Mr Hayhurst: Oh, no, it certainly was not like that. Typically, when we were open, if we did, say, $60,000 on a Saturday, we might do $18,000 or $19,000 on Sunday. We were open less hours on a Sunday. Usually we would open from 12 to 5 or 11 to 4, whereas on a Saturday we are open from 8:30 to 6. But even on an hourly basis, it certainly was not one of our better days. On an hourly basis, generally speaking, it would still be the slowest day. We promoted it, too.

Mr Sorbara: I am a little bit surprised at the direction of your testimony, because what I extract from it is: "For us, opening on Sunday does not increase the overall profitability of our business, so we prefer not to be open on Sunday. As a result of that, we prefer everyone else not to be open on Sunday."

Mr Hayhurst: That is correct.

Mr Sorbara: I would suggest to you that there are a number of businesses which are not more profitable if they have extended hours, 6 till 9 or 9:30 during the week. For them, opening in those hours is not profitable. They in fact close at 6. They do not stay open the extended hours like so many other stores are staying open, particularly stores downtown. But those businesses are not suggesting that therefore the government bring in legislation so no one can stay open later hours. I am surprised you are saying that because your business cannot be profitable, because you have not been able to find a way to create a vibrant Sunday market that makes your business more profitable, therefore no one should be able to stay open. Should we apply the same sort of thinking to the evening hours, which are becoming an increasing part of the business of Canadian Tire, say, Thursday and Friday night?

Mr Hayhurst: I do not find anybody that closes at 6 except, as you say, the stores downtown. I think they do that because everybody leaves the downtown area to go to the suburbs or go home. I can assure you that if the business was downtown, ie, the people were there, they would stay open.

Mr Sorbara: I can assure you that if the business were there on Sunday, you would stay open.

Mr Hayhurst: The business is there, but it is there at the expense of another day of the week or a couple of other days of the week.

Mr Sorbara: So everyone should close?

Mr Hayhurst: If the law is going to be made, I think I have to stress again that the law has to be uniform in terms of everybody having to close. You cannot have the drug-store open and the furniture store open and tell the department store it has to close.

Mr Sorbara: We agree strongly with you on that. If somebody else is selling tractors and hoses and it is called a "nursery centre" because it is selling plants, that makes your business uncompetitive, and you simply cannot continue to thrive in that kind of market.

Mr Hayhurst: Exactly.

Mr Sorbara: Would you say the preference in Ontario among the broad population is that they not to be able to buy anything on Sunday? Do they want the nurseries closed and the Beckers closed and—

Mr Hayhurst: No. We have been through this before many times, but the preference probably is that people would like to be able to shop on Sunday. I think also the preference is people would not like to work on Sunday. I think we are open 72 hours a week. If you want, let them be open for 144 hours a week, but closed between midnight Saturday and midnight Sunday. Then they have 144 hours a week they can be open. Surely that is enough time for people to buy hoses, clothes, whatever they want to buy.

Mr Sorbara: I will just tell you that in my own very personal case, if the Canadian Tire store was closed once again on Sunday, it was the one store that I did not want to close on Sunday.

Mr Carr: Thank you very much for your presentation. I will be quick and then Mr Murdoch will have a question. Then, if there is any time, I will jump back in.

As a former student, I used to work in Canadian Tire, so I appreciated it. It is a fine store and we wish you all the best.

One of the questions I have—and correct me if I was wrong—is that when some of the retailers met with Mr Farnan, the former Solicitor General, Canadian Tire was supportive of Sunday shopping. Has the position changed, or am I wrong that when they met with—

Mr Hayhurst: I am not sure who you were talking about—"Canadian Tire." If you are talking about the Canadian Tire Corp—

Mr Carr: Yes.

Mr Hayhurst: —it might be supportive of Sunday shopping, but it does not run any of the stores.

If you are talking about any of the dealers, as I indicated at the beginning of my presentation, I cannot say unequivocally that I speak 100% for all the Canadian Tire dealers in Ontario. I talked, in fact, to two or three of them this morning. Their position, because they knew I was coming, was that yes, they would like to close, but only if everybody were closed. If they are going to allow nurseries to be open, National Sports to be open, that sort of thing, then absolutely those people want to be open too. But as long as the rule is applied fairly, I think the vast majority of them want to be closed.

There will be exceptions. We are all "independent businessmen." We all run our own stores the best way we possibly can in hopes of making the best profit we can. I am sure that over the past couple of years some people have changed their opinions. The fellow who has a store in Fort Erie or in Fort Frances might have a different opinion than the fellow in Lindsay, Ontario. There may be some differences relative to the cross-border shopping situation. Still and all, the vast majority would like to stay closed, but that does not mean 100% are in that direction.

Mr B. Murdoch: To be fair to some of the other large retailers, they have said that if there is going to be a law, then make it a law and close. Some of them would prefer to be open, but they did say if there is going to be a law, that is fine. But there is a consideration in this bill also about the tourist areas. I take it from what you have said that you would like a law on Sunday shopping where there would not be any on Sunday at all, but then what do we do about our small people who are in the tourist areas? I mean, they would not survive. I know that in my area there are small towns and they have little stores there where the tourists buy and Sunday is their biggest day. They definitely would go broke. They just would not have a job. You are saying we should have a law: no Sunday shopping. What do we do with all those people then?

Mr Hayhurst: I am glad I am not in here trying to sort that all out. I realize that is a very difficult issue, trying to sort out the Bracebridges of the world or Huntsvilles or any of those definite tourist areas. I think the solution that maybe they are allowed to open in the summertime is one possible way of doing it. That is a real difficult one and I totally understand where those guys are coming from. When the tourists descend upon Bracebridge in the summer, the guy's got to make hay. I do not know how you get around that.

Mr B. Murdoch: Maybe in a free enterprise country, as we are, we should not be involved in this at all. Governments should not be making the laws about when people can shop. Let the marketplace—

Mr Hayhurst: The government makes laws for everything else, so I do not know why they would not want to get involved in this one.

Mr B. Murdoch: We would sooner see them not involved.

Mr Hayhurst: I cannot give you the answer as to how you handle the tourist situation. We in the group I have been involved with in the last couple of years have been wrestling with that for quite some time and it is a very sticky wicket, as everybody in this room knows.

Mr B. Murdoch: I think the solution would be if we were not involved and the marketplace takes care of itself. That is what free enterprise is all about, and you would compete like everything else. If you felt you had to be open on Sunday you would be and if you did not you would not be. I think that is the only solution, because once you start opening it up like we have in this bill, where people can designate themselves as a tourist area, Windsor I think has already said the whole town is a tourist area, and that is going to happen. We are going to get it piece-meal all over the place.

Mr Hayhurst: Obviously that situation is going to arise. I guess if you are asking me what my answer is, my answer is shut them down and be done with it, because you are not going to satisfy everybody and there is always going to be a problem. If you have to make one law that is absolute and final, then they cannot open in Bracebridge or they cannot open in Fort Frances or they cannot open anywhere on a Sunday, period. I do not think that is likely to be the answer, but if you are asking me my opinion, that is what it is.

Mr Mills: Thank you, sir, for coming here. I am very interested in hearing what you have to say, and I am interested because what this is all about is not Sunday shopping. What we are talking about with this legislation is Sunday working. It seems to have got twisted around. All we hear about is people shop, shop, shop. This legislation is about working. I was very interested to hear you say, sir, that the days you worked when you opened on Sunday, your employees went there of their own free will, they hated it, they did not want to be there and they grumbled.

Mr Sorbara: No, he did not say that at all.

Mr Hayhurst: Let me say it again then.

Mr Mills: I am sure he said that.

Mr Hayhurst: I said the main difficulty is with the management staff. In this day and age, the last year or two when there has been so vast an amount of unemployment, we did not have difficulty getting students to work on Sunday. I suspect if you went back four or five years ago when the shoe was on the other foot and the employees were kind of in charge of the situation when there was virtually no unemployment, we would have had a lot of trouble getting people to work on Sundays, but now the jobs are few and far between. Even so, with my management staff—I am talking about the people who have to run the store and open it and close it and handle the problems—that was where the difficulty was, getting them to come in on Sundays and trying to sort them out. They were the ones who were grumbling quite a bit. The students we were able to—

Mr Sorbara: So this bill is to protect the managers.

Mr Hayhurst: No, the other ones were not—

Mr Sorbara: It is the managers.

Mr Hayhurst: The other ones were not overly ecstatic about it, but they came in because when we initially hired them we asked them, "Will you work on Sundays?" We wanted to make certain that we were not going to run into that problem. But like I say, I suggest that three years from now, if the economy turns around and things were like they were in 1986, it is going to be a lot more difficult. People will say, "Thank you very much, I'm not working on Sunday."

Mr Mills: Right. People did not like it. Just to follow that up, sir—

Mr Sorbara: The managers did not like it, I think is what he said.

Mr Mills: No, no.

Mr Hayhurst: Nobody liked it, but the students—

Mr Mills: Nobody liked it, and I can go further. I have a Canadian Tire store near me and I happen to have a friend who works there, and he said that on Sundays they have had to dispense, when they were open, with the ability to return goods because they could not get people to man the desks—responsible people, full-time people to take on that responsibility.

Mr Sorbara: Offer more pay.

Mr Mills: So I am saying, for the record—

Mr Sorbara: Offer more pay.

Mr Mills: —that people in Canadian Tire stores did not like to work on Sunday, and that is a fact.

Mr Sorbara: You believe in higher pay. Offer more pay.

Mr Mills: That is a fact.

Mr Sorbara: Offer more pay.

Mr Mills: I would like to go on—

The Chair: Excuse me, we have a witness in front of us, gentlemen. If you wish to have an argument, we can do it later.

Mr Sorbara: My friend Mr Mills is making another speech.

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, Mr Hayhurst is in front of us, and I am sure Mr Mills had another question for him.

Mr Mills: No. I would just like to expand on the Canadian Tire philosophy—

The Chair: Perhaps you could ask Mr Hayhurst to propound on that philosophy.

Mr Mills: —that the sales that you make on Sunday are slippage from Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday. It always puzzles me when I hear the people come in here about retail and making money—

The Chair: Do you have a question, Mr Mills?

Mr Mills: —that you have $400 or $500 a week to live on, and if you have got to spend it from Monday to Saturday, how the devil have you got extra to spend on Sunday? If you go around Canadian Tire, its parking lots are full and all the other stores are empty. So I am sure, sir, that if your parking lots are full, in my perception, and you cannot make it go, I appreciate that it must be difficult—

The Chair: Do you have a question, Mr Mills?

Mr Mills: It must be difficult for the so-called other people. I thank you for your presentation. I have listened to you and I have made note of all that you had to say, in particular about the people who do not like to work on Sundays. Thank you, sir.

The Chair: Thank you, Mr Mills. Further questions? No? Mr O'Connor.

Mr O'Connor: I think maybe what Mr Mills was trying to get you to share a little bit more with us was the slippage aspect.

The Chair: I am sure you could have done that if he had asked the question.

Mr O'Connor: As a retailer, could you just expand on that a little bit, because I just cannot figure out where the extra money is coming from yet.

Mr Hayhurst: I just understand that when we were basically forced into opening on Sundays last year—actually, I held off for two months. Some of the stores opened on July 6, I think it was, last year when they were able to, and some did not start until September, and there were a few that did not open at all. There were still a few right in the city of Toronto that did not open at all on Sunday when we were allowed to open there last year.

Basically, what happened was that the Saturdays, where traditionally you do $8,000 or $9,000 an hour, would slip back to $6,000 or $7,000 an hour, and therefore you would be down $20,000, and then you would do $20,000 on Sunday. It seemed to happen that way consistently. The Sunday sales changed a little bit as we got into December. Naturally, they went up a little bit towards Christmas. But we had some Saturdays—I will give you an example without trying to divulge too much here. The NDP will probably tax us if I tell them how much we did on Saturday.

Mr Poirier: The Minister of Revenue ain't here.

Mr Hayhurst: Oh, good; okay. The day before Christmas in 1989 we did $132,000. That same day before Christmas in 1990 we did $86,000. Those were both Saturdays, the day before. It was a huge difference. Here is a Saturday two weeks before Christmas, $85,000 versus $128,000, and then on the Sunday we did $32,000. If you add $85,000 and $32,000 together, I do not think they come to $128,000. They still do not make it, and there are a lot of extra costs involved in opening that Sunday, so my profit is lower.

Mr O'Connor: Who is your major competitor?

Mr Hayhurst: We have many major competitors: Home Hardware, Beaver Lumber, the muffler stores, Sears, Eaton's, Zellers. Depending on what category you are talking about, we have all kinds of major competitors. We do not have one particular competitor, we have many.

Mr O'Connor: So fairness in market share is the—

Mr Hayhurst: Yes. Market share is what we are striving for in each individual category.

The Chair: Thank you very much, Mr Hayhurst. We are adjourned until 1:30 this afternoon.

The committee recessed at 1212.

AFTERNOON SITTING

The committee resumed at 1403.

SOUTH ASIAN ACTION CENTRE

The Chair: I would like to call our committee back to order. Our first presenter is Mr Mohammed Kazim Khan, who represents the South Asian Action Centre.

Because of timing problems, Mr Khan, we are unfortunately limited to a quarter of an hour. Please use that time for your presentation. The members of the committee, I am sure, will have a lot of questions for you, so if we can have some time left over after your presentation of that quarter-hour, it would be appreciated. Feel free to start whenever you wish to, and if you wish some water or whatever, please feel free to get that as well. Go ahead, sir.

Mr Khan: Good afternoon, ladies and gentlemen. My name is Mohammed Kazim Khan. I am representing South Asian Action Centre.

South Asian communities consist of people from India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Afghanistan and Iran. In these countries, Muslims, who are in great numbers, observe Friday as a holy day and Sunday as a working day. Gradually other people started observing Friday as a holiday and Sunday as a working day since they used to live in Muslim-dominated areas, and this became a regular practice. People go to mosque, mandir, temple, or girjaghar on Friday.

When these people came from their country to Canada, they brought their tradition to this country, and all shopping centres belonging to south Asian people used to close on Fridays and open on Sundays, not from today, but from the inception of their business. So far, since all these shops used to close once in a week, it was okay with the law.

Although many times representatives tried to get India Bazaar, situated at Gerrard Street East and Coxwell, recognized as a tourist area, their requests were ignored. This is another sad part of it, that even though India Bazaar is complying with all the requirements to be recognized as a tourist attraction area, it is not graded as a tourist area. This is the best example of hypocritical practice in Canada.

Regarding the proposed Bill 115 part I, subsections 4(6) and (7), which say council shall hold public hearings and council is not required to pass the bylaw even if tourism criteria are met, this is ridiculous. Once a law is passed, a standard is set, and even if somebody fulfils the criteria, still council is not required to recognize it. We feel it is discriminating, and a window is kept purposely so that people like us can be refused, and we cannot do anything further because subsection 4(8) says council's decision is final.

Clause 4(9)(a) and subsection 39eb(2) are also creating trouble for our people in maintaining standards, since any employee can refuse to work on Sunday any number of times and nothing can be done.

We feel that unnecessarily we are forced to forget our culture and accept a Christian culture. Sunday is a holy day for Christians, not for Muslims, and not for any other religion. Thousands of people are working from Monday to Saturday, and then they come to India Bazaar to get their cultural requirements on Sunday.

Passing this bill is illegitimately trying to force that these people should not get south Asian costumes, and then slowly forget the whole culture. We are all against it. This is a planned murder of our culture.

We recommend that through the bill, cultural attraction places should be allowed to open for seven days automatically and no fees or taxes should be charged to penalize for maintaining cultural needs. No steps should be taken to instigate employees to avoid Sunday working.

Thank you very much.

Mr Daigeler: Thank you for your presentation. I notice that you indicate, rightfully so, that Friday is a significant holiday for Muslims, but you are arguing, really, for seven days' open shopping. Could you tell me what the current practice is in the Muslim religion with regard to Friday? You would work on Friday as well?

Mr Khan: Those people who want to go to mosque, who want to strictly observe religion, have to go to Friday prayers at one centre, which is the closest one. They have to go there. It takes about one hour for praying or something, and that is why many people close on Friday.

Mr Daigeler: So the majority of Muslim operators would be closed on Friday, so that would not necessarily be the same as what you are arguing. You are arguing for seven days open that would include Fridays. What I am trying to get at is that you seem to be arguing from a commercial perspective rather than from a religious perspective or a cultural perspective, because if you are coming from a cultural perspective, I think you should say, "Well, we should have the right to be closed on Fridays."

Mr Khan: Okay. If it is closed on Fridays, then all the Muslims can go, and even if it is open for seven days, routinely people can be given off and they can take this thing. And those people who do not want to go to mosque, they can come to work, so it should be kept open for the people who want to go on Friday. But it should not be complied that they should close on Friday since it is fulfilling the tourist needs.

Mr Sorbara: I am sorry I did not hear all of the presentation but I agree strongly with your view that to suggest that Sunday be the common day of pause is for a significant portion of the Ontario population somewhat of an affront and somewhat, might I go so far as to say, an insult.

I also think you make an extremely good point in the second last paragraph of your submission where you criticize that portion of the bill that says a council can refuse to grant an exemption even after a public hearing has voted in favour of it. But would you not agree with me that the best way of dealing with this is simply to invite the province, through this committee, to stop trying to pick the winners and losers on Sunday shopping and allow those storekeepers who look forward to opening on Sunday to open on Sunday without further administrative or bureaucratic burden?

Mr Khan: As I say, the law is already enforced. I do agree with you that it is bad without taking the public hearing. It was already in force. People who are opening on Sunday are getting a ticket, even though they have been opening for the last 20 years, since the inception of India Bazaar. People used to open on Sunday and close on Friday. Now they are getting a ticket and a summons. I do agree that it is a hypocrisy.

Mr Sorbara: That is a special burden on them, because for religious reasons they do not have enough time in their day to maintain their stores open on Sunday. Is that not the case?

Mr Khan: Exactly, yes.

Mr Sorbara: And so they have to close two days while other stores are closed one day, and even other stores do not have to close any days because of the tourist exemption.

Mr Khan: Exactly.

Mr Sorbara: Would you describe that as a fair and equitable system?

Mr Khan: I would not. Also I would like to say that suddenly the people from south Asian countries face a ban that they cannot do their shopping because the stores are closed.

Mr Sorbara: Would you say that the proposal that the government—

The Chair: Mr Sorbara, I am sorry. Mr Carr and Mr Murdoch.

Mr Sorbara: You caught me in midsentence. Congratulations.

The Chair: You actually had a couple of minutes more.

Mr Sorbara: I just wanted to ask you whether you would think that the bill the government is proposing is consistent with its views about equity and fairness to all Ontarians that it is trying to achieve in other of its programs. We talk about equity as between different peoples—

Mr Khan: Through the bill we are not getting equality. That is why we are here.

Mr Carr: I was just wondering, with some of the businesses that you say are closed on Friday, presumably some of them are open. Would they be getting people who are not of the Muslim faith to work Friday or do they have some—

Mr Khan: Yes, or those people who are not very strict in their religion. They can be employed. If they have employees, they would choose to work on Friday.

Mr Carr: Is it a large percentage that would still close on Friday, or is it that because of economic necessity they have opened, or is it pretty much adhered to that they will not open on a Friday?

Mr Khan: The larger number want it open.

Mr Carr: On a Friday.

Mr Khan: The customer and the public want it open.

Mr Carr: So even if you were an owner and wanted to take the day off, they would get somebody who is non-Muslim to work or whatever and then they would go and somebody else would work during that day.

Mr Khan: Yes.

Mr Carr: That is much easier to do than it is with Sunday shopping where there is—

Mr Khan: Yes, it is much easier.

Mr Carr: Yes, because you have a vast majority of the population that would be prepared to work on Friday.

Mr Fletcher: I agree with your statement and presentation. If this government were bringing in this law strictly on religious grounds, I would be in full agreement, but we are not. I think the thrust of this legislation is one purpose, and that is to protect working people. That is why changes have been made. I do not think it has anything to do with the way this government treats any group of people. It is a blanket piece of legislation and, as I say, the major thrust is to protect working people. I think that is why the common pause day is the piece of legislation it is. I know you do not see it that way, but I know that is what the ministers said when they were here. It is to protect tourism and working people, and that is the major thrust of it. It is not on religious grounds or cultural grounds that this law has been made.

Mr Khan: I am sorry, I did not get your question. Can you put it in simple words?

Mr Fletcher: It was not a question; it was a statement.

The Chair: Do you have a question?

Mr Fletcher: No. I was just making a statement on that.

Mr Lessard: Do you agree in principle with the concept of a common pause day; that is, having the right of employees not to work on one particular day of the week?

Mr Khan: I do not agree. That is what I mentioned in the bill under clause 4(9)(a) and subsection 39eb(2).

Mr Lessard: Your objection, as I understand it, is that there should not be a right to refuse to work on Sunday because your religion observes a different day. That is what I am asking, whether you agree that people should at least have one day, even though that day might not be Sunday. Maybe you would have a different day. Do you think people should have that right to have a day off?

Mr Khan: One rule cannot be made for everybody. There are different types of people, people of different opinions, people of different religions. Some people are religious. They have to do certain things to belong to the religion, but still they do not follow the religion; like, they have to meet the relatives on Friday, even though they do not go to prayer. So there should not be one day it should be closed.

Mr Lessard: But you do not think employees should have a right to refuse to work on Friday, for example?

Mr Khan: No, I do not agree with that. If the establishment is open for seven days, somebody has to work on that day. Yes, once or twice, it is okay, they can refuse, but not for any number of days. That is what I say.

Mr Lessard: Not one day a week. They should not be able to refuse at least one day a week.

Mr Khan: No.

The Chair: Thank you very much, Mr Khan. It was a very interesting presentation.

Mr Khan: I think some of the committee have some questions.

The Chair: No, we have run out of time, unfortunately. We have people waiting. Thank you very much for your presentation.

CORSO SHOES

The Chair: We have a representative now from Corso Shoes. You have basically seen what the process is. Could you identify yourself.

Mr Ferri: My name is Vince Ferri and I am the operator and owner of a shoe store in the Beaches area.

The Chair: As you know, you have a quarter-hour for your presentation and, as you have seen, committee members will have a number of questions for you, I am sure. Please feel free to start when you wish.

Mr Ferri: I have been the operator and owner of a small family shoe store in the Beaches area. We became a victim of circumstances through the Sunday shopping situation where we are in an area that is a tourist area but not designated. Unfortunately, in the last six years we have been getting charged on a regular basis and made to feel like criminals, even though we are only trying to survive. It is a vital situation to us.

During the nine months we had Sunday shopping, it seemed we never had any people coming in to protest that we were doing something wrong or they could not spend time with their families. On the other hand, we found that families were coming in with their children where we provide a service for them and it seemed to be a leisure time for them to enjoy shopping and be together for the first time.

My point is there seems to be a sense of discrimination, where I have been caught in a situation where I am in a tourist area but not designated. On the other hand, retail seems to be the only sector where you cannot work Sundays. If I were to get a job at Harbourfront or Chinatown, I could work Sundays. That would be fine.

Shoppers Drug Mart, for example, can sell shoes on Sunday and we cannot. I have been informed recently that we would be able to sell shoes on Sundays by obtaining the front space of a store. A vendor permit allows us to get tables outside and put shoes on it and sell them, but not by opening the door to the public. I question this a lot. I would like to perhaps get some answers if it is possible, whether we are really doing something totally wrong here or we are only trying to survive and bring food to our tables if we can.

Nine months' Sunday shopping means we bought much more inventory than previous years. We are stuck with this inventory now. We do not know how to turn it over, and it seems that we are still getting charged. There does not seem to be any changes, and we were never notified six months before the new legislation came into effect. We were never told, "Come January, the new legislation will change and that means you are going to have to close and we ask you to buy less inventory or play accordingly." That came within two weeks' time, basically, and we had to take the consequences.

That is basically what I have to say, that it seems the government would rather see us collecting welfare than operate a small family shoe store. This consists of 800 square feet and is based on a husband, wife and son operation. If anyone can give me some answers, anything, I would appreciate that.

Mr Sorbara: Sir, have you ever gone to the Chinatown area, the Dundas-Spadina area on a Sunday?

Mr Ferri: Yes, I have.

Mr Sorbara: Would it surprise you if I were to tell you that the vast majority of people who are shopping down on Dundas in the Spadina area on Sunday are typically Chinese Canadian residents who live somewhere else in Metropolitan Toronto? Would that surprise you?

Mr Ferri: No, it would not surprise me, but that would not take away my right for me to shop down in Chinatown if I wanted to or to work in Chinatown if I wanted to.

Mr Sorbara: So you would agree with me then that the vast majority of people who are shopping in the Chinatown area on Sunday are certainly not tourists; they are just typical Ontario residents who like to go down there on Sunday.

Mr Ferri: Yes, I would have to agree with you.

Mr Sorbara: Are you asking from this government anything more than the right to be able to run your store when you want to run your store and how you want to run your store?

Mr Ferri: Yes. At the same time I would like to ask this government simply to leave up to us when we think it is fair to take the common pause day and spend that day with our family. Whether it will be Monday or Tuesday, we should be entitled to that, rather than taking away our business just to say, "We want you to stay closed on Sunday, regardless of what happens."

Mr Sorbara: Is that the view of most of the other retailers in the Beaches area?

Mr Ferri: In the Beaches, there are over 200 stores in operation. There are only about 10 stores that are practically closed on Sundays. The stores are closing down because of the Sunday shopping. They are being replaced with so-called handicraft. There is such a confusion in the law about this. Officers who come down and charge us on a regular basis cannot identify what handicraft is all about. We have been trying to get informed in this and it seems that it is legal to sell any briefcase that comes from South America, but a pair of shoes simply made—

Mr Sorbara: A pair of shoes made in Canada cannot compete.

Mr Ferri: —cannot compete with that, or a belt that is made here. So there has been a confusion, and not even the officers themselves can seem to answer the questions. They have been coming down and sitting with us. They are totally lost, not knowing what they are doing.

Mr Sorbara: I take it that you belong to associations and have an association with a number of other shoe store operators in the province. Is that the case?

Mr Ferri: Yes, we do.

Mr Sorbara: Is it their view as well that they should be able to manage their stores and open their stores when they see fit?

Mr Ferri: I firmly believe that no one should be forced to work on Sundays or vice versa, but I do believe that if it is vital in the matter where it is a family operation and such a small store, we are not forcing anyone to work. We are not saying you have to work, by all means, or we are not asking the shoppers who come and shop either. It was their consent, it was their approval, it was their vote that they want us to be open. That is why they come down. That is why they are there to shop.

Mr Sorbara: Can you just describe to the committee what happens when the police officer comes into your store on Sunday to charge you? Is he excited about the notion that he has apprehended a violent criminal or a serious criminal in Ontario?

Mr Ferri: Basically, this is what happens. They have a list of names of the stores they regularly see every Sunday, and if anybody else has been there for the last two or three months, recently opened, they do not even look at the stores. So they have maybe 10 or 15 stores that are regularly open Sundays and trying to survive, and these are the ones. They have a list in the divisions and they come down and that is what they do.

Mr Sorbara: So you are saying they just work on a list of regular violators rather than actually find out who is open in violation of the law.

Mr Ferri: That is right, yes.

Mr Sorbara: That is interesting.

Mr Carr: Than you for taking the time away from your business to come down here and present. I appreciate it very much.

One of the concerns had been with regard to employees and how that would be handled. How many employees do you have and how do you handle that with them so that they do not have to work if somebody, for religious reasons or whatever, does not want to work on Sunday? How do you handle that with your staff? Would you hire new people? Would you work it out with them? Would you force them to work? How many do you presently employ and how would you work that out if Sunday shopping was allowed?

Mr Ferri: As I said earlier, it is a family operation, so it is strictly family, but we did have part-timers coming in. These were students who really wanted to work on Sundays so they could make some money for their tuition for school and education and so on. There seems to be such a drawback coming in on a regular basis: "Can we work, can we work?" Unfortunately, we cannot open. If we stay open, we get charged and we do not know what these charges will be like. We are getting charged, but we do not know yet. They could be very stiff fines. The store volume is very little. For example, if we make $1,000 in a day and we get charged $5,000, you are talking about—so this is one of the reasons we are so off balance.

I believe that during the week we do give days off. Rather, it is Monday or Tuesday. On the other hand, Sundays we never open in the morning; we work from one to five.

These are the hours. So anyone who practises his religion does have time to go to church or to do whatever he does.

So this is an afternoon basically together. We find that it is entertaining and leisure for a family to be able to shop. If they can drink on Sunday, if they can gamble on Sunday at the racetrack, if they can do just about anything else—when I say drinking, they can practically drink on the sidewalks and the patio. Kids are being exposed to that. You tell me if there is something wrong with buying a pair of children's shoes? Can you honestly say there could be something wrong with that?

Mr Sorbara: You want them to vote with their feet.

Mr B. Murdoch: How many square feet would your store be, then?

Mr Ferri: It is 850 square feet.

Mr B. Murdoch: Is there no way you could have your area designated as a tourist area?

Mr Ferri: We are going through an application. The business improvement area has applied, but unfortunately in the last six years it has not seemed that we are getting anywhere. We do meet the criteria and everything else, but again, I think that is discriminating, if someone can work in the Beaches, even though I have that particular case, and not work in Agincourt and not work in different parts of Toronto.

Mr B. Murdoch: Yes, I hear what you are saying there. To solve your immediate problem, have you paid any of these fines they levy?

Mr Ferri: We have paid a few of them and we have a few coming up now.

Mr B. Murdoch: What do they run?

Mr Ferri: They vary from $200, before to $500. Last year we had three or four fines which were indefinitely dismissed by the judge, after nine months' Sunday shopping. They came up again now in May and these fines consist of $2,000 each, which I am facing now.

Mr B. Murdoch: I just wanted to know that. Okay.

Mr Fletcher: Thank you for being here today. How many employees do you have?

Mr Ferri: It is husband and wife, and son part-time. We have one full-time.

Mr Fletcher: You said you belong to certain associations and groups. Are you a member of the Canadian Shoe Retailers' Association?

Mr Ferri: Yes, we are.

Mr Fletcher: So you are familiar with their stand on Sunday shopping and the surveys they have done.

Mr Ferri: I am familiar with their standards, yes.

Mr Fletcher: We had Sharon Maloney, who is the president of that association, testifying a couple of days ago that the Canadian Shoe Retailers' Association is against Sunday shopping and Sunday working.

1430

Mr Ferri: I do not think she is familiar with my particular case, though. I think she is—I heard her comments about it, yes.

Mr Fletcher: You do not agree with their stand on that.

Mr Ferri: No, I do not, in my particular case. In general, we find it has never been any problem. There are more people upset now after the non-Sunday shopping than there were before. There was never protesting; there was never any people complaining about that. I find it hard to believe that everything seemed to be so smooth, then all of a sudden it is discriminating because everybody else can work on Sundays, any lawyer can work, a doctor can work, a taxi driver and everybody else, practically, except the retailer. He should have a choice.

Mr Fletcher: Is there anyone else who has questions here? As far as the legislation is concerned, it does not say they cannot work on Sunday.

Mr Ferri: It does not say they cannot work?

Mr Fletcher: No.

Mr Ferri: But they could work at Harbourfront or Chinatown.

Mr Fletcher: If they are applying for a job, and they work Sunday, they have the right to work Sunday. But they also have the right to refuse Sunday. It is not one or the other, it is both. People are free to work. All that is really holding you up right now is the tourist designation. Is that right? So really there is nothing wrong with the law except maybe the tourist—

Mr Ferri: No. What I see wrong with the law right now is, first of all, as you see the tourist designations. If we were to get the tourist designation I will be one of the fortunate ones, perhaps, to survive. Without the Sundays I cannot survive. I do not have much time left. Whether it would gel with it or close down, one or the other. My business is 30% to 35% done on Sundays. Basically the strongest days of the week are Saturday and Sunday. That is when we get the most traffic.

Mr Fletcher: What about Monday and Tuesday?

Mr Ferri: They are very quiet. I would rather close Monday, if I had to choose a common pause day. It should be up to us to choose.

Mr Fletcher: So you are not really opposed to a common pause day?

Mr Ferri: No, I am not.

Mr Fletcher: And you are not opposed to people having the right to refuse to work on a Sunday?

Mr Ferri: No, I am not opposed to that either.

Mr Fletcher: So what it really comes down to is the tourist designation.

Mr Ferri: Tourist designations, and the choice of people who want to work on Sundays should be allowed.

Mr Fletcher: The people have that right to work if they want to.

Mr Ferri: But how can they work if the stores are not open?

Mr Fletcher: Is that my time?

The Chair: Thank you very much, sir, a very interesting presentation.

LABOUR COUNCIL OF METROPOLITAN TORONTO AND YORK REGION

The Chair: We now have a presentation from the Labour Council of Metropolitan Toronto. Good afternoon. We have about half an hour, and you can divide that time any way you wish to. Typically, it is about half for your presentation and half for questions. I am sure many of the committee members will have questions for you. Before you start, and please do so when you feel comfortable, would you please give your name into the microphone.

Ms Wall: My name is Brenda Wall and I am executive assistant to the president of the Labour Council of Metropolitan Toronto and York Region. I had hoped today that an executive board member, Brother Jay Nair, from the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union-Canada, would be with me, but at the last minute he was unable to do so.

I would like to just read through our presentation which as you see will be very much in support of what the United Food and Commercial Workers brief was as well.

The Labour Council of Metropolitan Toronto and York Region is pleased to have an opportunity to appear before the standing committee on administration of justice to present our views on this very important matter of Sunday shopping and working.

I should apologize that our president, Linda Torney, is on vacation at the present time and could not be available for these hearings, but she sends her greetings and her message through this deputation.

We represent over 180,000 members in 400 union locals throughout Metro and York region, and as such we are one of the four largest central union bodies in Canada. One of our major affiliates in this region is the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, and we fully support their efforts and views with regard to this issue of Sunday shopping and working.

We appreciate the government's action in bringing forward legislation aimed at establishing and enshrining a common pause day in Ontario and placing restrictions on both Sunday shopping and Sunday work. However, although an important step forward, the proposed legislation does not yet guarantee a common pause day for workers and their families in Ontario.

Our main concerns are similar to those expressed by our affiliate, UFCW, and they are the intent of the Retail Business Holidays Act; the municipal option; drugstore openings on Sundays; enforcement of the legislation, and the definition of a "retail business."

In this presentation we will put forward our labour council's views on these and other concerns related to this issue. Our primary message to the standing committee on administration of justice is to listen to the voice of the workers and families who will be most affected by these decisions around Sunday shopping and working, namely, the United Food and Commercial Workers.

First, the intent of the Retail Business Holidays Act: We are pleased that the proposed legislation includes the recognition of the need for and importance of a common pause day; it represents an important step forward for workers and citizens in Ontario. However, the wording put forward around the common pause day principle is not strong enough, in our opinion.

In the proposed amendment to subsection 4(2), it says, "The council in passing a bylaw under subsection (1) shall take into account the principle that holidays should be maintained as common pause days." This wording is far too general and would not ensure that the intent of the RBHA is consistently followed.

Instead, we would like to see the wording strengthened and the amendment to subsection 4(2) regarding municipal powers to read as follows:

"The council, in passing a bylaw under subsection (1), must maintain the principle that holidays are to remain as a common pause day; that is, to ensure that they remain days on which most businesses are not open; days on which most persons do not have to work."

The legislation implemented by the previous Liberal government provides that municipalities have full control over the decision to allow stores to open on Sundays or other holidays. However, in this way the will of individual municipal councils predominates; there are no regulations, no criteria and no principles to guide them in the making of decisions. In this kind of system, the government has no way of stopping wide-open Sunday shopping and working.

In the proposed amendment, the decision-making process would remain in the hands of municipalities, and regulations and criteria of the tourist exemption are set out in sections 1 and 2 and subsection 4(1). These exemptions are so broad as to effectively restrict no one. We believe the amendments as proposed would lead to wide-open Sunday shopping and working.

We recommend that a new set of viable tourist criteria, regulations, be established by the affected stakeholders, including representatives of retailers, unions and government. Our full recommendation is as follows. In our view, the recreational, entertainment and cultural pursuits of tourists, as well as the goal of enshrining the common pause day, can both be accommodated by the law. To accomplish this, we recommend it be changed to reflect the following:

The new subsection 4(1) to read:

"Notwithstanding section 2 and subject to the provisions of clauses 4(1)(a) and 4(1)(b) below, the council of a municipality may by bylaw permit retail business establishments in the municipality to be open on holidays where it is essential to meet the educational, cultural, leisure and recreational needs of the tourist; and,

"(a) only retail business establishments in which the total area used for serving the public or for selling or displaying to the public in the establishment is less than 4,000 square feet; and,

"(b) the number of persons engaged in the service of the public in the establishment does not exceed four."

1440

The government must establish a committee of the affected stakeholders that will prepare and recommend a new set of viable tourist criteria, regulations. The stakeholders should include, as we said, the retailers, unions and government.

According to the amendment, the tourist criteria as proposed would not form part of the legislation. However, we recommend a new set of viable regulations established by the stakeholders mentioned above be integrated into the legislation.

Subsection 4(8) must be modified to state, "The council's decision may be appealed by any interested party to the tourist exemption board."

Third, drugstore openings on Sundays: Under current legislation, drugstores must dispense drugs and the principle business must be the sale of goods of a pharmaceutical or therapeutic nature for hygienic or cosmetic purposes. No other goods are allowed for sale with the exception of sundries. However, in many cases up to 80% of sales in these stores consist of products of a non-pharmaceutical nature. The system is being abused and we are asking for actions which will prevent this abuse.

To compound the problem, the absence of a restriction on the number of employees working on a Sunday or holidays allows some drugstores to dedicate extra help for the benefit of sales of these non-pharmaceutical products.

The UFCW and the labour movement are very concerned about these practices, and we recommend the following changes to clauses 3(2)(c) and 3(2)(d) of the present act be amended to read as follows:

"The total area used for serving the public or for selling or displaying to the public in the establishment is less than 2,400 square feet.

"The number of persons engaged in the service of the public in the establishment does not at any time exceed four, including the pharmacist, who must be present in the establishment during business hours."

In the Metro Toronto area, for example, there are currently many drugstores with a square footage of 2,400 or less that provide ample opportunity for the local population to receive needed medication or other prescription products, particularly in cases of emergencies.

The real reason for drugstores to remain open on Sundays is to allow the population the opportunity to fill prescriptions and have access to needed medication. We believe this recommendation accommodates this most basic need without allowing the abuses of the current system to continue. When we talk about the abuses, we are talking about stores that are open and really function as supermarkets rather than as drugstores for the needs of the population. Many of their sales are for goods that are available in regular kinds of supermarkets, and we want to restrict this kind of activity.

Enforcement of the legislation: At the present time the act provides for maximum fines of $50,000 upon conviction for illegal Sunday openings, and municipalities or the Attorney General of Ontario can apply to the Supreme Court of Ontario for an injunction to close an establishment that is opening illegally. What is difficult to comprehend is that there are no minimum fines.

The labour council supports the principle of a minimum fine. The fines proposed under the suggested amendments, however, are far too low. The amount of the proposed minimum fines, $500 for the first offence and $2,000 for the second offence, will in no way deter retailers from opening on Sundays.

Under the proposed legislation, too, there will be no change with regard to who can apply for an injunction. Hence, there remains the same problem of little enforcement and no action taken against offenders continuing. Therefore, we recommend the following.

The proposed amendment of the minimum penalty be modified to include, "For first offences, the minimum fine for conviction be $10,000 and for subsequent offences, the minimum fine for conviction be $20,000."

Subsection 8(1) to be amended to read, "Upon the application to the Supreme Court by any affected or interested party, the court may order that a retail business establishment close on a holiday to ensure compliance with this act or regulation under this act."

Fifth, the definition of a "retail business." Under the current act there is a problem regarding the definition of a "retail business." As a result, giant stores in the guise of membership clubs, such as price clubs, are allowed to open on Sundays. The proposed amendments do not deal with this problem and, as a result, club warehouses could continue to operate on Sundays.

To prevent circumvention of the act by establishments such as price clubs, clauses 1(1)(b), 1(1)(c) and 1(1)(d) of the present act should be amended to read as follows:

"(b) 'Retail business' means the selling of goods or services by retail to any member of the public, including a member of the club or co-operative or any other group of consumers.

"(c) 'Retail business establishment' means the premises where a retail business is carried on. Any space or stall in markets, particularly in covered markets and 'flea markets,' shall be considered to be a retail business.

"(d) 'Principal business' means that portion of business which accounts for 80% of the retail business establishment's gross sales."

General comments: Our labour council is very concerned that this issue be treated separately from the whole issue of cross-border shopping. Sunday shopping and working has nothing to do with cross-border shopping in our view. In Ontario as elsewhere, Canadians are going to the United States in record numbers. This is happening in provinces which have had Sunday shopping and working for several years; for example, British Columbia.

The reasons for the rapid growth in cross-border shopping are many and varied. However, they are mostly related to federal Tory economic policies, including the high level of the Canadian dollar, high taxes, the introduction of the GST, the promise of cheaper goods and easier border transit put forward by the federal government to boost the Canada-US free trade agreement, and reduced confidence in Canada because of Tory policies.

As well, Canada has been hit by a serious recession with many thousands of workers being thrown out of work because of the free trade agreement. This has obviously affected people's ability to afford the basic necessities of life. Wide-open Sunday shopping and working will therefore not solve the problem of cross-border shopping.

Second, there should not be a confusion between the establishment of a common pause day and the development of tourism. With the acceptance of the above recommendations, we believe that the recreational, entertainment and cultural needs of tourists can be met quite well without allowing wide-open Sunday shopping and working.

In conclusion, the most important principle for us is the principle of a common pause day for workers and their families. The UFCW estimates that just by counting their members and families, two million people in Ontario would be affected by Sunday shopping and working. If we add to this the many thousands of workers in other establishments who are members of our affiliated unions, we represent a major part of the population in this province.

As an important community within this region and within this province, we would ask that labour's views on this issue be listened to very carefully.

The amendments proposed by the Ontario government are a step in the right direction. However, in our view they would fail to ensure that the goal of a common pause day is met, and in fact would jeopardize its realization for workers and their families and the general population of this province.

We are asking that you accept the recommendations put forward in this brief, for we believe that by doing so you would be enhancing the lives of workers and their families and at the same time enshrining the important principle and practice of a common pause day in Ontario.

Mr Daigeler: We had several witnesses come before us and say quite strongly, "I have the right to work on Sunday and I should be able to work on Sunday." I must say I personally was a little surprised at that, but that seems to be the direction in which we are moving in North American society, knowing that in Europe, perhaps before the recession, the debate was mostly on shortening the workweek. There has been tremendous debate to have a 35-hour workweek rather than the 40-hour or more workweek. Are you aware from your labour context, whether there is any effort to reduce the workweek? Is that one of your goals, the hours to be worked by the workers?

Ms Wall: As you know, we are a central body, and for many of our unions, of course, this is something they have been trying to negotiate for many years. But that is not at the expense of current jobs and not at the expense of a living wage. Recently employers have given in to unions that have negotiated fewer hours on the basis of extending the work in different plants and so on, extending the shifts and those kinds of ideas. So yes, it is still a principle of having more time for leisure and a lesser-burdened workweek.

Mr Daigeler: But you would not say it is a key labour demand at the present time.

Ms Wall: It is one of the labour demands but we do not want, instead, thousands of part-time jobs where people do not have the opportunity to make a decent living. That is unfortunately what has happened. In the recession of 1981-82, many thousands of workers lost their jobs. By 1988-89, we had this so-called full employment in Toronto, 3.8% unemployment, that disguised the record numbers of part-time, low-wage work in Toronto.

That is not talking about people who work in unionized establishments, including food establishments and retail establishments. That means those who are in the McDonald's type of establishment or the so-called high-tech, which is low-wage office sector. Those are the jobs that are not well paid, that are part-time and are exploitative for many women in this region.

Yes, it is a general principle, but we want to make sure first of all that there is full employment, that there is quality employment and that people are working in decent conditions. If they are not forced to work on Sundays and even if you say we can have, as has been suggested, legislation around right to refuse work on Sundays, that is still a difficulty because there are all kinds of intimidation tactics employers use at this point to coerce people into working. That is not a complete answer either. The answer is to enshrine the common pause day and make sure everybody has that right.

Mr Sorbara: I have a brief series of questions. You say you have 180,000 members. Of those 180,000 members, how many would be involved in the retail sector, approximately?

Ms Wall: I do not have the figures exactly in this region.

Mr Sorbara: Ballpark?

Ms Wall: Ballpark figure? Let's see. The UFCW has estimated it for that region. Members and families of the UFCW are estimated, so I would say that almost half of that would be in Toronto. That is almost one million people of members and their families who are working in that sector in this region.

Mr Sorbara: Actually what I wanted to know was what percentage of your 180,000 members of your 400 locals are retail workers, but if you do not have it that is okay. It would be safe to say, however, that of those 180,000 members of the Metro labour council, the majority of them would be from industrial unions, and primarily the CAW is the largest union in Metro. Is that not right?

Ms Wall: No, I believe that the United Steelworkers, the Canadian Auto Workers and UFCW and the retail unions would be the major ones. That is discounting the public sector. Approximately half of our membership would be from the public sector, so that is about 100,000 and then 80,000 split among those unions, so you are looking at a chunk of workers.

Mr Sorbara: I take it that General Motors and its colleague motor companies are the largest employers in the Metro area and have the largest unionized workforce.

Ms Wall: Actually the Ontario government is the largest employer.

Mr O'Connor: The UFCW has 75%. That is from her brief.

Mr Sorbara: I am sorry, but that is around the province. We were just talking about Metro right now. I notice that in your brief, just before the heading on page 2, "Municipal Option," you are arguing that we should pass a law providing—I am reading from the second point—that Sundays, the common pause day, be a day "on which most persons do not have to work." Is it the principle of the Metro labour council that industrial establishments like General Motors and Ford and other manufacturers and other employers in unionized workplaces ought not, for the most part, to be open on Sundays?

Ms Wall: As a labour council we support—

Mr Sorbara: We just need a yes or no as to whether or not it is a policy.

Ms Wall: It is not a yes or no question; I am sorry.

Mr Fletcher: Let her explain it in the way she wants.

Mr Sorbara: I am just wondering if you have a policy position on that, if the Metro labour council has passed a policy position on that.

Ms Wall: Our policy is here, as written. Our policy is to support the common pause day from Sunday shopping and working. Obviously there are exceptions to the rule. When unions negotiate their own conditions with the employers because of all sorts of other reasons, that is up to them. But in fact you are wrong in terms of the numbers of CAW members and auto workers. When the GM Scarborough plant is closed down, there will be virtually no GM workers in this region. The biggest region is Oshawa. That is not part of our municipality.

Mr B. Murdoch: One of the questions is, you talked about the common pause day and it being on Sunday. What about the other groups that maybe do not want Sunday for the common pause day? Have you considered that? How would you handle that?

Ms Wall: There are other groups, and as somebody else mentioned before, there are other individuals. Naturally, if the general ideology or myth that is being passed around is, "You should have Sunday shopping. You should have cross-border shopping. Open up this province so that you, as an ordinary citizen, have the right to consume every day of the week," if that is the mythology that is being put forward and the flavour that is pushed on us by the federal government and this whole country, then naturally there are going to be people who are swayed by that argument.

But as for a few individual exceptions or groups that think they should have the right to be open, that is an exception to the rule. I believe that for the good of working people and their families and the general citizens in Ontario, this is the best model. There may be people who are interested in making money in the retail sector. There may be those like the drugstores that want to really be supermarkets and not just cater to pharmaceutical and medication needs.

Mr B. Murdoch: There is a whole issue around just the common pause day, what day it should be. Are we going to say it is Sunday, or are we going to say it is Friday or Saturday?

Ms Wall: For the majority of the population Sunday is still considered a common pause day. Of course there are exceptions and we appreciate the reasons for people wanting it to be on other days. People have their religious or other reasons, but those are very few exceptions. I think we are talking about something which is good for the majority of citizens. I am talking about working people, the poor, the oppressed, families at a different level. I am not talking about those who want to make money in this country and open their businesses to anyone and try to make money.

Mr B. Murdoch: I do not think that is what it is about.

Mr Carr: The question I have relates to your membership, and I think Mr Sorbara touched on it. You have auto workers and steelworkers. I think it would be safe to say the vast majority of them are still subject to working on Sundays. What do you say to some of your members who may have to work when they say, "Here you are fighting for the retail workers and yet I am a Canadian auto worker and I have to work." What do you say to those people?

Ms Wall: I believe the whole labour movement is standing behind the United Food and Commercial Workers on this position. I talked before about certain individual local unions or master agreements with companies. That is up to the union themselves to choose that.

We had a discussion last Thursday night at our executive board on this issue before we put forward this statement. The Canadian Auto Workers are represented there, and the Steelworkers are represented there, two of each of those unions, a majority on our board, and they were all in favour of passing this statement.

In principle the trade union movement as a whole is supporting the UFCW and our position on this. What unions negotiate locally is a completely different matter and for various different reasons. We are not making judgement upon them. This is an acceptance of a position in principle and we want to stick to this and see that it is enforced properly.

Mr Carr: The next question is with regard to page 3 where you want to change the square footage. On the one hand you say you would like to have a common pause day, but then you say to get around it we are going to basically discriminate. I suspect you are probably not a lawyer, but that is going to leave it up to a lot of challenges and will discriminate against different-sized businesses for no other reason than the square footage of their facilities. I was wondering if you could explain the rationale behind that, why you would discriminate against different companies or groups?

Ms Wall: At the moment there are about 60% of drugstores that fit into this 2,400 square feet and those are the ones that are primarily drugstores. I do not believe it is discrimination. I believe it is just trying to get some consistency in the system.

The original reason for allowing drugstores to open on Sundays was to ensure the population had access to medication and prescriptions and so on. I have children and I often need to get prescriptions from the hospital or drugstores on a Sunday and in the evenings. That opens it up and allows that kind of thing for people, but there has to be a limit. I think over the years it has stretched and now something like 90% of the drugstores in the province are over 4,000 square feet, which is a big area. If you walk into those big drugstores, they are not drugstores for the reasons they were set up for, for opening on Sundays. They are supermarkets, and 80% of their goods are supermarket kind of goods. You will find in some small areas there will be the medications and the prescription drugs, and sometimes you will not even find the pharmacists there, "Oh, he'll be in at 2 o'clock," or "He'll be in at 3 o'clock," or something like that. That is criminal, to us. The original reason for setting it up is for the population to have access to the medication and we want to keep to that, and if there have to be some limits somewhere, you have to set those limits. Otherwise, it will stretch and stretch and then you will have every supermarket open on Sundays and, "Oh, by the way, we have this little section that sells drugs and medication."

Mr Fletcher: Thank you, Brenda, for the presentation. Just a couple of points. Who do you think this piece of legislation is going to benefit the most?

Ms Wall: I think it is going to benefit working people and their families and the majority of the population in this province. That, to me, is the most important part of the population. If we open it up to the system we have south of the border, there are no limits to the exploitation of working people and the breakup of the kind of family life and social life of the community. I think in this way we can preserve that kind of society.

We have prided ourselves in Canada in being different. We have prided ourselves in supporting working people and their families in the past, and social programs, and I think this is a very important kind of social program, in a sense, as well. It stops people from being exploited seven days a week, and no matter how you get around it, it is happening, people are being forced to work.

Mr Fletcher: That leads into my next question. There is a need to protect workers? You do see a definite need for that?

Ms Wall: There is definitely a need to protect workers, and it is not going to be just through the right to refuse. That has not worked well enough in the health and safety field. You have to have the legislation which creates an effective common pause day so that there is no Sunday shopping and working and there are very few exceptions where people have to have access to things that are necessities.

It is stretching out the dollars. It is even encouraging people to spend more than they have. I do not think it is a healthy kind of attitude, and just in terms of the economy of this country, as I said before, it has nothing to do with the cross-border shopping; it has everything to do with protecting the rights of working people and their families.

Mr Fletcher: Good. I was glad to hear that the UFCW and the CAW could agree on something. It is nice to hear.

Ms Wall: Very much so.

Mr Mills: My colleague Mr Fletcher asked many of the questions that I was about to ask. I thank you for your presentation, and in summary, I would just like to thank you for the wonderful reasons that you have for the cross-border shopping in your general comments. I think they are very succinct and very apropos. Wonderful. Thank you very much.

The Acting Chair (Mr Cooper): Thank you very much for your presentation, Ms Wall.

Mr Sorbara: Is there any more time?

The Acting Chair: No, there is not.

CANADIAN LORD'S DAY ASSOCIATION

The Acting Chair: The next group will be the Canadian Lord's Day Association. What we have been doing is that you are allowed half an hour, and you can divide that time up any way you wish. You can either make a full half-hour presentation or you can make a brief presentation, then divide the rest of the time up among the caucuses for questions and comments. Would you please identify yourself and then proceed.

Mr Fraser: My name is Donald Fraser and I am here on behalf of the Toronto auxiliary of the Canadian Lord's Day Association. The Canadian Lord's Day Association is a Canada-wide association of people who desire to uphold the sanctity of the Lord's Day, also called the Christian Sabbath or Sunday. Maybe we are few, as Mr Sorbara mentioned, but we are still there. We have members in many areas of the province of Ontario and I am here to speak on behalf of our members in the Toronto area.

The issue: Many will say we are living in the 1990s, of which Sunday shopping is a part. Yes, we are living in the 1990s, but no, Sunday shopping does not have to be a part. There are many who value the day of rest when commerce stops and people can have a quiet day, the purpose of this day being to worship God and to rest our bodies.

Our interest in making a presentation to this committee is twofold: (1) to encourage the present government to stand strong in the maintenance of a common pause day, as was suggested by the lady preceding myself; and (2) to express our opinion regarding the proposed legislation, Bill 115.

We would encourage this government not to be intimidated by big business. Over the past two days, I have read media reports about the presentations large retailers have made to this committee. The overwhelming theme of their presentations has been the great financial opportunities they have missed since stores have been closed on Sundays.

I do not believe these losses are solely related to this issue. I believe the timing of the introduction of the GST and the period of open Sunday shopping from June 1990 to March 1991 are closely related. Thus, I believe that the numbers being presented are not a true indication of market reaction to Sunday shopping.

Another argument which is often proposed regards the issue of cross-border shopping. Yes, there are stores open in New York state on Sunday, but if you ask most cross-border shoppers the main reason for their journey, it is because of price.

We as an organization do not believe that bottom-line profitability is a reason for wide-open Sunday shopping. I would quote from the Bible where Jesus in the gospel of Mark said, "What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?"

We appreciate this government's consideration of the wellbeing of retail employees who would otherwise have to work on Sunday. We encourage you to proceed with this legislation protecting the Lord's Day as a day of rest.

We applaud the proposed changes to the Employment Standards Act. The removal of the reference to "reasonableness" is a very positive step and will ensure the right of retail employees to refuse work because of religious convictions.

Our major concern relates to the giving of the power to municipalities to determine compliance with the tourism criteria. This leaves the door open for local governments to declare large sectors of their jurisdictions as tourist areas and thereby permit another form of wide-open Sunday shopping.

Our preference is to see all retail establishments closed on Sunday, even in such areas as Toronto's Chinatown and Harbourfront. We believe the law should apply fairly to all. This includes such specialty retailers as the various retailing clubs which are operating in this province.

We would recommend that the provincial government would decide which areas are designated as tourist areas. Presentations by retailers would be made through local governments, which would in turn apply to a provincial board for approval. Through this method, the provincial government would be able to ensure that this legislation is applied in its intended manner.

In conclusion, our organization supports the principle of this legislation. Our primary concern relates to the general nature of the tourism criteria. We suggest that the provincial government retain the power to designate exemptions to the Retail Business Holidays Act.

Mr Poirier: In the beginning of your statement you said that we listened to big business and whatever, and yes, we saw the opinions of big business, but in the last few days we have also heard a lot of the opinions of very small, family-oriented business, where people wanted to work. As the owners of the business, they were describing to us in great detail how a lot of people wanted to work as employees in those small family businesses. We also saw surveys and people who said they wanted to shop in fair numbers on a Sunday.

You seem to be a very religious man, since you are quoting from the Bible. I presume that is your personal life. I respect that very much. If you want to spend all day Sunday to worship the Lord and do whatever you want that your religion calls for, I have no qualms or quarrels with that, but why would you want to impose that common day on other people who may not share that opinion with you, people of other religions, students who want to work, consumers who want to shop? I do not think people should work seven days a week, but why Sunday? What happened to plural Ontario? What happened to the other opinions? Could you respond to that?

Mr Fraser: Yes. Part of that, as you have mentioned, is my strong Christian beliefs. Being a strong Christian, I would like to see that everybody would believe the same way as I do, and I would like to see that it would not have to be legislated to have a common pause day; rather, that it would be a situation where everybody would of their own accord take one more day off, namely, Sunday, the Lord's Day, as we call it.

Mr Poirier: But what if their Lord's Day is not Sunday? That is your Lord. How about their Lord?

Mr Fraser: Because of our beliefs, we believe that it is in the best interests of society in general to have the day that Christ rose from the dead, that he appointed as the day of worship. We believe it is best for society in general to have that day as the common pause day.

Mr Poirier: Is that what you tell your Jewish and your Muslim neighbours and friends?

Mr Fraser: That is correct, yes. That is part of living a Christian witness, I believe, and expressing our opinions on these issues to our non-Christian neighbours or Christian neighbours who worship in a different manner than ourselves.

Mr Poirier: I presume you know they would not agree with you.

Mr Fraser: Yes, I do understand that.

Mr Poirier: How about those Christians who do worship the Lord on Sunday but still work on Sunday? What do you think of those Christians?

Mr Fraser: That is actually a great problem that we see within the Christian church. Part of the objectives of our organization is not only to make presentations to government, but also to make presentations to other Christian groups who we believe are very lax in their keeping of what we believe is the way Christ meant the day to be kept.

Mr Poirier: So I presume that according to your Christian belief, to shop or to work on a Sunday and not respect the Lord's Day would be a sin.

Mr Fraser: That is correct.

Mr Sorbara: We have a few things established, that the Toronto and District Labour Council supports the government's legislation and the Canadian Lord's Day Association supports the government's legislation. That is an interesting coalition.

I just want to say to Mr Fraser, referring to the sentence in his submission, "Our preference is to see all retail establishments closed on Sunday," I am not sure if he will believe this, but I want to tell him that my preference as well is to see all retail establishments closed on Sunday, or some other day that we could agree on, if we could agree on that. That would be in some respects my first choice. If society as a whole could agree with that, it would be wonderful. I have a particular envy for the state of Israel, where there is common and uniform agreement about what day shall be a common pause day.

But is there not now some acknowledgement within your organization that the very makeup of the province of Ontario, the fact that we are a multireligious society and also a secular society, the fact that some are required to observe another day and some do not care to observe any day, is there not room in your philosophy to understand that, given the dynamic of this wonderfully diverse society called Ontario, we do not have the right any more to force upon an individual the requirement to stop doing what he is doing, based on the preferences of an important minority?

Mr Fraser: No. In response to your question, we might be considered a very traditional organization in that sense, but no, we do not believe that because we are in a pluralistic society everybody should be accommodated. We believe in God's laws and we believe that God's laws apply to everybody whether they believe in them or not. That is the standpoint we come from.

Mr Sorbara: Then you would take the position, and I think the district labour council was almost about to take the position—or I was inviting it to take the position—that General Motors should stop manufacturing on Sunday as well. They want most workers not to work. You would prefer the closure of a General Motors, you would prefer the closure of the service sector, you would want to prohibit the use of banking machines, things like that, on Sunday as well.

Mr Fraser: Our organization would agree with you on that, except for certain works of necessity in which we believe, such as hospitals—

Mr Sorbara: Keeping the lights on.

Mr Fraser: —and, as they were saying, a certain number of drugstores for the prescription of absolute necessities. Yes, that is what our organization believes.

Mr Sorbara: You support the government's legislation, save and except that you would like the tourist criteria to be even stricter?

Mr Fraser: I would like to see the government take control of that situation. I do not think the municipal option is a correct situation because it just leaves too many varied people interpreting the legislation and it leads to a very wide range of decisions.

Mr Sorbara: Why in Ontario should we have facilities that cater to tourists on Sunday and not to our own citizens? You support the tourist exemption.

Mr Fraser: Actually, the true position of our association with regard to many tourist attractions is that many of them should be closed on Sunday. The majority of the members of our association do not attend tourist attractions, such as Canada's Wonderland, on Sunday.

Mr Sorbara: But should there be tourist shopping? Should a boutique in Yorkville be allowed to open under a tourist exemption, under legislation that you would support?

Mr Fraser: No.

Mr Sorbara: So you would not have any tourist exemptions.

Mr Fraser: No, that is correct.

Mr B. Murdoch: Just to carry on with this, surely as a true Christian you must have regard for the beliefs of other religions.

Mr Fraser: I have regard for the beliefs of other religions. I would like that they would come to the beliefs of Christianity.

Mr B. Murdoch: But in this way you would almost force them with a law. Is this what our country would come to with a law that said if you are not a Christian, then you must take Sunday as a holiday?

Mr Fraser: No. There are certain aspects of society that, in order to have law and order prevail, certain laws must be legislated.

Mr B. Murdoch: Yes, certain laws with law and order, but this is nothing to do with order. This would be their God. You speak of your God who wanted Sunday as our day. I come from a Christian area. There are very few other religions in my area, but I still think they would want to respect the laws of another God that Muslims believe in and people like that. Sunday is not their day. This is a law we are talking about, and they would be breaking the law then.

Mr Fraser: Yes, and they may break the law without its being legislated, by their choice, if they do not have a retail establishment, by doing some other kind of work.

Mr B. Murdoch: But in their religion it is not breaking the law, so it gets pretty dicey here when we start to pit one religion against another because of a common pause day.

Mr Fraser: We believe that for uniformity within a country there are certain prevailing religions—I should not say “prevailing religions.” There should be certain laws that should prevail. We believe that this country is based on Judaeo-Christian laws. Being based on that, that is how we have had Sunday as the day of rest until today.

Mr B. Murdoch: So basically, Canada or Ontario has not become a multicultural then. We are still basically a Christian country.

Mr Fraser: We are established on Christian principles.

Mr B. Murdoch: I know we were established that way, but we have, over the past 100 years, become a multicultural.

Mr Fraser: I realize that, but we believe that because we are multicultural does not mean we should give up our Christian laws just because other religions have come into our country.

Mr B. Murdoch: I do not think anybody wants us to give it up. Sunday would be there, but there also may be Saturday or Friday, as we have heard today from some other people. But I will not belabour that.

The other thing that concerns me is about tourism. I know North York was mentioned, but let's take my area of Grey county where almost our main industry now is tourism. One of its biggest days is Sundays. Are you saying that our little shops, our boutiques, our antique shops should all be closed on Sunday? That is probably half their business. Are you saying they should all be closed?

Mr Fraser: We believe that yes, those shops should be closed.

Mr B. Murdoch: Okay. Would you be prepared then to pay the bill to support the people who will not have jobs? There is going to be massive unemployment in the tourist areas, which would be in Grey-Bruce and Muskoka, a lot of places like that. These people will not have jobs. They will not be able to survive. Would your group be willing to put money towards—

Mr Fraser: I disagree with you on that point, because people do not come only for a weekend. There is a lot of traffic on a weekend, but there is a lot of tourism. Today, there are many people purchasing in boutiques up in Muskoka and Grey-Bruce. For years and years those people were not unemployed. We do not believe it has changed just because it has changed very recently.

Mr B. Murdoch: It did not change very recently. It has been changing over the past number of years. As I said, half their business will come on Sundays. They will come in here and tell you that, and they are not making a fortune, so half their business is going to be gone. They are not going to be able to make a living. You do not have the answer for them. Our answer is that they be allowed to be open on Sunday. If your organization has an idea that they should be closed, then it has also got to have an idea of how it is going to support these people.

Mr Fraser: If they are closed, I am sure that people are interested in what those boutiques have to offer and will come on another day and purchase things, because many of these boutiques were not open in the past on Sundays.

Mr B. Murdoch: I hope we do not have to find that out, because it would be disastrous if they were closed.

Mr Fraser: And they ran businesses successfully in the past.

Mr B. Murdoch: That is a long time ago. It has changed. Obviously, you have not been into the areas of late. Anyway, that is fine.

Mr Carr: My question is along the same lines. Here you have the retail workers. How would you take us back in those other industries; for example, hotels and airlines and so on? What would be your recommendations for those areas? Presumably, they should not be working. How does your organization see that going? How would you make it so that those groups now do not work on Sunday too? Would you leave them the same or are you attempting to do something for the vast majority of the people who are now working on Sundays who would not be protected?

Mr Fraser: We believe that not everything can be legislated. That is obvious. You cannot legislate everything to be closed. With regard to hotels, people, if they come on a Friday and stay until a Tuesday, obviously there is going to be—and we consider much of that work as work of necessity for the maintenance of people's wellbeing. With regard to travel, in the various businesses I have worked in as a sales representative, I have never travelled on a Sunday and most of the members of our association make it a point to avoid travel on Sunday. It would be an ideal situation that we would desire to have in this country and around the world, to not have travel on Sunday, and many recreations.

Mr Carr: Baseball games, movies and things like that.

Mr Fraser: Correct.

Mr Fletcher: Thank you for your presentation. Let me just repeat something I said to another presenter. This legislation is not here because of anyone's religious beliefs or anything else. It is here to protect workers and also to do something about tourism. It has nothing to do with religion or culture. Since I did touch on the tourist exemption, exactly what is the problem with the tourist exemption that you see?

Mr Fraser: Our main problem is that we realize that the ideals we have will never—I should not say “will never”—will not be legislated by any legislation that this government may pass. We believe there will probably be a tourist designation as there stands in the law at present and we would like to see the government maintain control of that designation.

Mr Fletcher: The provincial government?

Mr Fraser: That is correct.

Mr O'Connor: I want to thank you for coming here today. I know it is very awkward and sometimes a little bit frustrating, especially when committee members, though we are not necessarily experts at everything ourselves, sometimes ask questions in an area that perhaps you are not an expert in anyway. I think perhaps one area that you do like to focus on is the needs of people. In that area, then, do you think there is the need for some protection of workers, so that they have the right to refuse work on Sundays?

Mr Fraser: I believe that very much and I talk from personal experience. A gentleman in our church who is a manager of a jewellery store was not forced to work on Sunday, but he felt he would lose his job if he refused to work on Sunday. This law does provide some sort of protection for him. We applaud that.

Mr O'Connor: One of the other members mentioned earlier about the auto workers working on Sunday. I found that really curious, because having come from the auto manufacturing industry and having worked there for a number of years—11, as a matter of fact—I probably could count the times I have been requested to work on a Sunday on one hand.

Mr Carr: The St Thomas plant goes seven days a week.

Mr O'Connor: So not all auto workers can be painted with the same brush. In fact, that was in the largest auto manufacturing plant in all of North America. In St Thomas it could be a little bit different. We cannot say necessarily all. I am glad you see that protection is necessary.

One area that you talked about was the leadership role, provincial and municipal. Do you feel the province should definitely take a leadership role in this and make sure that legislation goes forward making sure that there is some protection for the worker?

Mr Fraser: Yes. We believe that the past Liberal government was negligent in the way it formed the legislation. It was not a leadership role. Instead, it was passing the buck to the municipalities. The problem is that you get so many, many different people taking control that you get so many different controls. It just is not uniform. We would like to see some uniformity here.

Mr O'Connor: Again, I thank you for coming and I hope we did not put you on the spot too much by asking you questions in perhaps areas you are not an expert in.

Mr Mills: Thank you, sir, for coming and your presentation. I would just like to remind you that we do have a Sabbatarian exemption in the current legislation. I am sure that you are aware of that, are you not?

Mr Fraser: Sabbatarian exemption?

Mr Mills: Yes, there is that. I would like to also say I am very pleased, as a member of the government that is presenting this legislation, that your organization supports it in principle, and for that I thank you, sir.

Mr White: I have one small question. My understanding is that the history of the act—as you know, it was the Lord's Day Act, and that has been the tradition for countless centuries, but in the last 20 or 30 years there has been a shift from the preservation of Sunday as the Lord's Day to the preservation of Sunday for a common pause day for families, for recreation. That is why the emphasis, of course, on tourism.

Other groups that have presented have been with us for four generations as well, like the People for Sunday Association of Canada. They started off with a religious bent, but now they have come to a strong support for a common pause day. You, on the other hand, are maintaining that strong religious bent. You do not have any kith and kin with the idea about the common pause day?

Mr Fraser: That is correct. We believe that we are the only association in Canada that stands for the Lord's Day, Sunday, on a purely religious basis from the Christian principle. We are associated with the Lord's Day Observance Society in the United Kingdom.

The Acting Chair: Mr Fraser, I would like to thank you on behalf of the committee for your presentation.

1530

ENDS CLOTHING STORE

The Acting Chair: Our next presenter will be from Ends Clothing Store. You will be allowed half an hour for your presentation. You can either make a half-hour presentation or split it up, because people from the committee have questions and comments. Could you please introduce yourself and then proceed.

Mr Weisfeld: My name is Harold Weisfeld. I have a couple of stores in the Beach called Ends. I have been in business since September 7 1982. You will have to excuse me because I am a bit shaky. I probably have more fines than Paul Magder. It is a very, very tough time for me. I have about $300,000, $400,000 in fines. I have been open every Sunday for nine years and I will fight it right to the end. I have here a list of 25 different situations which are not exactly the regular situations that you are hearing from other people, and I am going to start from the beginning.

First of all, I have a Travel Ontario book that was written by the Minister of Tourism and Recreation for Ontario, Queen's Park, written by the NDP. If you will refer to page 52 there is a picture of the Beach. I only have two or three copies. I will just hand them out. If I go from one thing to another, it is just the way I have written it down.

First of all, I employ 17 people. I have four stores—two in the Beach, one at College and Bathurst and one at Bayview and Eglinton. I do not open Bayview and Eglinton or College Street because it is not necessary. I am in the discount business. I was a sculptor most of my life and at the age of 38 got into the clothing business because I could not make a living as a sculptor. The business has been very good to me. The first five years were very difficult. The last three or four years have been fabulous, except for the Sunday-opening situation.

Since I am in the discount business, between myself and probably five other gentlemen in Canada, we are probably sourcing more merchandise for the majors, for Eaton's, for Simpsons, because we do wholesale. I never really was in wholesale, but when Sunday-opening came up I started to get very frightened and said, "I have to find another avenue."

I was with the president of a huge company the other day, in Buffalo, and he was trying to make a decision whether to open up in Ontario or Buffalo. As for trying to compete with the States, we really do not have a chance because the gentleman who was with him was a member of Parliament—or I do not know what you actually call them—in the state of New York and he said to him: "Wherever you want to open up in Buffalo, we'll make it a duty-free zone. Wherever you want. You want to open up in Tonawanda, Lackawana, wherever you want." That basically means that if he brings $25 million worth of merchandise into Ontario, within one year, if it is in bond, if he has a 20% duty, he has to pay 20% on that $25 million. What the gentleman in the States was offering him is that he can bring in his $25-million worth of merchandise and as he picks from it over a 25-year period that is when he pays his duty. So if he sells $100,000 worth he pays the duty on $100,000 worth.

As for us trying to compete by saying, "Well, let's get eight percent from the people bringing it over the border," the American government will give the storekeepers the kickback. They are more business oriented.

Why the government has picked one sector of business, retail, as the devil, I have no idea. They have not picked any other business sector but retail. There could be a man at College and Bathurst sitting on the third floor in a computer company making a million dollars a year, but because he is not exposed to the retail, everyday people, you do not know what he does; he might be open seven days a week. I do not think it is fair. There is discrimination in a policeman coming into my store and giving me a ticket, and I am saying, "Could you please explain to me why the woman three doors away is not getting a ticket yet we are buying at the same place?" "Well, she is only carrying three items of the same goods." So what does that mean? Maybe she has 60 others in the back. What does it mean that she is carrying only three?

The police have such confusion over what a craft is and what a craft is not, but it is our livelihood. They are singling us out in such a way that if a person tells them a good story, he does not get a ticket. If the right policeman is on duty on the right day, you do not get a ticket—and this is my livelihood. People say, "What if people do not want to work on Sundays?" Well, what about the person who works at Shoppers Drug Mart or a craft shop? What is different between him working on a Sunday and the guy who is working for me on a Sunday? He has a different way of thinking so he will work on a Sunday and will not be forced into it?

I have lists of at least 100 kids who go to the University of Western Ontario, University of Toronto, your kids, nephews, nieces, begging to work. If everyone is paying $6 an hour, I am paying $10 an hour. Comes the end of the weekend and business is good, I am giving them $200 bonuses. I have a very successful business and I am afraid of what is going to happen, so I am fighting as I know best. Unfortunately the rest of the Beaches will not stay open because they are frightened, so I have become a martyr and I hate it. I despise it.

I had to ride my bicycle three hours this morning just to calm down for this meeting. It is a very gut-wrenching experience. Out of 300 businesses in the Beach, 82 have either gone out of business or switched locations because of high rent. I have proof of everything I am telling you. You must understand that the Beach is a group of people who could not make it in the corporate environment. They could not put on a suit. They found an alternative lifestyle. We have jazz festivals. We have a whole great thing going on there and all of a sudden we are starting to hate each other. This one tells on this one, and this one tells on this one and it is getting crazy. And unfortunately it is big money.

I do 40% to 50% of my business on a Sunday. I declared my corporation agnostic and I close Mondays, but my basic religion is that I am Jewish, and it makes me sick to my stomach that I have to go to this level to do it. I will play it right to the end, and not because of stubbornness but because I have to make a living. I have Vietnamese working for me, Chinese, I have every ethnic group working for me and they are constantly frightened when the police come. When I started in the Beaches I was paying $800 a month. I have moved to a better location, bigger space and I am paying $7,000 a month. I do not mind paying $7,000 a month because I am making the money. I am in a volume business and I have to keep the game going.

If I close that seventh day, the whole puzzle falls apart. Ninety percent of the kids or people who work in the Beach in retail are from the Beach. You will not allow us a vote on it. Everyone thinks it is too much of a hotbed. I have spent so much time with politicians, from Paul Godfrey because he was my baseball coach as a kid, right down to Paul Christie, Tom Jakobek—no one wants to get involved. No one wants to start.

As for employees wanting to work Sunday, as I say, I have lists and lists. They are begging to work Sundays. If they do not want to work Sunday, there is no problem. Now let's just talk about the small businessman, the small grocer who becomes intimidated and has convinced the government that he cannot make a living if the big guy is open. My girlfriend's father was vice-president at Labatt's and one of the things he told me is that the big corporation makes so many mistakes that is the only way the small entrepreneur can survive.

Why do I as an individual want Eaton's on one side of me and the Bay on the other side of me? Because by the time they make a decision you can make 20 other moves. If you go to Bloor and Bay you will start seeing winter goods in the stores, and I am sure if you have never been in the garment business you have always wondered why they are selling winter in summer and summer in winter. Because they cannot move fast enough and thank God they cannot. That is how small businesses, if they move quickly and they are on the ball, can make it work. It does not matter how smart the corporation is, they cannot move as fast as the small guy. I am sure the man from Eaton's started off as a pedlar and then opened a retail store and has evolved to a big position.

You are not allowing us to grow. I, myself, am 47 years old. I really am happy with what I have. I am not looking to build an empire of 20 stores. If I had my choice, I would have just one store. Things happen, things evolve: you start with one store, you end up with two. I have reached my peak and I just want to keep it where it is. As I say, I employ 17 employees and we are like a happy family there. But the big problem is their fear and my fear. Every Saturday at two or three in the morning, like clockwork, I throw up, the fear starts and it is becoming gut-wrenching with the whole community.

There is a woman who has a place in the Beach—her husband was a lawyer, fell in front of a subway three years ago, got killed. Her only support is her little store. You have to close Sunday, well, she does $2,000 on a Sunday and $300 on a Monday. A lot of the businesses that have gone out of business in the Beach were established ones that had been there 60 and 70 years. It is now reaching the point that it has now become a Subway Submarine, Mr Submarine, Mr Donut, it is getting that way. So this great place, near the lake, whether there were Sunday openings or not, would always have people. They had people for 20 years. I have been living there 18 to 20 years and they always had people. Now it is becoming chicken chalet, it is becoming what we did not want it to become.

As for the discount business, and as for people trying to figure out how to make their business work, the real key is to do what the customer tells you, not what you want. You have a house and you have it up for $300,000 and it does not sell. It does not mean that the purchaser is a son of a gun. It means that is what the marketplace is telling you. When I have 40,000 people come into my store on a Sunday, they are telling me they want me to be open, I am not telling them.

I am sorry, just one more. If you were to close all the stores in the Beach, it would probably affect 1,500 people, directly and indirectly. Prices have got exorbitant there. It is wild as far as doing business.

One thing I just want to close with is to just give you a little idea about retail. If you have never been in small business, retail always appears to be the easiest game to get into, but it is really the hardest game to do. You go out, you pay your first month's rent, your last month's rent. You get an individual to give you merchandise, you convince him to give you 60 days and then you are in business. Then it starts.

The nonsense from a physical, from a robbery point of view is so gut-wrenching. Saturday, the jazz festival, a kid comes with a ketchup bottle and sprays 160 shirts; 14 years old, smiles at us. A man takes a dog into the store. I said,

"Please don't put the dog in the store." "Hey, no problem." It goes to the bathroom. It cost $12,000. I had to tell everyone to get out of the store for three hours.

There is so much violence in retail that you cannot imagine. You see what is going on in the Beach now. Everything is being kept quiet. Some kid was nearly murdered. It is getting wild there and we are trying to keep it cool. We try not to keep it on the front page. We have to have a Sunday opening to keep our game going.

I cannot tell you what a great community we had six or seven years ago with storekeepers, and now everyone is hating everyone. Police are coming up to me and I am saying to them, "Tell me about the other storekeeper." He goes to the other storekeeper and says, "The only reason I am coming down here is because Harold told me that I had better come down and give you a ticket." The nonsense is getting wild. That is all. Shoot, if anyone has any questions.

Mr Sorbara: I just want to see if I understand correctly what you are saying is happening in the Beach in Toronto. Are you telling me that the pressure that retailers are under is resulting in stores closing and then the new tenants that are replacing those stores are the Mr Submarines and the McDonald's and the other chain stores which can of course open on Sunday?

Mr Weisfeld: Not only they can open Sunday—

Mr Sorbara: They are taking over your Sunday market.

Mr Weisfeld: They are not only taking over your Sunday market—that is business—but they are bringing in 300 people who have a lot of money from another country. They do not speak English and they want to put their son into a business and they take him to a Second Cup. He really cannot make it and the woman has put $250,000 into a business. They brought her there on a Sunday when there were 50,000 people; all of a sudden she sells three cups of coffee on a Monday. The buyback is you can only sell it back to the franchiser. Then he has another 500 waiting there to put in another $250,000, so they are the only ones who can afford to pay these big rents.

I am not complaining about the rents. What I am saying is, if you are not giving us seven days, the little comic book shop, the little this cannot exist, because we are paying rent for seven days and there is big action there. The jazz festival must have had 100,000 people there.

Mr Sorbara: You have said that you paid $300,000 or $400,000 in fines.

Mr Weisfeld: I have a $17,000 fine that I got about a year and a half ago that I am appealing. I have approximately another 60 tickets. If they gave me full tilt at $50,000 a ticket, it could be $400,000, $300,000, $200,000.

Mr Sorbara: Why is it, do you think, your store is visited every Sunday by Her Majesty's loyal police force?

Mr Weisfeld: Why? Because I have more exposure. If you would see my store, I have things outside. There is more exposure to the street than other stores and my price is right. Today it is price and item; that is all it is. If you have the right price and the right item, it happens. If I buy an item for $3, I am not putting it out for $12. I am putting it out for $3.50 and selling hundreds.

Mr Sorbara: Are the police looking at your prices or is some other storekeeper saying, "You've got to close that son of a gun down?"

Mr Weisfeld: Oh, well, the jealousies start to go mad. I am selling something for $3 and another storekeeper came in two years ago and is selling it for $12. Is he going to be angry?

1550

Mr Sorbara: You are not planning to close on Sundays, is that right?

Mr Weisfeld: I cannot. I have tried to figure out every way. It will not happen. I will have to close the other three stores, because I can only buy at that $3 price because I am buying 5,000 at a time.

Mr Carr: I want to thank you for taking the time away from your business and coming here and presenting your story. Sometimes it is very difficult when it is so personal and you put so much into it, and for that we thank you.

One of the criteria put forward has been the tourism criteria. There are many who have looked at this law who say that a place like the Beach would surely qualify. My question to you is whether you have had a chance to look at the tourism criteria and what you plan to do as it goes before council to help ensure that the area does get the tourism exemption. Have you given any thought to that?

Mr Weisfeld: John Winter from John Winter and Associates, who is representing the Beach, is putting surveys and paraphernalia together. My feeling was, obviously, it was for the better, but now the games start. I mean, there might be three people in the whole Beach who do not want it and they might scream loudly. I am praying that this new tourism situation will help us out, but am I putting effort? I have spent $50,000 on effort—with surveys, with finding out that 82 people went out of business—constantly, every day, not from the BIA but from my own personal funds.

Mr Carr: One of the problems is sort of a time lag from the time this committee gets done with it and it gets proclaimed and then goes to the municipal council. In your estimation, for a lot of these business, how close is it? Will they be able to survive until council is able to deal with it?

Ms Weisfeld: As Barry Agnew said yesterday, you have not seen anything yet. Okay, I am in the discount business. It is the first time I have ever seen in my life that there were no goods available, where you say: "Oh, my God, things are bad. There must be thousands of people sitting with manufactured items that they can't sell." There are no goods available, because I deal with the biggest broker in Canada, which is Steinberg, and a division of Steinberg. There is nothing to buy. There is no manufacturing going on.

When Eaton's would order 2,000 of an item, the man would bring in 2,500, so he had 500 extra. They order 2,000, he brings them 1,500 now. They are not relying on the Eaton's and Simpsons to do this any more because Eaton's and Simpsons are opening their own buying offices there and are cutting it so to the corner that there is no room for that distributor.

So what is happening now is, for example, if anyone has ever shopped in my store, I used to get a lot of Arrow shirts on clearance. I might sell a $65 shirt for $22 and just hundreds of people came. Now it does not exist any more, because they are opening their own retail outlets. That is what is happening. So you have the manufacturers going exactly the way they did in the United States. They are going direct to the public. They are saying, "I don't care if I get the order."

Mr Carr: One question regarding the employees: One of the concerns that has come up is with regard to individuals who do not want to work for religious reasons or want to be with the family and so on. I think you mentioned most of them are students. You have a list that is long, these people who do want to work. So in your opinion, there would never be the need to force any of the people who may work on another day.

Mr Weisfeld: If a person does not want to work, he has a reason not to. First of all, this is like a family. Although there are 17 of us, it is like a group of people who want to work. If they do not, there is never once—because I would not want it done to me. I am not looking to have a big business. It is big enough as it is. I am not looking to tell a person, "If you don't work Sundays, you don't get any work for the rest of the week." If he cannot come in, he cannot come in, and you can take every employee and ask that.

Mr Carr: Thank you and good luck.

Mr B. Murdoch: How many square feet would your store be?

Mr Weisfeld: I have one 375 square feet and one 5,000.

Mr B. Murdoch: So the one 5,000 might not fit the criteria that some labour—

Mr Weisfeld: I will chop it in half; I will make it 2,000. I will do what I have to do. I will shut a door.

Mr B. Murdoch: Well, labour has some problem with the bigger stores. They think exploitation of some of the labour people, and that is probably a good concern that they should have in the bigger areas.

Mr Weisfeld: Suppose you had a 5,000-square-foot craft shop. Would that apply?

Mr B. Murdoch: I am not sure. Well, right now we are at 7,500 feet, so we are all right.

Mr Weisfeld: You know what I am saying? In other words, supposing it was in the criteria but it was 7,500 or 10,000.

Mr Sorbara: If you sell drugs, you can be 7,500 square feet.

Mr Weisfeld: Right.

Mr Sorbara: Do you sell drugs?

Mr Weisfeld: No.

Mr B. Murdoch: These are legal drugs. He already has enough fines; he does not need more. I just want to know the size and find out what we are dealing with, because there are two problems here.

The Chair: Do you have the square metres down?

Mr B. Murdoch: Yes. We will go on. Let somebody else have a question.

Mr Mills: On behalf of the caucus of the government, I would like to thank you for attending here today. Your comments have been very interesting. Maybe I should take up riding a bicycle. You said it relieves your frustration and you had to ride for three hours before you came here. It is unfortunate you thought your appearance here was so upsetting.

Mr Weisfeld: It is frightening.

Mr Mills: It is very easygoing and I hope you have enjoyed yourself here.

Mr Weisfeld: We try our best. When I sat before the court and they gave me a $17,000 fine, I sat there for 21 charges, and three people sitting in the docket chained to each other—and one had just raped a 93-year-old woman—are sitting there laughing at me.

Mr Mills: We are not chaining people here yet. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any further questions? Thank you very much, Mr Weisfeld.

Mr Weisfeld: Thank you.

The Chair: We are adjourned until 8:50 in Collingwood tomorrow.

The committee adjourned at 1556.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

STANDING COMMITTEE ON ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

Thursday 1 August 1991

The committee met at 0856 at the Cranberry Inn, Collingwood.

RETAIL BUSINESS ESTABLISHMENTS STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT DES LOIS EN CE QUI CONCERNE LES ÉTABLISSEMENTS DE COMMERCE DE DÉTAIL

Resuming consideration of Bill 115, An Act to amend the Retail Business Holidays Act and the Employment Standards Act in respect of the opening of retail business establishments and employment in them.

Reprise de l'étude du projet de loi 115, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les jours fériés dans le commerce de détail et la Loi sur les normes d'emploi en ce qui concerne l'ouverture des établissements de commerce de détail et l'emploi dans ces établissements.

The Vice-Chair: I would like to call the meeting to order. First of all, I would like to say that we are all quite happy to be here in Collingwood on August 1, this being the first day of our road show, as you can see, on the public hearings on Bill 115.

Before we go into the public hearings, I would like to call upon the honourable members to duly elect an acting Chairman for the duration of the public hearings. Are there any nominations?

Mr Mills: I would nominate Mr Cooper.

The Vice-Chair: Any further nominations?

Mr Sorbara: Is this a free vote?

The Vice-Chair: Yes, it is.

Mr Sorbara: I will second the nomination of Mr Cooper.

The Vice-Chair: There being no further nominations, I declare Mr Cooper duly elected.

COLLINGWOOD AND DISTRICT LABOUR COUNCIL

The Acting Chair (Mr Cooper): Could we have the first group of presenters, the Collingwood and District Labour Council?

You will be allowed half an hour for your presentation. You can either make a half-hour presentation or else you can make a short presentation and allow time for questions and comments from each of the caucuses which will be split evenly.

Please introduce yourself for Hansard.

Mr Doupe: I have prepared a brief on short notice. My committee has been away. My name is Murray Doupe. I am the president of the Collingwood and District Labour Council, which is affiliated to the Ontario Federation of Labour and the Canadian Labour Congress in Ottawa. Our labour council represents five unions and approximately 1,000 workers.

We are committed to working towards a program for the retraining of unemployed workers. We feel that Bill 115 fails to recognize the right of workers to a common pause day. The wording in the proposed amendment to subsection 4(2) says "shall take into account" and "should be maintained." However, the council in passing a bylaw failed to maintain the principle that holidays are to remain a common pause day, that is, to ensure they remain days on which most businesses are not open and most persons do not have to work.

In Collingwood, Sunday shopping has been passed by the town council so that any or all stores can be open on Sunday.

On July 28, 1991, in our local paper a full-page ad appeared for Zellers giving 25% to 50% off certain goods only if they were purchased on Sunday. The ad read, "The lowest price is the law." If businesses can give discounts on Sunday, why not the same discount any day from Monday to Saturday? This would bring the consumers in during the week and still give the people jobs in this time of recession.

Closing the doors for a common pause day, as we have traditionally done in Ontario, is not going to send consumers storming from this area to cross-border shopping; it is at least a three-hour drive. Tourists do not come to Collingwood because of open Sunday shopping. They come to ski on our many ski slopes, to boat in our waterways and to enjoy our other summer and winter sports activities.

All Sunday shopping will do is spread some of the hours of shopping over a seven-day period instead of a six-day period. The staff will not be increased, the hours they work will be adjusted according to peak sales times. Workers in general do not want to give up their Sundays. Because of Sunday work, families and friends have been kept apart on the only day most people can plan to be together.

In Collingwood, we have no day care open on Sunday, private or public, which presents yet another problem for the working parent. Where do they find care for their children? Our public transit does not run on Sundays or holidays, thus presenting another problem for workers and shoppers.

In this community, if the large grocery chains such as Loblaws and IGA were to stay open on Sundays the small, family-run corner stores would be unable to compete; they would be forced to close, thus putting more people out of work, because these small stores hire students to work part-time.

In Collingwood, we have many workers who, because of their choice of occupation, have to work some but not all Sundays—police, ambulance workers, firefighters, just to name a few—but their shifts are so arranged that they are not required to work every Sunday. They still have some Sundays to spend as a family unit.

Surveys have shown that opening on Sundays does not create extra business; it just spreads the same amount of shopping to an extra day. In Collingwood, most of the large stores are now open at least 72 hours each week, providing ample time to shop.

In British Columbia, they have had open Sunday shopping for at least 10 years. Cross-border shopping has not decreased, it has increased, so Sunday shopping does not play any big part in the number of Canadians going to the US to shop. But their lower prices, our high taxes, free trade and the GST do play a large part in the reasons for going.

Open Sunday shopping can create problems for single mothers who find they have to work part-time. It affects the time they can spend with their children. Take, for example, a single mother in British Columbia, with two children, ages 13 and 15. She is a part-time cashier at a store in North Delta, a suburb of Vancouver. She rarely sees her teenagers. When they come home from school, she goes to work.

On the weekends, she is at work. On holidays, she is at work. She keeps in touch with them through notes scribbled on bits of paper. Here is one week's schedule: Monday, day off; Tuesday, 6 pm to midnight, gets home, quickly unwinds, gets some sleep; Wednesday, 10 am to 2 pm, hardly worth going to work; Thursday, day off; Friday, 6 pm to 10 pm, catches the bus, it is a 35-minute ride home; Saturday, 10 am to 6 pm—it is the busiest day of the week—gets home and is wiped out; Sunday, 9 am to 6 pm. They call this part-time.

What if she needs a Sunday free one week? She can request a day off, but she might lose two shifts that week as a result. "You do not ask very often," she said. Needless to say, where is the protection for asking for a Sunday off?

The end result is a negative impact on the employee's obligation to the family and religious beliefs; ultimately it puts a strain on the employer-employee relationship. Most of the workers only know what is promised at election time, not a full understanding of the workings of all the acts and bills that are being changed and amended.

The biggest argument against Sunday shopping is the social cost. One working parent on a Sunday means families cannot be together for meals or activities. Surveys have found that senior citizens in nursing homes get fewer visits and fewer outings with their families in areas where Sunday shopping is allowed. Attendance has dropped at family entertainment spots and church attendance has dropped even more. We need a common pause day of rest. As we watch our society change, let's take a step backwards in Collingwood and think, "Do we really want the effects that Sunday openings will bring?" I think not. To prevent this from happening, we know that there is only one way. We need a strong provincial law to stop the further erosion of our way of life.

The Acting Chair: Thank you very much. There will be about seven minutes for each caucus. Mr Sorbara.

Mr Sorbara: I want to thank the presenter for his submission. It is very reminiscent of the submission that we heard from the Labour Council of Metropolitan Toronto. My first question relates to your membership. You say the Collingwood labour council represents approximately 1,000 workers. What is the largest component of those 1,000 workers?

Mr Doupe: I do not know whether I quite understand your question.

Mr Sorbara: What is the biggest local union which makes up the 1,000 workers in the Collingwood labour council?

Mr Doupe: That would be the glass and brick workers, LOF Glass of Canada.

Mr Sorbara: Right. Now, is that facility open on Sunday?

Mr Doupe: Yes it is, Mr Sorbara.

Mr Sorbara: Is the Collingwood labour council organizing its troops and its forces to try and force that plant to close on Sunday?

Mr Doupe: No, that is not the point at all. I believe that the people who work there on shifts have days off through the week; and, you know, not everybody works every Sunday. Nobody is trying to force—

Mr Sorbara: The reality for Sunday openings in the retail sector is that very few workers have to work on Sunday, and even fewer have to work every Sunday unless you own the business yourself. If it is a one-person operation or a husband-and-wife operation, often the family members will keep the business open on Sunday if they choose. But the evidence that we have heard before this committee—at least from the hearings and we only have had hearings thus far in Toronto, but we are going around the province—is that most employers have a list of a few or as many as hundreds of people who are anxious to work those Sunday hours. One employer who has about 15 employees says he has a list of some 200 people, mostly students and young people who are looking for extra hours, and who are anxious to work if the store is open and if they qualify to work those hours.

So we are talking about even fewer demands on the workforce than would be the case at the glass works. What I cannot understand from labour councils is, if you really believe as you say in your first page, that most persons should not have to work on Sundays, why is the labour council here not trying to close down LOF?

Mr Doupe: I do not understand why you keep coming back to LOF. I do not think that was my point.

Mr Sorbara: Because it is a major employer and virtually every other worker in the province—whether you are a nurse or a firefighter, whether you are an auto worker with the CAW in Oshawa—virtually every other member of the workforce might be called upon to work on Sunday. If I am a secretary in a lawyer's office, that lawyer could say, "I'm sorry, I need you to come in on Sunday," and while the worker can refuse under the Human Rights Code, there is no other legislation to prevent that worker from being required for Sunday work. It just seems to me to be terribly inconsistent of the labour council to be arguing that no retail worker should work on Sunday, and yet you are not mounting a campaign to close the industrial establishments, which are the major employers, on Sunday. Retail workers represent a small fraction of people who work on Sunday. Is that not somewhat inconsistent?

Mr Doupe: The corner store that we spoke about, yes, they are family businesses and I would hate to see big corporations like Loblaws and IGA and so forth stay open all day Sundays and close these family stores. Students need work for summer. They need work to go back to school.

Mr Sorbara: Most students work all year round, part-time.

Mr Doupe: Not in this area, they do not. There are no jobs for them.

Mr Sorbara: But we are trying to make laws for the province as a whole.

Mr Doupe: I can understand that, but I am just saying to you, why not give students more work on weekends, because that is the only time in a lot of cases they get the opportunity to work, especially if they are going to school through the year. I am not against drugstores opening and this sort of thing; I am not at all. I am just saying total wide-open Sunday shopping.

Mr Sorbara: I appreciate that but even most of the big stores have said that they provide work for students and people who want to work part-time. Indeed, this government in its wisdom is presenting the most stringent rights in its bill so that nobody is going to have to work on Sunday in the retail business if he or she does not want to. Yet labour councils are still saying: "It doesn't matter. Still close the stores." But you are not arguing to close down the major manufacturers on Sunday. I just cannot see how that is consistent if your concern for workers is comprehensive.

There are lots of single mothers who will be working in your plant or in General Motors who have to put in that one Sunday a month on the assembly line. Why should they be required to work, and yet if you work for Loblaws and you want the opportunity to do those Sunday hours because it means more in the family bank account, the labour council argues that you should not have the opportunity to do that, particularly when you are protected by such strong rights in this bill?

Mr Doupe: In Collingwood, Mr Sorbara, we used to have the Collingwood shipyards. They hired 1,000 people. All of a sudden, for some reason, the shipyards closed. I am not knowledgeable of why they closed and so on.

Interjection.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Fletcher says it was because we were in power.

Mr Doupe: I would not even acknowledge that.

Mr Sorbara: Neither would he.

Mr Doupe: I am just saying that shipyards closed and we lost Bendix here, this sort of thing. I would hope that people would rather have a factory open and work Monday to Friday and be happy to get a paycheque instead of standing at a food bank.

Mr Sorbara: Absolutely. I agree with you entirely. I just think, and I will close with this, that it is high time we realized that some storekeepers need to participate in a Sunday market. We ought not to have the provincial government insisting that they have to close, particularly when to close might mean the demise of their business just like the demise of the shipyard here and some other things. I would encourage you, in closing, to reconsider that and talk to your workers about whether they really want the government in Toronto to pass an edict that says no store shall open in Collingwood even if the storekeepers and the workers want them to open and the citizens of the community want them to open.

Mr Carr: The goal the Solicitor General cited when he introduced the bill was to have a common pause day. On the last page of your submission you said, "We need a strong provincial law to stop any further erosion of our way of life." But on the first page you say, "We feel that under Bill 115 of the present act it fails to recognize the right of workers to a common pause day." So what you are saying is that in your opinion the government has failed to meet the mandate of legislating a common pause day. Is that correct?

Mr Doupe: I think it is the wording there in one section: "should be maintained." A little grey area, that is what I thought, in my opinion.

Mr Carr: You do not think this bill has done that?

Mr Doupe: I am really not that knowledgeable about government and how it works, and I think there are thousands and thousands of people like me. But I am saying that when presenting this brief, we felt that just the words "take into account" and "should be maintained"—

Mr Carr: You are not alone in that. I have been here since September 6 and I find it is strange to see how government works sometimes as well. We are all learning as we go along.

The next question I have relates to the protection of workers, which I guess is the paramount concern of yourself and the council. We heard from some of the employers in Toronto, some of the major employers of people, like the Bay and so on, where they said that they are even in favour of strengthening the protection of the workers so that they do not have to work. A couple of them said: "We have workers in our retail stores who do not want to be there, and if their faces are hanging down to the floor it is going to hurt sales. We would rather have people who want to work." Some people are concerned because they say you get forced into working, even though there are really tough laws in place. Some of the protection they have here is where you can, say, refuse to work and give notice that you do not want to work on Sunday, even at the last minute, even if you had agreed to it before. What would you say to those employers who say that we can protect the worker; we can legislate and put in protection for the workers so that they do not have to work, for whatever reason—if they want to spend it with a family, or because of religious reasons they do not want to work on Sunday. Some of the employers say it can be done. What would you say to them?

Mr Doupe: I do not have a big problem with that. I am just saying if a person is forced to work on a Sunday and be away from the family every Sunday, I think that is a bad thing. If the employer said they could arrange for them to be off without penalty and that, then I cannot see any really big problem with that. I am just saying as long as it is not wide-open Sunday shopping.

Mr Carr: One of the things that has come up too is that some of these people who have been in the business say they see an increase in employment. Different people were giving different figures. Some of the large employers said as many as 2,000. Some of them would be part-time. But if in fact it is true, there were quite a few of them who came through who said that they would be hiring more people. Conceivably, in a lot of places you would actually be looking at an increase in membership, if they did in fact hire more people. But I was just wondering whether you believed that and, if so, why you would not be interested in something that would potentially increase the membership and the amount of employment for your particular groups. Do you disagree with that? Is that why? Maybe you could enlighten us on that.

Mr Doupe: I do not know about other places, but I know about Collingwood. As far as the bigger chains go, I have spoken to some—one chap in particular at Loblaw's—and they felt business had dropped off on a Sunday and they really did not need that many people to work. They just moved them around or whatever. If the bulk of your business is not on a Sunday, it is on Saturday in this area, because most people want to be on the beach or wherever on Sunday, like Wasaga Beach in this area, or hiking, or enjoying the outdoors, especially in the summertime, and mostly in winter too, because with the skiing here, a lot of people are on the slopes—in a lot of cases, you can buy groceries in Toronto cheaper than you can here, whether it be for transport, whatever it may be, for materials. But a lot of people bring their goods with them and go right to their cottages on the weekends, especially on Sundays. As far as increasing and hiring people to work on Sundays, their business is just not there.

Mr Carr: Some of the tourist groups are saying we are in a competitive position and that people, for example, in the United States who are looking for places to go to spend their tourist dollar can go to New York state, and many of them are coming into Ontario—we forget about that—and that a lot of those people are used to having Sunday shopping and come up here and think it is here. Then when they find out it is not, they go back, and word spreads to the people back in New York state that Ontario does not have it. While there are a number of factors, certainly the beautiful area up here being the number one attraction, it is a factor in people deciding, for example, in New York state, to come up here for a weekend. Do you think that is not the case, that they do not consider Sunday shopping as being a part of it, or how would you deal with that?

Mr Doupe: As far as Americans coming to Ontario or the rest of Canada, I think they are a little hesitant at the moment because of the cost of gasoline and the cost of goods. I know we have some American friends and they have said it is really costly to come. They love to come to Ontario, and especially the ski areas, but if it costs any more—it is getting phenomenal, especially for goods and gasoline and so forth, so they would rather spend their time in their own area.

Mr Carr: All I can say is it is a beautiful area and Americans are missing a great deal if they do not come up here.

Mr Doupe: I agree.

Mr Fletcher: Thank you, Murray, for the presentation. I have just a couple of questions and a couple of comments. As far as the employee protection part of the bill is concerned, do you think it should be a little tougher, strengthened a little more? Is it okay the way it is?

Mr Doupe: I think it should be very clear. I feel that, as I said before, it should be maintained. I should be on holidays this morning, but I am here, so I am just saying that to be very clear about the wording.

Mr Fletcher: And just make it a little tougher.

The employees at LOF Glass, are they on a continental work shift?

Mr Doupe: Yes, they are.

Mr Fletcher: You know what a continental work shift is. Has that always been the practice at LOF?

Mr Doupe: To my knowledge.

Mr Fletcher: As for the labour council and what it was doing for other employees, I remember when I was president of the labour council in Guelph that Uniroyal in Kitchener went on strike to try to prevent the continental work shift coming in, which would have had them working Sundays. I know the labour movement is trying to make sure that people are not working every day of the week, and I applaud your efforts.

As far as working and the big stores that are opening—you alluded to what Loblaw's said. I remember the last time the bill was going around the province—Bill 113, which was the Liberal bill—Loblaw's was saying that rather than hiring more people, work schedules would simply be adjusted for existing employees to compensate for the extra day. I know you said that. Is that the practice you are seeing, or is that what you anticipate if wide-open Sunday opens up?

Mr Doupe: That is what I anticipate with wide-open Sunday—continental shifts at LOF Glass. I also work 12-hour shifts. I am an ambulance officer. I understand what it is to work on Sundays. I understand what it is not to be able to be with my children when one of them graduates, and so on, if I have to work. I understand that. When I took the job on, I understood that I had to work on Sundays, but, for instance, if you were hired to work and when you were hired there was no mention of Sunday work and then after you have worked there a few years, wherever you may be, legislation comes along and says, "You work Sunday," that was not part of your hiring. Of course you accept it. I do not mind working the odd Sunday, but I certainly do not want to work every Sunday.

Mr Fletcher: This is my last question. If Collingwood were to open wide-open for Sunday shopping, you do not have bus service on Sunday, so it means that would have to be an increase in cost. Your police forces would have to have extra people because of the increased shoplifting that could be going on.

Mr Doupe: As you say, there is no public transit on Sunday. It certainly is going to increase the workload on the police force, I would think, which would incur more costs to the taxpayer. All sorts of services, I think, would be more busy if they were open.

Mr Fletcher: Who is going to pay for the extra services?

Mr Doupe: It would be the taxpayers.

Mr Mills: Thank you very much for your presentation. As you know, the real thrust of this bill is to preserve the common pause day, and through that preservation of the common pause day to enhance family life. I am very interested in your brief. It is the first time there has been mention of the effect on seniors through not having visitation from their relatives who work on Sundays. I know from my experience in visiting senior homes how very important those visits are on the weekend. Thank you for bringing that to the attention of the committee. We are here to listen, and I thank you for that part of your very well put presentation.

Mr Morrow: I would like to thank you further for taking the time out to come and present this morning. I just wanted to touch briefly on LOF. They negotiate their continental work week, do they not?

Mr Doupe: I do not know much about how LOF negotiates. I do not know a lot about them.

Mr Morrow: Okay. I apologize for that. Obviously most retail workers in this area do not belong to local unions, so they would not have the protection of the union, or the LOF.

Mr Doupe: That is correct.

Mr Morrow: This bill would therefore basically help the retail workers in this area.

Mr Doupe: I believe so, yes.

Mr Morrow: The last question I have is that you have talked briefly about being able to shop in six days and not in seven, and the amount of money being spread out over seven days would be the same as six. You have also talked about the demise—I guess what I am basically getting to is that if the amount of money of six days is spread out over seven, you are not really creating any new money in the municipality or the area.

Mr Doupe: No, I do not believe so, not when we are open approximately 72 hours every week.

Mr O'Connor: I found your brief very interesting. Perhaps you could elaborate a bit on the devastation that must have taken place when the shipyards left. The community must be really trying to build up on the tourist aspect of the area. Would you believe that is correct?

Mr Doupe: I understand your question. To promote tourism?

Mr O'Connor: Yes, in this area.

Mr Doupe: Definitely. We certainly depend on tourism in Collingwood, but you need the year-round hourly worker to look after the services to pay the bills. Tourists are fine, but you really cannot depend totally on tourists. We enjoy having tourists. Tourists are a big part of this area, but you need the hourly working people. We need industry here. I hope everyone is listening. We need industry here.

Mr O'Connor: Increased part-time work will not help the economy then.

Mr Doupe: I do not think so.

The Acting Chair: Thank you very much. The time is up. Mr Doupe, on behalf of the committee, I would like to thank you for your presentation.

BARRIE AND DISTRICT MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION

The Acting Chair: I would like now to call somebody from the Barrie and District Ministerial Association. I would like to thank you for appearing today. What we do is we allow you a half-hour. You can take that time any way you choose. You can do a half-hour presentation or you can do a short presentation and then the remaining time will be allotted among all three caucuses equally. Could you please identify yourself and proceed.

Mr Storey: My name is Arthur Storey. I am the minister of Grace United Church in Barrie and I have come representing the Barrie and District Ministerial Association.

I would like, if I may, to present this brief and then respond to questions. I might say off the cuff, before I start, two or three things. One of the things: I am very nervous. I do not know why. I hope this is a friendly process.

The Acting Chair: It is very friendly.

Mr Storey: The way the process of notification and general direction on how to prepare a brief was carried out was a little bit disconcerting. I received the instructions on how to prepare a brief yesterday in the mail, and this being my first endeavour, I hope you will bear with me.

Mr Mills: It is like preparing a sermon.

Mr Storey: Thank you. You will find that much here is in general terms, but I will proceed.

On behalf of the Barrie and District Ministerial Association, an organization representing the Christian churches of Barrie and region, here are presented certain concerns for your consideration in relation to current and proposed legislation dealing with business opening on Sundays and holidays and a common pause day.

Remarks will be gathered around four areas which, for convenience, are labelled a practical concern, a social concern, a political concern and a religious concern.

A practical concern: The practical concern relates to an apparent ongoing inconsistency in past and proposed legislation vis-à-vis those businesses that have been and apparently will be exempt from Sunday and holiday closure provisions, ie, the hospitality industry. Implied in the general language of the proposed legislation is an entitlement, if not right, for workers to refuse work on Sundays and holidays for all workers except those employed in exempt businesses. This seems neither fair nor just. There must have been a valid principle behind this entitlement to refuse work on Sundays and other holidays.

Such businesses that are not essential to life and health, such as those that are hospitality- and tourism-related, seem to have been stigmatized and left uncovered in relation to this entitlement. Such businesses, by the nature of the employment offered—hourly rated, unskilled service—encompass many workers without the skills or practical leverage to negotiate or bargain for their work time in relation to their family or personal quality-of-life needs. Many health care workers suffer from a similar vulnerability and they are also exempted.

These workers may have more need of the support of legislation than others if they have been specifically left out. Expediency and commercial interests here seem to be the determining forces, not justice. Proposed changes in the legislation do not convincingly seem to address this inconsistency. Admittedly, this is a difficult matter to govern. However, the provincial government, by its very nature, is the main practical defence of the worker in general and is the body most able to shape and protect the quality-of-life issues in our system. It seems reasonable to expect the provincial government to maintain concern and initiative in the practical matter of fairness and justice for all workers, no matter how complex the issues.

Simply, why should any group of workers be left outside the protection of legislation providing for the negotiation and determination of their quality of life in relation to work hours, particularly workers who may be very vulnerable? Does proposed legislation really provide effective protection for all workers?

A social concern: It would not be a stretching of reality to premise that the pressure for liberalizing opening hours on Sundays and holidays for retail businesses comes from large commercial interests whose motivation is largely profit or market share. The media have indicated that you have already received some forceful presentations, including some dire warnings.

In a capitalistic, market-based society, profit is not a bad thing. On the contrary, a healthy economy benefits everyone. However, arguments that support marvellous economic advantages of open Sundays and holidays must be judged by who presses the hardest. Apart from some voiced concern regarding the convenience of shopping hours from among consumers, there has not been a large groundswell of public demand for change in this area, even after some opportunity to experience the new scenario. Large commercial interests are the ones who speak and demand the loudest. Small businesses, churches, community groups, workers' organizations and many others speak about a concern for the quality of life for families and individual workers.

Our history, traditions and legislative practice have stated in effect that while accepting the value and worth of commercial enterprise to society, we prize above all the value of people, the dignity of workers, the stability and worth of the family and the quality of life of people. The reason we have any discussion of these issues and have legislation upon which to work grew out of the struggles in the 18th and 19th centuries to establish these values during the Industrial Revolution. Often Christian leaders and churches then led the struggle, out of direct concern for the vulnerable and oppressed in society. Sunday laws were instituted to give a pattern of protection, rest and even education to workers long before they became directly related to religious customs or practice. These original concerns still are being expressed by the churches.

Again, the provincial government, more than others, is the body that has had and still has the paramount position in this whole area of quality of life and it must not lose patience in the complexity of the problem or devolve upon others this serious responsibility.

There is a current crisis in the ongoing problem of maintaining the quality of life among our people and families. The pace of life, the pressures of a materialistic society, the rapidity of change are all creating incredible strains. Statistics of all kinds—family breakdown, abuse, chemical abuse, crime, etc—all point to this as fact. The cost of failure to attempt to deal practically with the dynamics here will never be available for comparison with profits gained. In human terms, loss here is loss for everyone.

A political concern: The concern here is that proposed legislation lays responsibility for decision-making in this whole area upon municipal governments. These governments are the most vulnerable to pressure of a financial and commercial nature. Although most accessible to local conditions, councils are the most vulnerable to the uncertainties of economics and the pressures of special interests. These councils lack the traditions, the overview, the resources and the machinery to be truly disinterested and just to businesses, workers and families. They are too close to the particulars to have the luxury to consider the general good.

Given the already expressed concern of this particular provincial government for quality-of-life matters in general and the urgency and history described elsewhere in these comments, it seems inconceivable that this proposed legislation would be passed without at least guarantees of responsible ongoing involvement of provincial authority built into the draft legislation.

As an aside, frankly the amendments that relate to the Employment Standards Act appear to provide no real protection for workers. In fact, they seem to guarantee abuse and hardship for those workers who think that they have rights and entitlements.

A religious concern: It is our concern that in the past revision of the legislation under discussion, and in current discussions, the subject of religion is not discussed. In fact, it is avoided. There was a very religious element in the development of early legislation. Like it or not, religion, not specific religions, is a very real part of the reality of life and society. In all these discussions the subject of religion is not being allowed to surface. While this subject may not seem to fit into the immediate matter at hand precisely, it should certainly be of concern to this standing committee and any discussion that relates to justice and quality of life in our society.

Built into the original and subsequent laws which governed Sundays and holidays was a guarantee of the integrity of faith and the right and importance of religious practice. Few legislators then shrank from asserting these values. Practically, the value of faith in the individual, and religion in general, was acknowledged.

True, this was a society that saw itself as uniquely and generally, if not solely, Christian. The demise of that homogeneous or one-religion society, or rather the growing of a multicultural, multifaith society, and a growing concern for separation of church and state, have resulted in the elimination of all reference to religion in the discussion of this and almost all legislation. This is unfortunate, because lost also has been much discussion of the rights and, more importantly, the value and place of religion. The fact that, universally, declarations of human rights and freedoms defend specifically the freedom of religion implies not only the importance of the individual freedom of faith and the practice of religion, but also the intrinsic value of both for life in general.

In the process of ridding ourselves of the embarrassment of discussing a difficult issue, have we left out something vital? Given the immense potential contribution of religion and religions to society, have we missed something important? In our widening and developing concept of society, do we fail to secure for all people what was guaranteed for the Christians and, admittedly, a few others in the early legislation, namely, the right of freedom of faith and the practice of religion? Did we thereby deprive ourselves of the benefits of religion in general to the quality of life in our society?

The term "holiday" is, in its original definition, a religious event or period of time. Where is the protection and the guarantee that existed heretofore, more narrowly, for the individual to live and practise his or her religion? Practically, it would appear that the right or freedom and the ability to practise religious faith are unprotected.

This whole area of life can be dictated and controlled by an employer. We are "entitled" to vote, and provision is guaranteed to make that possible. We are "entitled" to leisure time, and now that is provided for. We are "free" to worship and practise religion, but not "entitled" to do so, nor is provision made. Where do religious holidays, the original holidays, get protection from this society that otherwise seems dedicated to the richness of inclusiveness and diversity?

Ladies and gentlemen, this is not a mingling of church and state. It has very little to do with organized religion. It has rather to do with fundamental rights and the value of a varied and powerful force in our society. Not to have a concern for this area does not, as it may appear, create a situation of equality and justice. On the contrary, it can leave free all the unfortunately incipient and destructive forces of bigotry, racism and prejudice which will do their ugly work and, at the same time, deprive us of a wealth of richness, variety and intrinsic good. Dare we continue to ignore such a difficult but important element of life? Is it sufficient to throw up the hands and say it is not our job?

Finally, and in conclusion, may we express our surprise that the proposed legislation seems committed to a common pause day but does not seem to really strongly denominate that pause day as Sunday. Practically, we now have a common pause day in Sunday. Why is this day not specified more strongly to entrench the idea? If the rationale is in some way to attempt to reduce attention to what is seen as a "Christian" day, the result will likely be failure. We have a common pause day now in Sunday. Its associations will change in time but the loss of that particular day could very well mean the loss of this rich potential resource for ever. It would seem to be better to preserve what we have and enhance it strongly for the value of all.

The effect of some of the wording in the proposed legislation and the lack of a strong emphasis on establishing Sunday as a common pause day does raise the question: Is this a sincere effort to deal with the Sunday and holidays issue, to establish a genuinely universal common pause day, or is this a good-sounding but in the end meaningless legislation? This is a question that concerns our organization very greatly.

Thank you for your attention.

The Acting Chair: That leaves about five minutes for each caucus.

Mr Daigeler: Thank you very much, and you do not have to be nervous. We certainly appreciate that you took the time to put your thoughts down on paper and to appear before us.

We did have already a presentation from a ministerial association yesterday, and you are here today to represent, I presume, an interdenominational group of ministers. Obviously, by the fact that you are representing the ministers, one could be left with the impression that it is just the ministers trying to protect their particular bailiwick in terms of making sure that people can come to their congregational services on Sunday. I am exaggerating, but I think sometimes the feeling can be left out there that this is what it is.

I would like to ask you to what extent that question of Sunday shopping, Sunday work, time off, is being discussed, not just by the ministers but by the members of your congregations. You were referring to the fact that there has not been a large groundswell of public demand for change. At the same time, if I am not mistaken, Collingwood has decided to be open, so there seems to be some support. I am just wondering to what extent you are speaking for the ministers, as it were, and to what extent you are speaking for the members of the congregations.

Mr Storey: I can only give an impression, and I think that I speak both for the ministers and the congregations. I would like to point out that church life, religious life, is a seven-day activity. At this particular point I do not think church attendance is affected as much by these circumstances as many people think, but the seven-day activity that involves ministers and their people has to do with the quality of life.

The level of counselling that professional ministers find themselves engaged in, the ongoing dealing with the problems of family life, is what raises most of these issues. It is not so much whether we have formal attendance of worship on Sunday; it is the general quality of life of our own people and the people around us. This is where most of these comments have come from: a deep concern for trying to hold family life together and face the realities.

I think perhaps I am suggesting that what we hear from a legislative point of view does not really reflect a confidence in the actuality of families being able to have much say as to what happens. If I could just give you a point of reference, a large amount of the commercial activity on the weekends takes place with part-time workers. This involves a large number of young people in families, teenagers. These young people have their own reasons for working. They are not likely to resist the strength of an employer when the employer dictates when they will work. Therefore that feeds back into the family and the family's ability to enjoy life together and so on. That is where we—

Mr Daigeler: If I could just interrupt a little bit, because we have only five minutes for each caucus. I appreciate what you are saying, but where I am coming from is that, so far at least, we have had quite a few people come to us and say, "I want and I have the right to work on Sunday and you are taking it away from me by not giving me the opportunity to do business on Sunday." I think it makes it very difficult, certainly for me as a politician, to argue, "No, you shouldn't have that right." That is what I am trying to say. You may have the view that you are putting forward, but is that a view that the members of your congregation are sharing, and are they actively discussing it? Are they doing something about it?

What I am trying to say is that it is very difficult for us to legislate something that is not supported by a large number of people. At least from the representations that we have had so far, the mood seems to be going in the other direction; namely, people saying, "I have the right to work on Sunday and I want to work on Sunday."

Mr Storey: I must admit I have not heard this kind of thing. I certainly have heard a lot of small business people complaining that they have to work now because they have to be involved in the marketplace to maintain their share of the market. I hear a lot of small business people complaining about this. I do hear those who are employed in large businesses really saying, "When it gets down to it, if the employer says I have to work, I have to work." So you have workers who are complaining about the situation in a larger commercial establishment where the reality is that if the employer says you have to work, you will go and work. You do not have the resources to resist the pressure of the employer.

I might quote one person who finds himself in a high level of a commercial endeavour in a department store, who says, "When the sales are at their peak, you put in your best team." If Sunday is the day the best sales are going to take place, then you will see that your best employers are there. This is the kind of reality in the business world that our people have to deal with, and we are trying to help balance that against people who are struggling to hold family life together.

Mr Carr: Thank you very much for your presentation. It was an excellent job. One of the concerns that many people have, or some of the people like yourself who are opposed to Sunday shopping, is that the tourism sections are so broad, and virtually the entire province could be allowed to open. As I look at them, there is not a place in this province that does not meet the criteria.

As a result, many people feel that what is going to happen is that it is going to take a longer time, but there is going to be Sunday shopping. It is going to be a snowball effect. Windsor is going to open and then the neighbouring municipality says, "They're open, so we are." Collingwood opens, so neighbouring people say, "We're going to lose business," and they will open. Is that the way you see it happening with the present legislation? Maybe I could just ask for your comments on that, if that is what you see happening over the next little while.

Mr Storey: That is what I and many of my colleagues are afraid is going to happen. It will be a general erosion. It seems to be a matter of market share, of not missing out, and therefore we are afraid this will happen. I really am worried that we can stop this process. I know it sounds like a radical kind of solution, but we think the social costs, the personal costs, are worth the effort. We really do think this is what will happen.

Mr Carr: What about some of the other areas? There are many industries. For example, in this day and age you can go out and drink beer on Sunday. You can go to a movie theatre. I come from the Oakville area. You can go down and watch the Blue Jays, for example. What do you say to people who say there are many things that you can do in society and to be fair you should either shut everybody down or open everybody up? What do you say to those people? Are you in favour of cutting back, for example, on movie theatres and the bars and so on? Would you move us back? How do you answer that suggestion that it is not fair, that shopping is no different than going to a baseball game or a movie theatre?

Mr Storey: I cannot speak for all my colleagues in this particular area, because there is as much diversion of opinion on this as there would be in any other area. Personally, my own feeling is that there are differences of activity and we have to accept the fact that shopping has become almost a leisure activity. So it is really difficult.

However, we seem to have reached a kind of balance about those things that add to the quality of life. Leisure activities, sports and so on, have been accepted as part of leisure-time activity, and that does require some people to work. But that does not necessarily mean that therefore everything has to open.

In the last presentation somebody asked about the tourists coming from the United States to visit in Canada and not being able to shop. I do a lot of travelling myself, and what my expectations are as a tourist are not the same as a local inhabitant's. The wide-open shopping is not of as much interest to me as the things I am interested in that relate to tourism. However, the local retailer who is looking for a market share might see that from a different point of view. I am sorry, I am not sure I answered your question.

Mr Carr: It was helpful. The other area, and this is the area where obviously you are the expert, gets into the religious field. A group of ministers from one of the other areas came in and was quoting from the Bible—how, strictly speaking, if we were to interpret the Bible and the commandments about not working on Sunday, we should not be going to baseball games and things like that.

That is why when we start saying “on religious grounds”—and I know you put something in there—if we were to interpret it, then to be fair everybody would have to close down. I am just wondering why, in order to make the argument, we throw in the religious aspect of it. Is that a big thrust of the reason that you do not want to, because of the basic principles and the commandments?

Mr Storey: I hope you will not misunderstand what I said about religion. There are people in our society who feel bound by religious laws to conform to certain behaviours. This representation really does not take that point of view. In a multicultural, multifait society, we have to be fair to all people. If some people feel they cannot work on Sunday, then they need to be protected, I feel, as their religious right, but we are not advocating that.

The suggestion that had to do with religion really is that all religions seem to have been left uncovered with the change of legislation and practice, so that where at one time Christians at least had the advantage of the practice of their religion, now none of the religions has any opportunity to negotiate, with the support of the government, some of the things that relate to the practice of religion. Any religion—pick one—has some things that the worker would like to be able to negotiate with his employer to allow him or her to practise his or her faith. That is where my point of view is coming from, in more broad terms. As for rules as to whether you should worship or work on Sunday, that should be, with proper protection, worked out between the employer and the employee.

Mr Wessenger: First of all, I want to thank you for a very thoughtful presentation. I would like to zero in on some of your comments with respect to the amendments to the Employment Standards Act. To start with, you indicated you feel the amendments provide no real protection for workers. Is that a general statement or is that really applied to those workers you identified in a weak bargaining position, the ones, for instance, that do not have union representation? It would be fair to say, I think, that members of the union would certainly have more than adequate protection under the act. Is it those more susceptible part-time people you are referring to there?

Mr Storey: I am referring to those who are the most vulnerable, those who are not protected by systems. The legislation says one thing, but can it deliver to the single mother who really must work a number of part-time jobs to keep things together, or to the teenager who is a very integral part of our commercial system? These are the people we are most concerned about.

Just as my own response, I have three daughters who are all involved in this process. One, during the last series of open Sundays in Barrie, was informed, when she said she did not want to work on Sundays, “Well, temporarily you can do this, you can refuse to work on Sunday, but when we see how the law settles down, we may have to make a decision about whether you can stay with us or not.” How can you fight that kind of logic? It is so easy to shuffle people around and lose the ones who want to make a stand.

Mr Wessenger: Do you see any means of strengthening the amendments to the Employment Standards Act, or do you think it is just a problem that cannot really be resolved through protective legislation?

Mr Storey: Is it fair for me to say that I think it cannot be made stronger?

Mr Wessenger: Yes.

Mr Storey: That is the optimist in me. I think it could be made stronger to make certain there are systems to protect those who do not have leverage in the society.

Mr Wessenger: Do you have any specific suggestions in that regard?

Mr Storey: Without some kind of system and the ongoing involvement of the provincial government, I cannot see how any protection could be very effective. If there is not some kind of point of recourse that relates to an authority strong enough to have some weight, I cannot see how any legislation will really protect.

Mr Wessenger: Would it be fair to say that it might be a question of administrative backup, of when you had the strong administration, it might be workable?

Mr Storey: I would hope so.

Mr Wessenger: Is it fair to say that you see the basic thrust of protecting workers as the whole question of restricting the opening on Sundays?

Mr Storey: I am sorry.

Mr Wessenger: The main thrust of protecting the common pause day is the restrictions on the Sunday openings. Is that where you see the main aspect of protecting people, protecting families?

Mr Storey: From our point of view, yes, I think so.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, Rev Storey. On behalf of the committee, I would like to thank you for your presentation.

Mr Storey: Thank you for the opportunity. I appreciate a system that allows us to do this, and your attention.

TOWN OF COLLINGWOOD

The Acting Chair: I would like to now call on a representative from the town of Collingwood. The format we have been following is that you are allowed one half-hour. You can give your presentation for a full half-hour, or you can make a short presentation and allow questioning from each caucus. I understand we are starting with a 10-minute presentation on video.

Mr Lloyd: That is correct.

The Acting Chair: Could you please identify yourself.

Mr Lloyd: I am Councillor Rick Lloyd from the town of Collingwood. I have along with me Councillor Bonnie Griffiths as well from the town. Mr Chair, committee members, ladies and gentlemen, on behalf of the town of Collingwood I want to take this opportunity to welcome you to our beautiful community. Hopefully, you will have time to visit and enjoy our attractions during your stay. In the event time does not permit, I have taken the liberty of arranging with Lisa Freedman a short video presentation. You will see Collingwood as it is today, and the potential for our area to grow, particularly in the areas of tourism, recreation, and leisure services.

Mr Lloyd: The town of Collingwood, with a population of 12,500, stands in a very favourable position in every sense of the word. Both natural and man-made circumstances allow us to offer a long list of amenities one can enjoy in the most beautiful countryside of Ontario that you have just seen.

We are the major service centre for an area extending from Owen Sound to Barrie. Collingwood has the best of both worlds, close enough to the major population centres of Ontario and yet far enough away to enjoy an unspoiled natural environment.

Collingwood is committed to recreational and cultural activities and boasts over 150 clubs, organizations and associations that involve people of all ages. Organizations such as the Blue Mountain Foundation for the Arts focus attention on art shows, musical presentations as well as live theatre events.

Collingwood considers this area as a four-season tourist destination point. We are located less than a driving day away from a majority of the population of North America. Collingwood is well situated to take advantage of increased leisure time and spending. During the winter, Collingwood is transformed into the ski capital of Ontario, where downhill and cross-country ski enthusiasts enjoy excellent conditions. Top-level ski competitions that attract North America's best are hosted at the following ski clubs: Blue Mountain Resorts, Alpine, Craighleith, Devil's Glen, Georgian Peaks, Osler Bluff and the Toronto Ski Club.

Major local attractions include tours of the world-famous Blue Mountain Pottery, the popular Candy Factory, Kaufman house, Collingwood Museum, scenic caves and caverns, the Blue Mountain slide ride and water slide. The Georgian Triangle tourist and information centre offers convention services and lodging assistance as well as tourist information. The list goes on, with Wasaga Beach offering one of the world's longest freshwater sandy beaches. The Georgian trail, which we are quite proud of, 32 kilometres in length, offers cyclists, hikers and cross-country skiers magnificent views of Georgian Bay and the Niagara Escarpment with its interesting plant and animal life. There is more: hiking, sailing, golf, parks, fishing, flying and windsurfing. Need I say more. I sincerely hope you plan to move to Collingwood in the future.

Having said all this, what else do Collingwood and the three million annual area visitors need? Our retailers and real estate businesses must have the right to remain open on Sunday if they so choose. Council of the town of Collingwood, after hosting a public meeting on Monday, July 22, has taken the following position:

"That bylaw 91-47, being a bylaw under provision of the Retail Business Holidays Act to permit retail establishments to remain open on holidays, having been considered in committee of the whole, be presented, read a third time and finally passed this 22nd day of July 1991."

On behalf of council, the retailers and the citizens of the town of Collingwood, I urge the New Democratic Party of Ontario to consider legislation that will permit this community to grow and blossom, and I solicit the support of the official opposition and the third party.

Mr Sorbara: Thank you for a delightful presentation and a very good public relations piece for the town of Collingwood. I noted the reference to political stability. I take it, then, that the video was made before the last provincial election.

Mr Lloyd: Well, no, since.

Mr Sorbara: Yes or no.

Mr Lloyd: Perhaps.

Mr Sorbara: I saw the copyright date there. I understand that Collingwood has recently passed a bylaw. In fact, I understand Collingwood has gone through some real turmoil on this issue of whether or not its retailers should be allowed to open for part or all of Sunday and that, after much consternation, you have come to a resolution of that issue. In your wisdom, you have decided you will look after the Sunday market as you see fit. Is that right?

Mr Lloyd: That is correct. We feel the merchants should have the right to choose and that the need is there, very much so, in this community. Actually, I urge this constituent to look at it with the whole province because I feel we must have the right. In this day and age, I think we feel there is so much legislation that it is certainly nice to give the people of Ontario the opportunity to choose on their own.

Mr Sorbara: Has the result been that in Collingwood stores are open the same hours or in the same configurations as they would be, say, on a Saturday or a Friday?

Mr Lloyd: They are choosing, many of them, to open after lunchtime on Sunday. With the tourist atmosphere that is happening in this community, they find they are quite busy. We feel that with today's age, the way it is happening, the community has changed. It had been embroiled around the shipyard for so many years, but when we lost that major industry we definitely took the routes of tourism. We feel that we have to go out and assist our industries and our commercial retailers as much as possible.

Mr Sorbara: Since that time, have you noticed a deterioration of the quality of life of your community in the town of Collingwood or in the area?

Mr Lloyd: Certainly not; everything but.

Mr Sorbara: Have the pastoral associations and the various churches noted a dropoff in church attendance, that you know of?

Mr Lloyd: Not that I know of. I can sympathize very much with their concerns. I think they are real concerns of everyone in this room. I believe we have reached a milestone and that it is time we took a very positive look towards this issue and get on with it.

Mr Sorbara: As a councillor, have you noticed any of your constituents who work in the retail sector coming to you with the message that they are being forced to work against their will on Sundays?

Mr Lloyd: Not so at all.

Mr Sorbara: If that were the case, would they come and talk with you about it?

Mr Lloyd: Yes, at this tier of government we are very amenable to phone calls and in fact people knocking on your door.

Mr Sorbara: Or at three o'clock in the morning.

Mr Lloyd: That is correct. I feel they would be there. I have not heard any concerns. In fact, I hear more concern of finding jobs in this community.

Mr Sorbara: Have the Sunday openings provided some new opportunities for people to work in the community?

Mr Lloyd: Yes, they have, definitely, for our students as well. As you are quite aware, it is very difficult this year for students to find jobs, and it has opened that avenue as well.

Mr Sorbara: Do you think that, if we created the same opportunities you have created in Collingwood for the entire province, the quality of life would deteriorate in Ontario?

Mr Lloyd: I do not believe so, sir. I think the quality of life will remain and that the church will become stronger.

Mr Sorbara: I just want to end by once again saying that was a pretty powerful piece. By the way, I think the piece, as it sets out what is happening in the global economy, is startlingly accurate. It is good to see that in Collingwood you are coming to grips with the internationalization of our economy. I hope you do get a chunk of the action here. I know how difficult it has been, particularly at the employment levels as you go through some very powerful restructuring. If you are aggressively recruiting the way that video indicates, it bodes well for the future, so good luck.

Mr J. Wilson: I too want to add my congratulations to the town and the council for the excellent video. It is the first time I had the opportunity to see it. It is certainly superb.

Mr Sorbara has covered most of the questions, as he very often does when he goes first.

Mr Sorbara: Repeat them and maybe you will get different answers.

Mr J. Wilson: No. Rick is very consistent, I can tell you that.

There has been some experience in the town in the past and recently with Sunday shopping. Can you tell us whether there is any preliminary data available—what is the word on the street for retailers? Is there an increase in retail sales, or is it really just spread out over the week, for instance, as the labour council said in its brief?

Mr Lloyd: No, I believe indications were very prominent last Sunday. Most retailers who remained open for Sunday shopping were quite thrilled with the turnout and the increased sales they had; as you are quite aware, Jim, we have a lot of weekend residents in this community. Unfortunately, that only gives an opportunity for one-day shopping, which is Saturday. But fortunately, with the opening this prior Sunday, there are greater sales in most of the stores that did open. They were quite delighted. It was profitable and an area that they feel will only get better.

Mr J. Wilson: Just to give the committee members a feel for the experience last Sunday, about what percentage of the retailers are open?

Mr Lloyd: I would say a good 35% to 40%.

Mr Carr: Getting back to this spread over the week, this is a tourist area. I will lay out the way I see it working. Tell me if I am wrong. I come from Oakville, from where many people come up to this fine area. If things are closed on Sunday they may still pick up the same goods, but they may go back to Oakville to pick them up and wait till Sunday. You are saying, then, that on the weekend, when your population increases dramatically with people coming from all over on the weekend, those people are spending their dollars locally, as opposed to going back home and spending it? Is that essentially what you are seeing has happened so that you are benefiting from it, and that regardless of whether people are spending more, this community is receiving more economic benefits?

1020

Mr Lloyd: That is very much so. We find that the problem with Sundays closed is that many people are bringing their goods from Oakville or Toronto or wherever they may be coming from. Thus, with the retail market being opened for them, they will spend more time shopping and spending money in this community. Again, that has become our largest industry for this whole area, the tourism aspect. I feel we must cater towards it and create as many jobs as possible. I really do not think at all that it will hurt the quality of life in the home.

Mr Carr: What was the vote in council?

Mr Lloyd: Unanimous.

Mr Carr: How many are on council?

Mr Lloyd: There are nine, including the mayor.

Mr Fletcher: That was a very good presentation. Is Bill 115, as it stands now, prohibiting you from opening up on Sundays? Is it standing in the way of anything you want to do?

Mr Sorbara: It is not the law yet.

Mr Fletcher: If it becomes law.

Mr Lloyd: If it becomes law with Sunday opening? We feel that allowing Sunday openings and allowing the retail people of Collingwood to open will certainly open a new avenue for extended businesses to advance in this community. We feel that with the closures, it is closing the door to the market in our community. As I have already indicated, with the tourism aspect being the largest industry of our community, it is only sensible that the choice of that extra day of shopping or retail available should be up to retailers.

Mr Fletcher: As I said, I really enjoyed the video and I would love to be able to come up and play golf or go for hikes with my family on a Sunday. But if I am one of those people who is not a business person, just a working person as I have always been and if I have to work on Sunday, when do I enjoy all the things I saw?

Mr Lloyd: If you had the opportunity to work on Sunday, then you have the opportunity to go skiing on Monday when there are no lineups at the ski hills and so on. Quite often we can enjoy the less crowded avenues in our community during the weekdays. Sometimes it might be more unique to take a day off during the week, a day of pause perhaps on a Monday, Tuesday or Wednesday and enjoy your leisure time, Sunday being inundated with newcomers to the community as well as weekend residents. I feel it is a totally different atmosphere, perhaps, than other areas of Ontario.

Mr Fletcher: I just noticed in your brief that the retailers and real estate businesses really are pushing for this. I did not see anything about the people who have to work on Sunday pushing for this. That is a minor point.

There was just one other point, and this is from the July 23 Owen Sound Sun Times, where the person representing LOF Glass said that employees there are in favour of it because employees working seven days a week should be able to shop on Sundays. But they are working a continental shift. Those employees only get one Sunday off a month. It is not really a valid statement to say that is why they want it.

Mr Lloyd: Actually, as indicated through the history of the province, many do work continental shifts; many do not get Sundays or weekdays off. When we can enjoy shopping from Monday through Saturday, they perhaps get Sunday and Monday off and do not have the same opportunities to do their shopping as you or I would. So if stores are open Sundays, they will have the same right as everyone else in the province. The workers at LOF and some other industries feel that it would be quite an asset to have Sunday shopping available so that they could do their groceries and their shopping as every other citizen in Ontario has the right to do.

Mr Mills: Thank you very much for appearing here, Councillor Lloyd, and for your presentation. We are here to listen with a certain amount of caution and the government is intent on the common pause day legislation. However, the tourist criteria and the draft regulations for them will indeed allow a place like Collingwood great opportunities, as you put it, to grow and blossom.

Mr Sorbara: I just wanted to ask either Mr Mills or a representative of the Ministry of the Solicitor General for clarification, and it arises out of Mr Fletcher's initial question to our witness. Mr Fletcher suggested to the witness from the town of Collingwood that Collingwood would be able to do everything it wanted to do in terms of allowing the storekeepers to make a free choice under Bill 115.

As I read Bill 115, it says in subsection (3) of section 4 that: "A bylaw may be passed"—that is, allowing some stores to stay open—"under subsection (1) only if there is compliance with the tourism criteria set out in the regulations made under this section."

Am I to understand from Mr Fletcher's question that a town like Collingwood could allow stores to stay open without reference to the tourism criteria?

The Acting Chair: Mr Mills, do you want to take that one?

Mr Mills: I have a legal adviser here from the Solicitor General and perhaps Janet would like to answer that.

Ms Scarfone: Janet Scarfone from the Ministry of the Solicitor General, legal branch.

In response to the question, a bylaw must be passed only if there is compliance with the tourism criteria, so the criteria have to be met before a tourism bylaw can be passed.

Mr Sorbara: In effect then, it is the case that unless the town of Collingwood identified an area or a particular set of stores as coming within the tourism criteria, they would not be allowed to stay open and that would be inconsistent with what they are doing now under the current law, is that right?

Ms Scarfone: What has to occur is that the area designated as a tourist area must comply with the requirements in the legislation before a bylaw can be passed.

Mr Sorbara: Right, thank you.

Mr Fletcher: On a point of order, Mr Chair: Does this bill impede them in any way? I did not suggest in any way that this bill was going to help or hinder them. I just wanted to know what they were going to say. I did not suggest anything.

Mr Sorbara: My problem was, by suggesting to the town of Collingwood that once Bill 115 is passed they would be able to do exactly what they are doing—

Mr Fletcher: It was your point that I did suggest, and I did not suggest that. I never would have suggested anything like that in the first place.

The Acting Chair: That was not a point of order, Mr Fletcher.

Councillor Lloyd, on behalf of the committee I would like to thank you for your presentation. Although there may be some disagreement on the best area to locate in Ontario, I am sure Collingwood will become second on most people's list.

Mr Lloyd: Thank you very much.

UNITED FOOD AND COMMERCIAL WORKERS, LOCAL 1977

The Acting Chair: Our next presenter will be from the United Food and Commercial Workers. As you know, you will be given half an hour to give your presentation. You can either make a half-hour presentation or a short presentation and allow members from each caucus to ask questions. Would you please identify yourselves for Hansard and then proceed.

Mr Williamson: My name is Brian Williamson and I am president of United Food and Commercial Workers

Local 1977. I merely represent Zehrs employees. With me is Alan McLean, the business agent from our local union. Al also is a permanent resident of Collingwood.

Mr Sorbara: You represent what employees?

Mr Williamson: Zehrs markets. We are going to make a brief submission. Our union has made several submissions, will be making more submissions and we will try to answer your questions as best we can.

I work for Zehrs, which is a retail food store chain in southwestern Ontario. It is owned by Loblaw's Corp. I have worked there for 17 years full-time in the stores, and Al worked for 15 years in the stores. We can really only speak to the Zehrs and, as we see it, working with Zehrs.

We, the United Food and Commercial Workers Local 1977, are pleased to have this opportunity to appear before this committee to present our members' views on the issue of Sunday shopping and Sunday working.

Our local union represents over 3,900 employees of Zehrs supermarkets in 40 stores, as well as employees of one Valu-Mart and two Mr Grocer stores. These employees work and live in the following cities and towns in southern Ontario: Guelph, Kitchener-Waterloo, Cambridge, Elmira, Fergus, Caledonia, Ancaster, Brantford, Ingersoll, Strathroy, Goderich, Kincardine, Port Elgin, Owen Sound, Wasaga Beach, Wingham, Listowel, Orangeville, Bolton, Uxbridge, Alliston, Stratford, London, St Thomas and Orillia.

Prior to presenting our brief to this committee, we would like to express our complete support for the brief presented to this committee by our Canadian director, Clifford Evans, at Queen's Park on Monday, July 29, 1991. We have enclosed, at the conclusion of our presentation, a copy of Brother Evans's recommended amendments.

This is an extremely emotional issue and we must all look at this objectively and make recommendations that are going to benefit the many, as opposed to the very few selected businesses motivated by greed. We are very concerned and sympathetic to the businesses, both small and large, that have been hurt by the current recession and, contrary to popular belief, the labour movement and our union in particular are not opposed to companies earning a profit. After all, profits usually ensure job security and job creation.

That is why we must address this most important issue with a view to solving the problems by strengthening the legislation to prevent abuses in an effort to meet the government mandate of ensuring a common pause day for retail workers.

During the brief period between June 1990 and March 1991, when the Retail Business Holidays Act was struck down in the courts, there was no legislation regulating retail hours of business in the province, and many if not most food retailers opened for business on Sundays.

Fortunately, the employers in Local 1977 we have collective agreements with chose exclusively to remain closed, providing a common pause day, allowing their employees a day to be with their families. These employers, however, were considering having to open to protect their market share if legislation to provide for a common pause day was not legislated by the government.

There are too many myths surrounding this issue to be discussed in our presentation, but we wish to discuss the following. First, the creation of jobs: To dispel this myth, we should look at the Zehrs markets situation in the towns of Port Elgin and Kincardine. In Port Elgin, which is open under the tourist exemption provisions of the act—and I would add that Port Elgin and Wasaga Beach are the only two Zehrs locations that are open on Sundays—when they were opened in the late 1970s, from day one they were open July and August because they were exempted under the tourist exemption. Historically they have only been open those two months, and people hired there understood that they were going to work or may be required to work Saturdays and Sundays through the July-August period. Zehrs, to remain competitive, has been forced to open on Sundays throughout the summer months.

Kincardine, on the other hand, has chosen not to open on Sundays, although minutes down the road from Port Elgin. Comparing the two stores, Kincardine has been overall a more consistent and stronger store, employing more full- and part-time employees, which indicates there is no concrete proof that jobs are created or lost to Sunday openings or closings.

Second, is tourism enhanced by Sunday shopping? We must ask ourselves whether people are vacationing in the Orillia, Collingwood, Wasaga Beach, Huntsville or Muskoka regions of our province because they are allowed Sunday shopping.

Since the Retail Business Holidays Act's inception, we do not believe that people's ability to shop or not to shop on a Sunday has had any effect on the growth of tourism in cottage country. When responding to these and other questions, we believe the attached recommendations will help to ensure a common pause day for retail workers without hurting the economy of this province.

It should be understood clearly that our members do not want to work on Sundays, and failure to provide legislation that will adequately protect the principle of a common pause day will only result in forcing our members to work.

If I could take a second, it has been raised a number of times and it came up this morning about the increase in business by being open on Sundays. In the retail food industry, we found, and I believe the presenter from Canadian Tire yesterday stated that he found that his business shifted from Saturday and Monday and Tuesday to Sunday, and what he really did was spread his business over seven days as opposed to six. He brought figures to show that. We believe that is what will happen and what has happened in the retail food industry. They are not increasing their business, or they have not indicated they are. It is just a shift in the business.

I cannot speak for other industries, but speaking about the retail food industry, there are certain crafts in the industry such as meatcutters and bakers, and I think we have a tendency to think of the people who might be able to come in off the street and work on a Saturday or work on a Sunday. Cashiers and people can be fairly easily trained to do those tasks, but if you have meatcutters and bakers and people with certain skills that require a fair amount of time and training, there is a limited number of those people who are hired for each store. It is almost impossible to go out on the street and find these people, so the stores are going to be in a position where they may not force these people to work on Sundays, but there is certainly going to be pressure there so the store can operate in full capacity providing meat and baked goods.

In discussing the work on Sundays, because of the shift in business, I do not believe employers, on the whole, try to force or intimidate employees to work on Sundays. People who are working 24 or 27 hours a week, if the business is lost on Fridays, Saturdays, Mondays and Tuesdays and shifts to a Sunday, to maintain their incomes are forced to work on Sundays voluntarily to maintain their livelihood. So it is not that the employer does, it is the fact that the customer has shifted his or her shopping habits. People are there to work when the customers are there, and the hours are there to follow the business, not the business there to follow the hours.

I think there is a pressure from the way the business is transacted, or shifting them. That is about all I have to say.

The Acting Chair: We have about seven minutes. Mr Poirier.

Mr Poirier: I can understand very well what you are saying, and personally I would also strongly support worker protection against abuses. I would also support their right to refuse Sunday work. If I remember, you have been with us most of the time, if not every day, in Toronto, listening to some of the presentations from just about everybody we have had so far. Am I not correct?

Mr Williamson: Correct.

Mr Poirier: I look at page 3, for example, at the top. It says, "This is an extremely emotional issue"—quite correct—"and we must all look at this objectively and make recommendations that are going to benefit the many, as opposed to a very few selected businesses that are motivated by greed."

That is a rather strong statement. You seem to put everybody, those who support the right to ask to work on a Sunday—you seem to lump them all in "a very few selected businesses that are motivated by greed." Maybe some are, I am not denying that, but you were there when you heard some of the small business owners and the not-so-small business owners saying they have lots of people who want to work on a Sunday, or themselves, or just their families to open their small business on a Sunday.

If I were the owner of a small tourist-type business here in Collingwood, for example—Blue Mountain Pottery, or whoever they are—I would be upset that you would label me as a selected business motivated by greed if I wanted to capture the Sunday tourists that come to Collingwood. How would you react to that?

Mr Williamson: I believe in our recommendations that follow this we are recommending that there be a 4,000-square-foot exemption, which we feel would help the small business people if we allow them to open on Sundays. We think the larger chains are trying to take the business away from the mom-and-pop operations, particularly in the retail food industry. Those are the people we feel are going to suffer in the business world, and we think that is motivated by market sharing. Greed may be a strong word, but certainly profit motivated.

Mr Poirier: I am not saying some people may not be motivated by greed, but maybe you should reword this, with all due respect, so that those that are under 4,000 or 2,400 square feet—you seem to lump them in the statement here, which I do not think is what you are aiming at from your explanation. Correct?

Mr Williamson: Correct.

Mr Poirier: Therefore, some small business people might want to open and choose to work on Sunday, and not be necessarily motivated by greed.

Mr Williamson: Correct.

Mr Poirier: Thank you. I am glad you specified this for me, because I was surprised this is where you were coming from. I was a bit upset, but thank you for clarifying this.

1040

Mr Sorbara: I enjoyed hearing from the United Food and Commercial Workers again. I want to begin with the point you made about meat cutters and bakers. I think the point is well taken. In some food stores where there are bakery facilities and there is a fresh meat counter, you do need very competent people who understand more than simply stocking shelves or processing food at a cash register, although that work is sophisticated as well.

There are meat cutters and bakers who have to work on Sunday in restaurants and in banquet facilities. Should we be closing those down as well? What distinction do you make? Why should we be requiring those workers to work, and not permit the meat cutters and the bakers, who may even want to work in a Zehrs on Sunday, the opportunity?

Mr Williamson: I would really like to answer the question, but I am not aware of any banquet facilities or restaurants that have their own meat cutters or bakers.

Mr Sorbara: Let's take a chef, who is dealing with the meat after it is cut. Why should the chef have to work on Sunday and the meat cutter not?

Mr Williamson: I believe it is similar to baseball on Sundays. Families sometimes go out for Sunday brunch as a group. I think part of it is, when they go to work in that restaurant, they understand it is a seven-days-a-week operation.

I started working in the retail food industry as early as 1965. Back then, we worked Tuesday to Saturday. The hours have expanded. Some Zehrs stores are now open from 7 am to 11 pm on a six-days-a-week operation, so I think it has expanded, but clearly Sunday was a common day for retail workers, and I think if I were working in the restaurant industry or considering being a chef, I would understand that I would probably be required to work on a Sunday.

Mr Sorbara: Just a very few years ago in Ontario, those who were advocating the common day of pause were strongly advocating that no sports facilities be open, no cinemas be open, no recreational facilities be open, and in fact some were advocating that no restaurants be open.

Indeed, one could not order beverage alcohol. The bars certainly were not open.

Why is it that we should make such a special case for those businesses which would like to open and those workers who would like to work? Why should the state prohibit that in the way in which the government is attempting to do with this bill?

Mr Williamson: If I go back to a presentation I heard made in Cambridge a number of years ago by a fellow from the African Lion Safari, the chap who owned it said that if you allow the stores to open in Kitchener-Waterloo-Cambridge, it is going to absolutely be detrimental to him because he is not in the tourist industry; he is a tourist attraction.

Mr Sorbara: But should he be protected? Should the state protect him to make sure he does not lose business? Should we not create a society where people are free to make choices—free to join a trade union, not to join a trade union, free to open their business, not to open their business?

Mr McLean: If I could address the remarks you are making, that was the first time I had the opportunity to view that video on Collingwood, myself being a resident of this town for seven years and loving every day of it. I have three active boys who participate in all different types of sports, and last winter my oldest son was fortunate enough to be a provincial champion and a North American silver stick champion. I found it very interesting that they showed sporting events and things like that.

I would like to draw your attention to the fact that the home games for my son during the winter were Sundays. Being in the retail business for 15 years, Saturday was a day that I worked very often. The bulk of my sons' sporting events fall on Saturday and Sunday, tournaments, regular games and such as that.

If you are asking why we should protect those retail workers who are in that type of business, I think we have to look at the fact that when those people have gone into those jobs and taken the decision to make that their livelihood and to support their families through that, they did so knowing it was a six-day operation.

I believe it is paramount that the government protect that established common pause day for very many reasons. The comment was made that I could ski on Monday. If I want to ski with my children, I would much rather ski on Sunday when they are out of school than ski by myself on Monday, even though there is nobody on the hill.

Mr Sorbara: I am just trying to understand your argument. Are you saying because that is the way it used to be? It seems to me, as I remember the retail sector a few years ago, you would never see a store open beyond 6 o'clock except perhaps on Friday or Thursday night. Now in Metropolitan Toronto, most of the large shopping malls are open until 9:30 every evening. Some people went into that business on the basis that the stores would close at 6. Should we be prohibiting stores from opening beyond 6 o'clock? Where do you draw the line? Do you just say, "That's the way it was, so that's the way it always should be"? Should we be demanding that LOF Glass close on Sundays so that those workers have the same rights as retail workers?

The Acting Chair: Could we have a quick answer to that question and then move on to the next caucus?

Mr McLean: In an industry like LOF, they do the same job every day. Obviously a certain machine is probably the same on a Monday as a Saturday. In the retail business it is completely different. Everything is geared and gauged to the amount of sales and the business that goes through that department. Being a produce manager, there is a tremendous difference in what went on in the operation on a Monday as compared to a Saturday.

Mr J. Wilson: Just a clarification here. You mentioned, for instance, Wasaga Beach, which is also in the area I represent. It has a very large IGA store which has always been open on Sunday to serve the tourists and local people. What are you really suggesting here? Would you allow exemptions for tourist areas for your stores, the large ones like the Zehrs stores, or do you want them closed right across the board? I am just not quite sure what you mean there.

Mr Williamson: We are suggesting that stores that are 4,000 feet or under be allowed to open on Sundays in the tourist areas and, over that, they be closed. Zehrs has indicated over the last couple of years that it would just as soon not be open in Wasaga Beach or Port Elgin, but because historically it has been open and the fact that the IGA and competition in Port Elgin are open, it is forced to stay open on Sundays. If they were closed, they would be much happier.

Mr Carr: What percentage of your membership is in food as opposed to retail? Is there a split?

Mr Williamson: They are all in retail food.

Mr Carr: One of the concerns I have is that in looking at the agendas, you have made representation in the other sectors; for example, the major retail stores have made presentations. But looking at the schedule, none of the major food retailers is making presentations on something that can fundamentally affect their business one way or the other. They are strangely silent. Do you have any thoughts as to why they have chosen not to make any sort of representation either pro or con?

Mr Williamson: I do not think I can speak on behalf of the major food retailers, Loblaw's, A & P. I think the comment made by Mr Agnew from the Bay yesterday was rather interesting and it may flow into the major food retailers' thinking. He said that if they had the same kind of legislation in Ontario as they do in Manitoba and Quebec, although they would not be happy—he has clearly stated that they would like to be open for business on Sunday—they could live with that, they could do business. I believe that possibly is where the major retail food chains are coming from: "If we're open, let's all be open; if we're closed, let's close it down and not create any unfair advantages."

We believe the retail food industry got involved in Sunday shopping and Sunday working because of the fact that the so-called drugstores, which were not really drugstores, were selling products that traditionally have been grocery items, were in the business, and they felt their profits and their merchandise were being sold out from under them. They did not have a fair advantage and that is what has motivated them to get into it. I think they believe if that problem is resolved, then that clearly puts the battle back on an equal footing and they can do business in a six-days-a-week operation.

Mr Carr: I see. We had people like the Bay who came in and said workers can be protected and so on. You obviously believe that in retail food they cannot be protected. It would have been nice to have some of those large and small retail food operations be able to come here and say, "This is the concern of the union." For all we know, they may support them, as you are saying. I just find it very strange that in an issue as important as this the retail food companies have chosen not to come.

I appreciate it, because I see the amount of effort you are going through, travelling with us, spending all this time going around the province, and the people who are affected—because their business will be affected, one way or the other—have chosen not to be there. I just found it a little bit strange and I was just wondering why. Maybe I can make some inquiries on my own about that.

Mr Williamson: It might help to ask them.

Mr McLean: Maybe they are just pleased with the presentations we are making and they are just happy with the way it is going.

Mr Carr: Maybe that is it. I hope so. Is there more time? Two minutes?

The other question I had relates to how you see it going, based on the present legislation. The feeling of some people is that with the tourist exemption being so large and this particular area being so important, many municipalities will in fact begin to open up, and that it will take a little bit longer but we will have Sunday shopping, including for all your workers. Is that the way you see it heading if the legislation stays the way it is? If not, why do you think it will not happen that way?

Mr McLean: I believe that is part of Cliff Evans's recommendations on tightening up some of the tourist criteria to make them not so broad as to allow, as you were saying, wide-open Sunday shopping eventually, because the way we interpret it, it would be just about impossible for a community not to declare itself exempt under these criteria. So we would like to see it as our recommendations say.

Mr Morrow: Thank you, brothers, for taking the time to come to talk to us. You seem to represent an awful lot of retail workers, 3,900 to be precise, in a large chunk of the province. Recent surveys say that over 70% of the Ontario public does not want to work on Sunday. Is this fairly consistent with your membership, or what are the figures?

Mr Williamson: We have ongoing regular membership meetings. We travel around the area where we represent people and hold quarterly meetings, information meetings, for our members. We concluded negotiations last summer and it was a major issue, the fact that they wanted to be protected against having to work on Sunday. I do not think they were too confident that they were going to be protected under legislation, and they felt it was incumbent on us to try to go out and protect them against working on Sunday. Again, I say it was a major issue, so yes, I would believe that in our organization, with Zehrs, it is an even higher profile, possibly because of the company's decision to try to stay closed as long as it can and maintain a common pause day.

Mr Morrow: Will this legislation create any job loss at all?

Mr Williamson: No, not for Zehrs employees.

Mr Morrow: Is it not true that fewer people actually worked at, say, an A & P once they created wide-open Sunday shopping?

Mr Williamson: I really could not answer that. What we do know is that A & P laid off over 200 people just recently.

Mr Morrow: Would it not be better for local councils to determine the needs of their communities based on specific provincial criteria for, say, tourism?

Mr Williamson: I agree.

Mr Morrow: Thank you very much.

Mr O'Connor: I want to thank you for coming here. These hearings are a perfect part of the democratic process. We get to hear from worker representatives, council members representing the local residents, some business people, people from all different sectors. As a resident in this town when the shipyard closed—that was some time ago. Were you a resident at that time?

Mr McLean: Yes, I was.

Mr O'Connor: There were 1,800 jobs lost as a result of that, 1,000 in the shipyard and several others. You must have seen a terrific change in the town during that period.

Mr McLean: There was certainly a lowering of morale or a mood altering. I think a lot of it was reinforced by the way the media continued to play it up. It was impossible to turn on the local news or even the national news without some sort of reference being made to Collingwood, that it was on its last breath and so on and so forth. I personally still believe that Collingwood is a strong community and will continue to be that way and continue to grow, but there is no doubt there were some hardships that were experienced by quite a few local residents.

Mr O'Connor: In an area that has been devastated, a single-industry community like this being devastated by a large operator closing, do you think wide-open Sunday shopping would create jobs for those 1,800 who lost those good-quality, high-paying jobs?

Mr McLean: If I believed that, I would be in support of wide-open shopping. I have some very close personal friends who operate businesses in this town and the surrounding communities. If I believed for one minute that Sunday openings were going to be the cure-all to some of the economic problems we are experiencing here, I would definitely be in support of it, but I truly cannot see any evidence of that. We only need to look at areas like British Columbia and Alberta where wide-open Sunday shopping has been the norm. They are still going through economic problems as far as cross-border shopping is concerned. There is a host of other issues. I think it would be unwise for us to try and confuse this and bring in all these things and figure that Sunday shopping somehow is going to cure the economic problems of Ontario.

Mr O'Connor: I have a couple of other points. I have two brothers who are meat cutters. One works on Sunday because the store is open Sunday. I know the quality of his family life does suffer because of that. He has split-up days. My other brother's store does not operate on Sunday. He has Sunday and one other day off in the week, so his family life is a little bit better. As a negotiator working trying to enrich the lives of your workers, do you feel this legislation will be enough to protect those workers? Do you think it should be stronger or do you feel there is no need to protect them, that all the retailers are concerned about their employees?

Mr McLean: I am not going to say that all retailers are not concerned, but I think we have to be very conscious that there are those retailers out there who would put pressure on individuals to work. It is paramount that we do have legislation that will protect these workers.

Mr O'Connor: We heard from one of the ministerial groups earlier that it has been advocating for some protection for workers too. I think if there is not that negotiated right that you have working for the collective workers, then we definitely need this legislation.

Mr McLean: Probably the best safeguard is to have the stores closed, with the exclusions of the tourist exemptions and the square footage. That is probably the best way that I would suggest we try to ensure they are not forced to be working on Sunday.

Mr O'Connor: Do you feel tourism is perhaps one of the catalysts that will help Collingwood come back?

Mr McLean: I was listening to some of the briefs that were made in Toronto as well, and I personally never had thought of Toronto as a tourist area, but to hear some of the numbers that were batted around as to 18 million visitors a year, I think in Toronto, Ontario and Canada, for that matter, tourism is a big part of it. I do not think we need to change our way of life just for the simple reason of trying to cater more to a tourist.

I believe that as a tourist I myself have never once booked a holiday or a vacation with only the intent of going shopping or changed from one location to another because one community was open or one was closed. If I go on a vacation, I go to enjoy what is there, and usually I do not have any trouble spending the money I am going to spend whether it is in six days or four days or whatever. So I believe we should still maintain the integrity of a common pause day.

The Acting Chair: Mr Williamson and Mr McLean, on behalf of the committee I would like to thank you for your presentation.

COLLINGWOOD AND DISTRICT REAL ESTATE BOARD

The Acting Chair: The next presentation will come from the Collingwood and District Real Estate Board. I want to thank you for being here. As you know, our format is you will be given half an hour. You can use that in any way you want. You can either give a half-hour presentation or give a short presentation and allow members from each caucus to ask questions or make comments. Could you please identify yourself for Hansard and then proceed.

Ms Schulz: I am Margaret Schulz. I am president of the Collingwood and District Real Estate Board. I am representing 230 members of that board. First of all, I would like to welcome you to the four-seasons recreational capital of Ontario. I think we are known for that. We have been historically known for that.

The Collingwood board's objective is to give the best possible service to our clientele. Needless to say, that means we need to have our offices open on Sunday. We are a unique area in that we enjoy a small-town flavour. We have good community living but we also have a strong recreational weekend community which contributes to our lifestyle and our living. Mother Nature has blessed us with Blue Mountain, which provides skiing for us in the winter months. We have the Bruce Trail, we have excellent hiking facilities and we have Georgian Bay, which provides us with all the water sports we could possibly want. I do not know where else within a two-hour radius of Toronto you could find everything we have to offer.

Again, many people throughout Ontario enjoy everything we have to offer, that we enjoy on a day-to-day basis, primarily on weekends, because they too earn a living. Most of them work five to six days a week. The only opportunity they have to purchase recreational property is generally on a weekend. They work and they come up on Saturday or Sunday. It is a major decision for them. They do not make it in one day. They generally need to view properties over a given number of days and have time to sit down in the comfort of an office, not on the hood of a car, to make their decision. We realtors are there to provide the service to help them make that decision. I find it ludicrous that we are not allowed to open our doors on Sunday but have to sign a deal on the hood of a car, so to speak.

We also have a strong young community that lives here year round. There are often two wage earners in a family. They have young children who attend all sorts of sports and are involved in sports. Their weeks are very busy. Most of them just run from the beginning of the week to the end of the week. They do not have time, either, to look for their major purchase, which is the home. Generally we look after those people on the weekend and it does not take one day. Very often a deal is wrapped up on a Sunday. It takes a lot of counselling, a lot of time and most people are around on weekends. That is the time they have available. We may have a few short hours during the week, but generally the weekend days give us the largest block of time to service the clientele, whether they be recreational or year-round residents.

We need to survive. There are some real estate companies which deal primarily in recreational properties. They do not deal at all with residential. Their livelihood depends on the tourist, the weekender, the skier who wants to have accommodation of his own for the time he spends up here. If they were to close or if they were not able to be open on Sunday, I am afraid we would lose yet another two or three businesses, perhaps even more. We really need to have that time. We need to have the option to open. We are not asking that we have overall Sunday opening; we are asking that we have the option to open. I believe that also includes the retail stores. There are some who I think would not benefit from Sunday openings and there are others who would, but they should have the option to choose. In my opinion, this is what Canada is all about.

I believe that pretty well sums up what I wanted to say. I have not said it in the order that I planned, but nevertheless I hope my message has come across. There are some realtors in our community who choose not to work on Sunday. That is just fine. As you all probably know—no doubt you have all purchased property of some kind, rented or whatever—we are on call 24 hours a day. I do not have a problem with whether I work Sunday or not. I make sure I have time for my family. I put that time aside, but it is not always on a Sunday.

With that, I would like to thank you for giving me time to present our view to you. I hope you will seriously consider the option to open. We are a tourist area. Whether we are officially designated as that or not, we are a tourist area. We are also a good, healthy community where young families grow. We just need to be able to function whatever way we can. I think the option to open is the only way to go. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: We have eight minutes.

Mr Daigeler: Thank you for your presentation and, in particular, that you are making a presentation on behalf of a real estate group. When I read the bill, its implications, I of course realized the impact on the real estate industry and I thought for sure there was going to be a percentage from your business who were going to make presentations to us. As it turns out—and I have just reviewed the schedule—you are the only one from the real estate sector who, at least so far, is scheduled. I am just wondering why that is. Have you been contacted by anyone in particular to speak on behalf of the real estate sector generally or are you just coming on your own initiative? Do you have any kind of explanation as to why apparently nowhere else are the real estate people going to express their concern?

Ms Schulz: Mr Daigeler, I am very surprised to hear we are the only board that is making a presentation. We have regions. We are part of Region 6, which encompasses south to Orangeville and up to Huntsville. There are approximately seven or eight boards that are represented there. I think a lot of realtors were not aware that they were breaking a law by opening their door on Sunday. I was not. It was not until I was at a Region 6 meeting, where Parry Sound expressed its frustration. They were told to close. The OPP came and said, "We will fine you if you open." They came down very hard. This was back in early spring. That was my first introduction to this issue. We feel very strongly about it in Collingwood.

We are professionals. We do not want to break any laws. We feel we have to be professional, we have to represent ourselves that way and we cannot do it if the law says, "You must not open your door on Sunday." So I feel very strongly about it. No doubt you can tell that. I do not know why other real estate boards are not representing themselves, except that perhaps they are not really aware. I have no answer for that. And no, no one did contact me directly. I was contacted by Lisa Freedman's secretary, I believe, to say would I like to, probably because I represented the board at council, where a bylaw has been passed that allows us now to be open Sundays until whatever happens with legislation. Then I guess we will go back to the drawing board.

Mr Sorbara: I congratulate the witness on coming here to make the point. If one looks simply at the definition of retail business, as amended by the bill that is before us, it may well be that soon in Ontario we are going to ask the OPP to start putting padlocks on real estate offices on Sundays because they are breaking the law.

Mr Fletcher: Come on, get serious.

Mr Sorbara: Well, first of all, they are not tourist establishments. I do not think any realtor could advertise itself as a tourist establishment, and the definition of a retail business is, "Retail business" means the selling or offering for sale of goods or services by retail." If there is any sort of service that can be construed as retail, it may well be—and this has happened in some communities—the allegation is that these real estate offices are retail businesses. That is going to become a problem.

We have heard from the Food and Commercial Workers that they want the stores to be closed so that their workers do not have to work. Would you, or would your members, like to see the government of Ontario prohibit the sale of real estate on Sunday so that real estate agents would not have to work on Sunday?

1110

Ms Schulz: I hardly think so, because we do a great percentage of our business on Sunday. I do not have the figures in front of me.

Mr Sorbara: But is it not the case that a contract signed on Sunday is not a legal contract?

Ms Schulz: No, that is not the case.

Mr Sorbara: It was the case, or was it not?

Ms Schulz: It was, but it is not now. No, a contract is legal and binding signed on a Sunday.

Mr Sorbara: But just a few years ago, it was the case. In order to promote a common pause day on Sunday, it was illegal to sign a contract to purchase a house on Sunday.

Ms Schulz: Yes, sir, I am aware of that.

Mr Sorbara: And the world changed a little bit, did it not?

Ms Schulz: Yes, it did.

Mr Sorbara: Now much of that activity is going on on Sunday. Why is that?

Ms Schulz: Well, for the reasons that I stated previously. I believe that families are busy, trying to create a good lifestyle; therefore, there are two wage earners in the family. They do not have the same kind of time during the week. Mom cannot go out during the day and look at houses and sift through them and say, "Okay, Dad, I've narrowed it down to three." She is busy working. She is trying to earn a living and keep her family going. I think that is probably the reason. We are just far busier than we were a few years ago.

Mr Sorbara: But the fact is that many of the sales agents representing those vendors are working women who get involved in that profession, knowing full well that it is going to involve some Sunday work. Is that not the case?

Ms Schulz: Yes, that is right.

Mr Sorbara: And when the law changed to allow you to sign a house sale agreement on a Sunday, was there any group that came before the Ontario government, or did you come before the Ontario government, to say that this would reduce the quality of life in the province of Ontario?

Ms Schulz: No, I did not. I do not believe I was selling real estate.

Mr Sorbara: Do you think it did reduce the quality of life in Ontario, to allow people to sell their homes on a Sunday?

Ms Schulz: No, I do not.

Mr Sorbara: Neither do I. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: I believe Mr Mills wants to clarify something, as parliamentary assistant to the minister.

Mr Mills: I think that before we go on with this discussion, it is very important to clarify some key information that you may not be aware of. I would ask at this time, Mr Chair, for Janet Scarfone, legal adviser from the Solicitor General's office, to cover the point that I want to make clear to you.

Ms Scarfone: With respect to real estate offices being allowed to open on holidays, it is the opinion of the Ministry of the Attorney General that while the matter is not free from doubt, the better view is that residential real estate offices are permitted to open on holidays for the purposes of offering services in connection with living accommodation, in accordance with clause 3(7)(b) of the Retail Business Holidays Act.

Ms Schulz: I see. I do not think that most of us in this community were aware of that. So in fact we were not breaking any laws when we were open?

Mr Daigeler: According to some lawyers.

The Acting Chair: Thank you for that clarification. Do you want to proceed now? Mr Carr.

Mr Carr: The question I would have, then, is where was the location you said the real estate offices were being charged?

Ms Schulz: Parry Sound. I do not know if any of them were actually charged, but they were warned that if they opened, they would be charged.

Mr Carr: So we have one opinion, and yet the reality is that something different is happening. Were you aware, in the Solicitor General's legal department, that people in Parry Sound were being threatened with closure?

Ms Scarfone: I am not aware of this particular instance.

Mr Carr: I will make a note to investigate that.

Ms Schulz: I would imagine that you will hear from the executive officer of the Parry Sound office, probably in North Bay. I was in contact with her—

The Acting Chair: Just one moment.

Mr Mills: Excuse me. We have a further point of clarification that Janet would like to make about charges, the latest news.

Ms Scarfone: A directive has gone out to police forces, basically indicating what I have just said to you.

Mr Mills: No charges.

Ms Schulz: When, may I ask?

Ms Scarfone: That has been delivered to all chiefs of police and the OPP commissioner.

Ms Schulz: May I ask when that came into effect, when that was delivered?

Ms Scarfone: I think it was very recently.

Ms Schulz: I am sure it must have been, because there was a time, probably six weeks or two months ago, that we were told by the police that they would be policing that Sunday. We were warned. I do not know that anyone was ever approached or anything else, so that must be a very recent release. That is good to hear.

Mr Daigeler: Mr Chairman, would it be possible to table this directive with the committee members?

The Acting Chair: I do not see any problem with that.

Mr J. Wilson: Yes, that is a good suggestion, to table it. Margaret, thank you very much for your presentation. You are absolutely right. A number of real estate agents and representatives have contacted me over the past few months; there is a lot of confusion out there. I did not know as a legislator what the answer was until right now, and I am still not sure that the ministry has taken the appropriate steps to clarify any ambiguity.

I would ask Mr Mills, as parliamentary assistant, would the minister, or would you undertake to ask the minister yourself, to come out with a ministerial statement clarifying the status of real estate agents and offices on Sundays under the proposed legislation?

Mr Fletcher: That will have to come from the Attorney General.

Mr J. Wilson: The Attorney General's legal opinion should be written down so that we all have it. I will leave it with the government, and I strongly suggest that you do it.

Mr Fletcher: It should also be directed to the police.

Mr Sorbara: Well, why should they have to work?

The Acting Chair: Thank you for the clarification. Can we proceed with the questioning now?

Mr J. Wilson: I am not terribly concerned that a number of real estate boards have not appeared before this committee, because I think all members will admit that representatives of the Ontario Real Estate Association have been around to see pretty well all of us a couple of months ago, and made it very very clear in the brief to members of the provincial Legislature what their position was on this, and that they wanted the ambiguity cleared up.

I do have a question though, Margaret, on your experience to date. Are Sundays your busiest days? How is the volume that day on showings and closings compared to other days of the week?

Ms Schulz: I work in a very small real estate office, and very often our door has been locked simply because I am out showing property. Saturday and Sunday, and then Monday, are usually the three busiest days I experience. Monday is the day you do all the paperwork and everything you have to do; your letters are written, copied and sent to solicitors, that sort of thing. But I do find, as far as showings are concerned, Saturday and Sunday are the greatest days for volume.

Mr J. Wilson: When you had the door locked, did you have any complaints from people that they did not know you were open on a Sunday?

Ms Schulz: No, we have not, Jim. Could I make a suggestion? When this is clarified, could you release it to the press and ask them to do a headline for us? You know this has raised such a red flag with the public that we need to have a positive statement.

Mr J. Wilson: That is why a ministerial statement is usually the best type of statement.

The Acting Chair: One other point I would like to make is that there is a package of written briefs from people from the real estate board. You will be the only ones doing a presentation but there are written briefs, so you are not alone.

Ms Schulz: I am here, though.

Mr Carr: I would like to thank you for your presentation. Some of the discussions that have come up have been around how to protect workers on Sunday. In your industry most people have got into it because they presumably knew they were going to work on Sunday, but there could be somebody who says, "I would like a career in real estate but for religious reasons or whatever, I do not want to work on Sunday."

I realize that your operation is fairly small, but do you know of any agents who do not work on Sunday, who say, for whatever reason, "I want to spend time with the family," and who take that day off and only work the other days?

Ms Schulz: Yes, I do know several that do that. We do come into this industry with our eyes wide open and it is up to us whether we want to provide service on a seven-day basis or whether we want to provide service on a six-day basis. It is a very individual decision, and from my own experience I do not know a broker who does not respect that.

Mr Carr: So there are some who—

Ms Schulz: Yes. There is a broker out in Meaford who does not work on Sunday and does not believe in it, but he allows the realtors in his office to make the decision as to whether they want to open or not.

Mr Morrow: I am really glad we cleared up that exemption problem. I also understand that the Attorney General sent letters to the police boards, the chiefs of police and the real estate board just days ago. Actually, they were faxed just a few days ago and the real estate boards were asked to fax them to all their agents and brokers.

You talked about strong young families. My own family is a two-wage-earner family. I have very small children. My daughter is four and my son is 19 months old. We basically use Sundays for our family time and we feel very strongly about that. I think you also said that wide-open Sunday shopping created a better family atmosphere. I view that as just the opposite, actually. Do you have any comments on that?

Ms Schulz: I do not remember saying that. I think my statement was that there should be an option to choose. I really do not have an opinion on wide-open shopping. My feeling personally is that we should have the option to choose, and if families choose not to shop on Sundays, if they want that day for themselves, it is their right to make that decision. Just because the store is open, they do not have to go in.

Mr Fletcher: Thank you for your presentation. I sympathize with you. I hate signing deals on the tops of cars, especially in a used car dealership. That is the worst place.

As for shopping on Sunday, if I were an employee of A & P and they wanted me to work Sundays, should I also have the right to say no?

Ms Schulz: Yes, in my opinion.

Mr Fletcher: The right to refuse to work on Sunday and the right to say yes to Sunday working is part of the bill we are proposing. You see no problem with that?

Ms Schulz: No. I feel very strongly that we should have the right to choose.

Mr Wessenger: Just to clarify a point, I agree with the comments made with respect to the fact that under the existing Retail Business Holidays Act, real estate offices have the right to open on Sunday. In view of the fact that that has not changed under our present legislation, I assume we could take your presentation to mean that you do not want us to change that exemption, is that correct?

Ms Schulz: That is absolutely correct.

Mr Wessenger: You obviously believe in a common pause day, is that correct?

Ms Schulz: Yes, I do.

Mr Wessenger: You would like to see legislation that would ensure that families have the right to a common pause day.

Ms Schulz: That is right.

Mr O'Connor: There are just a couple of things I would like to touch on. You talked about the change in times and the need for two incomes for a family to survive. Do you feel that some part-time jobs could be created and that creating more part-time jobs would help real estate sales in Collingwood, or do you think perhaps two full-time incomes are needed to be able to secure the financing to buy a house?

Ms Schulz: In most cases, the two jobs are necessary. We are not on a high pay scale in our area, with the exception of a few companies. I think there are some families who probably could survive with one full-time wage earner and a part-time. Again, real estate companies employ part-time people. There are some people who can get by with working several evenings or a weekend day.

Mr O'Connor: Not too many part-time workers could afford to buy a house, then.

Ms Schulz: No. I think we were very lucky when I was raising my children that we still were able to stay home with our children.

Mr O'Connor: Times have changed. Thank you very much.

The Acting Chair: Mr Sorbara, you would like to clarify something?

Mr Sorbara: I have a question to Mr Mills, representing the government and the bill, just on the matters we discussed relating to real estate offices. My question is simply this: Why is it that the government is now being expansive on the question of real estate offices? Surely if the overall policy objective of the government is to be restrictive and only allow tourist establishments to open on Sunday, and you could argue that some shopping is leisure, surely the purchase of a house is not a leisure activity. There should not be special preference given to retail workers over real estate agents. So why is the government being expansive? Why not clamp down and require that real estate offices be closed and prohibit the sale of houses on Sunday?

The Acting Chair: You can choose to answer that if you will, but it does not directly have any bearing on the bill. If you want to clarify it, you can.

Mr Mills: In a general sense, the Attorney General looked at this and decided, and I am not privy to how that decision was arrived at at this time. Hopefully, we as a committee will at a later date be privy to how that decision was arrived at. I think it relates somewhat to the decision that it is living accommodation that is being offered on the market. It is very difficult for me—

Mr Sorbara: I guess my point is, why is that okay to sell on Sunday and why is it okay for real estate agents to work on Sunday but not retail workers? My problem is with the distinction.

Mr Mills: I have a daughter-in-law who is in real estate, and she tells me that she does not consider herself as a retail worker, but rather a private entrepreneur in business for herself, and she does not mind working on Sundays because she realizes that is the time to contact people. You have put me on a difficult spot. I do not know that—

Interjections.

Mr Mills: No, no, I realize that. I am trying to say that the rationale behind this decision is strictly with the Attorney General, and hopefully we will get to discuss that later. I would like to leave it at that.

The Acting Chair: Ms Schulz, on behalf of the committee, I would like to thank you for your presentation.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much for giving me the opportunity to appear before you. I have enjoyed it.

GEORGIAN TRIANGLE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

The Acting Chair: Our next presenter will be from the Georgian Triangle Economic Development Institute. Thank you for being here today. Our format is that you will be given half an hour for your presentation. You can either make a half-hour presentation or you can make a shorter presentation and allow members from each caucus to offer their questions and comments. Could you please identify yourself and then proceed.

Mr Rohmer: My name is Richard Rohmer. I am a Collingwood resident and I practise law here and elsewhere. I am a member of and appear today on behalf of the Georgian Triangle Economic Development Institute, which I may refer to as the institute or the Georgian Triangle institute.

The purposes of the institute, which is not incorporated, are as follows: the enhancement and preservation of the social and economic prosperity and wellbeing of the businesses, institutions and citizenry of the Georgian Triangle area. In particular, our purposes deal with the enhancement and the preservation of employment opportunities in the area and the effective planning, development and processing of housing, recreational, commercial and industrial projects within the Georgian Triangle.

I have attached to the brief as appendix A a map showing what the Georgian Triangle is, how it is constituted, the municipalities that are involved in it. The municipalities can be seen from the map. There are 13 of them: the village of Creemore; the towns of Collingwood, Meaford, Stayner, Thornbury, Wasaga Beach; and the townships of Collingwood, Flos, Melancthon, Mulmur, Nottawasaga, Osprey and Sunnidale.

The current membership of the institute is shown in appendix B. You can see from that that our membership includes professional persons, business people, companies engaged in construction and development and others interested and involved in the preservation and maintenance of the prosperity that this area has enjoyed and in the recovery and restoration of job opportunities that have disappeared here in large numbers over the last seven years.

From the scope of our membership and the large geographic area covered by the Georgian Triangle, it can be seen that the interest of the institute embraces six municipalities in which tourism is an essential and major component in their respective economies and in job creation. Those are the municipalities that have frontage on Georgian Bay and those that also have skiing facilities. They are the tourism municipalities: Collingwood, Collingwood township, Meaford, Nottawasaga township, Thornbury and Wasaga Beach.

The Georgian Triangle Economic Development Institute appears before you today in support of the general principles of Bill 115 because the bill provides a mechanism that will continue to permit retail business establishments to be open on holidays, and in particular on Sunday, for the maintenance and development of tourism.

With the departure of manufacturing jobs from this area on a massive scale, even in the pre-recession days, the dependency upon tourism and recreation here is enormous, which is one of the strong reasons the institute supports Bill 115.

The mechanism provided by Bill 115 can be characterized as cumbersome. Like all provincial legislation that passes jurisdiction and power down to the local municipalities, the mechanism invites abuses by members of local councils who are biased either against Sunday shopping or for it. It invites municipal elections to be fought by pro or con Sunday shopping factions. It invites fights over which retail business establishments in which areas of a municipality might be permitted to open on holidays, including Sunday. And when all is said and done, Bill 115 declares in subsection 4(8) that the council's decision is final, which of course is simply not true, because an aggrieved applicant who has been rejected by the council can go to the courts for justice on a point of law.

Then there is the question of enforcement of Bill 115 and the proposed regulations made under it. By enforcement I mean not only by the local municipal councils in regard to all retail business establishments within its boundaries, but also the enforcement by the government of Ontario against all local or other municipalities that purport to pass bylaws to permit retail business establishments to be open on holidays for the maintenance or development of tourism.

On the face of it, Bill 115 not only invites but requires the government of Ontario in general, and the Solicitor General in particular, to set up at Queen's Park a new bureaucracy that could be called the Big Brother Sunday Shopping Enforcement Agency employing hundreds of new civil servants.

On the other hand, the Georgian Triangle institute will be the first to encourage the government to locate the headquarters of that enforcement agency right here in the Georgian Triangle, in this most attractive area in Ontario in which to live, with its year-round recreational, cultural and virtually no-need-to-commute-anywhere environment.

If there is a major defect in the bill, it is the erection of a bureaucracy to enforce its provisions.

The problem of enforcement can be demonstrated in this way: Subsection 4(1) says the council of a municipality may by bylaw permit retail business establishments in the municipality to be open on holidays. So far, so good, but then these words appear, "for the maintenance and development of tourism."

Assuming we have a definition of tourism, what do the words "maintenance or development" mean? And who is to say what they mean, somebody in the Solicitor

General's office or somebody at the municipal council level?

Then we pass on to proposed regulations to be made or amended by the stroke of the next Lieutenant Governor's pen.

By subsection 1(2) retail business establishments in a geographic area may be exempted if the area has characteristics which fall under two or more of the six categories that are referred to in subsection 1(1) of the regulations as tourism criteria. The six are: the area has historical or natural attractions; the area has cultural or ethnic attractions; the area provides a concentration of hospitality services; the area provides for shopping activities which feature a unified concept or theme—whatever that means, farmers' markets—we know what that means, the sale of heritage or handicraft items, and so forth; the area provides an access to hiking and boating; and fairs and festivals.

If the municipality believes it has two or more of the six categories but the enforcement agency says it has only one or none, then what?

Subsection 1(1) of the proposed regulations says, "This section sets out the tourism criteria that must be met before a municipality may pass an exempting bylaw under subsection 4(1) of the act."

The tourism criteria must be met. Otherwise the municipality cannot pass such a bylaw, which means that if it does pass such a bylaw, the bylaw is null and void and of no effect. But who is going to declare it null and void? Right now it could only be the courts under the way the bill is structured. And who could apply to the court for an order declaring such a bylaw null and void? The Solicitor General, on the advice of his enforcement agency, or an interested citizen, association or corporation.

There is one simple solution that might overcome the mechanical problems I have outlined. It might not prevent the erection of the enforcement agency, although that agency could be comprised of one person and a secretary if this suggestion is accepted.

It is suggested respectfully, and with all due deference to the civil servants at Queen's Park who drafted Bill 115, that there be an appeal permitted to the Ontario Municipal Board in regard to all decisions made under Bill 115 and the regulations made thereunder.

Before I conclude, there is an ancillary point I would like to draw to the attention of the members of this influential committee. I have already made passing reference to it, but for the purposes of the record I wish to briefly enlarge on it.

The urbanizing recreational and cultural sector of the Georgian Triangle fronts on Georgian Bay, Nottawasaga Bay, and is backed up by the most important skiing complexes in Ontario. With its four-season recreational opportunities—skiing, skating, winter sports, golf; all the things you saw in that excellent video—this area is without question the most attractive area in Ontario in which to live, work, play, retire or raise a family. Some committee members may not agree with that assessment, but that is the way we see it. In comparison to Metro Toronto and the greater Toronto area, this sector of the Georgian Triangle is the Utopia of Ontario, the way we see it.

The institute therefore supports the proposition that the government of Ontario should direct those of its ministries that are computer or electronically oriented in their administration to look closely at moving their computer operation cells out of Metro Toronto into this superb living area, rather than forcing people to go into the bowels of the city. The institute will be preparing and mounting a campaign to sell this proposition to the headquarters of the big banks, insurance and other financial institutions in Metro Toronto and the greater Toronto area, and the big oil companies and credit card operators, just to name a few. We want them to pick up their computer operations and move them here. Tax incentives to get them out of tumultuous Toronto would be of great assistance.

However, the institute has no plans to try to move the provincial Legislature up here. We would not be able to cope with the chaos.

The businesses, the economy and the workers of the Georgian Triangle need all the help they can get to survive, to beat the recession and to overcome the massive manufacturing and building construction job losses that have occurred here. For these reasons, the institute supports the principles of Bill 115 and the proposed regulations, with our recommendations for their improvement, all of which is respectfully submitted.

The Acting Chair: That leaves us each about seven minutes.

Mr Sorbara: I want to begin by making a brief reference to the second paragraph on page 3 of Mr Rohmer's submission, where he refers to "the next Lieutenant Governor's pen." You should know that if the incumbent Prime Minister is doing a realistic search for a new Lieutenant Governor, the pen the witness refers to is being held by an appropriate candidate. I am wondering whether our witness has been contacted by the Prime Minister to determine whether he is interested in the job, because certainly, if we are looking for eminent Canadians, our witness this morning qualifies as one.

Mr Rohmer: That was a very liberal and generous statement. On the advice of counsel, I choose not to answer that question.

Mr Sorbara: I note that the witness also is continuing to use the initials QC after his name. That continues to be lawful notwithstanding the best efforts of the former Attorney General.

I note as well the reference to the creation of the BBSS Enforcement Agency. I wonder whether the witness is suggesting that this bill gives rise to BS squared on behalf of the new government of Ontario.

Mr Rohmer: On the advice of counsel, if I could change the question, the question really deserves this kind of response. I think the point we have tried to make here is a valid one that there is a vacuum in relation to this issue: If the government of Ontario takes one interpretation and a council takes another interpretation, who is going to adjudicate between them? Second, who is to adjudicate between municipal council and the people in business who are making application?

I am simply saying that in all fairness there should be some means of appeal that leaves the element of independence to whatever extent the OMB can give it. I know that I put my finger on an area of some concern there, but there should be some mechanism, otherwise there will have to be constructed a bureaucracy to ensure that the enforcement from the provincial government level is undertaken.

Mr Sorbara: I think the point here is an important and valid one. Certainly, if we are only going to be allowed to make minor amendments to the bill, an appeal to the OMB is entirely appropriate, as Mr Rohmer suggests, because it is the body of the province most suited to handle those sorts of issues.

Notwithstanding that the institute has chosen to support in general principle the thrust of Bill 115, I would like to know whether the institute would be aggrieved or upset if the government in its wisdom simply determined to repeal the existing Bill 114 and allow Sunday shopping hours to be set in the very same way that shopping hours are set on every other day, that is, by determination of the municipal council under the Municipal Act.

The reason I suggest that is that some of the businesses that would open in Collingwood under a tourist exemption under Bill 115 compete on a daily basis with the shopping mall that is just on the outskirts of Barrie, which is fighting for the retail dollar. Under this bill, as I interpret it, probably that shopping mall would not constitute a tourist facility; it is over 7,500 square feet and would not be allowed to open.

I suggest to our witness that in my view that represents unfair competition. Would the government not be better advised simply to recede from this territory and use its scarce resources to do something else other than to set up new agencies and try to pick the winners and losers in the Sunday shopping battle?

Mr Rohmer: That is an excellent question. I will answer the first part of it. I have taken a consensus of the members of the institute. The answer to the question would be that they would not be aggrieved.

Mr Sorbara: They would not be aggrieved; good answer.

Mr Poirier: If this were not as much of a tourist area, do you think your institute would still have the same feeling about this problem of designation? Obviously, if you were not touristic you would not have the same freedom this bill would provide for you to decide what you want to do with your Sunday businesses. Is this correct?

Mr Rohmer: The question is a hypothetical one; therefore, I must answer it on a hypothetical basis. If this area were not touristic, this area would be in total collapse at the moment. With the departure of the 1,800 jobs in the last seven years out of Collingwood alone, quite apart from the other constituent municipalities, without the tourism and all of the abilities we are talking about here to Sunday openings, in a way this area would be in a disaster.

I do not know whether I have answered your question, but in any event tourism is at the heart of the representation here.

Mr Poirier: And you need to have these businesses open on a Sunday to make sure that your tourism sector, which is a key element to your economic survival, remains intact.

Mr Rohmer: That is exactly correct. The jobs are provided and made available to people who desperately need them.

Mr Poirier: Fair enough. I will just take 30 seconds to a final note. I really liked the way you made that very important point about who decides what, if at all possible, with tongue in cheek and humour. On page 3 there is a statement that if you were a politician you would really be in deep trouble for having said so. You were saying that BS squared, as my friend called it, agency can comprise one person and a secretary. From what I know of the English language, this seems to be a mutually exclusive definition of a person. If this were a secretarial appreciation week or day, we might have a hard time trying to reach you or secretaries; so with tongue in cheek I return this comment to you.

Mr Rohmer: Well, I have replaced the tongue in my cheek. If you look carefully at the wording, you will see that I have selected it carefully, having regard for all of the flags you are trying to raise. First of all, I am not a politician, although I have been fringed with it.

I did indeed sit on the council of a municipality which was then called the township of North York. That can take you back a long way. We did dramatic things in the township of North York in those days, and I will not give you the years.

In any event, when I speak of being composed of one person and a secretary, a secretary can be a person. On top of that, a person can be male or female and a secretary can be male or female, so I did not discriminate, even in the context of the government's policy, which is quite discriminatory hiring policy today. I did not want to raise that, but since you did—you raised it.

Mr J. Wilson: Thank you, General Rohmer, for appearing this morning and honouring us with your presence. In addition to pointing out what Mr Sorbara let out of the bag, that we could very well have the next Lieutenant Governor addressing us this morning here, I should point out to committee members that General Rohmer is a recipient of the Order of Canada. We are very proud of him in this area. He received that for his good works and intellectual abilities, which we have seen demonstrated this morning.

General Rohmer, in your heart of hearts do you think this legislation will work? I will just do what most politicians do and preface that by saying it seems to me it is going to create a snowball effect, just to set the stage.

Mr Rohmer: In my opinion, if the legislation is amended, certainly along the lines I have suggested in the brief, it can work, but there has to be some sort of body to which an appeal can be made. I think it will put an onus on the municipalities, which the municipalities probably do not want. They do not want to be in a quasi-judicial position vis-à-vis their own constituents in their own towns. They would probably prefer not to have that, but I think most of the municipalities and councillors I know could do the job.

But it is a cumbersome piece of legislation. I have said that and I think it can be made to work if it is changed.

Mr J. Wilson: I think back to the period last year where we had several months of unregulated Sunday shopping. In this area we had some stores open and some not. In parts of the riding we had entire areas not open. In the riding we have Cookstown. That has always been open, for instance; Wasaga Beach has often been open.

Did your group give any consideration to what the experience was during that unregulated period? Is this an area where perhaps the government should be legislating? Although you are a lawyer, this legislation may very well turn out to be a field day for lawyers, in my opinion.

Mr Rohmer: I cannot say we turned our minds to the very question you have raised. For example, here in Collingwood, where the town of Collingwood has passed a recent bylaw in relation to Sunday shopping, opening it, as I can see that certainly reflects on a unanimous basis the views of the people of the town in relation to the need to have this facility available on Sundays.

Also, when you have a situation where Thornbury is open and Wasaga Beach is open, there is the need to have some generality and universality from the competitive point of view. I do not know that I have answered your question, but I think that by and large the Sunday situation could be taken care of by eliminating all the restrictions. If it is going to go, it would really have to come along, the kind of legislation we are looking at, but repair the major holes in it.

Mr J. Wilson: Just from the map of the Georgian Triangle, do you envision that most of the municipalities, the larger ones in the service area, will be open?

Mr Rohmer: I would think so. That is Meaford, Thornbury, Collingwood township, which is a very important sector, and the town of Collingwood, Wasaga Beach, Nottawasaga and Stayner. I think they would be hard pressed not to adopt the legislation and go for the bylaws that are provided for.

Mr J. Wilson: On the surface your suggestion of the right to appeal to the OMB is a good one, but I find that in dealing with constituents who must now go before the OMB, they find it a very intimidating board, often requiring legal assistance because the Municipal Act itself is quite complicated. The way the OMB is structured now, in your experience with it, is it accessible and friendly enough, user-friendly, as they say?

Mr Rohmer: It is user-friendly. The people on it are first-class; it has nothing to do with any political side of things. They are hard pressed in terms of handling all the business in front of them. The number of acts they have to deal with is in the range of 50 to 60, and then they cannot get them all counted. It is an overworked organization, and it is formal. The problem with this kind of forum, where you have adversarial activity between this party and that party, is that it is a place where they do give as much comfort as they can, but because it is adversarial it is a place where most of the time you really do have to have a lawyer with you to take your case. Certainly in this instance I think applicants could go to the OMB without a lawyer, but by and large, probably in nine cases out of 10, they would have a lawyer to handle the matter for them. It is the same thing in the courts. But what I am really saying here is that there should be some mechanism of appeal. There may be some better way than the OMB, but at the moment I would be hard pressed to provide one for you.

Mr Carr: My question is regarding the interpretation of the tourism exemption. Notwithstanding the fact that municipalities may be biased one way or the other, but from a strictly legal standpoint, do you see any part of the province of Ontario that could not meet the tourism criteria as they are laid out in this paper?

Mr Rohmer: My judgement would be yes, there will be many places that would not meet the six tourism tests.

Mr Carr: What would be the one that would hold it up? Is there any particular one of the criteria?

Mr Rohmer: I had not addressed that question, but any one of them could be a block or a bar because they do not exist within a particular municipality or a particular area. You could undoubtedly find any number of areas where five or six would not be present.

Mr Carr: You know they do not have to meet them all.

Mr Rohmer: I know. They have to meet two. Again, as I say, if the municipality thinks it meets two and somebody at the provincial level thinks it does not, then who is going to make the decision on the point?

Mr O'Connor: I want to thank you for coming today. It has been terrific here in Collingwood to see such terrific support coming from so many different groups here. I think one of the things that stands out, though, is the sense of community and the community sticking together and trying to make sure the community survives.

You have pointed to tourism aspect as one aspect of the town's survival. I think perhaps in the video that was shown earlier they also stressed the need for high-technology, value added jobs to enhance the economy of the area. Could you expand on that a little bit?

Mr Rohmer: Yes, I think there is a general realization in the town and the area that the manufacturing jobs that have disappeared will not return. You could take the shipyard by itself, but there are many others—for example, those that have been automobile-oriented, parts and things of this kind—where the prospect of industry coming back here for manufacturing is remote, to say the least.

What we are looking at is what the video talks about and what I did in my brief, and that is, what have we got to sell and to whom do we have to sell it? We have the lifestyle here, and we have the organizations in the greater Toronto area to whom we can go and say: "You can move, for example, your high-tech or your computer units up here. The place is open, we have the residential aspect ready, we have the training aspect." It is a great place to live and it is something we think we can sell them, but it will be a hard sell. That fundamentally, apart from tourism, is the way I think the community is looking at its future in terms of jobs.

Mr O'Connor: So the tourism aspect, then, of the economy would not necessarily be the opening of the large chain stores; it would be more the interesting ones and the service aspect of it?

Mr Rohmer: The stores that are here, the businesses that are here, are the ones that are going to be open.

Mr O'Connor: One area that you have talked about, and we have mentioned it quite a few times now in our discussions, is the appeal process. I would just like to give you a message, because this committee process, in going to the communities to try to get some—it seems to have been brought up quite a few times and I just wanted to reassure you that we are open and listening to suggestions brought forward. In fact, your suggestion has been made several times over. The UFCW, I believe, made it, though I think they called it something different than the humorous little anecdote you put in there. I think you called it a tourist exemption board, if I am not mistaken. That suggestion has been put forward and we appreciate that.

Mr Morrow: I would like to thank you very much for presenting this morning. You raised a really good point about the OMB. We have done a lot of consulting and have found through talking to various groups that they also agree with you, but they have been looking at maybe a different level of the OMB because, as we all know, to get something through the OMB can take years, and sometimes megayears, to resolve that. Possibly, if we can split that up, and I am not talking about—I know we would create more bureaucracy, but we might be able to do something there. Thank you very much for your suggestions.

Something was raised this morning, which I just thought I would ask you about, by the town of Collingwood. They said that under their new bylaws 35% to 40% of all businesses are open. To me, that would mean that 60% chose not to open. Can you possibly tell me what kind of businesses opened and what kind of businesses did not open, just for my own clarification?

Mr Rohmer: I cannot on the broad base because I did not go and inspect the situation, but since you have asked, Johnsons Home Centre was open. They have building materials and things of this kind. In the Wednesday, July 31 Collingwood Enterprise-Bulletin, on page 10B they have put in an ad which says: "Sunday shopping creates new jobs. Johnsons Home Centre, the people who care, are looking for new sales staff. Order desk sales with experience in building materials, flooring department, etc, and all individuals must be prepared to work on Sundays." There were also shops that sell ladies' dresses and things of that kind, but I cannot tell you from my own direct experience and I would not do this on a hearsay basis. That is the kind of shop that was open last Sunday.

Mr Morrow: I also want to thank you very much for your support.

The Acting Chair: Mr Mills, you have about a minute and a half.

Mr Mills: Thank you, sir, for coming here. I have listened. As you probably know, the regulations are draft regulations and I am here along with my colleagues to listen. I have heard with interest your thoughts on the appeal process. They are noted.

I would just like to talk for a second or two about your paragraph 3 on page 2: "The mechanism invites abuses by members of local councils who are biased either against Sunday shopping or for it." I would just like to draw your attention, sir, to part I of the bill. It establishes the principle that retail business holidays are common pause days and that municipalities should not use their exemption powers to permit retail business establishments to open on holidays except to maintain or develop tourism. I think councillors really have to adhere to the principles of the bill. With that, I will give my colleague from this area a minute to close off.

Mr Wessenger: First, do you feel the tourism exemption provides a competitive advantage for tourism areas?

Mr Rohmer: I do not really know what you mean by competitive advantage.

Mr Wessenger: An economic stimulus.

Mr Rohmer: An economic stimulus? Oh, yes. A competitive advantage against some other area, I could not say.

Mr Wessenger: But certainly an economic stimulus.

Mr Rohmer: Yes.

Mr Wessenger: Second, as a former administrative lawyer are you recommending some administrative tribunal as distinct from the courts?

Mr Rohmer: Yes.

Mr Wessenger: Or the OMB, yes.

Mr Rohmer: A division of the OMB. Probably that is what the government might be thinking about, putting the OMB into different divisions and increasing its population.

Mr Wessenger: Fine.

The Acting Chair: Mr Rohmer, on behalf of the committee I would like to thank you for your presentation.

The committee recessed at 1203.

AFTERNOON SITTING

The committee resumed at 1310.

The Acting Chair (Mr Cooper): I would like to call this meeting back to order.

SALLY STONE BOUTIQUE

The Acting Chair: Could we call on our first presenter? It will be someone from Sally Stone Boutique. I would like to thank you for coming today. You will be allowed 15 minutes. You can use that 15 minutes to make either a 15-minute presentation or a shorter presentation and then allow for questioning and comments from each of the caucuses. Please identify yourself and then proceed.

Ms Stone: First of all, I would like to thank the Chair for giving me this opportunity of speaking today.

My name is Sally Stone. I am the owner-operator of a retail store in the town of Collingwood, Sally Stone Boutique. I have almost 40 years' experience in the retail business and for 18 years owned and operated the Duchess of Westbury in the Westbury Hotel in Toronto.

I was asked to speak today because recently I made a presentation to our local council on behalf of over 100 merchants seeking the right to be open Sundays and the clear designation as a tourist area. It should be noted that if I had spent a little more time gathering signatures there would probably have been another 200 merchants. The content of my presentation was as follows.

Although the present economic crisis presents our town with many significant concerns and problems, it also provides us with a challenge and an opportunity.

People in this town are hurting. Our business base is hurting, and we the merchants are hurting. Whatever can be accomplished by our deputy commissioner—and we know we need his efforts and focus—will primarily affect the future, not today.

As merchants, our survival depends on utilizing every possible means to ensure we maximize the buying potential in this town. The attitude of passively accepting what comes our way and what is convenient will not position us for survival or growth. We have to fight for every available dollar, as does every town, province, country, store, church, school and individual. Not only do we individually have to fight, but we need all the available expertise and creativity in this town helping to fight. We need organizations such as our chamber of commerce, the BIA and members of our town council all focused on the fight. We need the synergy created by a common purpose and working together.

The greatest challenge before us is change. Change is the one thing we are not educated to deal with. Individuals, companies, groups, etc all have tremendous difficulty dealing with it. In order to fight the effects of change, we need strong and co-ordinated leadership.

What worked 10 years ago will not work today. Our town has changed. We are no longer a small town with common values, purpose and understanding of the way it has always been. We are a community made up of three major segments: full-time residents, weekend residents and tourists, each an important part of the whole. Each contributes to the survival and the health of our town. Each deserves to be recognized for that contribution.

How many hotels, motels, restaurants, golf courses, sports stores and ski facilities would we need to serve just the full-time residents? Without the tax base and the buying power provided by the weekenders and tourists, could 12,000 residents support the fine school facilities we enjoy, the fine library and the excellent hospital, the museum, the Leisure Time Club for seniors and the quality of health and welfare services provided in this town? It is doubtful, and particularly now with the loss of industry and jobs we would all be much more seriously affected.

Many small towns experiencing similar economic problems to ours would give their eye-teeth to have this exceptional revenue source and the bonus of a significant tourist trade. Weekenders are just that. They are here for two days a week. Tourists, likewise, are often here for one to two days. Under the present ruling of no Sunday shopping we are in effect cutting their potential buying time and dollars by 50%. Although we are designated by the Ontario government as a four-season tourist area, we appear not to be set up to either service that market or capture the available dollars brought into our town. Quite frankly, we cannot afford to sit back and watch those dollars leave our town. We cannot believe the council can afford to sit back either.

When you visit Niagara-on-the-Lake, from the moment you arrive by boat, car, bus or foot, you know the town wants you there. Every shop is ready for you. Restaurants are geared to handle the theatre crowd. The town is dressed for entertaining with flowers, beautiful parks and an attitude of service. You enjoy spending your money.

In today's world, if a community is not progressing, it is regressing. It is never static. If we do not gear up to provide a positive atmosphere for our weekenders and tourists, we will ultimately lose and everybody will suffer.

Closing this town down, even for one day, will have a domino effect which could cost us the bright future that is our potential. Even the few shops and restaurants that are still open feel the effect: no traffic, no buyers, no sales.

We collectively urge you to accept the challenge of change and find a way to help us take advantage of opportunities within our grasp.

Following this, as you may or may not know, our town council responded, held the required public meetings and passed the required bylaws to allow merchants the choice of opening—and I do say choice.

I do not understand all the ramifications of your proposed legislation, but I do understand it is an effort to curtail Sunday shopping except under special circumstances, ie, tourist and/or historical designations.

As you can tell by my accent, I come from England, and I have worked and travelled a fair amount during my lifetime. In Europe you can shop whenever or whatever time you wish, from 10 in the morning till 10 at night. They long ago gave up trying to legislate morality and they understand that retailers have the right to go after business whenever and wherever the market is there for them. The marketplace is what dictates the hours of the operation.

As a retailer, I find it beyond comprehension that you would single out my business and try to tell me when I can open. If this is to be the case, I feel it only fair you apply the same standard to every profit-oriented facility service in our province. Why should I have to close on Sunday when plants such as our local LOF Glass of Canada continue to produce, when gas stations, drugstores and convenience stores continue to open, when sports activities and entertainment facilities continue to earn their living?

The term "common pause day" has long since become redundant. Your efforts to hold on to a concept that is no longer applicable through legislation which negatively affects my ability not to become rich but to earn a respectable living is destructive, to say the least.

Collingwood is a tourist area. However, every merchant in every town or city should have the right to open and serve his customers when the marketplace indicates the business exists. They should have this right without going through multiple levels of government.

Thank you very much indeed for listening, and for considering the opinion of one very concerned retailer.

The Acting Chair: We have time for about one quick question from each caucus.

Mr Poirier: Thank you, Ms Stone. I think it is extremely important to hear from people like you who have small businesses, not only the large businesses.

You reiterate that you support this principle for you as a business person to decide, no matter when, no matter where, whether you are inside or outside a tourist area, to open and not let the government decide for you as to when you would want to open. Is that correct?

Ms Stone: Yes, it is.

Mr J. Wilson: Thank you for your presentation. Can you give the committee a feel for some of the types of retailers that signed your petition?

Ms Stone: The best part of the whole town. Actually, if I had spent more time getting names, I am sure there would have been a couple of hundred people, because after it had been closed and given to council, there were people still coming in my store saying, "I didn't know anything about it." But unfortunately I started rather late and one cannot leave the store too long. We have to be there for business.

Mr J. Wilson: It is my understanding your bottom line is all or nothing: either allow everyone to be open or—

Ms Stone: Not exactly. I do feel that the Toronto area and the busy area should be open but, most positively, tourist areas like ourselves should definitely be open. We get a living from local people, but you cannot get a big living. You really need the tourists. They are the ones who are buying our homes, buying our clothes, eating in restaurants, building—everything. The small town definitely has to have Sunday shopping, without any doubt at all.

Mr Fletcher: Thank you for your presentation. You are not part of a big chain, or any—

Ms Stone: No, I am a one-man business.

Mr Fletcher: That is right, and you believe that you do fit the tourist exemption as far as you are concerned, that you really should not have too much of a problem with that part of it, that you would be open. Is that correct?

Ms Stone: Yes.

Mr Fletcher: Okay, fine, thank you.

CLOTH SHOP OF COLLINGWOOD

The Chair: Our next presenter will be from the Cloth Shop of Collingwood. Would you please come forward? Our format will be that you have 15 minutes to make your presentation. You can either take the whole 15 minutes for your presentation or make a shorter presentation and allow questions or comments from each of the caucuses. Could you please state your name and proceed?

Ms Huycke: My name is Katherine Huycke. I own and operate the Cloth Shop of Collingwood. I have four other retail outlets in other communities. I would like to thank you for the opportunity to speak here this afternoon.

I want to begin by saying that our ancestors arrived in this country and worked hard from dawn until dusk to create a place they called home. To earn a living they worked six days and on the seventh they did rest, and even then they died at a very early age.

This is 1991. We are living in the wealthy province of Ontario. We have become fat and we have become lazy. We demand good service, and perhaps that is all we can offer in these economic times.

You are aware that we, the retailers in this community, live and work in this recreational destination. Its population is some 13,500 persons. It has remained this way for many years. Heavy industry appears to be a thing of the past. Service industry is on the rise. We have significantly higher numbers on good winter and/or summer weekends, possibly an additional 25,000 persons. Visiting Wasaga Beach are possibly 100,000 persons.

There is obvious confidence in Collingwood by our government and our banks, as certain groups here have received hefty loans: approximately 5,000 new condominium owners. They bring with them their guests; they spend a two- to three-day weekend here; they encourage convention groups to use their condominiums.

As my retail outlet, the Cloth Shop, is situated, luckily, on Highway 26, it is my personal observation that hundreds of cars pass my door to these developments and/or tourist attractions. There is unlimited potential for our services and our businesses.

Business is business. We are all here to promote ourselves; we all promote ourselves, our country, our town, our places of work. We spend millions of dollars on promotion to get our messages across. It becomes more significant if we in this community of Collingwood can make ourselves available to service the needs of these potential patrons. When our town needs the revenue, does it not make good sense to be able to be available to people on weekends?

I invite you to stay in the Collingwood area so that you might see at first hand the numbers of visitors that drive to this destination. If our stores do close down in the near future, we will perhaps feel like the fisherman sitting in a stocked fish pond without a hook on his line. For the people of Collingwood, when we are on the brink of prosperity, with continued planned development in our future, without the ability to serve we are lost. I ask for your consideration regarding this issue today.

The Acting Chair: Each caucus will have about three minutes.

Mr Poirier: Ms Huycke, you obviously strongly feel that, being a tourist area, you should be the only one to decide when you want to open, how you want to open, regulate the nature of your business hours. Is that correct?

Ms Huycke: I feel we should have the choice.

Mr Poirier: Fair enough. Do you believe that this should be limited to tourist areas and whatever? What is your opinion on that?

Ms Huycke: I would like to see it more tourist areas, yes. It is going to be very hard, I suppose, to define a tourist area in the future.

Mr Poirier: So you see a problem with the definition of the tourist area. How do you feel about the local municipality ending up having the responsibility for defining what is tourist or not or what is a tourist service or not?

Ms Huycke: I would perhaps like you to throw it back into the municipality's area to decide on that. They live here. They have firsthand experience with what is going on.

Mr Poirier: And you are comfortable with that?

Ms Huycke: I am.

Mr Carr: Thank you very much for your presentation. One of the concerns the government has expressed is how to protect workers, and I was wondering, as somebody who schedules workers in and out, how you would see that being done. Do you force people to work on Sundays, do people volunteer, are there enough people who would work Sundays, and how would you balance that out? Maybe you could just explain to the committee.

Ms Huycke: Mr Carr, I believe strongly that all of the business is well looked after by our government to ensure that our staff persons are looked after. There is legislation already in place. I do not feel you can harass your staff or press them to work. I think it is an absolute smokescreen that that is a problem. More and more we are having shared workplaces, because of maybe economic times or women wanting to spend some more time now with their children. I have been operating for eight years with my store being open on Sundays and have never yet found a problem staffing my shop.

Mr Carr: What would happen if, for whatever reason, and it probably would not happen here, in fact you had to close down on Sunday? How much of your business do you think you would lose as a result?

Ms Huycke: I do not think I can answer that question, but I want to impress upon people that I am sure it is of major importance that the town does have revenue on a Sunday to stay alive and well. Personally, my feeling is service. I want to underline service. The contacts would be invaluable. It is not so much the commerce I want to do on Sunday. In fact, my Sunday business is open from 12 until 4 and it is basically there just for service.

Mr Carr: Thank you very much, and good luck.

Mr Fletcher: Thank you for your presentation. I really do believe that you as an employer would not coerce or try to force your people to work if they did not want to.

One interesting fact was that you said they have enough protection. If I can just quote from a former Liberal MPP who was on the road with the previous Bill 114 that was supposed to protect employees: "You have to work when the business is there and employees are jeopardizing their jobs by refusing to work. An employer will eventually find someone who is willing to work on Sundays." This was with the Liberal law that was put in before, and a Liberal MPP, Mr Rick Ferraro, who is no longer in the Legislature, who was stating that fact. There are employers who will coerce and do things. As I said, I do not think you would because of the nature of your business. But one of the things is to strengthen that so that employees and employers can have some understanding.

Ms Huycke: I think you are going to see in the 1990s that basically the hands-on management has changed significantly. I do not feel that kind of management is going to stand anybody in good stead in the future. You are going to see shared, co-operative work climates.

Mr Fletcher: As I say, not all employers such as yourself are that forward-thinking, and I am glad to hear that from you, but there are going to be cases where legislation is going to have to be there.

Ms Huycke: Yes, I am sure. There always are.

Mr Fletcher: I think that is why it is there, just in case someone does get a little out of whack.

Mr Poirier: May we work for you?

Ms Huycke: Certainly you may.

The Acting Chair: Ms Huycke, on behalf of the committee I would like to thank you very much for your presentation.

The Acting Chair: Our next presenter will be from Darsco, Mr Ed West. No. Is anybody here from Clarkson's Country Furniture? All right, we will take a 10-minute recess.

The committee recessed at 1330.

COLLINGWOOD CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

The Acting Chair: I call this meeting back to order. We have somebody from the Collingwood Chamber of Commerce as our next presenter. Our format is that you will be given half an hour for your presentation. You can either use the full half-hour for your presentation or you can make a shorter presentation and then the allotted time afterwards will be split evenly between each caucus. Would you please identify yourself and then proceed.

Mr Mansfield: My name is Craig Mansfield. I am the past president of the Collingwood Chamber of Commerce, and I am here on a double-edged sword. I am here to represent the chamber of commerce and some of my own personal views, which I will separate.

Most 10-year-olds can tell you what happened to the dinosaurs. They did not adapt to changes in their neighbourhood and they died off. The world is changing everywhere, and I do not know why people keep thinking it cannot happen here. We see manufacturing jobs disappear and there will likely be many more if free trade goes through with Mexico. The same thing is happening in the United States. We should do something other than standing around and waiting for these jobs to come back.

Retail sales is an area where we can do something. North America is becoming a service industry. We are a service continent. We have to start looking at what our forte is and what our strengths are. We can do service, we can do retail and we can do research and design. These are our strengths. Retail is the issue today and we feel in the chamber of commerce that we are being held back by the type of legislation you people are putting at us.

This chamber of commerce started in 1988, and I will give you a brief background. In 1988, we did a survey of our members. Of 200 members, we got a consensus of 54% that we would like freedom of choice. In other words, we wanted to decide ourselves whether we would open our businesses on a Sunday. Most of the businesses that do not wish to open will not open. That is what Canada is all about, freedom. The entrepreneurial spirit of this community and of this country is at stake here. If you do not allow people to have freedom of choice, if you do not allow people to run their businesses in a profitable manner, they will not stay here. We will be losing businesses to the USA, where they have more freedom, and we cannot afford this in Canada.

Our local council has just gone through a second reading of Sunday shopping laws in this community, and the consensus of our council and of most of the community at this time is that we require Sunday shopping. When we look at our main street, we have empty stores. The reason we have empty stores is because retail is not profitable. We are two years, three years behind what they are doing in the United States, and if we are going to compete in the North American market, you have to allow us to compete on a level field. You have not allowed us to do that.

My thoughts on running a business are that if I had not opened my business—I have a lock and key business in Collingwood here and I started it 12 years ago. When I started this business, I started out of my home. When I looked at the marketplace I had to service, I had to look at when I was going to get at the customers, the customers being the people who fill the homes in this area. If I had not chosen to work on weekends—and I am saying Saturdays and Sundays, when the skiers and the summer people and the fall people and the spring people come up here and use their chalets—I would not be sitting with a business today employing two people plus myself. I still work Saturdays and Sundays, and the reason I did this was because I looked at the market and said: "This is when the people are here, therefore this is when I want to work. This is when I have to work."

We are a tourist area, and to not allow us to do work when the people are here is just absolutely ludicrous. Collingwood is situated within 60 miles of Metropolitan Toronto, of the Golden Horseshoe, which has eight million people in it. We are a destination area; there is no doubt in anybody's mind that this is a destination area. If these people come up and then cannot get service, it is like opening a plant and saying: "Well, we are only going to let you work three days a week. The other four days we are going to close it down because that would be really nice." But it does not make any sense.

If the people who are making the decisions on when businesses can open and close would say to us: "All right, we are going to allow the businesses not to open on Sundays, but we are going to cut your taxes by one seventh, we will cut your education tax by one seventh, we will cut your contributions to OHIP by one seventh and we will absorb it. The workers and the homes will pay the extra money rather than businesses, because business pays the major part of what goes on in this province."

You have got to start looking at the cost of doing business. If there is no profit to it, why are we doing it? Why are we spending all our time creating jobs for people and not making a profit from it? All we are doing is being legislated back.

We are only asking that you allow businesses to operate on a fair and equitable playing field. To say to us that a manufacturer—LOF is an example in this community—LOF Glass can open seven days a week, 24 hours a day, why am I as a retailer restricted?

Close down LOF. Do not let them operate seven days a week. Why is it that old laws—and this is what we are talking about—are in place in our society today that are not relevant to today's business climate?

I think as a whole all government has to take a look. I refer to all three parties. I think all three parties have to look at their involvement in business, their interference in business. We are very viable and strong in this province, but if we keep on taxing and keep on legislating and keep on putting roadblocks in the way of businesses, we will not have the strong economic community we have had in Ontario. It is not going to stay here if it cannot grow, if there is no incentive to it. You cannot take away the entrepreneurial spirit of business people.

Coming out of university in the United States, most people come out of college, as we call it in the States, and they want to go and start their own business because it is inbred to them to go out and start a business, and when you start a business you employ people. We do not have that spirit in Ontario. Every time we turn around, we say: "Why do I want to be a lawyer by myself? I think I will join a firm. It is much easier." We do not make it easy for businesses to start up. The loops that government puts businesses through and new businesses through are just horrendous.

I object to the words "Sunday shopping." Seven-day openings is what we are talking about, the ability to operate a business efficiently. This community in effect needs it.

We have sat here. We have gone through this where we looked at it two years ago and we said: "What do you want in this community? Do you want empty stores, people unemployed, no business taxes?" Today we are sitting with empty stores, people unemployed and no business taxes coming into the community because we waited too long to legislate municipally our Sunday openings.

This is why we are losing to cross-border shopping. We waited too long to come back and say: "Okay, let's get a level playing field. Let's let these businesses work." We are five years behind the United States on a retailing level. That is unacceptable. There is no reason we should be five years behind. We should be leading the way, but because of the legislation in Ontario and in Canada we are five years behind. Now we have to play catch-up and it is much tougher to play catch-up than it is to lead.

I think you people have really got to take a long, hard look at what you are going to bring down in legislation here.

The Acting Chair: Each caucus will have about six minutes.

Mr Sorbara: I want to take issue with your view of history. My understanding is that the dinosaurs were trying desperately to adapt but, as it so happens, there was a socialist government elected at the time and they just put up too many roadblocks. The rest is history, but it was not the fault of the dinosaurs. It was the fault of the environment at the time.

Mr O'Connor: I object, it is hearsay.

Mr Sorbara: I take the same view as the business community right now, both retail store owners—whether they are large conglomerates or, even more so, small business people—and the people, the men and women who work for them.

Is it not the case that the marketplace changes and shifts with the passing of time and trends, and that in the retailing business the secret to success is to move with the environment as that shifts?

Mr Mansfield: We have to have the freedom to do this, though. If we do not have the freedom to make our own choices and people say, "No, you can't do this; you are breaking the law if you do this," then you cannot change. Then you are going to die. This is what this legislation that you people have in front of you is going to do. It is going to kill the retail business in this province.

Price Club is an example of a way of Sunday shopping. These people have come into Canada. They have set it up. They have organized it and they are doing what the Americans are doing openly across the border. We have to do it under a membership.

Mr Sorbara: As a retailer, would you like the provincial government to legislate the Price Club out of existence?

Mr Mansfield: No. I think the Price Club has its place in the marketplace. I think this is an excellent idea and I think the competition is what we all thrive on. If there is no competition, there is nothing to strive against. Canadian ans are very good entrepreneurs if we are allowed to do these things.

Mr Daigeler: Just a brief question that Mr Sorbara might come back with. I was not travelling a couple of years ago with the committee when there were hearings over the Liberals' proposed legislation, but I get the sense that the tenor of the presentations was very different at the time. Either it was different people or there was a significant shift of opinion since then.

I am wondering, are you aware whether your chamber made a presentation then, and was it the same position that was put forward? Do you know at all what the position of the Collingwood chamber was with regard to the Liberal legislation?

Mr Mansfield: I do not know what year they were doing this. In 1988, we did our first survey and the chamber has constantly stayed on the same focus: that we are freedom of choice. That has been the consensus of our membership throughout.

Mr Daigeler: You supported at the time the municipal option.

Mr Mansfield: Yes. That was at the same time.

I had a conversation with Mr Clarkson, who was scheduled to speak here today and at the time that the Collingwood council was having its open debates over Sunday shopping, Mr Clarkson was not in favour of Sunday openings. However, down the road in early spring I happened to speak to Mr Clarkson. He had since opened his store on Sundays and I said to him, "How are you making out opening on Sundays?" He said to me: "As much as I hate to say it, I am able to employ people and make a profit. I didn't want to open Sundays but economically I have to." He also created jobs by doing this and we do not have enough jobs in this province now.

1400

Mr J. Wilson: It is always interesting to have lectures about economics from the Liberal Party. Mr Sorbara's correction of history from the party that raised taxes at unprecedented rates—

Mr Sorbara: Here we are getting into political discourse.

Mr J. Wilson: Just thought I would throw that in, Greg. Craig, thanks very much for appearing before the committee today. I am going to play devil's advocate for a minute, what the NDP do. You did a 1988 survey, if I heard you correctly, and you had 54% of retailers surveyed at that time who wanted freedom of choice. As former president of the chamber of commerce, I guess you have to represent all the views. When you allow those retailers who want to be open to open, does it put undue pressure on those who do not want to be open?

Mr Mansfield: No, I do not believe it does. I think every business will survive at the level that the owner and entrepreneur wants his business to survive. You make the decision in business to either become very large or stay very small and you find the level that suits you, the income that suits you and I think you go to that level. We are like water, we take the easiest route.

When I came to town there was one other locksmith in the community. He never worked the Sundays. He never worked the Saturdays. I chose to. He still does not work the Saturdays. He still does not work the Sundays. That is his choice. I have never forced him to. He has never forced me to.

I do not look at my competitor and say, "You sell this at $10." I look at my costs and I say: "I have to get $12 for it. Therefore, I am not going to sell it one dime under $12. I will not do it for nothing." You do what is best for your own business, and each business looks at itself as an entity unto itself.

Mr J. Wilson: It sounds like your bottom line would be that you would just prefer the government not to regulate in this area at all.

Mr Mansfield: I think if the government is going to regulate in the retail area, then it should start taking a look and changing everything. Either shut down General Motors and shut down LOF Glass and shut down everything else—if you are going to regulate me as a retailer, which is my choice, then you shut down everything. Otherwise you are discriminating against me and I will not accept that. You have no right, because I chose to be a retailer instead of a lawyer or a doctor or a factory worker or a foreman or a general plant manager, to place me on a separate scale and say, "Okay, you're a retailer; you can't work."

Mr Carr: The Ontario Chamber of Commerce came in earlier in the week. I do not know if you are familiar with it, but one of the provisions in here for somebody getting a tourist exemption is that he has to have the support of the chamber of commerce. The Ontario Chamber of Commerce said it was horrified when that came out, because in fact it had not been consulted and it was sort of thrown in its lap. I was wondering if you could comment on that, what your feeling is about forcing chambers of commerce across this province to have to jump into the fight with a letter of support if you are going to get a tourist exemption.

Mr Mansfield: We are not an elected body. We will come to the municipal government, we will come to the provincial and we will come to the federal with our opinions, but we are not an elected body. Our membership changes every year. Every two years we change our leadership. So to put this onus on somebody is not the effective way to do it. You want continuity in what you are going to do. What they are trying to do with this is the same thing as the Liberal government did when it dropped it on the municipalities. They are trying to distance themselves from the decision-making. All you have to do is say, "Open it up; make your own decisions," not through this body or that body.

We do not need more bureaucrats. We do not need more muddle and paperwork. We just need to be able to work, and to drop it on the chamber of commerce is completely unfair, the same as it was completely unfair to drop it on to the municipalities.

Sometimes politicians have to stand up and say, "This is what's right." That is what people in this province are looking for, somebody who will stand up and say, "This is what's right for the province of Ontario."

Mr Fletcher: Just a short couple of questions. We think this is right.

Mr Mansfield: Unfortunately.

Mr Fletcher: We are standing up and saying it, and that is what you asked us to do, sir. As far as the Sunday working situation, do you agree that employees should have the right to refuse work on Sunday?

Mr Mansfield: Definitely, but when are they going to have the right to refuse to work at LOF Glass and General Motors?

Mr Fletcher: This is a retail business act. This is not the Employment Standards Act.

Mr Mansfield: Why am I different from LOF Glass and General Motors? What makes me such an ogre and those guys so great?

Mr Fletcher: I do not know. I did not say you were an ogre.

Mr Mansfield: Why are you legislating against independent business? That is what you are doing: You are trying to legislate against independent business.

Mr Fletcher: Am I being asked the questions or am I asking them?

The Acting Chair: He has a right to ask questions too.

Mr Fletcher: Suppose Collingwood does open wide open. You do not have bus service on Sunday and that will be a requirement, possibly, for people to get to work and everything else. The transportation, the expanded police force activity, day care facilities that are going to be needed—who is going to pay for this? If this law is wrong and we say, "Okay, wide-open Sunday shopping for business interests," is business going to pay for the costs?

Mr Mansfield: The business taxes that are paid—

Mr Fletcher: Is it business exclusively that is going to be paying for it, business municipal taxes?

Mr Mansfield: If you people would be more efficient with it instead of throwing it around in $9-billion deficits, then there would be more money around to do it. The business taxes we pay on a seven-day-a-week basis would more than cover it, yes.

Mr Fletcher: So property taxes would go up to cover this also?

Mr Mansfield: I do not see any taxes going up if we would have a little bit of efficiency in this world.

Mr Fletcher: That would come down to the municipality when it comes to expanding the services. It has nothing to do with us, and you are the people who want the services expanded.

Mr Mansfield: I do not know where you are from, Mr Fletcher.

Mr Fletcher: Guelph.

Mr Mansfield: You are coming from Guelph and you are telling us here in Collingwood what we are going to have to expand.

Mr Fletcher: The same holds true for my city.

Mr Mansfield: Different strokes. What you are saying is not necessarily true.

Mr Morrow: Yesterday we had the Ontario Chamber of Commerce present a brief, indicating that in 1988 it adopted a position that is very close to what we tried to achieve. Did you agree with their position then?

Mr Mansfield: I am not aware of what that paper said, so I cannot comment on it.

Mr Morrow: I can give you briefly what they said yesterday in their brief. It says the majority of surveyed retailers would prefer to remain closed on Sundays.

Mr Mansfield: That was not the survey that was taken by the members of the chamber of commerce in Collingwood.

Mr Morrow: Do you agree with the absolute right to—

Mr Sorbara: On a point of order, Mr Chair: I think if for no other reason than as a matter of courtesy and respect to the submissions that we heard yesterday from the Ontario Chamber of Commerce, Mr Morrow should be pointing out here in Collingwood as we hold these hearings that the witness there, Mr James Carnegie, testified that the opinion of his members, although they had not adopted a new policy resolution, on the question of whether or not a store should be able to be opened has changed dramatically since 1988, and that was the real thrust of his testimony.

The Acting Chair: That is a point of information, thank you. Mr Morrow.

Mr Morrow: This is April 1991. Do you agree with the absolute right of workers to refuse Sunday work?

Mr Mansfield: Yes I do.

Mr Morrow: Can you possibly tell me how many jobs were created by the Sunday shopping option?

Mr Mansfield: No, I cannot tell you how many jobs are created. Could you tell me how many have been lost because we do not have it?

Mr Morrow: What kind of jobs?

Mr Mansfield: Excuse me, I could not answer yours, but possibly you could answer mine. You seem to have all the information. How many jobs have been lost because we do not have it?

1410

Mr Morrow: I have the figures here, sir, that no jobs were lost due to Sunday shopping. Can you possibly tell me—

Mr Mansfield: You believe that?

Mr Morrow: I believe that very strongly. What kind of job, sir, do you feel that you are creating by opening on Sundays, full-time or part-time?

Mr Mansfield: I believe I can create full-time jobs and I believe that we can create good part-time jobs, which would give our unemployed students, which we have an abundance of in this province right now, the opportunity to earn some funds. Possibly if they could earn some funds, we would not have to spend as much on subsidizing their tuition.

Mr Morrow: Now that you have this bylaw in Collingwood, what business is open? What type of businesses? Big stores, small retail?

Mr Mansfield: It looks like more small retail stores that would have maybe an owner and two employees.

Mr Mills: Thank you for coming and talking to us. Everything you say has been taken into consideration, I assure you.

You made one statement that said, "We, in Canada, are five years behind the US." I take it that was to mean in wide-open shopping, so my question to you, very briefly, is: Can you see the importance of family life in Canada being somewhat different than the United States, vis-à-vis the opening of Sundays and allowing families to be together or not being together? Do you attach any importance to that consideration?

Mr Mansfield: I attach a great deal of importance to families being together, and I would like to relate a story to you, sir, that maybe would emphasize this. When we were discussing Sunday shopping in Collingwood, we had a presentation from a lady named Sylvia who worked at Towers. She was very adamant that we should not have Sunday shopping because it was a family day, and she had to spend it with her family. She wanted to walk among the roses and smell the fresh air and spend time with her family on Sundays, and this was her first presentation at the first public meeting.

At the second public meeting, she did not come quite as well prepared with her written statement, and she got a little carried away when there were more people there supporting Sunday shopping. She got up and wanted to have her say, and as she was running through having her say, it turns out that on Sundays, her Sunday outings were spent on a farm up in Feversham. Her husband works, she works at Towers, and they have a 100-acre farm up in Feversham. The Sunday outing consisted of looking after and caring for 100 head of cattle that had to be done. So this was a family outing, working on Sundays.

The family will find the time to be together. The parenting skills that people have, they will bring out of themselves. You do not have children for the sake of not spending time with them. You make the time, but you also prioritize these times to suit your own lifestyle. To say that everybody has the same lifestyle is not true.

The Acting Chair: Mr Mansfield, on behalf of the committee, I would like to thank you for your presentation.

Mr Mansfield: Thank you very much for having me.

GEORGIAN TRIANGLE TOURIST ASSOCIATION AND CONVENTION BUREAU

The Acting Chair: We will now call on the Georgian Triangle Tourist Association and Convention Bureau, which was displaced from first thing this morning. You will be given 15 minutes. You can give a 15-minute presentation or a shorter one that allows time for questions and comments from each of the caucuses. Please identify yourself and then proceed.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Chair, on a point of order: My impression was that organizations were provided with half an hour before this committee. Is there any particular reason why we have limited the Georgian Triangle to 15 minutes?

Clerk of the Committee: The reason for that is when the Georgian Triangle called me and I was speaking with them, they said they could do their presentation in 10 minutes. That is why they were slid in at 8:50 this morning. It was at their request. If the committee wants to extend the time, that is up to the committee.

Mr Sorbara: I note that the next witness is scheduled to be here at 2:30; perhaps we could just allow a little flexibility so that if any of the members of the committee have additional questions, you will use your discretion and provide us with some more time.

The Acting Chair: Sure. We will take that into consideration.

Mr Sorbara: What a refreshing change on this committee.

Ms Metras: Thank you very much, Mr Sorbara, and thank you very much, Mr Chairman, for giving me that opportunity. I hope the time will allow.

My name is Sheila Metras, and I am the executive director of the Georgian Triangle tourist association. Our association represents over 450 tourism and tourism-related businesses, many of which are small business operators. We are speaking today directly on their behalf.

We represent as well the chambers of commerce of Meaford, Beaver Valley, Collingwood, Wasaga Beach and Stayner through a committee of our tourist association known as the Georgian Triangle interchamber committee. That is a committee that allows us to share and exchange views on matters of concern and interest to our respective members.

The Georgian Triangle area covers the geographic, cultural and economic area from Meaford in the west to Wasaga Beach in the east, a total of seven core tourism municipalities. The Georgian Triangle area is an interdependent linked marketing area, very heavily dependent on tourism and on the hospitality retail sector for its economic wellbeing.

Tourism is, at the present, the mainstay of our Georgian Triangle economy. The area has suffered greatly from the heavy layoffs and plant closings in the industrial manufacturing sector. Some of those jobs which have been lost locally will not be regained in the future. The majority will probably not be replaced without great difficulty.

In 1987, when the largest employer in the area, the Collingwood Shipyards, closed its doors, the community looked to tourism to sustain it through the transition to new employment opportunities for the labour force. A construction boom, brought on by the high demand for recreational housing, fuelled high prosperity in the entire Georgian Triangle area. In the present, in the severe recession which we have been experiencing and which we are afraid is not yet over in Ontario, we are once again counting on visitor dollars to generate employment and future opportunities for our citizens.

The Georgian Triangle is one of the most tourist-intensive, four-season destination areas in Ontario. We fit six out of the six criteria established for the official municipal tourism exemption under Bill 115. Our Georgian Triangle visitors enjoy exploring the area. That is a great part of their vacation experience. However, for many, shopping while they are on holiday is a pleasurable component of their holiday experience.

Many of our visitors were startled to find the entire town of Collingwood with its beautiful Main Street, which is so attractive to browsers and set up that way with music and shade trees and benches, closed up tight on Sundays. Fortunately other shops in the Georgian Triangle area were open, though visitors are deprived of the excellent quality and variety of shopping to be found in Collingwood. Collingwood really is the major draw in the Georgian Triangle.

As you know, tourism is highly competitive. We are struggling mightily to keep our market share. To do so, we must provide all services, and that includes shopping on a seven-day, everyday basis if we are to maintain that market share, particularly in tough times when discretionary dollars are in very short supply and the visitors can afford to be choosy. They do not have to come here; there are other places they can go.

The Collingwood Chamber of Commerce did a study in 1990 which showed the majority to be in favour of Sunday and holiday opening in Collingwood, and very recently Collingwood passed bylaw 91-47, permitting retail establishments to open on holidays and Sundays. This will start the process for the town to apply to the province for tourism-exempt status.

The policy of the Georgian Triangle tourist association is to support the tourism-exempt status for those Georgian Triangle municipalities that wish to apply for it. We support the right of individual businesses to choose if they wish to open or remain closed on Sundays and holidays. Last, but most important, we respect and support the right of retail workers to refuse to work on Sundays and public holidays. There are more than enough persons willing, and in many cases wanting, to work on Sundays and holidays that no one should be forced to work. In a recreation area such as the Georgian Triangle part-time employment for students and for others is an integral component of the local economy.

We would like to point out that the Georgian Triangle tourism and hospitality industry must, with some seasonal exceptions, provide continuous service to our visitors seven days per week, 365 days per year. Our own tourist information centre is closed on one day only, Christmas day, and we still have requests from people to open on that day.

Our employees have always accepted this fact as a precondition of employment in an industry which is dependent on good service, goodwill and professional hospitality. The present Employment Standards Act protects all retail business establishment employees. Employees can be asked to work at any time by employers beyond their normal working hours and many are more than willing to do so. However, no employee can be discriminated against for not accepting work outside of normal working hours.

Indeed, most employees are treated with dignity and respect by employers whose businesses are so dependent on staff attitude. The tourism industry is built on co-operation and a certain esprit de corps, so the employers have a vested interest in keeping their employees happy. So we ask, is there a need to establish any new law to protect worker interests beyond that which exists already?

We expect that a tourism-exempt status for applying Georgian Triangle municipalities will stimulate our tourism through increased services to visitors. It will also provide desired services to our very large second-home market. Close to 4,000 new condo units have been constructed in the area since 1988 and are primarily owned by weekend and holiday residents. Anecdotal surveys confirm that Sunday shopping will be viewed as an important service, particularly, as an example, for the home handyman who breaks an essential tool or runs out of paint in the middle of an important home project on Sunday.

We support the motives behind the amendments to the retail business establishments statute in Bill 115 because it endeavours to recognize the importance and value of tourism to the local and provincial economies. However, we must articulate some of the concerns that surround Bill 115; namely, the difficulties that municipalities, retail businesses and other organizations face in interpreting, administering and applying the proposed tourism criteria fairly. To begin, we would recommend the following changes in the tourism criteria regulation.

Under tourist area characteristics, these changes and recommendations include that the list of characteristics for a qualifying geographic area should be expanded to include the following tourism criteria: (a) tourism in the area has historically been an important part of the local economy and (b) it provides goods or services necessary to tourist activities in the area.

Under the retail business restrictions section, we recommend that the clause that asks for the number of persons serving the public and the floor space occupied by a qualifying business should have no bearing on its ability to meet common tourism criteria.

Tourism season qualifier: These time periods will vary of course within a designated tourism area, as will the length of the tourism season for various types of qualifying retail business establishments for a wide variety of circumstances. We feel the qualifier could be removed from this subsection.

The following are concerns that have been expressed by Tourism Ontario in its brief to you, which you have already received, and we would like to see some of these concerns addressed.

The first one is that the empowerment of local municipal councils, clause 1(1)(aa) of the Retail Business Holidays Amendment Act, 1989, should be amended to permit all local municipal councils within a district, county, metropolitan or regional municipality to enact bylaws to permit retail business establishments in each local municipality to be open on holidays for the maintenance or development of tourism. It is duplicative, unnecessary and unfair to burden metropolitan or regional municipal councils with applications from local councils regarding designated tourist area exemptions.

Councils' obligations are a point that we were quite concerned about. Municipal councils should not be granted discretionary power through which they can refuse to pass a designated tourist area bylaw permitting any or all retail business establishments which meet the provincial tourism criteria and apply for exemption to be open on Sunday.

To make a given municipal council's decision final on whether or not it wishes to pass a bylaw to permit retail business establishments in a municipality to open on Sundays and holidays defeats the whole purpose of its having such authority in the first place. That is to suggest that no legitimate reasons or causes could ever be presented to a municipal council which had refused to designate a tourist area under a tourist area bylaw exemption, regardless of merit, including future development of tourism infrastructure or ventures within said municipality. Surely, in the democratic society which the government of Ontario is committed to for all of its citizens, such a draconian clause could be withdrawn.

Procedures of councils: Municipal councils should not be granted the sole power to limit the number of applications from retail business establishments that they will consider in a given year. Businesses should be free to apply for the exemption at least once every calendar year. We are also in agreement with the basic philosophy behind the recommendations of Tourism Ontario that will eliminate obstacles which prevent businesses from exercising their basic fundamental rights and freedoms to open when and where they perceive a need to provide retail shopping services. We support the right of the public to choose where and if they wish to shop on Sundays and holidays. We support the unrestricted right of Ontario citizens to work, provide services and earn income from the production and sale of goods and provision of services any day of the week.

We support elimination of a costly administrative burden on the municipalities and the potential for possible litigation problems by providing for an appeal process or a body such as the Ontario Municipal Board to act as a mediator between the local councils and the province and between the business community and the local council. This is of great concern to us because there does not appear to be any appeal mechanism outlined in the bill at this point. This is an important element if we are to eliminate potential litigation on both sides, for the municipalities and for the businesses, and to allow businesses the right to a fair hearing without the need to establish a costly and cumbersome new bureaucratic office within government.

The town of Collingwood, in its brief on Sunday shopping, addressed that problem. There would have to be some fair criteria set out by them, so they are aware that there is a great responsibility on their part to come up with a process through which all businesses can access the right to open.

We would like to see those concerns addressed. These are as reiterated by Tourism Ontario in its brief to you. Tourism Ontario, as you know, is an independent federation of tourism organizations and groups. We have had great service from their advocacy in the past. We hope you will address those concerns so that we all can feel that due process has been given.

Our association thanks the standing committee for the opportunity to speak to you about the value and importance of Bill 115 to the Georgian Triangle tourism industry. Tourism is an integral and major component of the Georgian Triangle economy and indeed Ontario. We hope the recommendations and representations made to your committee by Tourism Ontario and other tourism organizations such as ourselves and the chambers of commerce will be carefully considered before the legislation is passed.

The Acting Chair: Thank you. I think we will allow about two and a half minutes for each caucus. I am sure that with short and concise questions and answers, we will get through this.

Mr Sorbara: A very good and interesting presentation. There is one irony in it, not to say inconsistency, that I wanted to question you about. The major thrust of your submission seems to suggest that you support the bill in general terms and you set out a series of amendments which would make it better. By the way, I agree that if we are going to have this bill, amendments along those lines should be adopted by the government. But then in your submission you say, and I think I am quoting, "We support the right of retail businesses to open when and where they please." You go on to say, "We support the unrestricted right"—and I am paraphrasing here, but I think it was "of citizens to be able to shop in the manner which most accommodates their lifestyle."

This bill that we are confronted with says retail businesses shall not have the right to open on Sunday unless they can come within narrow criteria and come within some sort of tourism exemption. The notion that businesses, not just tourist businesses but businesses generally, should have the right to open when and where they please is inconsistent with that.

Which does the Georgian Triangle advocate? Is it the freedom for a non-tourist business to participate in the market on Sunday or is it a restriction to tourism with better criteria?

Ms Metras: Mr Sorbara, we are speaking to the bill which we see here. We have suggested some amendments in the tourism criteria, but we would expect there would have to be criteria for businesses to open. I do not think you can have unlimited opening any place or time that a business might want to. We are respectful of the intent of the bill because it does recognize the value of tourism. It is going to establish some criteria for communities to apply, and we feel that is fair.

Mr Sorbara: So you support the view that there should be special rules for Sunday openings that do not apply for openings on any other day of the week?

Ms Metras: Yes, I think we could support that.

Mr Sorbara: Under this bill, any business that is over 7,500 square feet would have to make a special application and have the certification of the local chamber of commerce before it was permitted to open. Do you think that is fair?

Ms Metras: No, I do not. I think that wherever the municipality can meet the criteria for the tourism exemption, all businesses within that municipality should be allowed to open, regardless of size.

Mr J. Wilson: Thank you, Sheila, very much. I found it very informative. On the question of the size of the establishments, with the 7,500 square foot limitation now, if that were to pass as is in the proposed legislation, how many businesses or to what extent would businesses be affected in the Georgian Triangle?

Ms Metras: There would probably not be that many. There are two or three which I think would open, though it is interesting, because if the business has the right—

Mr J. Wilson: Excuse me, how many would not be able to open if that criteria were in?

Ms Metras: You mean if the 7,500 square feet was kept as the—

Mr J. Wilson: Yes, and the eight-employee one too.

Ms Metras: I am really not sure. I think there would probably be a few, but again, as Mr McMullen said, at IGA it takes 20 people to open his shop and he probably would not do it at a grocery store. That would be one of the businesses that potentially would not be allowed to open if that criterion was held to, but there will be others that would open if they had that opportunity. I do not know how many.

Mr J. Wilson: During the period last year when we had essentially unregulated Sunday shopping, what was your experience here from a tourism perspective in the sense that some of the stores were open? Maybe you can give me the history. We had unregulated shopping for, what, about eight months? We had some stores open, some not open; it was basically freedom of choice. I received zero letters on the subject during that period. The office at Queen's Park, I should say, received zero letters on the subject. It did not seem to me once we had unregulated Sunday shopping that people were too upset about it, at least to the point of writing to their legislators. Was that your experience?

Ms Metras: Yes, it was. I think most of our visitors, and I think I can speak to that, were quite pleased to have the opportunity to shop when and where they wished. We did not see any severe dislocation and there did not seem to be any problem that some businesses were open and others were not. It did not take our visitors very long to find out what was open, and they would go there.

Mr J. Wilson: I am rapidly coming to the conclusion that this law has a guise in it that it is going to protect workers, give them a right of refusal. I do not think that will work. As I said before, I think it is going to be a field day for lawyers and that it is just another burden on people in this province, another whole pile of regulations that are piled on the books that we are going to have to follow. I do not think it will be workable a year from now. We will find that much of it is tied up in the courts.

It seems to me a lot of groups come forward with good amendments because they figure it is the best they are going to get; the government is committed to going ahead with this bill. I would agree with them. I am glad they do, as you have made suggestions. But if you had your ultimate choice, Utopia here, would you just prefer not to have regulations?

Ms Metras: I think almost any sensible person would say that.

Mr J. Wilson: Some do not. Reverend Wilson behind you would probably disagree on that.

Ms Metras: When you wade through the amount of paper that is before us, it is a very difficult bit of legislation. We understand the intent of it and we are sympathetic to that. Of course we would appreciate having wide-open Sunday shopping in the province and we would appreciate the province taking the responsibility to do that.

Mr J. Wilson: I think that is what you are going to get anyway. I think it is a shell game they are playing here.

Mr Mills: Ms Metras, I would like to thank you for your input here this afternoon. I would just like to take you up briefly on one issue. You seem to have some level of criticism for the tourist criteria. I would just like to tell you that these criteria were established through very wide consultation with the tourist industry in North America and internationally, and from that wide consultation process, these criteria evolved as to what tourism is. That is why they are in here. It is not something our government dreamed up as criteria; it is from the industry. Thank you very much.

Ms Metras: Thank you, but with respect, we would have hoped that those criteria would have been established through consultation with organizations such as ourselves, not international or even across Canada.

Mr Mills: We went to the industry.

The Acting Chair: Mr Fletcher, you have a quick comment and then Mr Lessard.

Mr Fletcher: Thank you for your presentation. I found it to be very refreshing and very articulate. I agree with some of your recommendations. It is nice to see that you come with recommendations rather than just to bash away at certain things. At least you want to participate. I am glad to see there is a lot of participation; that is what this committee is all about. As I said, some of your recommendations I think are very good and you certainly assured me on some things.

Ms Metras: All we can ask is that you consider our suggestions. We are very pleased to work with you at any time to give you the local flavour.

The Acting Chair: We have one more question. Mr Lessard, one quick question.

Mr Lessard: I hope you can provide your recommendations to us in writing so that we can look at them in depth as well.

If I understand your submissions, you do not think there is any distinction between stores that are small and stores that are very large. You think that distinction should be removed. You also think that if there is a certain geographic area that is within a tourist zone, then all of the stores that are in there should be able to open, including department stores, large grocery stores and things of that nature.

I am going to suggest to you that there may be a difference between how employees are treated. You say all employees are treated with dignity and respect, and I am going to suggest that there may be a distinction between employees in small, independent stores and ones who might work in large department stores or grocery stores. Would you agree or disagree with that?

Ms Metras: I can only speak from my own experience within my own industry in my own Georgian Triangle area, so I could not say. I do not have any experience—

Mr Lessard: Within this area.

Ms Metras: Philosophically, anything is possible.

Just one last comment: Considering the gravity of the matter at hand, we were somewhat concerned about the lack of notice we received as a tourist association of this particular hearing. We do not feel a notice in the local newspaper is sufficient for something as important as this. If you are going to hold more meetings in future, I suggest that certain organizations which would have a direct interest in participating, such as chambers of commerce and business organizations, be notified by mail.

1440

The Acting Chair: Thank you for that comment. We will take that under consideration. Ms Metras, on behalf of the committee, I would like to thank you for your presentation.

Interjection: Was this advertised?

Ms Metras: Evidently it was. I do not know how many times. That is not sufficient for something as important to the business community. It is just a matter to think about.

The Acting Chair: Just for your information, the clerk can clarify this.

Clerk of the Committee: Generally, it is up to the committee to decide how it wants to advertise. Committees generally advertise once in every daily newspaper across Ontario. Some committees specifically send out invitations to certain groups and other committees do not, depending on the issue.

The Acting Chair: We will move on now. Our next presenter—

Mr Carr: Just for the record, we did not decide on this city without a lot of debate. Just for the people who are out there, the fact we even got to come to this city was because of a push by different groups. What went on in the Toronto area—Queen's Park—during the debate was that certain cities did not want to be included because they were border towns. It was sort of last minute that we ended up with this city, and the committee had the option of sending out the invitations.

The Acting Chair: Thank you for that point of information.

LEN ROCQUE

The Acting Chair: Our next presenter is Mr Len Rocque. Thank you for coming here today. You will be allowed 15 minutes for your presentation. You can either take the full 15 minutes for your presentation or you can make it a briefer submission and allow time for questions and comments from each of the caucuses. Please identify yourself and proceed.

Mr Rocque: My name is Len Rocque. I am the president of Vacation Investment Properties Inc and Greenfields Realty Inc, two Collingwood firms that provide marketing and sales services exclusively to the resort condominium industry in the Collingwood area. I am also past president of the local Liberal provincial riding association, but I hasten to add that I am not here in any partisan role today.

I am a member of the Collingwood and District Real Estate Board, the Ontario Real Estate Association and the Canadian Real Estate Association. I am appearing here today on behalf of my own firm and not on behalf of any of the associations of which I am a member.

I appreciate the opportunity to address the committee very briefly. My comments are brief. I would like to touch initially on the three principal objectives of this bill as I see them, and I have several very specific recommendations.

The three principal objectives of Bill 115, as I see them, are the maintenance of a common pause day, the delegation of the right to create tourist exemptions to local councils and the protection of employees from Sunday work. In principle, I support all three of these objectives, but I have some reservations. As I have indicated, I have a few recommendations that maybe the committee would like to consider.

On the subject of the common pause day, I would comment only that if a high percentage of Ontarians enjoy a two-day weekend, an even higher percentage enjoy a Sunday common pause day because most retail outlets are closed under current legislation. With appropriate exemptions, I support the concept of a common pause day, and I have no recommendations in this particular category.

On the matter of local councils determining exemptions, I have the following observations. A whole leisure-time industry has sprung up to meet the leisure-time needs of Ontarians. Most of these are Saturday and Sunday oriented and would include attractions and events of every description, from festivals to antique car shows, from cottages to resort condominiums and everything in between. Most of these industries involve some degree of retail merchandizing of goods and services on Sunday. This government should support this leisure-time industry in every way possible. It is a growing but struggling part of Ontario's economy. It is a major contributor to the economy of many communities. Nothing in this legislation should impede this industry from growing and prospering.

With regard to local councils deciding the exemptions, I am very concerned for the small retail merchants in those communities that do not pass enabling legislation or enabling bylaws, those retail merchants who clearly meet the government's intent or the intent of this bill: the small roadside potter or other craftsmen; the antique-shop owner; garden centres; ski shops; pro shops and golf courses; vendors of recreational and vacation property, either the developers themselves or, in my case, the real estate broker who works exclusively with recreational and resort property.

I strongly recommend to this committee that additional categories of retail merchandizing be added to the provincial legislation so that, at a very minimum, these kinds of operations can stay open province-wide and are not subject to local council approval.

Still on the matter of local councils passing Sunday opening bylaws, I cannot understand why a bylaw passed since first reading of this bill, one which meets all the criteria of this bill, would automatically be repealed when this bill finally comes into force. I consider that to be a waste of time. I can see more public meetings. These public meetings are generally difficult in this community, and I recommend that this part of the bill be changed.

Still on these local bylaws, I recommend that a council passing a Sunday opening bylaw would not be able to repeal that bylaw unless in a specified time period, say two years. I can envision a scenario where a duly elected council, prior to election time, passes enabling legislation so categories of tourist business can stay open on Sundays. You have an election and four weeks later the new council repeals the bylaw. I can see a situation where somebody leases a store for three years, thinking he is going to run a tourist operation out of that, retail merchandizing that caters primarily to tourists, only to have the bylaw repealed. So I would recommend that change in the bill.

The final recommendation regarding bylaws: It seems to me there should be some appeal from an obstinate town council or township council refusing to pass an enabling bylaw for an absolutely obvious tourist-oriented business.

Finally, on the matter of protection for employees hired after passing of this legislation, employees hired specifically for Sunday work by a firm, by a tourist business, I would suggest that there simply is no way that particular employee should be able to, within 48 hours, change his mind and indicate to the owner of that business that he is no longer obliged to work on Sunday. I think the bill can do better than that.

To sum up very briefly, my recommendations, again, would be these: that several categories of business be added to the provincial legislation and that they be permitted under the Retail Business Holidays Act so that these tourist businesses can be open province-wide on Sunday regardless of whether the local council has passed enabling legislation or enabling bylaws; eliminate the repeal of bylaws passed since the act was first read; set a minimum time on local councils for repealing Sunday shopping bylaws; have some type of an appeal process; and improve that portion of the legislation dealing with the 48-hour change of heart by an employee hired specifically for Sunday work.

That is all I have to say, gentlemen. I would be glad to take any questions.

1450

Mr Sorbara: I want to congratulate you for an extremely good analysis of the bill, and I hope that if the government persists in moving forward with Bill 115, some of the matters you brought up can form part of a package of amendments.

I think the major difference of opinion that is emerging on this committee is there are those who are coming to the view that there is no fair way to choose between the winners and losers in the Sunday shopping issue and that therefore the only fair thing to do is to allow the businesses of this province to choose personally and for themselves whether or not they are going to open on Sunday. Why is it you feel the government should still be in the business of choosing winners and losers through special regulation of Sunday?

Mr Rocque: Like many of us, I guess it is a personal thing, and that is why I indicated today I was not appearing here representing the Liberal Party in any fashion. It is just my personal concept that weekends, specifically Sunday, are a leisure time to be enjoyed by families, and quite frankly, I am not at all sure wide-open Sunday shopping is a necessity or that the people of Ontario are really seeking that, but there are certainly categories of businesses they like to see open.

I think everybody, even those who are opposed to Sunday shopping, still would have his own small list of businesses that should be open on Sunday, although I have heard one gentleman say that nothing should be open on Sunday—absolutely nothing. I do not know how you even take a trip on Sunday in that case, if the service stations and food outlets and what not are not open. I think if you polled Ontarians, there would be a wide range of opinion on how many businesses should be open. I just happen to fall into the category that feels it should be tourist-oriented and that we should not have wide-open Sunday shopping in everything, furniture stores and what not. I am also concerned that if we get to that point, I just do not know how much farther it is going to go beyond retail merchandising. The first thing we know, it is going to be manufacturing and—

Mr Sorbara: Manufacturing is already opened up, sir.

Mr Rocque: I am aware of that, much to my surprise. I found that out a week or two ago.

Mr Carr: Thank you for the presentation. One of the questions I have is what you see happening as a result of this legislation. I think probably in this area here tourist exemptions will probably be met and I suspect, for example, Collingwood will be open, will meet the requirements. What do you see happening in the rest of the province with the legislation staying as it is? Again, this would be just a bit of a guess, but what do you see happening?

Mr Rocque: With the legislation proposed, one of the scenarios I see is real problems for some of my peers up in northern Ontario in communities that have indicated they are not going to pass local bylaws permitting any category of business to be open on Sunday. I happen to represent the real estate and development community. We have resort condominium developers here in Collingwood selling resort condominiums primarily on the weekends. I have been in the business 12 years and my firm has sold 1,000 of the 3,000 units that Sheila referred to. I can tell this committee that 40% of my sales were on Saturday, 40% of my sales were on Sunday and the other 20% were during the week. I am concerned about my peers in other communities that under this legislation might not be able to open on Sundays to sell recreational properties, vacation properties and resort condominium projects. I do not know how they will survive if they cannot open on Sunday. That is just a partial answer. Other than that, I do not see major problems with this legislation.

Mr O'Connor: I want to thank you for coming today. I am glad to see that you support most of the general concepts we have in the legislation in trying to come up with the common pause day. There have been some differences of opinion, of course, with different workers being talked about, in particular, I guess, the LOF here in town. I guess they have negotiated their hours and they have a continental work shift, so it is a little bit different from what we have here.

You have spelled out quite a few different ways you would like to see this changed, and I just want to reassure you that is why the committee is on the road, to try and get some suggestions. If there are amendments, that will be worked out later on, upon listening to many submissions from many witnesses right across the province. Your support for the general thrust for the common pause day and protection for the worker's right to refuse, which will help the family values aspect of this, and of course in areas where the tourism criteria are so fundamentally important to the local economy, I think is definitely a good way of going. I want to thank you for coming.

Mr Rocque: Mr O'Connor, with respect to the protection of employees part of it, I did specifically indicate my concern with employees indicating they would work for those businesses on Sunday that will be open on Sunday and then have a flip-flop within 48 hours and tell the employer they do not intend to work on Sunday. I have real concerns with that part of the legislation.

Mr O'Connor: The 48-hour part of the legislation gives you some difficulty.

Mr Rocque: Yes. It would be a major problem for me to hire a salesperson who indicated he was prepared to work in my firm on Sunday, when I do 40% of my business, and then notify me two days later he had changed his mind and he could not work on Sunday.

Mr Daigeler: Mr Chairman, before we move on to the next presenter, would the committee be in agreement to make a request to the researcher that some figures be provided on what the actual situation is in Ontario with regard to Sunday work by other sectors of the economy? Several times we were talking about the manufacturing sector being actually open. I would like to know a little bit more specifically what in fact is happening there at the present time and what regulations there are, if that is not too difficult.

Ms Swift: Perhaps you could give me some direction as to which sectors of the economy, which industries, you want me to look at.

The Acting Chair: Auto and steel.

Mr Daigeler: Yes, and Mr Sorbara referred to the manufacturing sector generally. Is this customary? How widespread is this? I just do not know.

Mr Morrow: I understand what you are asking and it makes sense, but as Mr Sorbara knows, my God, there are an awful lot of unionized manufacturing companies out there. There are an awful lot of non-unionized manufacturing companies out there. You might be asking a great deal at that point.

The Acting Chair: We will see what legislative research can come up with and provide it for you.

Mr Daigeler: Perhaps the ministry would have done some work on that. What is the situation currently, other than the retail sector? Are there many? I am not asking for precise statistics, but somebody who can really tell me how widespread is this.

Ms Swift: I will report back to you after I see what the lay of the land is.

The Acting Chair: Thank you for bringing that up.

Mr Morrow: I was going to suggest you might want to break it down into just retail, because we are dealing with the Retail Business Holidays Act.

Mr Daigeler: Not at all. Mr Chairman, that is precisely my point.

The Acting Chair: The point is that a lot of presenters are bringing up the manufacturing sector.

Mr Daigeler: The comparison is being made, and I think it is a very important argument, why just the retail sector if the manufacturing sector and other parts of the economy are operating?

Mr O'Connor: Can I make a suggestion, a very short one, perhaps to include negotiated hours in that research too. Maybe you can break that down. It would give us some guidelines to work with. I think it is a very reasonable request.

Ms Swift: As I said, I will have to look and see what figures are available. I do not know if they break it down that way, but I will certainly look into it and report back to the committee, and perhaps then you can decide what it is you want exactly.

BEV BLAIS

The Acting Chair: I will call our next presenter, Bev Blais. I would like to thank you for coming today. You will be given 15 minutes for your presentation. You can either use the whole 15 minutes or else give a shorter brief and then there will be questions and comments from each of the caucuses. Please identify yourself and then proceed.

Mrs Blais: I would like to thank the Chair for giving me the opportunity to speak today. My name is Bev Blais and I am a full-time resident of Collingwood. I am also a taxpayer, a concerned citizen, a consumer, a lifetime Ontario resident and a Canadian. I spent 20 years in the retail printing business in Toronto before we moved to Collingwood. My presentation, by the way, today is on behalf of myself and my husband.

I was encouraged to speak to you today because my husband and I were recently involved in the Sunday shopping issue here in Collingwood. We worked in support of the merchants' presentation and we submitted a letter to Collingwood council on the matter. It reads in part as follows, with some updating and additions relevant to the discussion today:

I spoke with three members of our community and I was amazed at what I heard. One person was a newcomer to the area and obviously very financially independent, while another was equally well off but had made his fortune in this area over the years, and a third person, born here, was financially capable of having air-conditioning installed in a fairly modest home. All of them spoke of how great life in Collingwood was and how they would not want to see our town change. They spoke of the good fortune which brought them here, and the amazing part is that all of them, without prompting, pinpointed the reasons for their success to factors of change and their capitalization on those changes.

Last Monday after work I watched the proceedings of the business of our town on the local channel, as I often do. It was striking to realize that here I was watching council proceedings on TV in the comfort of my home and what a marvellous example it was of change, particularly of interest to those who have watched local politics over the years. At the same time I considered how fortunate we are to have so many of our citizens willingly give of their time to manage our affairs. Most of these unsung heroes spend their evenings and many Sundays working to make our community work for all of us.

I was also impressed by the complexity and the workload that is processed by our town volunteer administrators. It occurred to me how difficult it must be for each person on the council to see far off in the future or far off in the past. In words which have become familiar, "It's impossible to see the forest when you're surrounded by all those trees." A part of the forest referred to is the need all communities have for the creation of a sound program of changes which will be compatible with the needs and aspirations of their citizens while guarding us against regressive or other factors which threaten what has already been achieved.

Changes take place all the time in response to the needs and aspirations of citizens everywhere, and these changes will affect us whether we want them to or not.

Take as an example the change which has taken place in the overall attendance at churches and synagogues in Canada, from 55% of our population in 1965 to 41% in 1975 to 32% in 1985. Some churches have succeeded in staving off this negative trend and they have achieved this by adapting to our changing society. Among other things they have extended their services to times other than Sunday morning, because they found some of their parishioners were busy doing something else at this traditional worship time. That something else might be recreation, family trips, spectator participation, volunteer duties, gainful employment or employment in the sector to provide others with rest and relaxation. These churches have learned that the traditional times no longer apply to a majority of their parishioners.

Here is a national statistic which applies directly to the subject of our discussion, yet this significant drop took place mostly before Sunday shopping became an issue. It took place, however, concurrent with major increases in the Sunday availability of activities such as spectator games, theatre, fine dining and other recreational pursuits. Sunday obviously lost its exclusivity as a Lord's day for millions of people.

Sunday shopping was introduced for a short while and millions more took it up, out of convenience or as a new recreational activity. It was again obvious that folks in general were quite willing to extend a clear-cut trend of treating Sunday as just another day.

The Sunday preservers were clearly losing the battle for a commercial-free Sunday. A new angle was called for. It seems now that the way to preserve the sanctity of Sunday is to take the leisure angle and declare Sunday a common pause day; that is, a day where everyone could take a break from the hectic pace of earning a living.

Everyone, you say? Well, not quite. A lot of folks will have to work in order to provide the many services which will be required to keep the common pausers busy on Sunday. Add to that the claim by futurists that our society will become increasingly leisure-oriented and it translates into the fact that more and more people will have to work on Sunday. The irony of having a common pause day declared on a day when there is an increasing number of people who are willing to work by need or by choice makes it a pretty ludicrous proposal.

Sunday is a Lord's day for some people, a leisure day for some people, and a work day for some people. It is clear that Sunday is a special day, but it is equally clear that what is special about it is increasingly varied and impossible to legislate. In fact, I believe it is unjustifiable and offensive that any group or our elected officials would be presumptuous enough to dictate to all of us the day of the week when we must pause from work, and at the same time make exceptions to the rule for half our neighbours; to dictate to us that we can buy a decorative clock in a craft shop, but we cannot buy a practical clock in a clock shop; to dictate to us that we can be willing workers as sellers of milk and bread in one type of store, but that we cannot work at selling milk and bread in a different store; to dictate to us that we can work at cleaning carpets on Sunday, but that we cannot work at selling those same carpets in a store. It sounds very archaic and unjust.

To some people, the prime purpose of a pause day is to protect the workers from being forced to work on Sundays. What workers would be so protected and on what factual basis is this kind of protection shown to be so necessary? Thousands upon thousands of other workers do not have this protection against Sunday work, so what makes certain workers in the retail sector so deserving of this protection? In fact, is it truly protection? Is it protection to the student who could benefit from a job on Sunday which might make the difference between a college education or not? Is it protection to the retail sector worker who moonlights by working a second job on Sundays?

You do not need to be visionaries to see that a pause day will become another one of those laws that people will hold up to ridicule as another example of the political tail wagging the dog. If there is evidence of workers requiring protection against the employer, then legislation providing this protection should be enacted under the Labour Relations Act. It should not be the main platform for enacting something as useless as pause day legislation.

I believe that events and trends of the times speak in favour of less control on Sundays, or on any day of the week for that matter. I suggest that Sunday is as good as any other day for carrying on the necessities of living, whether it be worshipping in church, playing squash or golf, participating in cultural events, working as a volunteer for political or charitable purposes, or working and earning a living.

I suggest therefore that Sunday be deregulated. I suggest that the natural forces between needs and wants be the determining factor of what businesses are opened or closed on Sundays. I suggest that demand and supply of labour be the governing factor controlling Sunday work, just as it is for Saturday or Friday or any other day.

I suggest that our legislators seek to liberate us from rules and regulations such as the pause day, which is regressive and for an unclear purpose, complex to enforce and for undetermined benefit.

1510

Mr Sorbara: I enjoyed your presentation. I thought it was an articulate statement of the problem. Would you agree with me that under the rules proposed under Bill 115 the real result, the objective result, out in the marketplace is that the stores where the middle-income people and the upper middle-income people want to shop will be available somewhere within a reasonable distance on Sunday and the stores where the man or woman who is struggling just to pay the rent will be generally closed, and that it is terribly ironic that the New Democratic Party, which professes to be the defender of the poor, is forcing them not to have the opportunity to shop on Sunday while the rich and the affluent can find a store, whether it is a boutique or a Becker's, to shop at?

Mrs Blais: I can only speak on behalf of myself and my own opinion. Yes, if you are talking about the Woolworths in comparison with—

Mr Sorbara: High-end fashion stores.

Mrs Blais: I am thinking of the one in Toronto down at Steeles and Kennedy Road, the garden centre, which is like a Simpsons. You can go there on Sunday but the prices are very high. It services the market that can afford to pay.

Mr Sorbara: But the Woolcos are going to be closed.

Mrs Blais: But Woolco is closed, yes.

Mr Carr: I think more than anything else I was impressed by the fact that you take the time to go to municipal council to watch it. That is not always easy to do, to sit and listen to politicians like us sometimes, and I appreciate that involvement. This province would be a lot better off, regardless of where you stand on the issue, if more people were involved. It was nice to see you take the time to come out.

One of the questions I have relates to what you see happening. You are obviously, by your presentation, very bright and articulate it very well. What do you see happening in the province, knowing the tourist exemptions? Do you see us, when we get through municipalities dealing with this, having wide-open Sunday shopping eventually, or do you see some communities closed down? Do you see a checkerboard of some municipalities open and some closed? I was interested in what your thoughts are, where you see this whole thing going.

Mrs Blais: If this legislation goes through?

Mr Carr: If this present legislation goes through as it is.

Mrs Blais: It is going to be nothing but a huge mess that is very costly to the taxpayers and—I would say destructive is a very strong word—certainly not encouraging to the economy of the province in any way, shape or form. I think we will end up with a lot of lawsuits. I think we will end up with tremendous division within the communities. I think we will end up with so much bureaucratic red tape, and people judging people. Everybody is going to be a judge.

Mr Fletcher: Thank you for appearing before us today and taking the time. I just notice that you said it is unjustifiable and offensive that our elected officials should tell us when we can work and take a day off. When you were watching television of your city council, your elected officials, did you not find it strange that they were passing an act that would tell you when you have to work? It is the same thing. One group is saying, "We want a common pause day." The other group is saying, "No, you have to work."

Mrs Blais: I am not quite sure what you are talking about. I have not seen anything on council that says when I have to work.

Mr Fletcher: When they pass their tourist legislation that allows for wide-open Sunday.

Mrs Blais: That did not tell me when I have to work.

Mr Fletcher: It did for some people, but maybe not for you.

Mrs Blais: It gave the shops the right to open and it gave—

Mr Fletcher: The people who work in those shops have to work there.

Mrs Blais: Have you ever tried to tell a child or an employee what to do? Either one, they do not—

Mr Fletcher: I have done both.

Mrs Blais: It is very clear that there is more protection for the employee than there is for the employer, a great deal more.

Mr Fletcher: I read a quote from a previous Liberal member on Bill 114, which was supposed to protect them. He is saying there is no protection for workers. This is from a previous member on the committee on Bill 114.

Mrs Blais: I do not know. I spent 20 years in management. Protection for the employee is expensive.

Mr Fletcher: I agree with what you are saying. You may have been benevolent, but not every employer is that way.

Mrs Blais: I am not saying I was a good employer; I am saying the protection for the employee was all around them, and the larger the company the bigger the department to look after the employees' rights.

ONTARIO HOTEL AND MOTEL ASSOCIATION

The Acting Chair: Now we will call on the Ontario Hotel and Motel Association. I would like to thank you for coming here today. The format is that you will be given half an hour. You can give either a half-hour presentation or a briefer summation and then allow time for questions or comments from each of the caucuses. Please identify yourself and then proceed.

Ms Whitely: My name is Lisa Whitely. I am here representing Zone 12, which is a large region of Ontario's vacation land. I am general manager of Muskoka Sands Resort in Gravenhurst. I can speak on their behalf for the tourism industry.

The Ontario Hotel and Motel Association was incorporated in 1925. The current objectives of the association are to represent the hotel, motel, food and beverage industry in government and legislative matters; to provide means for members to exchange information on problems and new ideas—we can speak collectively for those members on this subject; to review industry trends and develop forecasts; to provide educational programs and services; to provide guidelines for accommodation and operating standards in the industry; and to act as a focal point for organizing joint efforts among members for the solution of industry problems.

We respectfully request that members of the standing committee on administration of justice consider the following:

First of all, that Ontario encourage tourists and visitors by having unrestricted retail shopping on Sundays and holidays in all areas throughout the province as the market dictates without any restrictions. The Ontario Hotel and Motel Association is in favour of unrestricted Sunday and holiday shopping. We feel that unrestricted Sunday and holiday shopping is vital to our economy and the tourism industry throughout the province.

In a market-driven economy such as ours, consumers should be allowed the freedom of choice to decide which retail businesses and establishments they wish to patronize. The open and free market should be the final arbiter as to whether or not retail businesses function on Sundays and holidays, while still respecting the employment standards. Unfair and inequitable legislated restrictions are the worst form of economic blackmail in a free market economy.

As well, Ontarians deserve the right to work, earn income and profit from the production and sale of goods or the provision of services any day of the week. Economic prosperity generated in a free and unrestricted economy would benefit all Ontarians and their quality of life.

Retail shopping is an integral part of the tourism experience and represents a significant portion of the value of all tourism expenditures in Ontario. Most retail shopping, dining out, touring, sightseeing and recreation takes place on weekends. Shopping has become a family outing and the majority of Ontarians and visitors favour retail shopping on Sundays and holidays. The popularity of cross-border shopping shows that Canadians will travel to the south not only because they perceive the products to be cheaper, but also because of the ease of access to these goods.

This industry is the largest private sector employer; the service sector accounts for 70% of all new jobs. Tourism is responsible for the creation of 32 full-time jobs for every $1 million in tourism expenditures. We employ professionals, skilled and unskilled, and are the largest employer of women, youth, indigenous peoples and visible minorities. There is no other employer capable of this range of employment opportunity for permanent or part-time employees of professional service staff whose educational achievements vary from elementary through college to university.

Tourism generated direct expenditures of $15.5 billion in 1990, with an estimated total income of $22.5 billion and estimated total sales of $36.9 billion. It is one of the nation's largest generators of personal income, corporate, property, business and sales taxes to all levels of government, including $1.85 billion to the province of Ontario, $2.5 billion to the federal government and $300 million to municipal governments in 1989.

The closure of retail businesses on Sundays has meant job losses to many, especially students who rely on this income for their schooling. Our members throughout the province are reporting a large drop in business. They feel strongly that the availability of Sunday shopping will alleviate slightly the slumping economy. Of our members surveyed, 75% have said that closing the stores on Sundays has meant a decrease in revenue. We recognize that other factors have also contributed to the decrease in revenue, but feel that the freedom of choice to open and work at retail businesses on Sundays and holidays is a means to reverse this problem. This revenue, to quite a few, means survival. Unless retail shops are allowed to open on Sundays to draw tourists and visitors to their respective areas, many will have to close their businesses.

Obviously the hardest-hit areas are the border cities. Ontario will remain uncompetitive and continue to lose billions of dollars worth of annual tourism sales unless we change and allow unrestricted Sunday and holiday shopping.

The hospitality industry is faced with many obstacles and increased operating costs. In order to remain competitive and recapture some of the lost business from our neighbours to the south, we must have the ability to compete on a level playing field. Bordering American cities are wide open for retail business on Sundays and holidays.

Bill 155 does have some merit, and we appreciate the Ontario government's recognition of the value and importance of tourism in this legislation. We do, however, feel that interpretation of the tourism criteria would create a lot of confusion, not to mention an administration nightmare in time and cost. To limit the time for municipalities to declare themselves tourist areas is also too restricting, as circumstances could, and most likely would, change at a later date.

The concept of a common pause day in Ontario is outdated and discriminatory. Multicultural Ontario in the 1990s is populated with every religion and every ethnic background and to allow one faith, belief or ethnic custom to dictate the lifestyles of everyone is wrong. Our contemporary society shows that Ontarians work at all hours of the day and night throughout the week. Hotels, hospitals and transportation, to name just a few, all must work on a 24-hour, 7-day-a-week basis. While some people rest, others conduct business and provide services. Their professions are a necessity to any community, and I do not believe their quality of life is diminished by their work schedules. We must provide these products, experiences and services to our customers when they want them or risk losing them to other competing jurisdictions.

We appreciate that the proposed amendments to part XI-B of the Employment Standards Act recognize the operating realities of our industry. It is most important that all employees retain the right to schedule work and dictate work schedules. It has been reported that out of more than 10,000 inquiries and complaints registered with the employment standards branch of the Ontario Ministry of Labour in 1990, fewer than 15 were related to the right of retail workers to refuse to work on Sundays and holidays.

In closing, I ask that you bring Ontario forward and that we become once again the province to lead. We have a tendency to live in the past, remembering how mother was home to greet us when we returned home from school, but we all know times have changed and we must also change, not only to keep up with the times but to take the leadership role in this changing society.

What happened when stores were allowed to open on Sundays? Has the public been asked, both workers and shoppers? How many people already have to work Sundays? What would happen if service stations closed on Sundays? We are constantly being told we live in a free world where we have freedom of choice. The freedom of choice to open retail outlets on Sunday is not a luxury, but a necessity, because to many it will mean survival.

I appreciate having the opportunity to speak on behalf of the association.

Mr Daigeler: Thank you for coming before us. You were referring to changes obviously taking place. I am wondering whether that has also often happened with regard to your organization, in your own view. Two or three years ago there were similar hearings across the province. The message at the time seemed to be quite different. I am just wondering how you yourself view the municipal option that was put forward by the Liberal government. Also, would you know what kind of representation the group you are representing today made at the time?

Ms Whitely: I do not know what they did three years ago. I know our local municipality was against Sunday shopping and is still divided on that, which from a tourism point of view seems quite absurd in that particular region. That is where all the revenues are generated.

Mr Daigeler: Is it possible to ask you how you viewed that at the time?

Ms Whitely: I am not familiar enough with it to answer that.

Mr J. Wilson: Thank you for your presentation, Ms Whitely. Near the end you mentioned a statistic that there were 15 complaints reported to the Ministry of Labour during the unregulated period last year. I guess that is over that eight months or seven months we had. First of all, would you be aware of complaints in our area, in Zone 12? Would the OHMA and yourself normally be aware of those complaints, and if so, did we have many?

Ms Whitely: I do not know if they are aware of any further details than the information they received from the Ministry of Labour. I am not aware of any complaints regarding work scheduling or working on Sundays in my particular resort or any other fellow colleagues.

Mr J. Wilson: Okay, I appreciate that.

Mr Carr: Thank you very much for coming in. One of the statistics I was interested in was the one where you say 75% of your members say that as a result of Sunday shopping there is increased activity. What do you say to a government that says it knows better than your members and that there is not any more economic activity?

Ms Whitely: I guess we prove each other right or wrong. That is the general feeling, though, among the members who were polled.

Mr Fletcher: Just one point on what you are talking about, the surveys: When you ask people if they like to shop on Sunday, there is an overwhelming yes. That is not debatable. But when you turn it around and ask people, "Would you like to work on Sunday?" about 70% of the people say no. That is just a clarification. It is strange that two years ago, when they were going around the province, people were saying, "No, we don't want Sunday shopping," and yet the government of the day did not listen and implemented the municipal option, which opened up wide-open shopping. I am glad to see you are here because I need your views. I believe there are going to be some changes to this legislation and it is because of people like you who are interested. You come with alternatives, not just to say it is totally wrong or anything like that. I know you see some of the benefits of having some legislation. I am very happy that you are here.

Mr Mills: Ms Whitely, I am very glad to be here and to hear your submission. I would like to tell you that the regulations are draft regulations and that we are listening in this process to what everyone has to say.

Having said that, I would like to say a couple of things. You spoke of freedom of choice. In today's society we demand freedom of choice. Speaking on behalf of the government, I think Bill 115 is all about freedom of choice, the freedom of retail workers to refuse work without fear of some repercussions on that. I think you also addressed very well the need for this legislation when you say there were only 15 complaints under the present legislation.

Talking to many people in the retail trade, my information on why we have had only 15 complaints is that the retail worker, under the present legislation, is very reluctant to complain, because he or she needs a job. If they complain under the present legislation, they know the chances of keeping that job are very slim. I would just like to pass those thoughts on to you about what this bill is all about. It is not about Sunday shopping; it is about Sunday working. That is the thrust of the government.

The Acting Chair: Ms Whitely, on behalf of the committee, I would like to thank you for your presentation today.

Clerk of the Committee: I will just mention that there was a request for some information from the Ministry of the Solicitor General, clarifying real estate offices. I am now in possession of that. For any member who would like to come and look at it, I will table it with the committee.

Mr Poirier: Would Reverend Wilson, if at all possible after coming here, be interested to speak for five or 10 minutes, or even less than that? I know we have to leave around 3:30.

The Acting Chair: No problem.

DOUGLAS WILSON

Mr D. Wilson: I am Douglas Wilson, minister of the Christian church. I have no brief prepared, but I do have some deep feelings on this matter that is before us today, just as I did before the town council which met on July 22, passed at second and third reading, supposedly after hearing briefs from people in this community, briefs that were largely prepared and overbalanced by the business industry in this community.

Those of us who had something to say concerning one pause day—I prefer to call it the Lord's day; you may call it what you wish. I prefer to call it that, but those of us who did were heckled at that meeting. I suggested that we are in a moral decay in our society today. Someone talked today about the dinosaurs. Certainly, they have disappeared. Someone has also spoken about the decay of Rome. We all know what happened to that great empire.

There have been many illogical arguments presented here today, some of them from silence, but the biggest argument I see here today is the argument of freedom of choice, freedom of choice used by those who presented prepared briefs. They forget that there is a large segment of our society that would like to have a common pause day. There is a large group of people who would like to have time with their families, whether it be on Saturday, Sunday or Monday.

I spoke to you a few moments ago about the decay of morals in our society. At the town council, I spoke about the report just released that evening concerning 52 murders in the city of Toronto in the present year. The report said almost double. There were 29 a year ago. We all, I am sure, deplore the rising incidence of crime in our community—robberies and theft, rape, murder, those things that are happening here in the little community of 12,500 people, even in the first year when I came here, which was 15 years ago, the murder of a police officer.

What is the reason for this decay? Are you, the members of the Legislature, interested in finding out the true source of it or are you willing to give in to the greed and the avarice of business, a term I used two weeks ago and continue to use, greed on the part of merchants in this community who are not satisfied with their portion of living but want a greater increase in it?

Freedom of choice? I would like to have freedom of choice, but am I allowed to go out from this building today, take my car and drive on the left side of the road, regardless of all other motorists who are driving in this community? Freedom of choice? Why are two men who are recording artists here today forced to depart from this building to go outside to smoke? They do not have freedom of choice.

We are being legislated on all avenues. Laws are necessary, and I feel that the sooner our government, whatever the political party, begins to legislate and take the responsibility that is placed upon it by the constituent members of the communities in which you serve, the quicker our community will begin to improve and the better will be the way of life that we have cherished in the past, in the times of our fathers and our forefathers, times when there were laws, and these laws have not changed. All of us are going to have to answer to them one day—perhaps too soon.

Mr Carr: One of the questions I have is from the standpoint of, are you more concerned about the workers having the time off, or is it also the people who would be doing the shopping? Presumably, if you follow it by the Bible, it is also even people who are shopping. Is that your big concern, or is it more for the workers that you want to have the pause day? In other words, do you see it as wrong even for the people who go out and shop, who may see it as a leisure activity?

Mr D. Wilson: There are certain works that are necessary every day of the week, works of mercy, works of necessity, certain things that must be done, but I also believe there is a need for the worker to have time for common pause. I believe it both physically and spiritually and I feel that one of the reasons our civilization is rapidly decaying today is because we do not take that time to pause, to rest. As the native of Africa would tell you, he sits down periodically to allow his soul to catch up to his body. I believe that is vital and important in our society, in your life and in my life today.

Mr Carr: Would that mean also then that you are in favour of not having theatres open and going to bars and being able to drink beer at baseball games? Would you like to see those closed down as well?

Mr D. Wilson: I would prefer that we limit business as much as possible.

Mr Mills: I was very glad to hear what you had to say this afternoon. I would just like to preface with something I said in the Legislature on June 17 and then invite a quick response from you. In the Legislature on June 17 I said, "The times are laced with a fair dose of broken marriages, broken homes, tension and stress, and a common pause day will go far to relieve some of those things I have touched on." I realize, sir, that in your capacity as a minister you probably counsel people in troubled times. I just ask you briefly to say in your experience how you feel the times we live in, with the pressing for two jobs, is affecting some of the parishioners you see on a consultative basis.

Mr D. Wilson: Mr Mills, I would support anything that would allow our people, all peoples, to have that common pause day. I feel it is necessary that we have that. In my role as a professional minister I counsel many people, and the first thing I discover is that these people generally have little or no basis in the finer things of life. One day is the same as another to them.

The Acting Chair: On behalf of the committee, I would like to thank you for your submission today. I would like to thank the town of Collingwood for hosting the standing committee on administration of justice, for having us here today. Seeing no further business, I will move adjournment until Tuesday, August 6, in Thunder Bay, at 9 am.

The committee adjourned at 1540.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

STANDING COMMITTEE ON ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

Tuesday 6 August 1991

The committee met at 0904 in the Valhalla Inn, Thunder Bay.

RETAIL BUSINESS ESTABLISHMENTS STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT DES LOIS EN CE QUI CONCERNE LES ÉTABLISSEMENTS DE COMMERCE DE DÉTAIL

Resuming consideration of Bill 115, An Act to amend the Retail Business Holidays Act and the Employment Standards Act in respect of the opening of retail business establishments and employment in them.

Reprise de l'étude du projet de loi 115, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les jours fériés dans le commerce de détail et la Loi sur les normes d'emploi en ce qui concerne l'ouverture des établissements de commerce de détail et l'emploi dans ces établissements.

The Acting Chair (Mr Cooper): I call this meeting to order. For everybody's information, we will have simultaneous French and English translation. The units are just off to the left of the table. Channel 3 will be amplification, channel 4 will be English and channel 5 will be French. Mr Waters will be joining us on the committee today, and I would like to bring to everybody's attention that we have Shelley Wark-Martyn, member for Thunder Bay and Minister of Revenue, also joining us today.

JACK G. MASTERS

The Acting Chair: I would like to invite the mayor, Jack Masters, to be our first presenter. You will be allowed one half-hour. You can give either a full half-hour presentation or you can make a shorter presentation and allow questions and comments from the members of the committee. Could you please identify yourself for the record and then proceed.

Mr Masters: Thank you, Mr Chairman. My name is Jack Masters. I am the mayor of the city of Thunder Bay. I do not intend to take a long period of time. I understood that one of the aldermen also wanted to appear before the committee this morning. The first thing I would like to do is to welcome the committee members to Thunder Bay. I think it is important that the government has chosen to hold hearings in various parts of the province to receive views on this most important subject. Alors, bienvenue à notre ville. C'est un plaisir de vous voir ce matin. I thank you for bringing all the sunshine on the weekend. I know some of you arrived yesterday.

I preface my remarks by making it clear that the following are my personal views, but I think to some degree they will reflect the views of some members of council as well, and probably of some members of the community. Rather than deal with the amendments—I hope you will not rule me out of order on this; I do not think that you will—I would like to comment on the principle of the present legislation, with or without the amendments. I can recall making similar comments to the previous government, so my position has been consistent, as has been the position of the Association of the Municipalities of Ontario.

It is my belief that the retail business establishments act should be a provincial law, a law that applies to all parts of the provinces. To have communities give their own interpretation of what tourism is, to me, invites confusion. To try to define a border city is also an invitation to a form of chaos in the marketplace. Not having a universal law means we go back to the time when we will see the very distinct possibility of municipality being pitted against municipality.

In our community, as an example, when night shopping was not allowed, a bordering smaller municipality elected to have night shopping. A large shopping plaza was built in this neighbouring municipality, which in turn eventually led to night shopping being allowed in the larger community of the then cities of Port Arthur and Fort William, now Thunder Bay. This situation was possible because of the lack of uniformity of the law in Ontario.

There is also a bit of an analogy to be drawn from the period when the province was moving into liquor licensing for restaurants and bars. That, in its time, led to the same kind of competition, where the action of one municipality being competitive with another eventually changed the situation, despite whatever the intent of the government of the day was.

The fact is that lifestyles have changed dramatically over the last number of years. I do not believe it is in the business community's interest or in the province's interest to leave it up to the various municipalities to make their own definitions of shopping hours or days that can be used by the business community. Whatever the law is, it must be a universal law. In England, as an example, they do have many restrictions on what we commonly call Sunday shopping, but at least those restrictions, as far as I can tell from having been there, have been legislated by the national government and apply universally throughout the British Isles. They seem to have made their own definitions as to what tourism areas are, rather than leaving it up to the various communities in the various areas of the British Isles. While people may disagree with that legislation, in England they can go to one source, at least, and make their complaint or give their views, but with the full knowledge that whatever law is in place, it is the same for everyone.

There has been the opinion expressed that because municipalities determine what they feel is the tourism area or whether or not they are in fact a tourism community, they expose themselves to the possibility of litigation by both those for, as well as those against, Sunday shopping. I do not know much on this subject, and I do not know if it is accurate, but I will leave it to you as a committee to determine that, and our own council is examining the matter.

Indications are that the bill itself is not going to satisfy the needs of Ontario, and it seems to me that it is unnecessarily cumbersome. Rather than the proposed Retail Business Holidays Act amendments, it is my suggestion that the act itself and the principles should be reviewed more fully and thought out again. As you go about the province, I am sure you are going to find differing views on the subject.

I believe parts of the amendments are appropriate. Those amendments deal with the legislation concerning working hours and the right to refuse work on holidays and Sundays. I do believe there is still room within legislation to have some restrictions, but to simply say that a community can have Sunday or holiday shopping because it is a tourist area invites many bizarre thoughts, to my mind.

Saying the present legislation would somehow serve the border communities is another thing that should be thought about. What is a border community? We are 32 miles from the border; Toronto is probably double that from the border. Are they a border community? One of our neighbouring municipalities, Nipigon, is 75 miles from Thunder Bay. Does it not qualify as a border community?

The point I am trying to make is that I think the present legislation is confusing. It will lead to a lot of gamesmanship. I do not think it will solve the problem. I am entirely sympathetic with the notion of a common pause day, and there was a time I would have argued far differently, but I think it is like trying to stem a stream that is in high flood—next to impossible.

People seem to like the idea of having the opportunity to shop. That does not mean you are legislating anyone to open their doors. You can withhold or withdraw services if you are in the business community.

I often have felt hypocritical in that area. As a principle, a personal view, I have always said, because I guess I have spent a lot of time in the retail community: "We don't need Sunday shopping. We have all kinds of time to shop." Yet on vacation in Alberta, where I have a daughter, I spent a lot of time on a Sunday afternoon out shopping because shopping happens to be something we do as a pastime. It seems to be one of the great Canadian pastimes these days.

It is fine to say we will allow shopping for tourism purposes. What do we mean by "tourism"? We would consider, in a sense, those people who live in Nipigon, at Scriver Bay, at Terrace Bay or in Dryden who wish to shop in Thunder Bay because it is the largest city in the area. They come in on the weekends to shop and do other things to be entertained. Therefore, are they tourists or are they just people coming to do commercial-type things in our area? How do you define that?

In the fall I think we will be voting in Thunder Bay in plebiscite form on the question, basically, "Do you want Sunday and holiday shopping?" I oppose that. I did not oppose that particular plebiscite coming up, but I did oppose the idea of our dealing with the Sunday shopping issue at the present time for two reasons: Not being sure of what the provincial government would put in place, are we going to deal with something that will be changed somehow anyhow? And second, I still fall back to the same position I have always held and that the Association of Municipalities of Ontario holds if it could have its druthers, that the law should be universal.

Ladies and gentlemen, I know you are going to be hearing from a good number of people today. I did want to have the opportunity to make my personal views known, and I thank you for it. I do not think we can dissuade the general public from wanting to be able to shop any more than we can suddenly turn the clock back and say, "We're going to close most of the restaurants, or we're going to close the hockey rinks on Sunday." I went through that issue many years ago, being something of a hockey nut. I could remember the days when we could not play hockey before noon hour. You could not rent out the facility. At one time you could not sell tickets before 2 o'clock, so you began a football game or a hockey game by having a silver collection.

Times have changed. I think we have to recognize those changing times. We have to be consistent throughout the province. I would salute the government of the day if it thought of a way to review the law to maintain some restrictions, and if it carried through amendments that would allow for freedom of choice for the workers, whether or not they work on certain days without being penalized for it. I think those are worthy objectives. But the principle of the bill itself, giving it to the various areas to determine whether they are going to be tourism areas, to me is an invitation to confusion, a lot of hard feelings throughout the province, and a great deal of potential litigation over time as the inevitable struggles begin to happen. I thank you very much, Mr Chairman, and the committee, for allowing me to make my comments. If there are any questions, I will try to answer them.

The Acting Chair: Thank you very much. That allows about six minutes for each caucus. We will start off with Mr Sorbara.

Mr Sorbara: Thank you, Mr Chairman. Your Worship, thank you very much for your presentation. I am interested to hear that you are going to have a plebiscite on the matter coming up in conjunction with the municipal elections. I have a prediction that the people of Thunder Bay will probably, through that plebiscite, want you to pass a bylaw which allows stores to open or close at their choosing. You supported the AMO position, which is that the province have a standard law, or one rule, in respect of Sunday shopping throughout Ontario. But one possibility as a standard law is that there be no law at all, that is to say, that Sunday not be given a special status within the laws of the province of Ontario. Your Worship, how would you feel if the law were simply repealed? In other words, if we were to go back to that eight- or nine-month period when there was no law? Did that create confusion and havoc in Thunder Bay? Would that be a terrible course for the province to go down at this stage in its development?

Mr Masters: I do not think it would be a terrible thing to happen. While we had that period where Sunday shopping was allowed, it certainly did not create any big problems. What it did cause was the problem of the worker. For that reason, whether you do it through this type of law or incorporate it in something else, I think that should be looked at very carefully.

Mr Sorbara: I think all of us on this committee agree that no matter what the store opening hours or store closing laws are, we want to move forward with protection for workers. Let us hear your experience in Thunder Bay during that period. What effect did that freedom to choose have on the people? What effect did it have on store owners? Were the hours on Sunday the same as the hours on every other day? How did it play out in Thunder Bay?

Mr Masters: If my memory serves me correctly, basically they stayed open, those that wished to stay open, the department stores or plazas, from noon to 6 pm. I believe the commercial experience was, overall, that they probably did at that time the same amount of business on the seven days that they did operating for six. But what they did find was that it did accommodate, particularly, the out-of-town people who wished to come to our community to do their shopping, to take in the community auditorium or a hockey game or whatever. It did accommodate them, and probably encouraged people to stay over for a longer period of time, which had an overall benefit to the community.

Mr Sorbara: As mayor, if someone is unhappy about something, you hear about it. During that nine-month period, did you hear a lot of complaints from store owners, from shoppers, from ministers, from churchgoers? Did you hear complaints of any variety about the fact that the stores were opening?

Mr Masters: No, not in an overwhelming sense. You are right, you do hear about it. The phone is very handy in your own community to your citizens. No.

Mr Sorbara: The government is proposing a piece of legislation which will only allow those stores to remain open which are for the maintenance or the development of tourism. Are there stores in Thunder Bay which are only for the maintenance and the development of tourism? Or are most stores which have a good indigenous business and some, sometimes a lot, of tourism business?

Mr Masters: That is the point I was trying to make in my brief presentation. You now have to come up with definitions of what is tourism. If someone wishes to come into the area and is going to buy an automobile, look at some furniture and buy groceries, and he has travelled in from the area, he may not have purchased any T-shirts or amethyst, which is the gem stone of Ontario, but is that a tourist? I do not know. That is what happens when you try to use that as the criterion for staying open.

Mr Poirier: Premièrement, je voudrais vous dire «merci» de nous avoir accueillis de façon bilingue à Thunder Bay. C'est le souvenir de Thunder Bay que je préfère me rappeler.

Having said that, Mr Mayor, thank you for having welcomed us to Thunder Bay. It is the souvenir I would rather keep of Thunder Bay, having been here many times and having many friends, anglophones and francophones. How would you feel if you were mayor and city council had to decide who is touristic or not?

Mr Masters: I think I would have a great deal of difficulty in deciding that particular issue because, as I have said, you may be coming in from Geraldton to Thunder Bay specifically because you need a new dining room suite. You are here acting as a tourist in that you have purchased meals, you have taken in entertainment, you have taken advantage of our beautiful waterfront and all of those things, but you also wish to buy a dining room suite, so do you allow a store to open and say, "Technically, we think you are a tourism facility"? That is what bothers me most about this legislation and the notion that it can somehow be relegated to tourism only. I have trouble with the definitions.

Mr Poirier: So it does not make sense. Thank you.

Mr Carr: The question I have relates to what you see happening in your community if the law remains in place with no changes. You said the people will basically be voting on it, presumably whichever way they will be going, and the new council will support that.

Mr Masters: I would think so, yes.

Mr Carr: The way it is now, the definitions of tourism are such that a fine community like this could meet the criteria very easily. In other words, what you see happening is that the people will decide and then the council will follow and, if the will is to open, it will say, "You meet the criteria," and away we go; and if not, it will vote against. Is that particularly the way you see it happening?

Mr Masters: Exactly, and I do not know what will happen from the governmental point of view if—using the arguments I made earlier—we suddenly say, "Okay, now the people want this kind of shopping, so we are now going to declare the whole community a tourism area." It may solve that problem for us, but will it then, in turn, give the government a problem? Are they going to start making the definition of what is a tourism business?

Mr Carr: One of the things that has happened is that we have gone through this and people on both sides of the issue—the people in favour and opposed, even the big retailers who came in who want Sunday shopping—say we have to protect the workers. What is your feeling on that aspect of the law, the protection of the workers as it is now? Do you think it is strong enough, not strong enough? Have you really had a chance to look at that part of it?

Mr Masters: I looked at the amendments, and I am not an expert in that area, but it seemed to me that those amendments were going in a reasonable way to address that problem. There is the big battle that goes on, of course, whether or not a business should be allowed to operate seven days a week without getting into overtime or double time or triple time and so on. I really feel that in the service industry it would be prudent of the government to provide protection for the workers, and it does appear that that is being addressed in the bill, which has had first reading.

Mr Carr: I know it is difficult to do, but having been the mayor of this fine community, what is your sense of what the vote will be when it comes? Do you think most people will be in favour or opposed? Maybe you can give us some idea of whether you think it is close. Is it a big debate, or is it going to be overwhelming one way or the other?

Mr Masters: My sense of it is that it will be a very large vote for Sunday shopping, and I would be surprised if it turned out differently.

Mr Carr: During this period when it was unregulated and you had opening, did you see a deterioration in the quality of life? Many people, some of the groups, are saying it will take away from people's time as a family. Did you see that to be the case in your community during that period, where for whatever reason people were being pulled apart more?

Mr Masters: That was not apparent, no. It might have had some effect on the families of the people working. That I could not judge. But in general terms in fact it may have brought families together because they could visit their shopping mall or their favourite establishment, do their business there and then continue through the day and stay together. It probably extended the weekend from a family point of view to a two-day total weekend, as opposed to one day shopping and one day just with the family. I did not see any major disruption in family life, though, no.

Mr Carr: What you were seeing too, earlier, is that as a municipality you are not interested in having a decision thrust upon you. You would rather leave it at the provincial level, just to get that clear. Is that what you were saying?

Mr Masters: I say that. I know that always sounds like a copout by the municipal politician, like, "Don't burden me with this decision; give it to someone else." I will give you one scenario. Let's say we dragged our heels in respect to Sunday laws. Then what would prevent one of the neighbouring municipalities from going for something to add to their tax base which would be attractive to them, a large mall on our border? And throughout the province we have had that history over time because of night shopping and all of those things where that is exactly what happened, as it happened here. So eventually you disrupt your marketplace and you come back to the same thing that could have been dealt with in the first place by simply—as was suggested by Mr Sorbara—withdrawing the law and concentrating on the labour aspect of it, with perhaps some curtailment in respect to shopping hours, although I think the business community itself would determine that there are some things that are not appropriate. Opening, you know, until midnight Sunday is an example. Regardless of what the law is, I do not think you would find many who would ever do that.

Mr Carr: Okay, thank you. Good luck.

Mr Morrow: Thank you, your worship, for taking the time to come and see us this morning. I imagine you have a very busy schedule. I just have two very quick questions for you. Do you agree with the absolute right of a worker to refuse Sunday work?

Mr Masters: I am always leery of absolutes. I think there is still room in our society, whether it be Sunday, or if Saturday be the Sabbath for someone else, that they should have the ability to follow their religious or moral persuasion without being penalized. I believe that is the intent of the proposed amendments, to allow for that in one form or another. I would put that almost in the same category, although it is maybe not the best analogy to make, as not being able to force somebody to do dangerous work. Well, maybe if it is a danger to the soul, that should be given the same consideration, so I do concur basically with the kind of amendments that are suggested in that respect.

Mr Morrow: You also know we are here to listen to you, and you mentioned that you are here to basically help us in any way that you possibly can. Is there anything you would like to see change in the amendments?

Mr Masters: In the amendments, no. I realize you are here essentially to look at the amendments, but certainly all the other views will get back into the mix. Rather than just take the common pause day as the major thrust—and this may sound like a political copout, too—maybe you want a common hesitant day where you say, "All right, we will allow Sunday shopping, taking that example of Sundays 12 to 6," and restrict shopping so that at least you can maintain the Christmas Day or the New Year's Day kind of approach. But in respect to the shopping hours, I cannot see the amendments being helpful when it is probably the basic notion that has to be re-examined and dealt with.

Mr Fletcher: Thank you for being here. It is always nice to be back in Thunder Bay. When you are having a plebiscite this fall the question is going to be, "Are you in favour of Sunday shopping?" Are you going to put the question: "Are you in favour of Sunday working? Would you like to work on Sunday?" Is that also going to be on the plebiscite?

Mr Masters: I doubt that, but we have not completed the verbiage beyond just the simple question.

Mr Fletcher: One of the reasons I ask that is because if you ask people if they want to shop on Sunday it is always yes, but when you turn the question around, "Would you like to work on Sunday," it is usually around 70% no. So it is a bit of a dichotomy there.

As far as Bill 115 is concerned, you do not have a problem with the bill except for the tourism exemption.

Mr Masters: I have a problem with the tourism, because I think what you are saying is, "We are not going to have Sunday shopping or holiday shopping but at the same time we will give you exemptions." I think you should do one or the other. I will confess that AMO has simply said, if my recollection is correct, that whatever the law is, it should be universal. It is up to the government to decide what that law will be, which is a form of really passing the buck. But then, those things had always been in the province of the province to handle and I think that is where it properly should belong. I think that decision should be made by the province.

I think too that there is some urgency to reconsidering the bill, because we live in a new business world vis-à-vis north-south. That is not something that is going to change. It is not considered to be a terribly significant factor at the moment, but if you consider the amount of business that is going across the border, we have looked upon that as a retail problem. What about the people who manufacture and do all of the other things that put the goods on the shelf? It is a deep-rooted problem that will, over time, have to be reconciled by having an even playing field. I think this just gives us an artificial way to have some communities with a level playing field, and others will have to scramble to get it. Those are all the comments I would like to make.

The Acting Chair: On behalf of the committee I would like to thank you, your worship, for attending this morning and giving us your views.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Chairman, might I just bring a point of order to the committee as Mayor Masters leaves? He has advised us that the city of Thunder Bay is going to have a plebiscite on the very matter that we are considering, that is, whether under the current bill Thunder Bay should or should not be open. Although plebiscites and referendums ought not, in my view, to direct the formulation of public policy, the fact that there is a possibility that there will be a plebiscite in Thunder Bay and within a few weeks this committee will be bringing back to the Legislature for third reading and royal assent a bill that might close down all the stores that it just opened under a plebiscite in the city of Thunder Bay—I just think that when the plebiscite takes place this committee should order its business so that it has an opportunity to review in very fine detail what happened in that plebiscite in the city of Thunder Bay.

I bring that to you, sir, because our purpose in holding these public hearings is to—

The Acting Chair: That is a point of information, but it is not a point of order.

Mr Sorbara: If I could just make it in the form of a motion: that following the plebiscite in Thunder Bay this committee convene in Toronto to consider the results of that plebiscite and how it might impact on our recommendations to the government. After all, we are here to get the public view. What better way to get the public view than through a plebiscite? So I am suggesting that the committee, wherever it is in its consideration of Sunday shopping, reconvene for at least one sitting day and consider the matter and the results and analyse those results as some indication of the public mood in the province.

That is a motion.

Mr Morrow: Could we not take care of that during clause-by-clause?

Mr Sorbara: I do not think it is a controversial motion. All I am saying is that we look at the results. Rather than ignore the results, we look at them. I do not think it is a big, controversial issue. Maybe we will do it for half an hour the day after the plebiscite is through. Is this a problem for you folks?

Mr Fletcher: I am speaking against the motion for the simple fact that we are on a fact-finding tour and the information can come in. We do not need a motion to have the information come to us. We do not need a motion to have another sitting day or anything else. Once this city has its plebiscite and the results are known, we can get that information. We do not need a motion and we do not have to waste people's time here today by making silly motions.

The Acting Chair: If I may, could we please put this off until 12 noon? We have presenters here waiting to do their presentations. Could we discuss this or debate this at noon, when we have time?

Mr Sorbara: It should not give rise to a grand debate. I am not sure what Mr Fletcher is afraid of; all I am suggesting is that we spend part of a sitting day considering what the results are in Thunder Bay. After all, our mandate is to garner what public opinion is. What better way than to analyse the results of a plebiscite? Maybe we would do that informally anyway. As a courtesy and as a gesture to the city of Thunder Bay, one of the important communities in the province, all I am suggesting is that we formally make it part of our agenda now. Is that a problem?

Mr Fletcher: Yes.

Mr Sorbara: I hope not. I hope you can support it right away.

Interjections.

The Acting Chair: Order, please. If it is the pleasure of the committee, could we put this off until 12 noon, so we would not have to hold up any of the presenters?

Mr Sorbara: I would prefer to deal with it here.

Mr Jackson: If Mr Sorbara would simply amend it to say, "Thunder Bay and other plebiscites," because they will all occur in this province on the same day, and if he would accept that as a friendly amendment, then we could call the question and we will resolve the matter in a minute and a half and we can proceed with the deputants. I think everyone is aware of the concept of public consultation as contained in Mr Sorbara's motion.

Mr Sorbara: I do accept that as a friendly amendment, that we spend one sitting day considering the results of plebiscites on Sunday shopping taken in conjunction with municipal elections. I really hope my friends across the table will support this. If they do not, I think that is going to cause them some degree of embarrassment.

The Acting Chair: Okay, I will call the question.

Mr Sorbara moves that following the plebiscite in Thunder Bay and other plebiscites, this committee convene in Toronto to consider the results of that plebiscite and how it might impact on our recommendations to the government.

Mr Morrow: Can we please have five minutes?

Mr Jackson: The question has been called, Mr Chairman. In the interests of time—

The Acting Chair: A five-minute recess?

Mr Jackson: No. I have called the question. On a recorded vote I call it.

The committee divided on Mr Sorbara's motion, which was negated on the following vote:

Ayes—4

Carr, Jackson, Poirier, Sorbara.

Nays—5

Fletcher, Lessard, Mills, Morrow, O'Connor.

UNITED FOOD AND COMMERCIAL WORKERS' NORTHWESTERN ONTARIO REGION

The Acting Chair: I now call the next presenters, from the United Food and Commercial Workers' International Union. Thank you for taking the time out to be with us today. You will be allowed half an hour for your presentation. You can use that time any way you wish. You can either give a half-hour presentation or you can give a shorter presentation and allow time for questions and comments from the caucuses. The time will be split evenly. Could you please identify yourself and then proceed.

Mr Fraser: My name is Mike Fraser. I am the regional director for the United Food and Commercial Workers for northwestern Ontario. At the extreme left is Dan Onichuk. He is a representative from Fort Frances. He services also Kenora and Dryden. Beside me is Gerry Morris, who is an employee of Canada Safeway. Beside me is Ed Ryma. He is a grocery clerk at Skafs Foods, which is an independent chain store here in Thunder Bay.

On behalf of over 3,000 members of the United Food and Commercial Workers, northwest Ontario region, I would like to take this opportunity to welcome you to northwestern Ontario and specifically to Thunder Bay.

Our local union represents workers in the following communities in northwestern Ontario: Hornepayne, White River, Marathon, Thunder Bay, Atikokan, Fort Frances, Kenora, Vermilion Bay and Dryden. In our region we represent employees of large retail chains as well as small independent chains and independent single-store operators.

I would just like to comment to the committee that not all the employees we represent in those communities work in retail food stores. We represent people who work in nursing homes as well as hotels such as this hotel—I am glad you picked this, as a unionized UFCW hotel—warehouses and other types of enterprises, so it is not just retail that we represent.

I am sure the names of companies such as A & P, Westfair Foods, which is Loblaw's, and Canada Safeway are familiar to members of the committee. What may not be familiar are names such as DH Foods in Marathon, Tom Boy Foods in Atikokan, Harley's Foods in Dryden or names such as Quality Market or Skafs Foods in Thunder Bay.

While this list of independent retailers is not exhaustive, it is a good example of small, independent retailers who have indicated to this union that they prefer not to be open on Sundays and holidays and support legislation for a common pause day. We believe it is in the best interests of these employers as well as their employees, as well as the employees of large chains, to have legislation in the province of Ontario providing a common pause day. We believe, as well, this committee has the responsibility to take into consideration the legitimate needs and concerns of tourists and the tourism industry.

I am sure you are by now aware that our union has five main concerns with the proposed amendments to the Retail Business Holidays Act. These are: (1) the intent of the Retail Business Holidays Act; (2) the municipal option; (3) drugstore openings on Sundays; (4) enforcement of the legislation; and (5) the definition of a retail business.

On Monday, July 29, 1991, UFCW Canadian director Clifford Evans made a presentation to this committee in Toronto recommending certain changes to the amendments in each of the five areas listed above. I would like to state to the committee that we in northwestern Ontario fully support the recommendations made by Mr Evans to this committee. However, rather than reiterate each and every one of those recommendations, we have chosen to focus on the municipal option and tourist criteria and the concerns that we in northwestern Ontario have in that regard. The submission made by Mr Evans to this committee is available for anyone who wishes a copy.

This is contrary, I think, to what the mayor said a few minutes ago, but I believe the majority of people in northwestern Ontario, including retail employees and employers, prefer not to have Sunday and holiday openings. When the previous Liberal government introduced the municipal option, there was not a rush by municipalities to pass by-laws to allow for Sunday openings.

I should comment that recently the Thunder Bay council had a vote where it was defeated to implement the tourist exemption in Thunder Bay. I would also like to state to the committee that when the Thunder Bay and District Chamber of Commerce last year came out in favour of Sunday shopping, the retail members of the chamber of commerce were opposed to the chamber of commerce taking that stand.

The only town where we represent retail employees where this took place was in Kenora. I do not want to say a lot concerning the Kenora situation, as there are a number of presentations being made from individuals and groups from Kenora and the Kenora and District Labour Council will be dealing with the specifics of that situation in a later presentation. I would like to say, however, that I do not feel it will hurt the tourism industry in Kenora or create undue hardship for tourists in that area if large retail stores such as Safeway, Westfair Foods and Woolco, as a result of this legislation, are closed on Sundays and holidays.

When the Retail Business Holidays Act was struck down as being unconstitutional, many retailers who did not want to open were forced to open due to competitive reasons. Many employers in the northwest region contacted our office asking how they could assist us in trying to have the stores closed on Sundays and holidays. Under the proposed amendments to the act, are we going to have the same situation again?

I do not believe there is a community in northwestern Ontario that would not fall into at least two of the six proposed categories for the tourist exemption. As almost every municipality, if not all, would qualify for a bylaw exemption, what becomes a particular concern for us in the northwest are those retail businesses which on days other than holidays use the total area of 7,500 square feet and which have eight or more employees serving the public.

Subsection 2(2) of the tourism criteria states: "The retail business establishment,

"(a) shall be in an area that meets the tourism criteria set out in subsection 1(2);

"(b) shall provide services on holidays primarily for tourists; and

"(c) shall have at least one of the following characteristics:

"1. Is recognized for its historical features or distinctive architectural features.

"2. Features items of cultural or ethnic appeal.

"3. Provides specialized goods or services, such as heritage or handicraft items.

"4. Provides goods or services necessary to tourist activities in the area served by the establishment."

What then is the definition of a tourist? Is someone who lives in Texas and has a summer home on Lake of the Woods considered a tourist? If the large chains are able to establish that they "provide services on holidays primarily for tourists," will they then be able to get around the intent of clause 2(2)(c) by making capital investments in such things as distinctive architectural features or start to inventory items of cultural or ethnic appeal and/or open a new department for goods and services necessary to tourist activities?

I think this possibility should be of particular concern to the committee, especially the effect it would have on small retailers who do not have access to the financial resources that the large chains do. While the large chains could possibly operate on a loss-leader basis, I do not think independent retailers necessarily could. In this regard, it makes absolute sense to us that a committee should be established of government, retailers, unions and representatives of the tourist industry to determine properly what the criteria should be.

This would ensure that the amendments to the RBHA do not end up hurting small retailers or allow large chains to take advantage of loopholes that were not intended, as well as ensuring that legitimate tourist businesses are allowed to open to provide services. This committee should include representatives of the affected groups and should also ensure province-wide representation by including individuals from all regions of the province, including northwestern Ontario.

I would like to take a minute to address comments made by a representative of one of the large chain stores last week on the news. This was after the first committee hearings were held in Toronto. A representative of one of the larger Canadian retail chains stated that as a result of the introduction of legislation for a common pause day, the Ontario economy stands to lose $3 billion in sales. This claim is absolutely ludicrous. I ask the committee, if stores are open six or seven days, is that going to give Ontario consumers $3 billion more to spend?

I think the answer is quite clear: No. I believe the claim that billions of dollars are going to be lost because of the implementation of a common pause day is an extreme exaggeration. Should someone say that we in Ontario are losing sales to the United States because of cross-border shopping, of course everybody would agree that this is true. The exact amount is unknown, but I would like the committee to look at the question of Sunday shopping versus cross-border shopping.

In Fort Frances, a border town across the bridge from International Falls, Minnesota, you have had cross-border shopping for years. However, recently the Fort Frances town council in its wisdom saw fit to reject the bylaw allowing tourist exemptions for Sunday openings. The reason I mention that is because here you have a town council that has dealt for years and years with the question of cross-border shopping and still does not believe it is necessary to implement the tourist exemption for Fort Frances.

The whole question of cross-border shopping raises a host of problems, such as the level of the Canadian dollar vis-à-vis the US dollar, higher taxes in Canada, especially federal taxes and the implementation of the goods and services tax, and the fact that prices are much lower in the United States. These are to name just a few.

Let us not confuse the issue of a common pause day and cross-border shopping. In British Columbia, where Sunday shopping/working has existed for a number of years, the fact that Canadian stores are open has not slowed down cross-border shopping. The number of trips in British Columbia increased 400% between 1987 and 1991 in spite of wide-open Sunday shopping in that province. We absolutely agree that it is necessary to achieve a solution concerning cross-border shopping, but people who say that by allowing Sunday shopping we will get rid of the problem are simply not being realistic.

In conclusion, I would like to state that the United Food and Commercial Workers Union commends the government on its support for the implementation of a common pause day and asks this committee to ensure that we have a law that is going to work in the future. Let us ensure that the criteria make sense and work in the best interests of the employees, all retailers, the tourists and the tourist industry.

The Acting Chair: That leaves about six minutes each. Mr Poirier.

Mr Poirier: Can I refer you to page 3, please? As you see, page 3 is divided into two groups. The last sentence of the top part says, "I would like to say, however, that I do not feel it will hurt the tourism industry in Kenora or create undue hardship for tourists in that area if large retail stores, such as Safeway...as a result of this legislation are closed on Sundays and holidays."

You seem to make a distinction; in this sentence you only talk about the large retail stores, whereas elsewhere in your presentation you say you have also had the support of small retail stores to stay closed on Sunday. Can you explain the difference to me, why you would only look at the large ones here?

Mr Fraser: The small retailers in northwestern Ontario, in our experience, do not want to be open. The individual sitting beside me, Ed Ryma, works for Skafs Foods, which is a small, independent chain here in Thunder Bay. The owner has made it quite clear he does not want to open on Sundays and holidays. He supports legislation for a common pause day.

The reason I am focusing on the large chains is because the large chains came to negotiations approximately three and a half years ago saying they totally opposed Sunday shopping, but they wanted to change the provisions in the collective agreement concerning double time just in case somebody else decided to open.

Then, as soon as there was a possibility that the previous Liberal government was going to introduce changes to the Sunday legislation, the large chain stores said, "Oh, we're all in favour of it." The position they had taken in collective bargaining was totally opposite to what they were saying in public.

Mr Poirier: Do some of the smaller retailers not want anything to be open in case the larger ones or other small ones may open and "force" them to open against their wish on Sundays? Is that your interpretation of what you have heard?

Mr Fraser: I am going to ask Dan Onichuk to address this question as well, but I think you have basically two situations. You have the small independent retailer who is forced to work seven days a week, and does not want to have to work seven days a week; he would like a day off. The second reason is the cost of doing business. If you are open seven days, then you have an extra day of overhead and, for the smaller independent chains and truly independent operators, that increases their fixed costs.

Mr Poirier: Does that necessarily mean that he is open seven days or does it mean—

Mr Fraser: They have to open seven days a week because, if Canada Safeway and A & P are going to be open seven days, then the other people who are competing with Canada Safeway and with A & P have to be open as well. And of course A & P and Canada Safeway, being multinational corporations, are in a much better position to spread those costs over seven days as opposed to six.

That is one of the concerns we have with the criteria set out for stores with over 7,500 square feet. Are the large chains going to have the advantage of being able to invest money that is not available to the small retailers? It is quite possible, because the large chains in Thunder Bay will operate certain departments on a loss-leader basis just to attract customers. They would do the same for Sundays.

Mr Daigeler: So far at these hearings the argument has been put forward quite forcefully by retailers and business owners that, especially in a time of recession when employment is hard to come by, employees are quite keen—especially the younger ones, students—to work on Sunday, to have that extra time to make some money. Is that your experience up here? How would you react to this argument?

Mr Fraser: No, I do not think that being open on Sundays creates any more employment. In our industry, which is unionized, it does not create employment because we are able to negotiate that hours of work are assigned by seniority. But in British Columbia, where we have had Sunday shopping for many years, our union has not seen any increased employment.

Mr Fraser: May I say one other thing on that issue? I think we also have to look at what kind of employment we are creating. The unemployment rate in northwestern Ontario is higher than the provincial average and the national average. If there were any jobs created they would only be part-time jobs, and I think that we should be looking at ways of creating full-time employment.

Mr Daigeler: You mentioned that Fort Frances turned down a request to be open on Sundays which, I guess, is different from Kenora and some other regions. What were the arguments there? I am not familiar with what happened. Was there quite a campaign, and why did the city council decide against opening on Sundays?

Mr Fraser: I am going to refer that question to Mr Onichuk, as he lives in Fort Frances.

Mr Onichuk: When the question was put to the council some time ago it was rejected. The question was again put to council recently. They were looking for clarification of the new legislation, and they wanted to wait until they understood what the legislation was going to mean.

Subsequent to that the vote was taken anyway and it was defeated. I believe at this time they are waiting for clarification of the law so that they understand some of the questions we are asking, particularly on the square footage and that sort of thing. Even for the brief period when Sunday shopping was wide open in Fort Frances the only retailer in town to open was the major one, Canada Safeway. No one else opened.

Mr Carr: I thank you very much for your presentation. My question relates to what will be happening in Thunder Bay. As we heard, they will probably take a vote of the people to learn what they would like to see. If that vote favours Sunday shopping, would your group support it or will you still be fighting it, presumably against council and so on?

Mr Fraser: Our union will continue to fight so that our members do not have to work on Sundays. I think Mr Fletcher was correct when he asked whether the plebiscite is also going to contain the question, "Are you in favour of Sunday work?" because it goes both ways. If there is a plebiscite then we will deal with it when we see the results. I personally believe the results are not going to be as the mayor seems to think.

Mr Carr: You are right, you know. If you ask me if I want to work on Sunday, the answer is no, but occasionally we have to anyway. One of the concerns I have is that when Mr Evans came before our committee in Toronto, as you know, he said he was not happy with the law because the tourist exemptions were too broad and they would allow municipalities to open, there was not enough protection, it did not go far enough. Is what you are saying basically reaffirming that you are not pleased with the law, that there is not enough protection for workers and that the tourism exemptions are too broad as it stands right now?

Mr Fraser: Yes and we are reaffirming that position.

Mr Carr: One of the other concerns that we had in some of the other examples, some of the other unions—we were down in Collingwood and the question came up. There are unionized facilities that are open on Sundays in that area. I think LOF Glass was an example. What do you say to union workers when they say, “We want rights and protections not to have to work on Sunday but our brothers in whatever the union”—whether it be auto workers or whatever—“have to work.” What would your comment be to your brothers and their unions that do not have protection and maybe would be working?

Mr Fraser: That is a good question. I am glad you asked it, because one of the things we have tried to negotiate with the chains and all retail stores over the last number of years is something called a Sunday/Monday, Saturday/Sunday combination, where we have a guarantee. In retail, the employers have agreed where possible that they will guarantee, once a month, that employees will get a Saturday/Sunday or Sunday/Monday combination—that they will get two days off consecutively. We would like to have that happen more often. The problem is that in retail it is not like industry nor it is like a hotel.

We are in negotiations for a renewal of a collective agreement for this hotel right now. The question of employees working on Sunday is not a problem because full-time employees are working during the week. During the weekends it is the part-time employees who come in and relieve the full-time. You do not have that in retail. In retail, the full-time employees have to work on the weekends as well. It is not like industry where you can have your schedule and be able to work two weeks where you have to work on weekends, then be off for three or four because you have switched shifts.

In retail you are working every weekend, with a day off in the middle of the week or at the end at the week. It is not like working a shift and having a regular rotation, because the schedule is made up every week. If you work in a nursing home you have a schedule that is set for a period of five or six weeks, so people know for the next five or six weeks they are going to be working these hours and they can plan accordingly. Once they put in a certain shift that is not a favourite shift, the next time they know they go on days, and that is when they get their weekends and their consecutive days. In retail it does not happen.

Mr Carr: Of all the groups that have appeared before us—the big retailers, the small shop owners and so on—one that has been fairly conspicuous by its absence has been people like the A & Ps and the Loblaws and so on. I notice you said they agreed with you. Do you have any thoughts on why, with something that is of such fundamental importance to them as Sunday shopping, they have decided not to appear? It might just be a guess, you deal with them every day but—

Mr Fraser: If I had to guess it would probably be because they feel their credibility is on the line. It would be difficult for them to come here. They say to us at the negotiating table that they are going to do one thing and then the next thing you know they are telling politicians they want something else done. Halfway through all the mess when there was no law at all they were saying to us, “Yes, we should bring the law back in.” We are not even sure where they are at now. Maybe they are just trying to get their own act together and figure out where they are at.

1000

Mr Fletcher: Good to see you, Mike.

Mr Fraser: Nice to see you, Derek.

Mr Fletcher: We have been hearing throughout the presentations that if we do not have Sunday shopping, no jobs; we are going to lose all kinds of jobs, part-time jobs and everything else. Your union has been doing a lot of work on it. What do you think?

Mr Fraser: We did not see any increase in jobs. The hours are just spread out over the rest of the week. As opposed to part-time employees getting 24 hours working Monday to Friday, they end up working Monday and they have Thursday and Friday off and they work Saturday and Sunday. The hours are just shifted. Gerry works for Canada Safeway here in town. He went through when there was no law and there was Sunday shopping here. Ed works at a store where they had Sunday shopping. I think they will concur that there was not this influx of employees as a result of their employers opening on Sunday.

Mr Fletcher: Let me go to Ed. What do you think of Sunday shopping, Sunday working? What is your personal opinion?

Mr Ryma: I personally do not like working on Sunday. Not only did it not increase the number of hours of work for part-timers, but it also did not increase the weekly sales for the store. Sales just got spread over seven days rather than six. I will be starting a family soon. I do not want to have to be working on Sunday. A lot of people I work with have families. They have children who are home on the weekends, not in school. They want to be with their children. We want a common pause day where we do not have to do anything, just spend our time with our families.

Mr Fletcher: If we had wide-open Sunday shopping, and Ed just brought it up, as far as the family is concerned, perhaps our children's lifestyles would have to change to accommodate the parents. Maybe city council would have to hold their meetings on Sundays or something. You do not see that part of it. All they want is for the stores to open and not the rest of society to change along with what is going on.

Mr Fraser: There definitely could be a domino effect, where if retail stores are open, I guess they can argue that the banks should be open and that politicians should be sitting in the Legislature on Sunday.

Interjections.

Mr Fletcher: Or city council.

Mr Fraser: That creates a lot of employment.

Mr Lessard: Mr Fraser, you mentioned that retail full-time employees would be expected to work on Sundays.

Could you explain what the difference is, what is unique about the retail business that would require full-time staff to work on Sundays?

Mr Fraser: The nature of retail, the way it is operating now, is that you have full-time employees who are scheduled basically to supervise a number of part-time employees. The ratio of full-time employees to part-time in retail has been decreasing over the years. It is now probably on average 65% to 70% part-time and 35% to 30% full-time employees. So the full-time employees are there to supervise the part-time employees. Again, if there were any increase in employment, which has not been shown to be the case in places where they have Sunday shopping, if it is going to create any jobs, they are going to be part-time. One of the things that we are striving to do in retail is to create more full-time jobs.

Mr Lessard: You have also made mention of the store size criteria that are to be included in the regulations that will go along with Bill 115. I take it you are concerned about the ease with which stores that are over 7,500 square feet may fit within the tourist criteria as well. Can you give us some idea of the number of stores that would fit in that category of over 7,500 square feet in this area you represent? Which stores would those be, and how many?

Mr Fraser: Almost all of them that we represent. Almost all the retail food stores and department stores would fall into that category. We are concerned that they would be open because the majority of the employers we represent do not want to be open on Sundays or holidays. They have stated to us unequivocally that they do not want to open. They are forced to open because of the large chains. So you have a situation where maybe the large chains are benefiting, the small independent retailers are hurting because they do not want to be open, and the smaller, traditional mom-and-pop type stores are hurting because they are losing business to the large chains and the smaller independent retailers that are then open on Sundays.

The Acting Chair: Mr Mills, one minute.

Mr Mills: I thank you gentlemen for appearing here this morning and making this presentation. One of the key thrusts in this legislation is the quality of family life. I just would like to ask you briefly to give me some idea of how you think retail opening will affect the real quality of your family life and that of your members.

Mr Fraser: If an employee is forced to be available to work seven days a week, they are not going to end up working seven days a week. But because the schedules are done on a weekly basis, it is going to be Thursday at noon of each week before a retail employee finds out what day off he or she is going to have the next week. One week it is going to be Wednesday and one week Thursday. Maybe once every six weeks they might get a Saturday off or once every six or seven weeks they might get a Sunday off. Or they may end up working every Sunday; they may end up working every Saturday.

It is going to affect their family life because they are not going to be able to plan things. They are not going to be able to get into a regular routine. At least now they know that Sunday is one day when they can plan to be with their families.

The Acting Chair: On behalf of the committee, Mr Fraser, I thank you and your committee for your presentation.

NANCY LOEWEN

The Acting Chair: I call our next presenter, Alderman Nancy Loewen. Good morning. You will be allowed 15 minutes for your presentation. You can use the full 15 minutes for your presentation or give a shorter presentation and we will have questions and comments from each of the caucuses. Please identify yourself for the record and then proceed.

Ms Loewen: I am Alderman Nancy Loewen of the city of Thunder Bay. First of all, I would like to welcome the panel to the city of Thunder Bay. I have asked the visitors and convention bureau to prepare a tourism package for you. I hope you are going to stay a few days.

Mr Sorbara: We are going to leave many of the New Democratic Party members here as we carry on.

Ms Loewen: I will not make any comment until after I have heard your comments.

My format is mainly in the form of questions with a conclusion at the end:

1. Why do the tourism criteria have to be administered by the municipalities? As the province is making the rules on Sunday shopping, why is the province not enforcing the rules?
2. Why do the applications have to be supported by the chamber of commerce or convention and visitors bureau?
3. Why does city council have to hold public hearings?
4. Why is city council under no obligation to pass a bylaw granting tourism exemption even if the application meets all the criteria?
5. Why is there a large gap in the amount for first offence, $500, versus $2,000 for subsequent offences?
6. Who will be held liable for costs, etc, if the retailer appeals council's decision: the municipality or the province or both?
7. Are exemptions to the guidelines still being considered by the Solicitor General for those cities directly affected by cross-border shopping?
8. Did the province actually meet with the chamber of commerce prior to establishing guidelines to discuss the forthcoming role the chamber will be playing?
9. Did the province actually meet with the city mayors prior to establishing guidelines to discuss the forthcoming role the municipalities will be playing?
10. Why is city council given the option of limiting the number of applications that will be considered in any year? Will this move not create animosity between city council and private enterprise?
11. Would the province be willing to delay Sunday shopping legislation to give the municipalities the opportunity to put the question, "Are you in favour of Sunday shopping?" before the electorate on the plebiscite? If not, why not?
12. Who is paying for the processing of applications?

13. Why can private enterprise not decide for itself, based on the results of a municipal plebiscite polling citizens on Sunday shopping, with very strict protection for the employee and enforced by the province? Can the province consider this suggestion?

1010

I have before me a copy of a survey. I did everything I could to rush this to the Premier of Ontario. I will give you the results of the survey and then I will tell you what the Premier's response was.

First of all, this was a survey done by Victoriaville and conducted with 268 people. Overall, 74% were in favour of Sunday shopping; 26% were not in favour of Sunday shopping. Among working consumers, including professionals, clerical, sales and service, trade and craftsmen, military, technicians, labourers and officials, 78% were in favour of Sunday shopping, 21% were not in favour of Sunday shopping, and 1% were uncertain of their preference.

It is broken down. Among unemployed consumers—that is, the unemployed, housewives and the disabled—84% were in favour of Sunday shopping; not in favour of Sunday shopping, 16%. Among retired consumers, 53% were in favour of Sunday shopping; 47% were not in favour of Sunday shopping. Students in favour of Sunday shopping, 85%; not in favour of Sunday shopping, 15%.

I am going to tell you what the Premier's response was to this survey.

"Dear Ms Loewen: I've read your letter, and its enclosed survey, about Sunday shopping. Our government supports a common pause day for Ontario workers and their families. We believe this strengthens family and community life, and protects small businesses and the rights of working people.

"The Retail Business Establishments Statute Law Amendment Act reaffirms our commitment to a common pause day, while improving protection for the rights of retail workers. The act provides province-wide criteria under which tourism-based businesses will be able to apply to open on Sundays and holidays. It also guarantees retail employees 36 hours of rest in every seven days of work and the right to refuse Sunday and holiday work.

"I appreciate being kept informed about the views of your constituents."

In this whole letter, the thing that bothered me the most was the last paragraph. I will repeat it, "I appreciate being kept informed about the views of your constituents." He completely ignored this letter and this survey. This survey was only 268 people in the community, but he completely ignored this letter and said, "I appreciate being kept informed about the views of your constituents."

In conclusion, from what little information I was given, it was rather difficult to have an opinion on this subject other than that the terminology is confusing and the statements vague and wide open to interpretation.

I am a new politician. I do not belong to any party. I do not wish to belong to any party. I do not have any idealism, values. I work for the city of Thunder Bay. As far as I am concerned, the constituents are my employers; I am their employee. I am replacing my dear friend, the late Mickey Hennessy. I am sure you knew Mickey very well. I miss him very much.

During my short term on city council—I have only been a politician for four months—I have seen good, well-prepared briefs, the real meat-and-potato type. I know you know what I am talking about. I have also seen other briefs which basically skirt around the issues.

The provincial tourism criteria skirt around the issue. It appears that while the intentions of the Premier, the Honourable Bob Rae, were good, he tried to appease the tourism-oriented business community while on the other hand he tried to appease the labour union of retail workers.

Because he was trying to please both the tourism industry and labour, he actually has weak criteria. The Premier to date is not making a full commitment to either group.

Again, I am not a politician. I am one by job description, but I am not a very political person. But I do have a lot of common sense and a really good perception of things, of ideas. I think there is one group that has been left out here, and I think it is the consumer. What does the consumer want? Was this group ever consulted on a large scale? I have no idea. Was it?

For family reasons, I am personally opposed to Sunday shopping, but I refuse to let this belief influence my business decisions in any way.

I voted for the question of Sunday shopping on the plebiscite. I am of the opinion that the community should be consulted on a large scale, such as a plebiscite, for major issues. I will repeat that because that is so important. The community should be consulted on a large scale, such as a plebiscite, for major issues. They are paying our wages—my wages, your wages—and I feel they should be consulted.

The results on Sunday shopping should be given to private enterprise, who can take it from there and apply common sense. If the majority of the community does not want Sunday shopping, it is doubtful private enterprise will open. Putting the Sunday shopping question before the electorate should be the only municipal intervention.

The only provincial intervention should be very strict protection for the employees. That is the only part you people should play. I repeat the words "very strict," because if the rules are not clear and strict, what is the point of having rules in the first place?

I have received many calls, believe me, about Sunday shopping, about my decision for a plebiscite. I received many from students, from parents of students, from seniors out there—a lot of people threatening not to vote for me in the next election, basically, because I supported a plebiscite, because I believed the people should have a say.

I do not think Sunday shopping will give a large boost to the tourism industry, simply because our prices are high. It just does not make sense. I think the federal government has a responsibility to all constituents to start managing our money more effectively, to try to prevent cross-border shopping and try to prevent Sunday shopping from becoming almost a necessity for some people.

There are people in every community who have to ride the bus; they do not have a car. I do not know if you people can understand that, but there are some people in the community who have a really hard time. They are going through a lot of hardship. Maybe that extra time working on Sunday means a lot to them. I know from people who have talked to me, who have called me, it does mean a lot to them.

If the federal government handled our money properly, the province and municipalities would not be stuck trying to cope with all these problems we have.

When municipalities are given the responsibility of carrying out a certain task, then it is good common sense and fair that municipalities follow through on their own rules. I personally, as a city council member, do not appreciate the province coming in and acting as the boss and telling me what to do. My bosses are the city residents, and I only work for them. The municipality will be wasting time and money trying to implement this legislation. The business owner will also be wasting time and money.

Certain members of the public, municipal and business sector, should actually be sitting on any task force, and I would like to make a comment about your task force here. It is totally wrong. This is all made up of NDP, Conservatives and Liberals, and you should have equal representation from each government. I think you should also have representation from business and labour. I do not know if you have task forces that talk to you people, but I think the structure of this whole committee is wrong.

I am very much concerned about the employees. I would like to see some stronger legislation to help them. I really appreciate Gregory's friendly amendment, trying to get that through. It is really a crime that you people did not listen to him, because he was right on the ball. He really said it all. That is what I mean: Your structure is totally wrong.

Last, I am flying into Toronto in the morning. If you want to meet with me further and discuss this, I have no problem. I will be in Toronto for two weeks on business. Actually, I will be touring city hall about a project I have on the hearing-impaired, but I would be glad to meet with you.

The Acting Chair: We have time for one quick question from each caucus.

Mr Sorbara: I want to say to Alderman Loewen that hers is a meat-and-potatoes brief, and well presented as well. I wonder whether the committee would be interested in taking 10 minutes now and allowing the parliamentary assistant to the Solicitor General to answer the questions the alderman has raised, one by one, for the information of the committee. If we could get the answers to those questions before us in a way that allows us to discuss those questions through the rest of our hearings, we really will be doing something.

I suspect that the parliamentary assistant to the Solicitor General is going to refuse to do that, and if we brought a motion the NDP members would vote it down. In the alternative, I would ask that the parliamentary assistant to the Solicitor General, with the assistance of the Solicitor General's office, prepare written responses to those questions and have those transmitted to Alderman Loewen as soon as possible, with the same answers presented to us at this committee. Those questions are the very questions we are being asked over and over again in our communities, and we will hear deputants asking those questions over and over. So I would ask that the parliamentary assistant to the Solicitor General do that.

I really do not have a question. I do have a request, however. I believe your survey is more or less reflective of public opinion and public sentiment around the province. Would you consider providing it to us, and our clerk could make copies of it for all of us.

Can we deal with the question of whether we can take 10 minutes for the Solicitor General to answer those questions one by one?

Mr Mills: I thank the alderman for her presentation. I must say it was a rapid-fire presentation which gave me less than the usual parameters to make any notes whatsoever. It was boom, boom, boom. To go one step further than that, I have to tell you that we are here to listen and give comments about the presentations. I would be very glad if you gave me all those questions, and I will certainly take them back with me to the minister and discuss them, but you can understand that it is very difficult for me to grasp one question, because I thought you a little wound up.

Mr Carr: The mayor has said he figures that when the people actually do get a chance to voice their opinions, there will be Sunday shopping. The last group, the United Food and Commercial Workers, said no, they believed there will not be. From listening to you, it is your impression that probably the majority of people in this community will be voting in favour of Sunday shopping. Is that correct?

Ms Loewen: I have only seen one poll. I have been told by the news media that there have been several polls. I have only seen one poll, the result of Victoriaville, and it overwhelmingly says people are in favour of Sunday shopping, so I would assume the plebiscite will indicate this.

I am asking the province to do one of two things. Either you incorporate the rules and regulations—which is what you are doing; you are putting the rules and regulations on to the municipalities. If you are going to do that, then you handle it. Or you give it to the municipalities and we will handle it, we make up our own rules and we handle it. You do one or the other, but you do not go halfway between. That is what you are doing. You are coming up with the rules and regulations and you are telling the municipalities: "This is the way it's going to work. Like it or not, you've got it." You are passing the buck, and I do not like it. If we are going to do it, then let us make up the rules and the regulations. I am all for that, because this is a challenge for me.

Mr Morrow: I am looking for some clarification. You talked about a survey being done. I have a May 18 article from the Thunder Bay paper on a survey done by the chamber of commerce. The results of the survey are that 245 people out of 1,500 are clearly in favour of Sunday shopping. That says to me that it is not a majority. Can I get clarification from your survey to this survey?

Ms Loewen: The chamber of commerce surveyed only 24% of its people, and 68% of that 24% were in favour of Sunday shopping. But that was only 24% of their membership. They have a large membership.

Mr Morrow: But the base of that survey is fairly broad: 1,500 people, and 245 people are in favour of Sunday shopping. That would say to me that the majority of that poll would not be in favour of Sunday shopping. Is that not true?

Ms Loewen: Probably true, but I am not that keen on surveys. You can have as many surveys as you want, but I still do not think it is representative of the whole community. That is why I think there should be a plebiscite, because it would be representative of the whole community. You have one survey saying one thing, and you have another survey maybe saying something different. It usually is of a small percentage of the population, so I still maintain that on major issues there should be a plebiscite.

I really believe that is the problem of our country, that we are not listening to the majority of the people. That is where the plebiscite comes in. I think we should have more plebiscites throughout the country. I think that all levels of government should listen to results of the plebiscite, because then you would really know what the people want. These Gallup polls only survey 1,000 people. That is not the whole country. I am telling you that the way to go is the plebiscite. If you had more plebiscites on major issues, you would not have the problems you have today, because the people would have a strong say in how the government should be run.

Mr Daigeler: I want to indicate to the presenter that this is a legislative committee. You were wondering about the nature of this committee and why there are not business people represented. This is not a task force as such, but is a legislative committee of legislators who have been elected.

Ms Loewen: Except that if it is a legislative committee, it should have equal representation from all levels of government—

Mr Daigeler: The legislative committee functions under the Legislative Assembly Act, so there are certain requirements to be a member of the legislative committee.

Mr Jackson: On a point of clarification, Mr Chairman: I did not understand the parliamentary assistant. Has he agreed to undertake to respond to the 10 questions from the previous deputant in a written form to the committee?

Mr Mills: What I said was that we are here as a committee to listen and take back the concerns the alderwoman has raised to the ministry. I did in no way indicate that I would reply to those questions in a written form.

Mr Jackson: So you are refusing to respond to the questions? Thank you.

THUNDER BAY AND DISTRICT LABOUR COUNCIL

Mr Powers: My name is Mark Powers, secretary-treasurer, Thunder Bay and District Labour Council. I bring you greetings.

For many years, all three levels of government, federal, provincial and municipal, along with business and labour, have been working together to clean up the inequities regarding employment of the handicapped, racial discrimination and equal pay for work of equal value. Much has been accomplished, but there is still a long way to go on all these issues.

However, the issue of Sunday shopping has not received a united effort during its existence. The Ontario government under David Peterson wanted to let the municipalities decide. The municipalities wanted the province to decide. So here we are today.

The issue of Sunday shopping must not be confused with cross-border shopping. Too many times, these two different issues are thought to be the same. Such is not the case. Sunday shopping will not prevent cross-border shopping. Even with Sunday shopping in Ontario, the southward flow of shoppers increased, not decreased, from last June.

The Thunder Bay and District Labour Council believes there are many improvements necessary to the current days of shopping, not Sunday shopping. Currently, shoppers in Thunder Bay are not able to obtain full services during the entire shopping hours: management staff, opticians, automotive mechanics.

Are the retailers in Thunder Bay really concerned about the needs of the shoppers? The hours of retail businesses are not uniform. Some shopping centres close totally at 6 pm, except on Fridays. At other shopping centres, the shoppers will find only some of the retailers open for business. Intercity, the major mall of Thunder Bay, closes at 6 pm on Saturdays.

The Thunder Bay and District Labour Council maintains that retailers must develop standard hours of operation for the consumers. This would see many retailers increasing their hours of operation over the current six-day business week. With all retailers operating during the same business hours, competition for sales could improve.

It is obvious that the retailers are able to make profits while operating on a reduced workweek or they would have already extended their hours of operation. Rather than eliminate the practice of a common pause day, retailers must also improve the levels of services offered to the shoppers.

Having reviewed the Retail Business Holidays Act and the proposed amendments, the Thunder Bay and District Labour Council must inform this committee of its concerns.

Proposed amendments to the RBHA are too open. To allow municipal councils to make the decisions about shopping on Sundays would only create confusion. Traveling across Ontario, shoppers would encounter communities with Sunday shopping and communities without Sunday shopping. There is no need to allow such confusion to begin when it can be prevented. Now is the time, by not allowing the municipalities of Ontario to decide. This committee must preserve Ontario's common pause day.

Drugstores: Currently, drug marts in Thunder Bay are open until midnight from Monday to Saturday, and on Sundays until 10 pm. The Thunder Bay and District Labour Council finds it necessary to suggest that these businesses be closed on Sunday. This would eliminate many problems and much confusion regarding the RHBA: (1) the need for a definition of a principal business; (2) legislation regarding those drugstores which would qualify for Sunday shopping, for example, square footage; (3) a formula or restrictions as to the number of employees allowed on the job on Sundays.

The employees' hours of work currently done on Sundays would be rescheduled to improve the level of service provided to the shoppers during the other business days.

Most of the prescriptions currently filled on Sundays could wait until Monday. After all, patients treated in hospital emergency departments and given prescriptions are dispensed dosages of the necessary medications. Prescriptions needing to be filled on Sunday should be available from the hospital pharmacy.

A review of prescriptions purchased by myself revealed dispensing fees of $9.99, February 1; $10.49, July 15; and $13.95, July 15. Total expenses for those purchases were $12.99, $13.49 and $37.63. Transfer payment shortfalls from the federal government have been estimated to cost Ontario approximately $1.6 billion in lost revenue in 1991-92. In addition, OHIP payments for out-of-country health services, primarily in the United States, cost $225 million in 1990-91. Being shareholders in Ontario, we must support Ontario, not private enterprise. Indirectly, the dispensing fees paid for prescriptions dispensed from a hospital pharmacy would be going to Ontario.

Tourist exemption: The legislation proposed leaves decisions to the municipalities. The Thunder Bay and District Labour Council again stresses that the province must decide, not municipalities.

Even with the high level of vacancies in Thunder Bay's current malls, there are plans for a Superstore, expansion of the McIntyre Mall and a new Sears store, with the current Sears store being renovated to make room for up to 70 more stores. Shoppers want the quality and the quantity of services improved. Retailers must be made to recognize the value of these services to the shoppers.

One third of Ontario's total workforce is employed in the retail sector. Sunday shopping would only place a demand on other services: public transportation, snow removal, police, warehouse staff, delivery persons, etc. Increased services equal higher taxes. Thunder Bay does not need that.

Say no to Sunday shopping. Thank you for this opportunity.

The Acting Chair: Thank you. I have allowed about seven minutes for each caucus.

Mr Sorbara: I am a little confused, to tell you the truth. The second to last paragraph of your submission states very clearly that Sunday shopping would only place a demand on other services, that is, public transportation, snow removal, police, warehouse staff, delivery persons. Yet your brothers in the NDP suggest that is not the case. They say that Sunday shopping will not increase employment at all.

When I read "public transportation," that means to me bus drivers having an opportunity to work and sometimes working overtime at double time or triple time. When I read "snow removal," that means to me CUPE workers getting an opportunity to clean the streets on Sunday. I do not know why you would suggest that in the absence of Sunday shopping they would not clean the streets. Police forces as well; there might be more time for police forces. Warehouse staff: Surely you are right there, that there would be some increased employment in warehouses, because sometimes the warehouse is open if the stores are open. With delivery persons, you might not be right on the money, because the delivery person, if he works in retail, would have an absolute right to refuse.

Do you see some increase in employment in these other sectors, bus drivers, plow operators, police officers, warehouse staff, if stores are allowed to open on Sunday?

Mr Powers: In terms of public transportation, Thunder Bay transit is not a profit-making enterprise.

Mr Sorbara: I am talking about jobs for people.

Mr Powers: There is no issue of jobs here. What would have to be done is that our city council, together with the transit department, would have to decide which routes to cancel or reschedule the hours and the pickup times so they would be at peak pickup times during the Sunday shopping, which varied in the past; some 10 to 4, some noon till 5. The snow removal—

Mr Sorbara: It is going to be done anyway.

Mr Powers: Right, the city department does it anyway. But for snow removal there is a private contractor who has the contract with the mall manager to remove it. He has to do it quicker.

Mr Sorbara: So that would be better for the workers who are working for the private contractor, in terms of employment opportunity?

Mr Powers: No. They would have to look at all the places they have contracts with. Obviously, if there were Sunday shopping the malls would have to receive priority during their hours of opening. The other businesses would be put on the back burner. Once the major malls were done, those businesses not opening till Monday morning could be plowed later.

Mr Sorbara: I have one other major problem, and that is your submission that rather than opening on Sunday you should expand the hours during the week. You were complaining that Intercity Mall closes at 6. You could have better service during the week, longer hours during the week, is that right?

Mr Powers: The longer hours refers to the Intercity on Saturday evening, but it refers basically to those merchants who are out there operating on a standard Monday to Friday, 9 to 5, hours of operation.

Mr Sorbara: So give us 9 till 9 at night, you are saying?

Mr Powers: Expand those hours. Open those businesses on Saturdays first before we even look at Sundays.

1040

Mr Sorbara: That is another one of my problems. Your friends on the other side of the room keep harping upon the fact that we have to be concerned about quality of life and family time and all of that. Well, I have six kids, and I do not mind if I have to go out to work on Sunday afternoon now and again. I see my kids in the morning, and that is not a terrible inconvenience. But if I have to work every night until 9 o'clock, that really hurts my family time. Most malls in Metropolitan Toronto, I should tell you, are open till 9:30 at night. While these guys are saying that you are hurting family life if the mall is open from 1 till 6 on Sunday, they forget that retail workers are also fathers and mothers during the week, and if they are not home for dinner, that is really hard on family life.

I cannot understand why you are arguing for greater hours if you are really supporting the notion that we should be concerned primarily about maintaining the high quality of family life. If you are consistent, should we not be getting all the stores closed down by about 4:30 or 5 o'clock so that father and mother can get home to be there at dinner with their kids?

Mr Powers: But if we close the stores down at 4:30 or 5 o'clock, where does that person who does have that perfect job of Monday to Friday, 9 to 5 or 8:30 to 4:30, go to do his business? Only on Saturday.

Mr Sorbara: My friend, I suggest that is the very reason 75% of the people are asking us to open the stores on Sunday, because that is the only time they and their children can go to the store and spend a little time together and get what they need at Canadian Tire or at Sears or whatever.

Mr Powers: Canadian Tire is open till 9:30 six evenings a week here.

Mr Carr: Thank you very much for your presentation. One of the questions I have relates to some of the other workers. Your concern is obviously paramount for the workers. But as you know, there are people who are in the restaurant business, the movie industry and so on. Would you like to see us go back to shutting them down? If not, what do you say to those people who are asking why the retail workers are different from the restaurant workers or the movie theatre workers or whatever? Is it just the case that they are unionized and the others are not? What do you say to those people?

Mr Powers: The workers in the theatres locally are unionized. If you want it taken on a provincial basis, I could not tell you how many of them are, but there must be a large majority. To close a theatre on Sunday—that is family time, because I get to take my children, he gets to take his grandchildren. That is family time together. Right now 101 Dalmatians is playing and I think Sleeping Beauty is the other, so on Sunday afternoon you get to go to that. It being summertime, we are lucky enough to have that also run on the early show at 7 pm; the 9 o'clock show is an adult film. You get to take the children out then if you unfortunately have to be on the job or doing your running around on Saturday.

Mr Carr: The other question relates to the whole issue of cross-border shopping. The government side had said it is not part of the same issue. It was interesting. Last week one of the retailers that came in here said: "We can compete with the selling of our shirts. What we cannot compete with is people going across the border for three things: cheap gasoline, booze and cigarettes," all of which taxes were increased in the last provincial budget. So the big three items that people are going across for were substantially increased in the last provincial budget. They go across for those three items, and sometimes it is a matter of convenience. You do not see in any of the border communities, where you can drive to the United States on a daily basis, that in fact it does have to do with convenience, that I wake up Sunday morning and say: "Let's take the kids for a drive. Our stores are not open so we'll go to the States"? You do not see that happening?

Mr Powers: If they choose to do that on a Sunday, that is their form of recreation. To get to the border from Thunder Bay you are looking at 40 or 45 miles, so it is not a real border community. However, if you look at a map, there is nothing between us and the border, so we are a border community. The purchases made cross-border can be done, and if you look at a survey or chart as to purchases, you will see that shoppers are going now throughout the week, because there were peaks on the weekends and where you encountered the problem was returning into Canada at the border and the long lineups. So people, in planning, have even taken stats or vacation days during the week and done that type of cross-border shopping.

Mr Carr: The point I was trying to get at is that people throw out the statistics on the cross-border shopping forgetting that during that period we were increasing taxes significantly. That probably had more of an influence on it than some of the other factors. It is interesting to sit on the committee and see how people use statistics and pick out certain things—not yourself, of course, but the government side—to justify their position.

The final question I have got is about the protection of workers. As the legislation stands now, there are provisions in there basically, as the government has said, so that somebody who does not want to work on Sunday does not have to. If in fact—and we have had debate here today—communities do open up, do you think there is enough protection for the workers so that if, for example, some of your workers do not work, for either family time or religious reasons, do you think they can do that, or will the companies be able to force them to work if the legislation remains unchanged?

Mr Powers: The legislation, as it stands, is too open and confusing. I believe it reads that I may give my employer up to 48 hours' notice. If I have the seniority and, all of a sudden, discover that I have an event which is happening this weekend, I meet that 48-hour requirement, though that is not very much notice for the co-worker who is going to have to do those hours of work; whereas if I happen to fall down a set of stairs and end up in a hospital and somebody has to cover my sick time, that is much fairer. Although once again it is an act of God, the notice of 48 hours will squash all the plans of that other worker.

Mr Carr: Also, with regard to the tourism criteria, they are so broad that any municipality in the province could classify under them. I think it was made that way so that it will be up to the municipalities. Would you like to see the tourism criteria tightened up a little bit and made tougher so that the municipalities cannot, as they do now, say, "We want to stay open and we'll use these tourism criteria as our out?"

Mr Powers: Tourism needs to be defined in a provincial policy from the border of Manitoba to the Quebec border, so that the standards are the same. We cannot allow the city councils across Ontario to decide, because one city council will set the standards today, an election will happen in November and there will be amendments to those standards. Those standards will change. There will only be confusion.

Mr Carr: One of the things people see happening is a snowball effect. We will have municipalities that will open because they will say, "Our next-door neighbours are, and if they are open, business will go over there." If the legislation is not amended, is that what you see happening, the snowball effect that you will be open because Thunder Bay will say, "We have to be open because our neighbours are," and they will in turn say they have to be open and so on? Is that what you see happening if the legislation remains the same?

Mr Powers: The problem with the legislation is that before we compare municipalities, let's look at the stores inside a mall. You can walk in a mall on a Sunday and not all of the merchants are open. So why do they open the doors to the mall if you cannot go in and make a purchase at all of those stores? If the municipality is going to open certain businesses on Sunday, as you say or suggest, it could create competition or steal business from the next community, causing it to say, "We had better open." Then it would be a matter of the number of hours they are open on Sundays. You would have a contest to see who could stay open the longest on Sundays, who would open the earliest and who could stay open the latest.

Mr Fletcher: I have just a couple of things. We hear a lot about the opposition members saying there should be a choice. Do you agree that workers should have the choice to say no to Sunday working?

Mr Powers: When we look at Sunday work, though, I have to look at my own employment. Unfortunately, if I look at what a member of the United Food and Commercial Workers or somebody in one of the stores is entitled to, I have been cheated. I am entitled to back time. I say that because I, in my job as a hospital orderly, am the essential service. I am employed and work two out of three weekends. I have a hell of a lot of back time coming to me.

1050

Mr Fletcher: Yes, but you do not have the choice, and that is what I am saying.

Mr Powers: Let's talk equity. Never mind choice. If one guy is going to get it, everybody is going to get it.

Mr Fletcher: Right, and should workers have the choice to say yes or no? That is all I said. I am not talking retail or anything else; I am saying workers.

Mr Powers: But when we talk about choices, we have to look at essential services. Is a supermarket essential? A hospital is.

Mr Fletcher: That is a very good point. You also brought up the point about bus drivers, municipal workers and everything else. I just want to say something. I know Mr Sorbara was saying it would not cost that much, but in the city of Mississauga they reported that it cost them about $700,000 per year for more services to satisfy Sunday openings. That is a figure that is based on about 1988 dollars, so we are looking at substantially more. Where is that money coming from?

Mr Powers: When you refer to snow removal, it comes from the city taxes. Let's look at the senior citizens. The retirees are trying to hang on to their home, their nest egg, and they are losing it if you increase that. The bus fare rates recently went up in town. The rates would go up again even sooner.

Mr Fletcher: In other words, the cost is going to come from the taxpayer and the people who use the services, mostly from the taxpayer.

Mr Powers: But when it comes to the taxpayer, everybody pays, not only those who would be using the bus on Sunday.

Mr Fletcher: I know. That is right. Even people who do not agree with Sunday work and Sunday shopping would be paying for the services also. Their taxes go up.

Mr Powers: That is right. I would receive that bill. Even though I sit here today opposed to Sunday shopping, I would have to pay my share.

Mr Morrow: Welcome, brother. I thank you for taking the time to come down and talk to us.

Mr Carr talked briefly about how stats can be very misleading. We all know that 57% of people in Ontario want to shop on Sunday, but the other side of that poll states that 70% of people do not want to work on Sunday. I also understand that Thunder Bay is having a plebiscite on Sunday shopping. Do you think one question on that plebiscite should be, "Do you want to work on Sunday?"

Mr Powers: If we are going to talk about a plebiscite with the municipal election, it is only fair to the citizens and taxpayers of Ontario that it be a provincial standard question or questions. The questions per municipality will vary. They will not be the same. Those questions will be misinterpreted, misunderstood by the voters and therefore not be a true and honest survey. If it was a standard question in all of the municipal elections which could include both the Sunday shopping and the Sunday working, then we might have some fairness—might.

Mr Morrow: I could not agree with you more. I would ask for you to qualify your comments on the relationship between Sunday shopping and cross-border shopping. Could you possibly do that for me?

Mr Powers: Sunday shopping is an option. It was an option in the past, but I should say, not all merchants under one roof opened. Cross-border shopping is where we go south of the 49th. That is a totally different issue. It is my own personal feeling that with the recent action as to the provincial sales tax and the collection of it at the border, if one sits down and looks at the sales between now and December 31, 1991, those cross-border figures will even increase, trying to beat the taxes which will come into effect in 1992.

Mr Morrow: Just for a point of clarification for myself, in the city of Thunder Bay how many actual workers does the labour council represent?

Mr Powers: More than 15,000.

Mr Morrow: That is quite a few.

The Acting Chair: On behalf of the committee, Mr Powers, I thank you for taking time out and giving your presentation this morning.

Mr Powers: You are welcome.

NORTH OF SUPERIOR TOURISM ASSOCIATION

The Acting Chair: I would like to now call upon the North of Superior Tourism Association, Mr John Beals. Thank you for being here this morning. You will be given a half-hour to give a presentation. You can either use the full half-hour for your presentation or you can give a shorter brief and then allow time for questions and comments from each of the caucuses. Could you please identify yourself and then proceed.

Mr Beals: My name is John Beals. I am the president of the North of Superior Tourism Association, which is one of the Ontario travel association programs in Ontario. I would like to state that the opinions I am giving today are not necessarily representative of each and every one of our members, but they are going to be my own feelings, both as the president of the tourism association here and also as a small business person who owns a restaurant in Thunder Bay that employs some 50 persons and a hotel in Thunder Bay that has just been renovated under loans through the Northern Ontario Development Corp and the Ministry of Tourism and Recreation and that will be employing somewhere in the neighbourhood of 100 people and also as the past owner of two fast food service restaurants in Thunder Bay, both of them in shopping centres.

I guess, in theory, a common day of pause is correct. In years gone by, when the family unit was what it was, people spent more time with their family, spent more time doing things on that day of pause. As we got into the age after the war, more and more people got into industry, which required products being produced on a continuous basis right through that common day of pause or Sunday and, for some reason, that common day of pause for everybody started to break down.

We are a community of paper mills, manufacturing, transportation, substantially a community of well-organized labour. Most of these large companies work shift work of 24 hours a day, seven days a week, and those families that have employees working those shifts do not have a common day of pause. It is perhaps wrong, but that is the way life is.

As a small business person having restaurants in shopping centres, I was very much against opening on Sundays. I was against it for a particular reason, and that was because I had to be part of that. I had to open my restaurant because the shopping centre was open. The restaurant really did not make any profit during that period of time, but it employed people. It employed schoolkids, high school students and university students, people to whom I could not give 28 hours a week or employ six days a week. They were very happy to work. They were very happy to supplement their family income by working those five hours on Sunday.

When the first few weeks and months started, I boycotted shopping on Sunday, but that is my day of pause, and I started to enjoy being able to walk through what I think everybody terms a community centre, a shopping centre, to be able to do my shopping during that period of time.

Then I put my hat on as a tourism representative, and tourism is a faltering industry in Ontario. Our numbers are down and we have to find ways of bringing people to this province or keeping the dollars within the province. It frightens me when I hear a politician, the Attorney General, state that it does not matter what goes on at these meetings, that the common day of pause is not going to change, and it frightens me that somebody is going to define what a tourist is. You know what a tourist is? He is not a tire-kicker. He is not a gawker who walks around taking a look at the scenery. He is not somebody foreign to us who has come in from the United States. He is not somebody who has come in from Quebec or Manitoba to spend money in Ontario. I was just out at the Murillo fall fair yesterday, and the government of Ontario is spending $2 million to promote fairs and the enthusiasm of Ontario people staying in Ontario to spend their dollars in Ontario.

I put my hat on as a new hotelier in town, and my market is not Duluth, is not south of the border, is not Manitoba; my market is here in Thunder Bay. I am just outside of the city a little bit, but I am creating a retreat-seminar hotel, a getaway for people in Thunder Bay so that they can have their romantic holiday right within the city limits of Thunder Bay, not having to go and spend their money down across the border. Do I not have the privilege to call them tourists? They are spending money in Ontario. They are spending money on my property. They are creating employment. Without those people, we do not have a business.

Once that is successful and you see the amount of people coming to the hotel, people beget people; business begets business, and if you do not have anybody coming to your hotel, the parking lot is empty and nobody is going to come there because they do not like to be alone. Similarly, in a shopping centre, if the shopping centre is busy, people want to go to that shopping centre because they see other people. They want to intermingle. They will spend the dollars. They will create the employment, and we have to create our own employment. We cannot wait for somebody else to create it.

You, as politicians, want taxes. You have to create some jobs to collect the taxes. You have to allow private enterprise and private business to create jobs so that people can make money and pay taxes so that we can afford the social benefits we enjoy in Ontario.

I think it is important for people to have a quality of life that allows them to do and enjoy the things they want to do and enjoy, and things have to be equal. If everybody took a common day of pause and relaxed and enjoyed themselves on that common day of pause, I am sure we would have a fine place to live, and we would probably look inwardly at ourselves and enjoy and respect the other person, but in the reality, it is not that way.

All people work, and they want to work. They want to earn money. You cannot say to people working in the grain elevators: "You're allowed to work on Sunday. You're allowed to work on Sunday at Abitibi"—if Abitibi stays open long enough for people to be working there—"and at Canadian Forest Products you are allowed to work on Sunday. But your kid can't work in a shopping centre on Sunday because he's got a common day of pause"—not with his father, who is working at Great Lakes but with his buddies someplace else. Is that a common day of pause? I do not think so.

It is a difficult thing to wrestle with with you people, but I think we have to have money generated in this province, and the more roadblocks we put up to generating that money, the more the consequences are going to be substantial.

This is a little off subject here. We see that Ontario Hydro is the largest producer of energy in Ontario, and because of gasoline prices and oil prices—CP Rail has bought a railway between a place just south of Estevan and it goes all the way to Detroit, and then they have a link from Detroit to Windsor, and they are shipping all of the coal from Saskatchewan and Alberta through the US for Ontario Hydro—to save what? To save us costs, at the expense of jobs of the railway, of the shipping people, of maintenance people? It does not make sense, and here we are arguing about whether we are going to have Sunday shopping and a common day of pause. My God, the way we are going, everybody is going to have a whole bunch of common days of pause.

I do ask you to think about the economics of it, and the economics of Ontario, and what we should be doing with that to encourage people to work, not encourage people to stay at home. Let's not put up roadblocks and excuses for people not to work and for government to have to pay them not to work. Let's find ways to employ them, and hopefully that thing we are lacking of enthusiasm within this province for wanting to work and wanting to produce and wanting to be self-sustaining—nobody likes to be on the dole. Nobody likes to have to go to the government and ask for money. So let's find ways of keeping those people employed: university kids, families who need that second income.

The Acting Chair: Thank you. We have about five minutes for each caucus.

Mr Sorbara: Let me begin by saying that I think your presentation was well thought out and reflects very much what we have been hearing from employers and tourist associations and chambers of commerce and business organizations and both, as my colleague Mr Poirier points out, small and large businesses.

The government is trying to pretend that if we were to give people the freedom to choose what they wanted to do on Sunday, whether as consumers or employers or workers, it would not increase employment in the retail sector hardly at all. I want to ask you about your own experience. During the period when you were open on Sundays, did your payroll costs go up?

Mr Beals: Did my payroll costs go up in proportion to—

Mr Sorbara: Were you paying more?

Mr Beals: We were not paying double time or time and a half or anything like that.

Mr Sorbara: No, I am talking about overall. Let's say you paid $10,000 a week in wages and benefits and the like.

Mr Beals: Proportionately, no, they did not go up.

Mr Sorbara: So there was no more money earned.

Mr Beals: Oh, I say proportionately of income.

Mr Sorbara: Did more people work for you?

Mr Beals: No, but more people got more hours.

1110

Mr Sorbara: More people got more hours, so more was being paid out.

Mr Beals: My students in those places would work anywhere from 8 to 10 to 15 hours a week. Now they are able to work 10 to 15 to 18 hours a week. It gives them a little bit more.

Mr Sorbara: So overall it costs you more in salaries and wages?

Mr Beals: Yes, but proportionately to income it does not.

Mr Sorbara: Did you have any difficulty finding people who were anxious or willing to work on Sunday?

Mr Beals: No, not at all.

Mr Sorbara: Did you force anybody to work on Sunday against his will?

Mr Beals: I never force anybody to work. If they do not want to work, they will not work. No, they quite willingly wanted the extra hours.

Mr Sorbara: Now grant that all of us, if we could create a perfect world, would have a day when we could all stop what we were doing and have some sort of day together, although to tell you the truth, on my common pause day I would not mind going to a baseball game and people have to work to make sure that that happens, and I do not mind travelling and people have to maintain gas stations and the like for that to happen, and police have to police the highway. But grant that it would be nice if all of the stores would close down and then there would not be any competitive pressure. Is it realistic to choose between what is a business that is a tourist business and what is not?

In other words, in your fast-food stores, do you make a distinction when someone comes up to buy, I do not know, a felafel or a hamburger whether or not they are tourists or not tourists? Do you ask them? Do you say: "Look, we're just catering to tourists, and I have seen you around Thunder Bay a lot. You're not a tourist. I don't want your business." Do you differentiate in your business like that?

Mr Beals: No. I tried to explain a little bit earlier. A tourist is a person who wants to spend money in the hospitality industry or the service industry or whatever it is. If a person from Thunder Bay wants to spend money on Sunday, he can go down to Duluth and spend money. What good is that money being spent down in Duluth? What good does it do Thunder Bay? Give them the opportunity to spend the dollars in Thunder Bay.

Mr Sorbara: You said in your opening statement that originally you had been opposed to the notion that you might have to open your businesses on Sunday and you were, to quote you, "boycotting" Sunday shopping. Now you seem to have changed your mind, and if I understand the thrust of your submission, you would prefer if the provincial government just let individual businesses choose whether or not they would open on Sunday. Is that correct?

Mr Beals: I think that it should be up to the individual. It should be up to whoever is operating that business.

Mr Sorbara: The NDP has suggested that it is really trying to protect the small store owner by requiring most businesses to stay closed on Sunday. What is the mood among the business people you associate with, your colleagues the small retailers? Do they feel like they really want that protection given to them under this bill, or would they prefer to compete or not compete on Sunday, depending on what the market was like?

Mr Beals: I do not believe that anybody is forcing anybody to stay open on Sunday. In the two shopping centres that I was in, it was up to each individual store owner to open if he wanted to.

The government—and I am not saying the NDP government or the Liberal or Conservative government or anybody—feels as though it is the protector of the small person and the public, that large corporations can look after themselves and can fight and the small person is the one who has to be protected. But you know, when I hear the large unions standing up as soon as Sunday shopping was shut down and saying: "We won. We are the protectors of the small people who don't have a voice; we've given them the common day of pause that they need," I am saying: "You guys are out to lunch. All of you large union people are working seven days a week. You're not doing what you're saying you are doing for the small people. You can afford it because you're making $17 and $18 an hour." Saying to the young students that are making $5 and $6 an hour, "You've got to have the common day of pause," does not make sense.

Mr Carr: In the testimony of one of the small retailers who came in, she was saying that her feelings are that if she forces people to work Sunday and people come into the shop and see a surly clerk who is there against his or her will, it actually hurts them. She feels the same way. She does not try to force anybody to work, because ultimately it hurts herself by having somebody who does not want to be there, for whatever reason, because he or she had something else planned or what not. Is it your feeling as well that if you attempt to make people work on Sunday in the service industry, then it will ultimately hurt you?

Mr Beals: I have seen some surly clerks who do not work on Sundays. It is an attitude. My restaurant and bar, I refuse to open till 1 o'clock on a Sunday night. Somebody said somewhere along the line that you do not need to serve food on Sunday; you just have to have it available. You can drink now until 1 o'clock; you can work till 1 o'clock in a bar on Sunday. Where is the common pause day in my bar? I train all of my staff to be willingly nice to people.

Mr Carr: It was interesting when we talked about the last Solicitor General in these Sunday shopping hearings. Mike Farnan went around and said that giving the municipal option was the chicken way out. He brought a little chicken around with him to mock the Solicitor General of the day, Joan Smith. What he did in his day with the introduction of this bill is give the municipalities the same option.

One of the feelings out there is that what will happen is, we may have a patchwork; that one municipality will be open because it will have had a plebiscite that people want it or that they feel they are a tourist area. What would happen in your estimation, for example, to your businesses if a neighbouring municipality were to open? Would you see your businesses suffering as a result if somebody else had the Sunday option?

Mr Beals: We really do not have any neighbours; we are in northern Ontario.

The reeves and the mayors and the city council, they are ward heelers, and I guess all politicians are ward heelers. They have to look after their constituents and try and read what in the heck they really want and then say, "This is what my attitude is, and this is what the public want." I do not see where it is really anybody's business. I do not see that it is the municipality's business or the Ontario government's business whether we stay open. Once you allow one type of business to be open on Sunday, it behooves you to allow every type of business to be open on Sunday.

Mr Carr: I think what politicians do is, they have their idea of what they want to see done, and what happens is that they have 15 people come in and they will pick out the one who happens to agree with them and say, "Aha, see? Everybody agrees with me." That is what politicians and governments do, and I think that is what we are seeing with this legislation. What is your best guess in your area? Do you feel that as a result of the tourist exemption and the public pressure it will be enough that they will take the tourist exemption and open up, and do you see, when the legislation is in, being open in your area? Your best guess.

Mr Beals: My best guess is that it is going to stay exactly the way it is. It is nice to sit around and talk about it, but it is not going to change. We are not going to go back to where we were 10 months ago. The decision is already made. All we are trying to do is convince people that we have looked at it once again.

Mr Carr: Mr Mills says he is listening, so it will be interesting to see if there are any changes.

The Acting Chair: I would like to remind you that you have five minutes.

Mr Morrow: Thank you for coming, sir. I really appreciate that. I just have a few questions.

First of all, I would like to know if you exercised your option under the Retail Business Holidays Act that came into effect January 1, 1976.

Mr Beals: Did I exercise my option?

Mr Morrow: Under that act.

Mr Beals: Would you explain what my option was? I am not quite sure what it was.

Mr Morrow: You did have options under that act to open or not. Right?

Mr Beals: It is pretty difficult for me to open a restaurant in a locked mall and to have anybody in it.

Mr Morrow: Does it make sense that we, as the government of Ontario, know what every local council is doing or thinking?

Mr Beals: No, I do not think you are able to and I do not think it is necessary for you to.

Mr Morrow: Do you agree then with the tourism criteria being set up by the province to help local councils?

Mr Beals: The tourism criteria. Do you mean they are going to redefine what a tourist is?

Mr Morrow: That is part of the amendments.

Mr Beals: The Ministry of Tourism and Recreation has worked very hard over the years to keep as broad a definition of a tourist as there can be so that we can move ahead and bring in as many people as we can and call them tourists. Are we now going to shrink that up so that it works to somebody's benefit, to close stuff up?

Mr Morrow: Should workers have the right to refuse to work on Sundays?

Mr Beals: They should have the right to not work any day if they so desire. If they do not want to work on Saturday or Friday, stay at home.

Mr Fletcher: Just on that point, most of us here agree that there should be some protection for workers to have the right to refuse to work on a Sunday if possible. All through this tour so far I have been hearing that retailers should also have the same right to either open or not open. I am flexible. I can understand where they are coming from because I know where I am coming from also.

I have a letter from Joy Haywood, who is part of Magic Cuts here in Thunder Bay. She said that they signed agreements with large malls before this stuff was starting up, the Sunday shopping, and it states that they are obligated to remain open when the department stores are open. So in reality they would not have a choice if they have signed that agreement. They would not have the choice to close up on Sunday if they wanted to close if the department store was open.

Should our legislation take into account that even they should have that right to say no and they should be able to get out of that agreement?

Mr Beals: I have a similar agreement in my lease. Back 20 years ago, when I signed them there was no thought of being open on Sundays. We had to be open the hours the mall was open, whether it was 9:30 in the morning or 10 o'clock in the morning. When the mall opened, the store had to open, and that is really what the idea was.

In both of the shopping centres my restaurants were in, it was up to the individual store owner. The landlord used no pressure or asking whether we would stay open or not. It was up to the individual and it was up to my staff whether they wanted to work.

Mr Fletcher: Okay, but if they really wanted to push it with the agreement you signed you would not have a choice. You would have to open when they opened. Even if you did not want to open on a Sunday you would have to open, according to the agreement, if they took it to the extent of the law, which they could.

Mr Beals: I do not know.

Mr Fletcher: It would be a good one to fight, would it not?

Mr Beals: Why fight? The reality is that it makes good economic sense. It creates employment.

Mr Fletcher: I know, but if you did not want to because you did not have that, you would still be obligated to open, according to that agreement.

Mr Beals: But there is a whole bunch of what-ifs out there too.

What if we did not have Sunday? What happened if we decided that our common day of pause was going to be Wednesdays?

Mr Fletcher: You would still have to open your store if that mall said you were going to open.

Mr Beals: At one point or another, retailers used to close on Wednesday afternoons because they worked on Saturdays. Remember that, or are you not old enough?

Mr Fletcher: Whether it is Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, what have you, according to the agreement signed with the mall you would have to open whether you wanted to or not.

Mr Beals: I do not know. I did not have to. Nobody held a gun to me. Nobody holds a gun to my head to stay in business. Maybe the government does because it needs its taxes, but nobody forces anybody to do anything against his will in Ontario. That is the way it is. We have the freedom to do things that we want to do. You have to maintain that. You cannot keep taking things away from individuals and expect them to want to continue to be progressive. That is no pun.

Mr Fletcher: It is a contradiction in terms when you talk about Progressive Conservative.

Mr Mills: We have a clarification about leases in malls. I am going to call on Paul Ceyssens, who is the legal representative from the Solicitor General's office, to clarify that at this point.

Mr Ceyssens: I just wanted to raise one issue and that relates to Mr Fletcher's remark about the provisions of leases in shopping centres. It is a very brief point but I think it is worth raising at this point.

I would urge members of the committee to take a quick look at section 5a of the Retail Business Holidays Act in its present form. I believe it is in the present form in the material that was provided to the members of the committee.

Section 5a is a very brief section and I will read it out:

"A provision in a lease or other agreement that has the effect of requiring a retail business to remain open on a holiday is of no effect even if the lease or agreement was made before the coming into force of this section."

I just wanted to underline that one section of the RBHA, which makes it very clear that no matter what the lease says the parties cannot essentially contract out of the legislation. I would be happy to answer any questions if there are any arising from that.

Mr Jackson: I have a point of clarification because I raised this question in the two previous rounds of committee discussions on this subject.

We have heard deputations that in spite of the clause that counsel just read to us—thank you—at lease renewal time, when the lease is a function of your profit margins, when the malls take part of their rental income as a function of their sales, there is no protection in Ontario that the lease is not dropped, and that it is a matter of time.

So the short answer is, yes, the legislation will protect you during the lifetime of your lease, but you are not guaranteed rates of renewal that will allow you to maintain. A representative from Cadillac Fairview and a representative from the Sears Corp, in my cross-examinations a year and a half ago, said, "Well, there's nothing that says we can't do it."

I just wanted to suggest that although I am acknowledging its presence, it should be put in context as to the way it operates out there. There is no legislation that protects small landlords in malls other than through the life of their current lease. I just wanted to put that on the record.

The Acting Chair: Do you have a response for that?

Mr Ceyssens: I have a very brief response. Mr Jackson is correct.

The Acting Chair: On behalf of the committee, I thank you for coming here this morning and giving your presentation.

1130

ONTARIO'S SUNSET COUNTRY TRAVEL ASSOCIATION

The Acting Chair: I would like to now call upon Ontario's Sunset Country Travel Association. You will be given a half hour to give a presentation. You can use the full half-hour for your presentation or you can make a shorter submission and allow time for questions and answers from each of the caucuses. Could you please identify yourself and then proceed.

Mr Duggan: My name is Mark Duggan. I am the executive director of Sunset Country Travel Association, and I would like to thank you all for the opportunity to address you. I guess I am the start of the out-of-town contingent from outside of the Thunder Bay area.

I would first of all like to explain to the committee what Sunset Country Travel Association is. Sunset Country Travel Association was incorporated under the laws of the province of Ontario as a non-profit corporation, effective April 1, 1974. The objects, which I think are important and are really relevant to why we are here today, are as follows:

To encourage the effective operation and development of the tourism industry throughout the area, for the economic benefit of residents, communities and business enterprises and for the recreational enrichment of residents and tourist visitors.

The association shall be operated in a manner so as to achieve its objective through a planned program of tourist promotion activities, within and outside its area, and tourism development projects in concert with the programs of the Ministry of Tourism and Recreation.

The association shall co-ordinate the tourist promotion activities of individuals and organizations holding membership in the association and liaise with and co-operate with other organizations within and outside its area whose objects for tourism promotion and development are compatible with those of the association.

The association is representative of tourist interests and organizations from within its area.

In furthering its objects, the association will undertake advertising programs on behalf of the area, prepare publications to inform visitors of attractions, operate visitor information facilities, encourage any facilities, events and attractions for visitors, sponsor meetings, seminars, tourism and otherwise further the promotion and the development of tourism throughout its area.

Sunset Country Travel Association's motto is to develop, promote, advertise through co-ordination, co-operation and communication with clients and organizations for the betterment of tourism in Sunset Country and in Ontario.

Why are we here today? It is these objects and motto that bring our association to Thunder Bay today to make this presentation to the standing committee on administration of justice.

For your information, the boundaries of Sunset Country Travel Association are as follows: on the west, the Manitoba-Ontario border; on the south, the Canadian-US border; to the east, English River, including Atikokan and Pickle Lake, and to the north, all the way to Hudson Bay. This would represent some 60,000 square miles.

We have a relationship with Tourism Ontario. Sunset Country Travel Association is a member of Tourism Ontario, as are the other 11 travel associations. We understand that Tourism Ontario has made a presentation to you in Toronto and I would like to highlight that brief, which is supported not just by Sunset Country Travel Association but by more than 7,000 member businesses who are in the commercial lodging, food service, hospitality, recreation, travel and transportation services that are available in the province.

I am most pleased that the standing committee has moved outside of Toronto for its hearings so that we can be present. As I said earlier, co-operation, co-ordination and communication are the three Cs that Sunset Country Travel Association lives by in our motto. I would ask this committee to remember what the three Cs stand for when the final legislation is passed on Bill 115, and how it relates to the people of Ontario and the millions of visitors who come to Ontario.

Attached is our list of directors of Sunset Country Travel Association. There are 18. You will see that they come from a variety of towns throughout northwestern Ontario, and also at the very bottom is my name and address and information.

I would like to talk now about the social and economic importance of Ontario tourism and the hospitality industry. The social and economic importance of the Ontario tourism and hospitality industry is very substantial indeed. It is the province's largest private sector employer, accounting for 160,000 person-years of employment in 1989 on a direct basis. It is responsible for the creation of a further 251,000 person-years of indirect and induced employment in 1989. It is responsible for the creation of 32 full-time jobs for every $1 million in tourism expenditures. It is Ontario's largest employer of women, youth, indigenous people and visible minorities, including thousands of permanent and upwardly mobile positions for full-time professional service staff and college and university-educated persons.

It is the province's third-largest industry, generating 1990 direct expenditures of $15.5 billion, estimated total income of $22.5 billion and an estimated total sales of $36.9 billion. It is one of the nation's largest generators of personal income and corporate, property, business and sales tax to all levels of government, including $1.85 billion to the province of Ontario, $2.5 billion to the federal government and $300 million to the municipal governments in 1989 alone.

It is the province's fourth-largest export industry and a substantial contributor of foreign exchange earnings, which generated an estimated $3.06 billion in 1989 from American and other foreign visitors. It is the gateway to Canada for a large percentage of foreign visitors, including 66.8% of all US visitors and 55.1% of all person-trips by overseas visitors to Canada in 1990.

It is the economic mainstay in the areas of the province wherein economic alternatives are few, are in a steep decline or are non-existent. It is the province's largest commercial consumer of Ontario-produced agricultural products. It is a sustainable, environmentally clean and renewable resource in an era of major public concern about the conservation, preservation and cleanup of our environment. It is the largest industry in the service sector, which now accounts for 70% of all new jobs.

Sunset Country Travel Association supports the Tourism Ontario Inc position. Like Tourism Ontario, Sunset Country Travel Association believes that in a free and democratic society, the public should have the unrestricted right and the freedom to choose whether and where they wish to shop any day of the week, at any time of the year. Thus, retail shopping should be permitted throughout Ontario where and when retail business establishments perceive the need to provide it. Similarly, Ontarians should have the unrestricted right to work, earn incomes and profit from the production and sale of goods and the provision of services any day of the week.

Retail shopping is an integral part of the tourism experience and represents a significant portion of the value of the tourism expenditures in Ontario. Most retail shopping, dining out, touring, sightseeing and recreation take place on weekends. Clearly the majority of Ontarians and visitors to Ontario favour unrestricted retail shopping on Sundays and holidays as part of a family activity.

Sunset Country Travel Association agrees with Tourism Ontario that unless and until the government of Ontario is prepared to recognize these fundamental rights, freedoms and marketplace realities by abolishing the Retail Business Holidays Act, Ontario is destined to continue to lose billions of dollars' worth of annual tourism and retail sales to bordering American jurisdictions which are wide open for retail businesses on Sunday and holidays.

Further, whereas we see some merit in Bill 115, the Retail Business Establishments Statute Law Amendment Act, 1991, and commend the Ontario government for endeavouring to recognize the value and importance of tourism in this legislation, in the end analysis we fear that it will result in costly, time-consuming administration burdens and litigation as municipalities, retail business establishments and organizations endeavour to interpret, comply with and apply the proposed provincial tourism criteria.

Regrettably, inconsistencies, confusion and conflicts outlined in the proposed amendments to the Retail Business Holidays Act and pursuant regulations may not result in the desired positive interface and co-operation between the public and private sectors to realize and capitalize on the tremendous economic and social benefits of retail shopping as an integral part of tourism throughout Ontario.

We therefore respectfully request that members of the standing committee on administration of justice seriously consider the following changes which should be made to the proposed RBHA amendments and regulations in this regard:

1. Tourism area characteristics: The list of characteristics for a qualifying geographic area should be expanded to include the following tourism criteria: tourism in the area has historically been an important part of the local economy; provides goods or services necessary to tourist activities in the area.

2. Retail business restrictions: This whole section is redundant and blatantly discriminatory and should be removed from the proposed legislation. The number of persons serving the public and the floor space occupied by a qualifying retail business establishment should have no bearing on its ability to meet common tourist criteria.

3. Tourism season qualifier: These time periods will vary within a designated tourist area, as will the length of tourism season for various types of qualifying retail business establishments, for a wide variety of market-driven circumstances. Therefore, we recommend that this qualifier be removed from this section.

Tourism Ontario has stated its case to you and has taken the time to detail the concerns of its 7,000 members that belong to Tourism Ontario. The amendments are discussed in fine detail and have been presented to you relating to the Retail Business Holidays Act and the Employment Standards Act. I am going to highlight some of the points that Tourism Ontario made, starting off with a common pause day.

The concept of a common pause day in Ontario is outdated, unnatural and misplaced. In our contemporary society, tens of thousands of Ontarians must work at all hours of the day and night throughout the week in resource industries, in the processing, manufacturing, packaging and distribution of all manner of products and in the provision of a broad range of goods and services to our citizens and others. While some people rest, others conduct business and provide services.

The Ontario tourism and hospitality industry must provide value for dollar, quality products and experiences and good service on an uninterrupted basis to patrons and domestic and foreign markets seven days per week and 365 days per year, with some seasonal and geographic limitations. The market appeal of our industry is driven by the demand created for its products, experiences and services in an extremely competitive international market, and the supply of them by willing entrepreneurs, professional management and staff, and to a very substantial extent by various Ontario government ministries and agencies. We must provide these products, experiences and services to our patrons when they want them or risk losing them to other competing jurisdictions. Thus, the concept of a common pause day is totally alien to our industry and to many other segments and sectors in our economy.

Tourism is the direct supply of goods and services to facilitate business, pleasure and leisure activities away from the home environment. It covers a broad range of products and services, including transportation—airline, auto, motor coach, rail and marine—accommodation, food and beverage services, live and participatory entertainment—festivals, events, culture and the arts, athletic competitions, business and social gatherings—conventions, meetings, symposiums, amusement activities, such as leisure, recreational and educational, and to a significant extent retail shopping.

All manner of activities are encompassed by tourism, such as visiting friends and relatives, urban and country touring and sightseeing, soft wilderness and wilderness lodging, camping and leisure pursuits and historic and heritage sightseeing visitations.

The Ontario Ministry of Tourism and Recreation, with assistance and support from the private sector in tourism, has carefully segmented its substantial tourism marketing initiatives to create the greatest possible public awareness of and demand for the products, services and experiences offered by our industry in our target markets throughout the year.

Retail shopping is a major tourism activity in Ontario. In virtually all research which has been conducted of residents and foreign visitors travelling in Ontario, retail shopping constitutes one of the top three tourism-related activities. In 1988, for example, retail purchases represented $2.2 billion of all tourism expenditures in Ontario. Direct jobs in that year created by the retail sector amounted to the equivalent of 29,000 full-time jobs, or 14% of total direct employment in the tourism sector.

The total impact of tourism-related retail purchases in 1988 on tax revenues generated by the province was $366 million, $134 million for Ontario municipalities and $602 million for the federal government. The majority of all tourism-related activities, including retail shopping, takes place on weekends.

The provincial government actively promotes retail shopping and touring. The Ontario government, through the Ministry of Tourism and Recreation, invests a substantial portion of its multimillion-dollar annual tourism marketing budget in the active and aggressive promotion of retail shopping and touring in the province. Non-resident visitors are encouraged to shop and to stay in Ontario through a very productive program of provincial retail sales tax refunds for visitors to Ontario, which was established by the province in 1977.

The government must protect the tourism values. Both private and public sectors in Ontario tourism have made enormous investments in the planning, development and promotion of a broad and diverse range of tourism and hospitality products, services and experiences to service ever-changing contemporary consumer tastes and demands.

A good number of Ontario's tourism and hospitality enterprises are fully integrated retail business establishments which cater to the patrons' requirements by providing various retail services in addition to food service, lodging, entertainment, recreation and auto and/or boat fuelling, parking/storage and service facilities seven days a week. Said retail services include stores, shops and boutiques which supply all manner of sundries, groceries and outdoor provisions, clothing and travel services, vehicle and boat rentals, speciality gift shops, antiques, crafts and souvenirs. The provision of these retail services on Sundays and holidays represents upwards of 2% of the gross weekly sales for numerous tourism and hospitality enterprises, most of which are taxed by the province.

Key factors influencing tourism-related Sunday shopping: The extent to which tourism-related Sunday shopping is successful and attractive is dependent on three primary factors, those being (1) shipping convenience, (2) the variety of retail business establishments and (3) the variety of retail merchandise from which to choose. Service, quality, value and price are other important factors which influence buying decisions.

Our competition: Our largest market by far for non-resident visitors to Ontario is the United States—23.1 million person-visits in 1990—with the bordering states of Michigan, Ohio, New York, Pennsylvania and Minnesota accounting for the vast majority of said visitors. Conversely, all these states aggressively promote their tourism and hospitality products and services in Ontario. These states are non-blue-law states, with Sunday shopping acting as a magnet to lure Ontarians by the hundreds of thousands across the border every weekend to purchase all manner of retail merchandise.

We estimate that every Ontarian who visits the United States for 24 hours or less spends a minimum of $100 on retail purchases, fuel, meals and entertainment. According to Statistics Canada, between January and May 1991, 9.89 million Ontarians made same-day trips to the United States. Of these trips, 70% were on weekends and 40% took place on Sundays and holidays. Similar weekend percentages apply to another 2.2 million Ontarians who have travelled to the United States for one or more nights during the same period.

From a recent study of cross-border shopping in Kingston, Ontario, conducted by Ernst and Young, there is clear evidence that for every $1 which Canadians spend on cross-border shopping, they spend an equivalent amount on services such as food, fuel and entertainment.

The government must adhere to its own legislation. The Ontario government and the municipal governments across the province are large employers of workers, both directly and indirectly, who must work on Sundays and holidays in retail businesses and retail business establishments which compete directly with the privately owned retail businesses and retail business establishments. Everything from gift shops in hospitals to numerous large and small attractions such as the Metropolitan Toronto Zoo, Ontario Place, the Ontario Science Centre, Black Creek Pioneer Village, Upper Canada Village, the Niagara Parks Commission, Science North, Old Fort William, provincial parks, conservation areas and municipally owned stadiums offer various forms of retail business services from concession stands and camping supplies to speciality boutiques and retail stores.

The crown, ie, the province of Ontario, is not bound by any provision in Bill 115 with respect to the crown-owned retail business establishments on Sundays or statutory holidays and can open then whenever it wishes. Municipalities can easily exempt their own retail business establishments under Bill 115. Surely this is no place for blatant hypocrisy and unfair competition in a province such as ours that prides itself on equality and rights and freedoms for all.

Legislated protection for retail workers: Governments of every level are constantly creating costly subsidized programs to train and employ our youth, to retrain and locate suitable employment for displaced workers and to provide entry-level employment opportunities for numerous inexperienced and unskilled persons. Most, if not all, of these persons are available to work, want to work and have the right to work wherever and whenever there is an opportunity to do so. Many of these people, and others, are or would be happy to work in retail businesses or retail business establishments on Sundays and holidays for personal or business experience or economic reasons.

We would reiterate that the Ontario tourism and hospitality industry must, with some seasonal business exceptions, provide an uninterrupted service to our many patrons, seven days a week, 365 days a year. Our employees willingly accept this fact as a precondition of employment in an industry which is totally dependent on good service, goodwill and professional hospitality.

Employees in our hospitality industry are treated with dignity and respect by employers whose businesses are so dependent on staff attitude. The vast majority of workers in Ontario, including retail business establishment employees, are protected under the Employment Standards Act. It is very costly for employers to hire and to train staff in our industry, and most others, and it is in their best economic interest to operate well within existing labour laws.

Any employee can be asked to work at any time by employers beyond normal working hours, and many are anxious and willing to do so. However, no employee can be discriminated against for not accepting work outside the normal working hours. Thus, there is no need to establish any new law to protect worker interests beyond that which already exists, particularly one which is totally biased and discriminatory in favour of the one class of worker.

In conclusion, Sunday and holiday shopping has become an economic necessity for many thousands of Ontarians as they struggle to balance working realities with personal and family responsibilities. It is also a prime tourism activity for families and individuals who travel to and within our province and who combine shopping with entertainment, sightseeing, touring, dining, recreational activities, festivals and events.

Ontario and all the municipalities in the province benefit directly and considerably from the tourism expenditures. Both levels of government are constantly searching for new and incremental sources of revenue to fund all manner of social services, enhanced and enriched education for our citizens, better health care, improved roads and affordable housing. Government recognition and protection of tourism values and the operational realities of our industry at both the provincial and the municipal level will enhance significantly the ability of the government to provide said services for our citizens.

While we commend the efforts of the Minister of Tourism and Recreation and the ministry to recognize the value and importance of tourism in Bill 115, we are very concerned that the full potential of our industry, as it relates to Sunday shopping as a major tourism activity, will not be realized unless significant amendments are made to the Retail Business Establishments Statute Law Amendment Act.

We respectfully recommend, therefore, that the standing committee on administration of justice and the government of Ontario seriously consider all the facts and recommendations which are rendered in this submission.

The Acting Chair: We have time for one comment from each caucus.

Mr Sorbara: Throughout these hearings the government has said there will be a number of beneficiaries of this bill. During the hearings, though, we have heard that retail workers are ready and willing and anxious to take up Sunday hours. We have heard small business people say they need the freedom to decide whether they are going to open on Sunday. We have heard about surveys here in Thunder Bay from consumers saying they would prefer to have the freedom of choice as to whether they and their families will go out shopping on Sunday.

Can I ask you to take the devil's advocate position? Do you see any group or any constituency or any community or any organization that is going to benefit from the policy thrust and the direction of the government's bill? Who is going to benefit from this, if the government passes this bill?

Mr Duggan: I am a firm believer in wide-open Sunday shopping.

Mr Sorbara: Do you see anybody benefiting from this?

Mr Duggan: I think the citizens of Ontario, the visitors to Ontario and, generally, a lot of people benefit from the ability to open, the ability to shop and buy products on Sunday.

Mr Sorbara: If the government passes this bill and requires only those businesses that have a tourism base to open, do you see any real benefit to the province or to any group in the province?

Mr Duggan: From the tourism sector, I see those people benefiting directly.

Mr Sorbara: To the detriment of the rest of the province?

Mr Duggan: I do not believe so. I believe in fair competition. I should have a right, as a citizen of Ontario or as a person who is running a business in Ontario, to be open or closed.

Mr Sorbara: As you choose?

Mr Duggan: As I choose.

Mr Sorbara: And everyone else should have that right?

Mr Duggan: You in the government and the municipality certainly charge us taxes based on a seven-day week.

Mr Jackson: Thank you for an excellent brief. I wanted to suggest to you, building on Mr Sorbara's point, that the one group which has persistently commented to me that it is adversely affected by the government's bill is university and community college students. I understand that on this northern trip—we are in three northern communities which have between them five educational institutions—we do not have any deputations from students. However, they are very badly affected by the legislation that has the effect of reducing employment opportunities, especially at a time when their tuition fees have gone up more this year than in any previous year of the decade. It is costing students more to go to university; we know it costs northern students in particular more because of the requirement of accommodation. Yet we are hearing that students make exceptionally good employees, that they work and are willing workers, which is something the labour movement always tells us, that we want willing workers.

Can you comment about how this would adversely affect the student community, especially in these times when they are so desperate to find employment? What effect would this bill have in terms of opportunities lost for students in this province?

Mr Duggan: A major economic strain to not only the students but the parents. We, as a travel association, hire over 40 travel counsellors to work in our information centres. We are hiring senior citizens over 65 years old who want to be part of the community, who are working Sundays, and students who work with these senior citizens who are working Sundays and holidays because they want to be part of the tourist industry.

In the tourist industry, there are no days of the week. A visitor is there to be helped and serviced, and we have an obligation to take care of those needs. Otherwise, we are not in the tourist business and we are not open for business. If that is the message that comes down under this new legislation, then that is what we will be promoting with the Ministry of Tourism and Recreation: "Visit us Monday to Saturday. We are not open Sundays."

Mr Fletcher: Your presentation is good, and some of your recommendations for tourism criteria are very good. I could support a couple of them, I think. I am sure of it.

You were saying workers already have enough protection under the employment standards. Bill 114 was the Liberal version of the employment standards to protect the workers. Let me quote what was said by then Liberal MPP, Rick Ferraro, the former member for Guelph, in March 1988 when this bill was coming through: "You have to work when the business is there. Employees are jeopardizing their jobs by refusing to work. An employer will eventually find someone who is willing to work on Sundays."

He was saying there was no protection for workers under the previous act, Bill 114. That is what this government wants to do, make sure we do have protection for workers so they have the right to refuse if they do not want to work. That goes for students, that goes for single parents, whoever, but we also do not want to hurt the tourist industry. That is why we have the criteria. That is why, as I said, I think your recommendations are very good and very positive, and we are very happy you are here putting this forward. This is what this committee is here for, to listen to what you have to say, and we have heard it before. It is a recurring theme from the tourist industry. From what we are hearing, we have some serious reading to do as far as the tourist criteria are concerned, and perhaps we will be changing them.

Mr Duggan: I live in a community called Kenora, which unfortunately you people did not get a chance to visit today, although you will hear this afternoon a number of people from Kenora who will show you samples of the Sunday shopping issue. You will also hear from the labour union, which will show you other samples.

We have tried it. We like it. The present legislation is not broken. It does not need to be fixed. The large chain stores that are open—Safeway, Canadian Tire—have a very good agreement with their employees. They are not forced to work. Mr Bishop, who is on at 1 o'clock, will explain how he communicated and worked with his employees.

There are lots of people out there looking for work and opportunities to better themselves. If I choose not to work on Sundays, there are 10 other people behind me who would like the opportunity. The operative word is "opportunity."

The Acting Chair: Mr Duggan, on behalf of the committee, I thank you for taking time and coming here to give us this presentation.

Mr Jackson: I wanted to wait until we were in the morning segment to put in a request. It is my understanding that we have not received a deputation from the Ontario Federation of Students. Given that these concerns are being expressed—other people seem to be speaking on their behalf—perhaps we could ask the clerk to contact the OFS and invite its comment on this legislation as it affects students in this province. I think that would be helpful not only to the government but to the members of this committee as well.

The Acting Chair: Does the committee agree? We are accepting written briefs.

Mr Jackson: If there is an opening, we could advise them and they could be slotted, but a written brief is fine.

The Acting Chair: Is that agreeable with the committee? Agreed.

Just a couple of announcements: Checkout time is 1 o'clock, for members of the committee. You can either leave your bags here or there is a room just off the checkout counter. Also, there is a buffet lunch for members of the committee and the ministry staff in the Icelandic Room. This committee will recess until 1 o'clock this afternoon.

The committee recessed at 1204.

AFTERNOON SITTING

The committee resumed at 1305.

KENORA AND DISTRICT CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

The Acting Chair (Mr Cooper): Good afternoon. You have half an hour to give your presentation. You can either use the full half hour for your presentation or you can make a shorter submission and allow time for questions and answers from each of the caucuses. Please identify yourselves and then proceed.

Mr Pote: My name is Chris Pote. I am the first vice-president of the Kenora and District Chamber of Commerce. I have come down to enlighten you on the chamber of commerce's position in Kenora. I am here today with Mr Doug Bishop, the manager and owner of the local Canadian Tire store. He was instrumental in our proposal, the proposal of the town council that amended the bylaw to allow for Sunday shopping in larger retailers. We can, I believe, present a bit of history that might be helpful to you in your deliberations on these issues.

The history of the Sunday shopping issue in the Kenora and District Chamber of Commerce began, as far as I was concerned, in 1989. At that time our retail committee determined that the issue was coming to the forefront and that we should poll our membership to find out the position of the members on the Sunday shopping issue.

At that time the retail chairman of our chamber of commerce prepared quite a lengthy questionnaire, which mentions wide-open Sunday shopping, in those words, a couple of times anyway. It concluded with a question as to the support of the members of the chamber on Sunday shopping. At that time we received an indication that it was split about 50-50. At that point we determined we could not, as a chamber, take a position on that issue at that time.

In 1990, Mr Bishop came to the chamber of commerce with a proposal that he was to take before town council. It was a quite well done proposal. It included his proposal, as well as economic and tourist rationales, and his personal rationale. It was very well done and presented to the director of the chamber of commerce at that time. During that meeting, after he had left, we determined we would in principle support that position when he took it to town council, but we would first poll our members once again to get their feeling before we could give our final approval.

At that point we conducted another survey. This time it was a single question. Our president asked the members to read the proposal, and I will read that proposal as it is stated: "It is proposed that the bylaw controlling Sunday shopping in Kenora be amended to encourage tourism in the summer as follows: Stores wishing to cater to tourism be allowed to open for limited hours on Sunday during the tourist season; the Sundays during the tourism season would include statutory holidays, if they happen to fall on a Sunday; and the Sunday shopping hours be limited to six hours between 12 pm and 6 pm."

The question to the members was: "Do you support the proposal? Yes, I do support; no, I do not support the proposal." At that point we had an indication from our membership that they supported the proposal by approximately 70% in favour, 30% opposed.

It has been a divisive issue in the directorship, but we now have a year's history with this Sunday shopping being allowed in the major retailers. It occurred to us at the time we were debating this issue that there were only six locations in Kenora that could not be open on Sunday. That included the Canadian Tire store, the two major grocery retailers—Safeway and Extra Foods—it included the SAAN store, a clothing store, and also a Woolco, or Woolworths. I believe it might have included Kenora Home Hardware. I am not sure if they fell into the parameter of square footage or not.

It also occurred to many of us that there were so many things being done on Sunday that the issue of a common day of rest was not really an issue because there were so many people having to work in so many functions, in the mill, on the railroad, in the hospital, truckers. It seemed like everything was open except these major retailers. To push for a common day of rest and single out these retailers seemed to us at the time—to a majority of the directors and I think a majority of the membership at large—to be discriminatory and not productive.

That, I believe, is the chamber of commerce's position to date. I believe you will still find that there would be that sort of split in the membership, yet we have not heard anything from our smaller retailers. Mr Waters spoke to us during lunch about something he noticed about retailers in his Muskoka region, the smaller ones being concerned about opening on Sundays, or that they would have to open. We have many small retailers on Main Street in Kenora in the business improvement area who are not open and we have had no complaints from them over this past year. Their president was made aware of this particular session here and chose not to attend to make a presentation in opposition. She herself has a personal opposition to it, a religious opposition.

I believe that our history in Kenora, from our perspective, has shown a great deal of success and has been satisfactory to all parties concerned.

I would like to turn the time over to Mr Bishop now to describe his experiences in the past year, and I would like to leave time for questions at the end. I would like to present some of my own personal views, if there is time, but I will make that decision when I find out how long Mr Bishop will take.

Mr Bishop: As Chris mentioned, I approached council in April a year ago and asked to have our bylaw in Kenora changed so that I could open my store on Sundays because I believed it would be very good for my store, for Kenora, and for the customers who visit Kenora. Almost a million people come through Kenora every summer as tourists. It is an astonishing quantity, compared to our small population of just 15,000 people.

In the handout I have presented here today, on the first page it indicates that Sunday has turned out now to be our single most productive day of the week. I have not made it that way, and the government has not made it that way. The customers have made it that way. The date shown on this page indicates that on Sunday the average sales rate in my store is $2,598 an hour, and that is higher than Saturday and higher than Friday—higher than all other days of the week. It has really been quite astonishing. We were very pleased that we had such good results last summer, 1990, during the summer months. My sales in total increased 14%. This was a transfer of sales out of the US and out of Manitoba, I believe, and it was good for Ontario and good for Kenora.

I have to point out that this kind of achievement and expression of support by our customers is not consistent with the common pause day approach. My customers enjoy my store being open. Invariably they line up in front of the store every Sunday. I do not think there has been a Sunday yet this summer when there has not been five, 10 or 20 people, and on one occasion more than 50 people, lined up outside the front of my store before 12 o'clock waiting to get in. It is just amazing. The parking lot is always full all day Sunday.

I am sure our sales revenue on Sunday is new revenue in our market. I am not sure this would be the case in a metropolitan area like London or Kitchener or Toronto, but certainly in Kenora it is. We track that through credit card transactions, battery invoices where we have names and addresses, tire invoices, those kinds of things. The greatest bulk of all this activity is from out of Kenora.

There is no question that Kenora is a tourist town. Almost a million people travel through Kenora every year. They spend well over $230 million every year. That amounts to more than half of all the spending in Kenora. Half of all our jobs are dependent on those tourist dollars. Even worse, our winter is very short—I am sorry; our summer is very short. I guess I should have just left it the first way. We have 189 days of frost in Kenora every year. Beyond that, we have 100 days of tough sledding and maybe a couple of days of summer, and last year they were both hot, and we have to make our hay when the sun shines. Literally 58% of all my business occurs in 27% of the time; in 100 days from May 20 to Labour Day we have to do 58% of all our business. It is tough. We have a pause day. It lasts from Labour Day till May 20, and it is not of our selection, our direction. It is just the way our market is.

It is fearsome to have you people here and anticipate that irrespective of what I might say or plead for, you are going to go home and put this thing into effect anyway, and it is fearsome when I read the proposed regulations that say that if a store is over 7,500 square feet, it cannot be open. I am over 7,500 square feet. I have the biggest ma-and-pa store in town; there is no question. I am there every Sunday, darn near. My wife is. We both work at it. It is a good business.

Would all Canadian Tire dealers say the same to you across Toronto? Of course not. They are the greatest bunch of individuals you have ever seen. Hardly any of us agree on anything. That is true, and I am sure the two dealers who are here in Thunder Bay do not want Sunday shopping. Maybe they do. I have no idea. I have not asked. But in my marketplace, for my store, I believe it is correct. Why? If you sit in my store on Sunday morning, the phones ring incessantly from dawn until 12 o'clock, and I got into the habit of just picking up the phone and saying, "The store'll be open at 12 o'clock." People say, "Thank you," and hang up. We have put an answering machine in now; it is easier.

Who comes in on Sunday? Mill workers, nurses, doctors, ambulance drivers, merchants, lawyers—everybody. MPPs come. Town councillors come. The mayor comes. Government employees come—moms, dads, kids, families. Sunday is actually family shopping and it supports what Mr Duggan was saying this morning: shopping is one of the three most popular activities for a family on Sundays. It is a reality in Kenora. Elsewhere, I do not know. That to me is not germane. I am worried mostly about my staff, my store and the viability of my business.

We have tourists of all kinds who come also: camp owners who need something for camp to fix it—a package of screws, a new water heater, a screen-door hinge, whatever. We have campers who have been rained out, especially this summer—they have been rained out all summer—and need something dry for camp. We have travellers on the way through. They need a wheel or a tire for a trailer, or they have to replace a broken towrope for waterskiers or whatever. In the end, these customers have increased our sales 7% on an annual basis. It was 14% last summer, because we were only open on Sundays for half a year.

I want to be particularly careful to address the staff issue on Sunday work. Long before I went to town council, I sat with my staff several times and we discussed whether we should be open on Sunday, because I did not want to go to council, get approval to be open on Sunday and then not have anybody to work. I sat with the staff. We had proper paperwork drawn up and then we talked about the staff being able to sign, without prejudice, whether they wished to work or did not, and we were very careful to explain to them what "without prejudice" meant. It meant they could sign "I don't want to work Sunday" if they chose, without any prejudice from me whatever, without any risk or fear of having a backlash, getting canned, or without any force.

The bottom line, as I described to chamber when I approached it and to council, was that more than 90% of my staff signed on. They believed, like I did, that it would be good for our business, and that therefore, in as much as we have a substantial profit-sharing program in my store, as most Canadian Tire dealers do, it would be good for them on their bottom line. It certainly has proved to be that. Profit sharing went up 22% last year, a substantial amount of money.

My store on Sundays currently is directed, if you want to call it that, by one core staff, sometimes two. Beyond that, the store is operated totally by 11 or 12 students. They are good students. Do we have trouble getting kids or adults to work? No. There are lots of people who want to, and lots of people who do not want to. That is fine; they do not have to work. But there are lots of people who do want to work. I even have a minister's wife who works in my store on Sundays.

I do not accept rhetoric, especially old rhetoric, that this is going to degrade family values. I have not seen that in the families that work for me. I have not seen that in Kenora at all. I think the impetus for Kenora's economy of a vibrant Sunday provision for our tourists is that it has been a boon to our economy, rather than deleterious to it.

With increasing sensitivity about the environment around us, especially in places like Kenora, Thunder Bay and Sault Ste Marie, a lot of people are having trouble. Steel mills are having trouble. Paper mills are having trouble. The newsprint industry is no longer growing and vibrant and is no longer permanently ensconced in the fabric of northern Ontario. The writing is on the wall. Many mill towns in the north will not have a paper mill in the year 2000, and I pray to God that does not include Kenora, but it may. Boise Cascade is not vibrant. They are operating very tight-reined in our mill in Kenora. They certainly are not in a position where they can be optimistic and overly generous. Their budgets are extremely tight and they are operating their mill very close to the line. It is all too commonplace that industries shut down and leave little towns like ours to die. We do not want that to happen in Kenora.

One of the best options we have in developing other industry and commerce is tourism. Many people are dedicated to that. We have an excellent Wintermission in the wintertime. It is all privately generated. On the July 1 weekend we have a fine Harbourfront Festival. It is a major tourist attraction. Thousands of people come there. The LOWISA is an annual water festival that starts on the long weekend of August; it just started this past weekend. LOWISA is the Lake of the Woods Sailing Association. It is a one-week sailing cruise all around our gorgeous lake. It attracts tons of people. They depend on us to be there when they start and when they finish, and they call us by radio on the lake all through the day, day and night. Kenora Bass International is a catch-and-release bass tournament that has been built over the last three years. It is now a $1-million event in Kenora. It operates on Saturday and Sunday. We have to be there Sundays.

These events are often spearheaded by business people concerned for tourism in Kenora, and they are aimed at offsetting Sunday shopping in the United States, GST-free shopping in the United States, Sunday shopping in Winnipeg and a new highway bypass that has impacted heavily on Kenora this summer.

Tourists attracted by events of this nature want Sunday shopping. It is part of the lifestyle. I am convinced of that. Indeed, shopping is now listed as one of the top three forms of individual and family entertainment.

In contrast, a common pause day, with everything closed except for the corner store, would be a sharp regression to what are bygone days. In Kenora, many part-time jobs would be eliminated, 12 in my store, and the economy would shrink in direct proportion. In the case of my Canadian Tire store in Kenora, the annual shrinkage would be in the order of 7%. The actual shrinkage in the summer would be 14%, because that is the share of annual sales occurring in my store on Sundays when we are open in the summertime. The equivalent sales revenue and the wages that result from those would migrate back to Winnipeg or International Falls or wherever they have come from.

I ask this committee to help us make sure you do not take away our Sundays. In a small town like ours it is critically important.

A common pause day has long been a plank in the NDP's platform. For Kenora in the 1990s, a mill town and a tourist town, restricted Sunday shopping has been a boon to the economy and the part-time workforce. The government's provision to allow some stores to stay open in some tourist areas, providing they are smaller than 7,500 square feet, is discriminatory. My store is bigger than 7,500 square feet. Over half of all my sales are to tourists. How in the world can you reconcile a provision like that in the regulations? I cannot.

I hope that down the road, as this all settles out, you gentlemen in your wisdom will make provision for areas like Kenora and that the people within the community who know what is going on best can make the decisions that are germane, that are good for the community. I believe these decisions should remain in the community.

Finally, before I make my recommendations, I would like to focus on one other issue. Often it is said: "Keep those big guys closed. They're the bad guys. Let the little guys open." It is not a big store-little store issue, gentlemen. It is a good merchant-poor merchant issue largely. On Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock this past weekend I could not get a package of film copied into prints. The half-hour photo machine is not working on Saturdays. I cannot buy flowers on Friday night in Kenora unless I go to the Safeway store.

Lots of our small merchants do not wish to be open Friday nights, Saturdays and Sundays. So be it. I do not have any qualms with that, and I know full well, having been active in chambers and business improvement areas over the course of 20 years, that there will never be unanimity in that regard. There does not have to be. Let the customers decide. In my store they have decided up front with their dollars and they have made Sunday the number one day in my store.

For recommendations, I would like to recommend that to regulate Sunday shopping should be an issue that remains within the community. I would like the government to provide the necessary umbrella protection to look after the workers to make sure they cannot be exploited. My staff all get time and a half on Sundays. The managers get a good bonus on Sundays. They get profit sharing. They do not get exploited. They do not have to work.

I suggest the government's focus should be on looking after the worker, not on regulating the initiative of the entrepreneurs in this province. I beg the government to leave the existing law alone. Let the communities decide. Focus instead on looking after the workers, not trying to regulate their lives.

Mr Daigeler: Thank you very much for your very interesting and quite forceful presentation. I guess I am right in concluding that you support the Liberal legislation and that we should stay with the wisdom of that legislation and leave it alone. Would that be correct?

Mr Pote: I would say the chamber of commerce would support that position.

Mr Daigeler: And Mr Bishop as well?

Mr Bishop: The law has worked well in Kenora in my view.

Mr Daigeler: The law is that it is a municipal option. If a municipality decides that is what its people want, it has that right. I think that is what you are arguing.

Mr Bishop: Yes, sir.

Mr Daigeler: Did you make a presentation at the time that legislation was put in place? It was very controversial then.

Mr Bishop: I am not sure if the legislation had been challenged at that point in April of last year. I made my initial presentation to town council on April 5, 1990. I am not sure if the legislation had been challenged or not.

Mr Daigeler: You were not involved at the time the Liberal government changed the Conservative legislation, so it is a relatively new involvement for you. Could I ask what it is that made you become involved now?

Mr Bishop: In April a year ago we had a new bypass being built on our highway around Kenora, and I was very concerned about the negative impact of that on our tourist trade. Coincidentally the economic development corporation of Kenora had just then published the results it had been collecting from two prior impact studies it had done on the highways on each side of Kenora. It was only published in late April of last year and it was only then quantified, using their data and new ministry models, that the tourism spending in Kenora was more than half of all the dollars. Nobody knew that.

When I discovered that, I took off like a rocket. I said, "This is incredible, scary, and we have to react to this." Nobody knew prior to early last year that more than half of all the tourist dollars came from tourists coming to and through Kenora. It had never been quantified before, I do not believe. That was the impression I got.

Mr Carr: Thank you, gentlemen, for your presentation. Mr Bishop, you said it is your belief—you used the 7% for half a year—that the revenue you are talking about is new revenue coming in that you would not otherwise have. What would you say to a government, and in fact to a Premier who I understand is going to be in this town today, which says it knows better than you about revenue and that it will only be extended over other days, that you are wrong, that it is not new revenue?

Mr Bishop: My store is open all the time and they are quite welcome to come and look at my information and data. It bears scrutiny.

Mr Carr: So that definitely is new revenue. You may be aware of the legislation saying that for the tourist exemption they have to have a letter from the chamber in support before they go to the municipal council, saying the chamber is in favour of it. What is the chamber's position on that? We heard from the Ontario Chamber of Commerce that it was not consulted, that in fact it does not want to do it. In some communities, they may be open to litigation regardless of what side. If somebody wants to open they will say, "You went to council against our wishes," and so on. What is the chamber's feeling about being involved and being thrust right in the middle of this when it goes to municipalities?

Mr Pote: I do not believe the chamber of commerce would have any problem with that, especially in Kenora. As I mentioned, there are only six locations we had to deal with anyway.

I just want to mention one thing about the SAAN store and how they have dealt with it. I talked to him before I came down. He came with Mr Bishop to make the presentation to the chamber originally. What he did was hire people specifically to work on Sunday. I am sorry, I am ex-topical here, but I thought it was important. He said that if this legislation changes, these five or six people who were hired specifically to work on Sunday, at new jobs, are worried now that they will lose their jobs. They are quite concerned about this legislation coming down, and that is how he dealt with getting people to work on Sunday. He hired specifically for that day.

Mr Carr: With yours, I think you said 70% of the members want it now, according to surveys.

Mr Pote: Based on what we have from Mr Bishop's proposal of the 12 till 6, and town council voted to extend the whole year. Mr Bishop has elected to close his store on Sundays in the off-season, as I understand, but it is not required.

Mr Morrow: Mr Bishop, I would like to personally commend you for the way you have treated your staff on the Sunday shopping issue. I think that is fantastic. You should really be congratulated. Another comment I would like to make to you is, yes, we are listening, that's what this whole process is about, to help us make guidelines.

Last Wednesday the Ontario Chamber of Commerce presented a brief to us in Toronto. In that brief there is a line stating that the majority of surveyed retailers would prefer not to be open on Sundays. Are you telling me now that you are basically going against what your parent organization is saying?

Mr Pote: They are not our parent organization; we operate independently. We are a member of the Northwestern Ontario Associated Chambers of Commerce. But there are a lot of retailers, and I think that is probably the case in Kenora, who do not open on Sunday, and that is not the issue. The issue is the right to be open on Sunday.

Mr Morrow: You should also know that Collingwood just passed a bylaw allowing them to open on Sundays. We were there last Thursday, and I believe 35% to 40% of the retailers are open, which means 60% to 65% of the retailers are closed, so basically that says to me that 60% to 65% of the retailers would prefer not to open on Sunday.

Mr Pote: I would not doubt that is the case, but it is still an issue of the right to be open.

Mr Mills: Just a point of clarification under the tourism criteria: Mr Bishop, even though your store exceeds 7,500 square feet and exceeds eight employees, if you meet those criteria, notwithstanding everything else, you would still be allowed to open. I just want to clear up any misunderstanding you had that you thought you would not.

Mr Bishop: I did not hear what you said on the employee aspect, sir.

Mr Mills: If you meet the tourism criteria and your store exceeds 7,500 square feet and exceeds the eight employees, providing you meet those criteria and you made application to the municipality to be considered to open, then you will be open. I just wanted to remove that doubt, that you thought you would never be able to open. The provisions of the tourism criteria will allow you to open providing they are met.

Mr Sorbara: Just a point of clarification arising out of a question from Mr Morrow: I would not want the presenters here to be misled about what we heard in Collingwood. A number of businesses decided that they would not open on Sunday, but from what I heard in Collingwood, the vast majority of retailers said to us that notwithstanding that they themselves chose not to open on Sunday, they wanted the unrestricted freedom to be able to do that without interference from the provincial government. I do not think Mr Morrow should be telling our presenters that the majority of retailers in the Collingwood area supported this legislation. From what I heard, the majority of retailers and the majority of people were saying, "We will make the decision."

The Acting Chair: All he said was that they chose to stay closed. He was drawing his own assumptions from that.

Mr Pote, Mr Bishop, on behalf of the committee, thank you very much for coming here today.

BOB MEYERS

The Acting Chair: Our next presenter is Mr Bob Meyers from the town of Kenora. Thank you for appearing today. You will be given a half-hour for your presentation. You can either use the full half-hour for your presentation or else submit a shorter brief and then allow time for questions and comments from all three caucuses. Could you please identify yourself for the record and then proceed.

Mr Meyers: My name is Bob Meyers and I am the chief administrative officer for the town of Kenora. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to you today and the fact that the committee has journeyed to northwestern Ontario, although not quite as far to the west as we would have liked, to hear the view of northerners.

I think it was Bob Dylan who wrote the words in a song, "The Times They Are A-Changin'," and as I look at the members of the committee I would say that all of you have been around to see the following changes which have occurred in Ontario in the last 30 to 40 years: Sports are now legal to be played in Ontario on Sunday, both professional and amateur. It is now possible to go to a movie theatre or to see a concert or a live production on a Sunday in Ontario. It is now possible to have liquor served with a meal in Ontario on Sunday. It is even possible to play bingo on a Sunday in Ontario. There was a time in Ontario when all of those activities were illegal, and it was not that long ago.

Business people like to talk about the global economy, about the external pressures that face the local business place in even the smallest of communities throughout Canada, and in particular, speaking to you today, in Ontario. In looking at neighbouring jurisdictions that border the province, I would say to you that Ontario can no longer isolate itself, nor its government think that by legislation it can isolate the Ontario marketplace from what is happening elsewhere in North America, and in particular from other jurisdictions that border on Ontario.

In the legislation that was in existence in 1985, section 2 said, "Every person carrying on a retail business establishment...shall ensure that no member of the public is admitted thereto and no goods or services are sold or offered for sale therein by retail on a holiday." In subsection 2(2) it said, "No person employed by or acting on behalf of a person carrying on a retail business in a retail business establishment shall, (a) sell or offer for sale any goods or services therein by retail; or (b) admit members of the public thereto, on a holiday."

I would ask you if you ever had occasion to call a local businessman after hours, on a Sunday or a holiday because of the need for materials to effect an emergency repair. In doing so, you were asking that retailer to break the law.

The act then went on in section 3 to provide a number of exemptions. When we looked at the town of Kenora and applied the exemptions, the majority of business establishments within the town had been exempted by legislation from having to remain closed on a Sunday or a holiday.

In 1987 the province made amendments to the Retail Business Holidays Act by way of chapter 36 of the statutes. The exemptions under section 3 were amended, and in looking at what was done, the major change was that the total selling area was increased from 2,400 square feet to 7,500 square feet when it dealt with foodstuffs, newspapers, antiques or handicrafts and from 5,000 to 7,500 square feet when dealing with pharmacies. These changes increased the number of businesses in the town of Kenora that could remain open on Sundays and holidays by virtue of the merchandise sold and square footage of their establishments.

However, it was not until 1989 that the substantial change was made in chapter 3 of the statutes, which now set out that a municipality by bylaw could permit retail business establishments to be open on holidays or require that they be closed on holidays. It set out some criteria which the municipality had to follow in establishing the bylaw.

Kenora council was approached in April 1990 by a progressive, and, I would add, aggressive, businessman to implement a bylaw that would allow shopping on Sundays and holidays between the Victoria Day weekend and the Labour Day weekend, essentially for the summer season. In deliberating in committee as to what council was going to do in response to this request, it was decided that in line with our thinking that we have the potential to become a four-season tourist community, we should draft a bylaw that would permit opening on Sundays and holidays from 12 noon to 6 pm with the exception of three religious holidays: Christmas Day, Good Friday and Easter Sunday.

The criteria set out in the act were followed. The intent of the bylaw was advertised and the public meeting was advertised. We chose a venue that would be large enough to hold a substantial crowd of people and we also established some ground rules by which the meeting would be conducted. The councillors who were in town, plus the clerk, the deputy and myself, were on stage. The purpose of the meeting was announced by Acting Mayor Nancy Salmijarvi and the ground rules were announced. We would be willing to listen to speakers from both sides, from the pro and the con, in an alternate fashion and we were there to hear all who wished to speak.

It was an orderly meeting, unlike others that had been held in the past. I would attribute that to the fact that we had announced a set of guidelines for the conduct of the meeting and also stated that council was not there to debate the matter. Council was there to listen to the representations of the people who wished to speak to the issue.

In all honesty, I was not surprised that those speaking against the bylaw would not consider openings on any Sunday or holiday. To them, it had to be a complete ban. There was no willingness to concede to a limited opening or to a limited period of time for opening. Those speaking in favour were supportive of the position council had taken, even though it had extended beyond their original request.

The matter came back to council at a public meeting about two weeks later. There were delegations before council that night who knew the matter was on the agenda and who wished to address council on one more occasion and did so. The town of Kenora adopted a bylaw to permit openings on Sundays and all holidays with the exception of Christmas Day, Good Friday and Easter Sunday from the hours of 12 noon until 6 pm. The result is that a few more businesses are open now during the summer months. A few of the smaller businesses which used to be closed are opening because some of the larger businesses are open. The larger businesses are acting as a draw from which the smaller businesses are benefiting. There is no compulsion to be open. The bylaw does not say "shall." It says "may."

The businesses that have been opening on Sundays and holidays report that Sunday shopping has increased the amount of business they do on a weekly basis. What is now being sold on a Sunday is not detracting from sales on any other day of the week. They all reported that they have hired additional staff to be able to maintain Sunday openings.

I would note that last year when there was a question as to the legality of the bylaw by virtue of the court decision concerning the amendments to the Retail Business Holidays Act, the larger businesses and some of the smaller businesses approached me with respect to whether they had to conform to the municipal bylaw or if they could open as they pleased on the Sundays and holidays and disregard the limited opening we had set. When I advised them that council would not be pleased if they went beyond the conditions set out in the bylaw, they agreed to abide by the bylaw as it was passed. While stores of the chains were opened for longer periods in other communities close to us, in Kenora they abided by the conditions from 12 noon until 6 pm.

They did in one case ask if they could open for longer periods on the Sunday between Christmas and New Year's and I said no, the bylaw was specific from 12 noon to 6 pm and we would appreciate their adhering to the bylaw. When the lower court decision was overturned and we were back to a valid bylaw again, we continued on as we had in the past and continue to do so at this point in time.

The legislation and regulation that have been proposed will have little effect on the town of Kenora. I believe we can meet all six conditions set out in the regulations for characteristics. Therefore, by virtue of our tourism industry, we would be permitted to have Sunday and holiday shopping.

I believe, unfortunately, that the regulation in subsection 2(1) is attempting to curtail legitimate business activity by placing restrictive criteria in place, hoping that those areas that are now open because of the size of the business and the merchandise that is offered will not be able to be open. The regulation is imposing upon municipal councils an unwarranted responsibility to have to determine whether a merchant's activities meet one of the four criteria. It would be quite simple to circumvent the regulation by saying that all businesses qualify by virtue of paragraph 2(2)(c)4 "Provides goods or services necessary to tourist activities in the area served by the establishment."

As to whether the next council will be as forward-thinking as the present council in passing another implementing bylaw remains to be seen, because the proposed legislation does require that one year from the date of the passing of the legislation the current bylaw become null and void. I believe the experience we have had in Kenora, to this point in time, has been good. I believe all the gloom and doom predicted for the destruction of family life, the deterioration of church attendance and the imposition upon workers to give up what free time they have in the course of the week has failed to materialize. I do not expect that will change.

If the Legislature is serious about doing something about Sunday shopping, then I would suggest you do nothing. Leave the legislation as it is. I suggest to you that if you wish to do something of a positive note, you would do it in favour of protecting the rights of employees. That should be sufficient to determine whether a business is going to be able to remain open or be closed. If they are not able to get sufficient employees, then it will not be possible for them to remain open and provide service to the community that the buying public expects. The legislation proposes to do this with section 39e.

I believe you have to look at where Kenora is situated. Our competition comes from two sources. Kenora is two and a half hours out of the city of Winnipeg, which has limited Sunday shopping. We are two and a half hours away from the United States border and International Falls, five hours away from Duluth, seven hours away from Minneapolis and five hours away from Grand Forks. I can tell you that people are out shopping, and they are doing more of it now that Minnesota and North Dakota are open on Sundays.

I realize the government is under some pressure by virtue of an election promise. I would say to the members of the government party that you have a far greater breadth of knowledge at your disposal today upon which to make decisions than you did during the campaign. I would ask you to use that knowledge impartially and in the best interests of the residents of Ontario, in particular for the business community which is supporting this government, and municipal governments, through tax revenues.

I have also enclosed a copy of the bylaw that was implemented by the town of Kenora on May 28, 1990.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Meyers, first of all, your brief is succinct and to the point and we appreciate it. I should say that specifically on page 8 the middle paragraph describes the realities of what happened in Kenora subsequent to the passing of your bylaw. That has been repeated in community after community around the province, either by virtue of the passing of a bylaw or by virtue of the court decision which allowed a period of glasnost, if you like, for nine months, where store owners could decide on their own what they were going to do. It is also nice to see that you are using Bob Dylan as the opening authority in your document.

Interjection: He was born in Kenora.

Mr Sorbara: No, he was not born in Kenora.

Interjection: Minnesota.

Mr Sorbara: You are the chief administrative officer for the town of Kenora?

Mr Meyers: Correct.

Mr Sorbara: You have nothing riding on this in terms of a political career, do you?

Mr Meyers: Not at all.

Mr Sorbara: You are not a storekeeper?

Mr Meyers: No.

Mr Sorbara: Really you are an impartial commentator on what has happened in Kenora.

Mr Meyers: That is what I have attempted to be.

Mr Sorbara: If the government were simply to say, "We're going to put this legislation on hold, in fact we're going to repeal the bad old Liberal legislation and have no legislation at all," is it not the case that the town of Kenora, under the Municipal Act, would still have the authority to regulate hours of shopping on Sunday as it does on every other day?

Mr Meyers: We do not have the right to regulate hours of shopping on any other day. That has been attempted and most of that legislation has been overturned or court decisions have gone against municipalities on rulings of that nature by attempting to restrict hours of business.

Mr Sorbara: But is it not the case that you have some authority to deal with hours of business in your community? My understanding was that municipalities still have that authority.

Mr Meyers: They have attempted to, but it is permissive legislation. The working word is "may" rather than "shall." It would be nice if the business community would come to common hours and that they were all open at the same time.

Mr Sorbara: But the marketplace sometimes determines that.

Mr Meyers: That is correct.

1350

Mr Sorbara: If the bill we are considering passes, it will be the case that stores larger than 7,500 square feet are going to have significant hurdles in attempting to open in the town of Kenora. Is that not the case?

Mr Meyers: That is the case and I think I referred to the particular section that gives me problems, when I look at it. That is in the regulations. I think the government is trying to duck by doing this particular section by way of regulation rather than by way of legislation.

Mr Sorbara: Part of the draft regulation provides that a store that is larger than 7,500 square feet would have to get a letter of support from the local chamber of commerce or the local convention and tourism bureau, if there is one, prior to making an application to the municipalities in order to stay open. In your own experience, what kind of dilemma would that create for the local chamber of commerce or the local visitors' bureau?

Mr Meyers: In the case of the chamber, it supports the position council had taken a year ago, and I believe it would support it again by virtue of the evidence that is now in. Our publicity board supported it last year and I believe it would do so again.

Mr Sorbara: But if an application came from, say, the local Safeway or Loblaws or some other supermarket and the chamber of commerce for one reason or another denied support to that particular establishment, what do you expect would happen?

Mr Meyers: You are asking me to speak on a decision the council might make. That would be like asking one of your assistants to say how you would vote on a particular bill.

In the case of Kenora's experience last year, I think it was not unanimously passed by council. Council did deliberate on it and they did stand and state their position when the vote came. I think the members would have to look at the application as it came and make the decision on their own.

Mr Jackson: Maybe I could build on that. It is an area of concern I have. As I understand it, the difference between an improvement area and a chamber of commerce in the city of Kenora is that it is mandatory to be members of the improvement area, but it is not mandatory to be members of the chamber of commerce.

Mr Meyers: A business improvement area is one that has been set up by a group of businessmen who agree they are going to a tax levy to do promotion and improvements within their area. All businesses within it must belong, whereas a chamber is voluntary.

Mr Jackson: You agree with what I just said.

Mr Meyers: Correct, but I think you needed that explanation.

Mr Jackson: We are familiar with the legislation. I just wanted to establish that there is a distinction between a chamber of commerce and an improvement area in terms of the mandatory representation. In the associations in which I have been associated in my career prior to politics, governments from time to time have been very careful not to put organizations in a power position where there is a cost associated with membership.

I would certainly like to hear from legal counsel how a group can act in the best interests of the given jurisdiction when in fact it has membership that is voluntary. We are not even sure what their jurisdiction is as this legislation sets it out.

To be consistent, we should be saying that all businesses should be members of the chamber of commerce. Therefore, they are in no conflict of interest, because all members are members. This is where I am having trouble with this draconian approach which is fraught with abuse. We would not allow it in the labour sector. Why we are allowing it in the business sector is beyond me.

Mr Meyers: On that point, there are 48 municipalities in northwestern Ontario and I believe there are only 19 or 20 chambers of commerce. What a municipality would do in that particular case I am not sure.

Mr Jackson: We both have that question and perhaps legal counsel can straighten us out.

Mr Carr: Thank you very much for a fine presentation. As you may know, the government has said there are not any increased sales or additional people hired; it is just spread out. But I think I heard you say your experience has been (1) that there are increased sales that would not otherwise have been there, and (2) that there are additional people hired who otherwise would not have been hired. Is that what you were saying?

Mr Meyers: Yes. When Mr Bishop made the presentation today, he made that quite clear to you. The manager of the SAAN store called me just after Christmas to ask what the town was going to be doing or what I thought the province might be doing by way of legislation in light of the court decision that we were waiting for, because he had recommended to his management that they needed two additional full-time staff to be able to maintain Sunday shopping.

I said we were going to abide by the legislation, by whatever came down, but in the meantime that we were sticking to the Sundays and holidays from 12 to 6. On that basis, he hired two additional full-time people.

Mr Carr: One of the concerns that has been raised by the government—and it is kind of ironic that it is worried about the taxpayers after introducing a budget that has saddled us with the biggest deficit in the history of this province, but none the less, it is concerned about the taxpayers—is that the municipalities will have extra costs as a result of snow removal and bus services in the larger communities. How will you see that affecting you? Are there any additional costs you will be looking at? If so, would it be offset by the increased number of sales businesses would have? How do you see that working from a purely economic standpoint?

Mr Meyers: I do not see any additional cost related to snow removal. We have to remove the snow seven days a week to maintain bus routes, fire protection and ambulance routes to the hospital, just movement of traffic, so that is not going to change. Our buses are run on a reduced schedule on Sunday. We have had no request to increase that scheduling.

Mr Fletcher: Thank you for the excellent presentation. Just a question as far as the employees are concerned: You do not have a problem as far as Bill 115 is protecting the employees and their right to refuse work on Sunday.

Mr Meyers: Not at all. I think that is a right that has to be protected. I do not think any employer who is going to consider the impact on his business is going to want a disgruntled employee meeting customers. He is going to want somebody who is willing to be there.

Mr Fletcher: Right now, in Kenora, is the police force on a reduced work schedule on Sunday?

Mr Meyers: No, they are not.

Mr Mills: I have listened with a great deal of interest and would like to offer the suggestion that as per Sunday shopping, things in Kenora are not quite as rosy as portrayed here. I have some press in front of me. I am quite concerned about a couple of things.

At that meeting you held, the president of the labour council said, "It seems time and time again councils do not listen to the majority, so maybe we have to replace the councillors after the vote." What perturbs me is what you say in your presentation, as to whether the next council will be as forward-thinking. Is that meant to be that if there is labour representation on the council after November, it would not be as forward-thinking? Maybe you can help me. What do you mean here?

Mr Sorbara: No doubt about that whatever.

Mr Mills: I just want it on the record.

Mr Meyers: We have had labour representation on council before. In fact, one of the previous members who was a labour representative on council is now our federal member. He is actively promoting a young man to run in this coming November election.

On forward-thinking, I think we have to look beyond the Kenora of today. We have to look at the impact on Kenora of tomorrow. We want to establish ourselves as a four-season tourism destination point. Sunday shopping would be important to that goal.

Boise Cascade employs about 800 people in the mill. The paper industry is not going through the rosiest of times right now. We have to look at the future. The second thing we have to concern ourselves with is what we are going to be doing to sustain the town of Kenora if we were to lose that large segment of our labour force. Sunday shopping will not do it all, but we have to protect the large commercial-professional establishment we do have and benefit from in the town of Kenora.

Mr Mills: I see that the Woolco store does not believe in Sunday shopping. They have a store in Kenora. They say it is up to the head office to see if they will open.

Safeway is in a bit of a bind because it does not want to pay a premium to work on Sunday.

I have heard the positive presentation from Mr Bishop from the Canadian Tire. Notwithstanding that, the press tells me that all in all people are not jumping for joy in Kenora about Sunday shopping. I wonder if you could, rather swiftly or succinctly perhaps, tell me if I am on the right track.

Mr Meyers: The only thing I can tell you is that the people who spoke against Sunday shopping at the public meeting and again at the council meeting—I am surprised to greet them then in the stores I go into on Sunday to shop.

The Acting Chair: Thank you for taking the time to come and give us your presentation.

LAKE OF THE WOODS TOURISM CENTRE

The Acting Chair: Our next presenter will be from the Lake of the Woods Tourism Centre. Good afternoon. You will be given a half-hour to do your presentation. You can use the full half-hour for your presentation or you can submit a shorter brief and then allow time for questions or comments from each of the caucuses. Please identify yourself for the record and then proceed.

Mr O'Flaherty: My name is John O'Flaherty. I am past chairman of the Lake of the Woods Tourism Centre. I speak to you today as a representative of the board of directors of the Lake of the Woods Tourism Centre of Kenora, Ontario. My comments today will be directed in support of seven-day shopping.

Our organization was formed some 40 years ago with the intention of promoting tourism and industry in Kenora and surrounding areas. We are a membership organization with over 140 businesses as partners in our endeavours. These businesses range from accommodation sector resorts, hotels, etc, to small and large retail businesses of every type.

In the last 10 years the Lake of the Woods Tourism Centre has been charged with the responsibility of co-ordinating and implementing local special events, such as July 1, and assisting in the promotion and implementation of many other events in Kenora in addition to our promotion-oriented activities. The last two years have seen us take on the responsibility of the Kenora harbourfront committee as well.

With our recent reorganization, the board has held two strategic planning sessions, in April 1989 and January 1991, in order to solidify our purpose and to set out the future direction as a guideline for us to follow.

I would like to read to you the mission statement developed, which is, in a nutshell, the essence of the Lake of the Woods Tourism Centre. Through our efforts, we hope to induce and increase tourist traffic throughout the area, thus increasing the local tourism-based economy as well as enhancing the lives of our residents.

"The purpose of the Lake of the Woods Tourism Centre is to increase the benefit of tourism to the area by: Marketing the physical and commercial assets of the tri-municipal and surrounding areas; fostering a working relationship among all partners; generating a positive attitude toward tourism with the communities; promoting tourism as a renewable resource, resulting in the creation and maintenance of jobs on a year-round basis; assisting in the development and implementation of community visitor-related events; encouraging forward thinking and planning in the tourism industry."

Once again, I want to reiterate that this is the summation of our purpose and establishes the reasons we exist.

When the issue of seven-day shopping in Kenora, and now in a broader sense with the province of Ontario, came to our board table, it was met with a certain amount of hesitation. Initially, the board felt that as a subcommittee of the town of Kenora, the final decision should have rested with council alone and that we should not take a position on the issue. Upon further discussion, it was decided that if we are to take our jobs seriously, we must discuss and present the board's view on this situation.

It is our contention that the various organizations that have representatives on our board—namely, the Kenora District Campowners Association, the Kenora Innkeepers Association, the Kenora and District Chamber of Commerce—together with the six town-appointed citizen-at-large representatives, have given us an important, critical responsibility. It is then our duty within this mandate to determine and oversee the promotion and marketing of tourism in Kenora.

I do not think I have to repeat all the available information which you will be receiving from the Lake of the Woods Economic Development Corp, but I wish to stress the importance of tourism to Kenora's economy. We play host to over one million tourists a year. Tourism supplies over 3,200 jobs in the area. Tourism generates approximately $154 million in wages, roughly four times that of Boise Cascade, our largest employer. Tourism generates over $200 million in visitor revenues and generates over $14 million in municipal taxes alone. There is no doubt that Kenora is the major service centre of the Lake of the Woods area. As such, we must promote ourselves as just that.

Given the preceding information, our board of directors once again refers to our mission statement:

"There is no doubt that allowing all retail businesses to remain open seven days a week would: (a) result in the creation and maintenance of jobs and (b) increase the economic impact of tourism and (c) would better serve the needs of our visitors and residents."

In Kenora, we have the history to prove that seven-day shopping is successful. You have already heard from one local business person and our chamber of commerce. It has clearly been proven in Kenora that Sunday shopping has been well utilized by both our visitors and our residents. Thus it stands to reason that extra sales mean jobs. Many communities in the north are currently facing job losses. In some cases, these losses are of traumatic proportions. We simply cannot stand by and allow jobs to decline and possible economic stimulus to not happen.

The town of Kenora council, after a great deal of consultation and consideration, made a tough decision and, we feel, a right one. They saw the value of seven-day shopping and made a decision based on that vision. That decision has benefited the entire community. It provided extra services to all our important visitors but at the same time provided convenience to our many residents who were able to take advantage of the extra service time provided to them by retail establishments being open for business seven days a week.

During the ongoing consultation process there were many many residents who supported opening for seven days and who, because of job orientation, religious pressure and so on, could not openly support. Now it is a fact that in our community it is widely supported by visitors and residents alike. It is imperative that these operations at a minimum continue with the status quo if not be allowed to expand their hours of operation.

The board of directors of the Lake of the Woods Tourism Centre wish this committee the best in its deliberations and are confident that it will see to it that the economic viability and stability of our area and the entire province continue to prosper.

I would just like to leave you with this little cliché which is typical of me, "If it ain't broke, why fix it?" I respectfully submit that to you.

Mr Sorbara: I will begin with a question that I would like to have asked Mr Meyers as chief executive officer of Kenora. He talked about the passing of the bylaw and the debate that went on leading up to the passing of the bylaw. Many communities, by the way, have undertaken those debates, and sometimes they are very painful, but the proof is really in the aftermath of the passing of that sort of bylaw. So I want to ask you whether in your own experience, subsequent to the passing of this bylaw, and stores that chose to open on Sunday have opened and have been available and have been doing business, has there been a strong reaction in Kenora? Are groups organizing to try to get these stores closed again? Is there evident strain on family life? Is there a deterioration in the quality of living in Kenora and the surrounding area?

Mr O'Flaherty: No.

Mr Sorbara: Has anyone complained?

Mr O'Flaherty: Not to me personally.

Mr Sorbara: Are there letters to the editor in the local newspapers about how terrible this is?

Mr O'Flaherty: From the usual people who send letters, yes, but I guess as a rule of thumb, not really. It seems to be going over quite well.

Mr Sorbara: Has there been any collective expression by working people, retail workers, who are upset that they sometimes work on Sunday?

Mr O'Flaherty: I have heard of some people, but again, those are the usual people who would complain about something like that. But as a rule, no. It seems to be going over quite well.

1410

Mr Sorbara: You are the past president of the Lake of the Woods Tourism Centre. In your view, has the decision that Kenora made to establish some Sunday shopping been of a benefit or of a detriment to tourism in Kenora?

Mr O'Flaherty: It is definitely a benefit to Kenora.

Mr Sorbara: Has it generated employment?

Mr O'Flaherty: Yes, personally. Not with myself, but I have family members who have been employed because of Sunday shopping.

Mr Sorbara: Are they working against their will?

Mr O'Flaherty: No, they are doing it voluntarily.

Mr Sorbara: Are businesses opening on Sunday finding it difficult to attract customers?

Mr O'Flaherty: No.

Mr Sorbara: So there is a vibrant Sunday market?

Mr O'Flaherty: I would say so, yes.

Mr Sorbara: Your letterhead describes the Lake of the Woods area as "Ontario's Vacation Paradise." I tend to agree with you in that assessment, and obviously Kenora is the centre of an important tourism area in the province. If Kenora were not a centre for tourism, do you think it would be inappropriate for your stores to be open on Sunday? In other words, should you have the right to open your stores on Sunday only because you are Ontario's vacation paradise?

Mr O'Flaherty: I think they should be given the right, yes. Kenora is in a unique situation geographically. We have Boise Cascade. As it was pointed out earlier, they are a pulp mill. If we do not attract the tourists, we are going to end up like Kapuskasing.

Mr Sorbara: Okay, let's take Kapuskasing. Kapuskasing is not Ontario's vacation paradise. It is a nice place, but it is not a major tourist destination. Do you think the government of Ontario should discriminate in such a way that allows Kenora to stay open on Sunday but requires Kapuskasing to keep its doors closed on Sunday?

Mr O'Flaherty: No.

Mr Sorbara: Why not?

Mr O'Flaherty: It should be wide open. As pointed out, I am a firm believer that everything should be all equal.

Mr Sorbara: Let's not use "wide open," because no other day is described as wide open, but it should be a matter of choice, should it not?

Mr O'Flaherty: Yes, it should be choice, but there are some discriminating laws in effect right now that have to be adjusted. But yes, I agree with you on that point.

I would also like to make a comment on that. It may be out of order; the Chairman can rule me out if it is. We are allowing Sunday shopping, or it is in effect right now with the municipalities, yet we are allowed wide-open trucking on Sundays. The only thing that is banned right now is overweight loads. I just happen to work in that particular area, not as a truck driver but as a regulator of that sort, and there are no restrictions on it. So if the trucking industry can operate on a Sunday, clearly, why cannot a business person have the option of opening?

Mr Carr: One of the questions I have is, what will happen to some of the areas that do open because of tourism? Do you think there will be any pressure for the ball to start rolling if your particular area opens because it is a tourist area, and even though it is a beautiful area and most people would come there on their own, there will be the competitive pressures for other areas that might not be as close to you but will be in the same vicinity and would say, "We want to attract tourists now. Kenora is open and the municipality is open," and so on? Do you see the snowball effect happening so that more of the Sundays will be open?

Mr O'Flaherty: In that effect, Kenora has worked very hard to become a destination location. If Kenora takes the ball and decides to go into Sunday shopping and works that into our destination location and the other communities feel that no, they cannot or they are not as vibrant an area as Kenora, then maybe there is a little discrimination in that effect. If the place is clearly not a tourist area and they want to be open, it will boil down to Kenora will probably get it. But then we all know what government works like—policy supersedes law—and maybe that small community can get it. But in my view, it boils down to they should be given the opportunity to open up.

Maybe an area that is not quite a tourist area could become one with the right stimulus from government and local business and private investment. Maybe it can become a tourist area, but they have to work at it. Kenora has worked at it for 100 years and we just happen to be in a unique location where we can work at it. I do not know what else to say.

Mr Carr: You have been successful.

Mr O'Flaherty: Yes.

Mr Jackson: I am surprised that we are not going to hear from native groups. I am maybe not that familiar with the kind of commercial activity that is occurring on reservation lands. Are you aware of it? I just asked legislative counsel, but the fact is that this law does apply to aboriginal peoples and their commercial activities. Were you aware of that?

Mr O'Flaherty: No, I thought they were a law unto themselves.

Mr Jackson: So did I until I asked the question, but we were led to believe that this government is treating them—I guess you do a lot of your commercial interaction in your region with native business persons. How do you think they will react to the notion that the municipalities, as set apart from their band councils, will be making those kinds of decisions which affect their commercial activity?

Mr O'Flaherty: I am sure it is going to come up for some lively discussions, but with previous experience with the local natives in Kenora, they seem to be taking the ball and going with it. They do own some tourist operations and quite frankly they are viable; they are working at it. As far as having a local municipality try and tell them what to do, we have tried that for years and it has not worked, so I do not anticipate it is going to work in the future. It is hard to say. I would rather dance around that question, thank you.

Mr Jackson: Mr Chairman, if I might ask if perhaps this matter should be clarified in a little more detail. I am not aware that it has come up in the briefings or the discussions, but certainly the legislation appears to be silent on the matter and yet legal counsel indicates there are certain test cases which lead to the conclusion that perhaps the legislation is deficient in that it does not clearly state. Municipalities and in fact chambers of commerce may be in positions of saying no to aboriginal commercial interests in this province. I personally do not support that and would hope that somehow this legislation does not intentionally walk into difficulty because it is silent on that subject. So hopefully we will get back some information on this subject.

Mr Fletcher: As far as Bill 115 is concerned, exactly what is it that you disagree with?

Mr O'Flaherty: I think it is the fact that they are coming into making too many rules again. You are beginning to be too bureaucratic. I would like to say without prejudice, as I am a government employee, I deal—

Mr Fletcher: Yes, me too. I know what it is like.

Mr O'Flaherty: It is getting too much. It is a free country. If I have $100,000 where I can open up a store and go out and sell to people, I should be allowed to do whatever I want within the laws.

Mr Fletcher: I can understand your saying that we cannot allow jobs to decline and we have to keep the economy going and it is important. I look at the people your organization represents: hotels and resorts. Do they buy Ontario produce? Do they buy Ontario products? Are they keeping the economy going that way?

Mr O'Flaherty: Our members of our committee in the innkeepers' association, it may be just local, but they do buy local. Kenora does seem to have quite a bit of out-shopping, but that is a different subject for another hearing. The majority of our members do buy local.

Mr Fletcher: So they buy all their meats and everything locally. The economy should be booming then.

Mr O'Flaherty: Kenora's economy is suffering like all of them, but I do not sit and write the cheques for all of them so I cannot really speak for them on that.

Mr Fletcher: You are not 100% sure on that.

Mr O'Flaherty: But I would say the majority of the owners I know do buy local.

Mr Fletcher: But if they had the option of going across the border to get a cheaper price, they would probably go across the border for the cheaper price, like any consumer, when they become a consumer. I know, that is just speculation.

1420

Mr Morrow: That was a fine presentation. To the best of your knowledge, has there been any job loss since Sunday shopping was appealed through the courts and the courts upheld it?

Mr O'Flaherty: Not that I know of at first hand, no.

Mr Morrow: Which would lead me to my second question, then. Do you feel that by opening on Sunday there would be job increases?

Mr O'Flaherty: I would say yes. It has worked in my family, so I do know that my relatives have been hired strictly to work Sundays. That is what they agreed to, that is what they were hired on, because that happens to be the only other day they have open.

Mr Morrow: But we are not talking full-time employment.

Mr O'Flaherty: Oh, no; it would just be part-time.

Mr Morrow: Because I was just going to say you do realize that you are in direct contrast with what the United Food and Commercial Workers and the Canadian Auto Workers are saying on that point. Anyway, thank you very much.

Mr Mills: I am pleased to be here this afternoon to listen to your comments. I have said before and I will say again that we are here to listen and we are listening.

Mr Carr: That must be three times you have said that, Gord.

Mr Mills: I know, I am enforcing this because this is the process. It may not have been the process in the previous round of hearings on the same subject, but we are really listening. Having said that, I would just like to get some clarification of a statement that you made. I have before me a bit from the Daily Miner. It says, "Kenora—Only one of the largest stores in Kenora has definite plans to take advantage of the new Sunday shopping bylaw this coming weekend." On page 7 of your presentation you say, "In Kenora we have the history to prove that seven-day shopping is successful." My question to you, sir, is, what sort of history do you have that has proven that it is successful when only one store has indicated it wants to open?

Mr O'Flaherty: What is the date on that article?

Mr Mills: It was after the bylaw was passed. Unfortunately the date is cut off.

Mr O'Flaherty: Okay, so I am going by memory right now. I would say that was probably before the May long weekend.

Mr Mills: No, this is June 3, apparently.

Mr O'Flaherty: What long weekend is on June 3?

Mr Mills: I do not know, but they said it will be open as of June 3, that one store, and the other stores would not be open on that date.

Mr O'Flaherty: I still think it is referring to the May long weekend, as of June 3. That is, I think, when Mr Bishop's store opened back up again. The May long weekend has historically been one of the busiest weekends, because that is when all the Manitobans come in to open up their cottages, come down to see how Kenora did for the winter.

I would not say—and I am not saying it from an expert's point of view—that would be a prosperous weekend for them just to open up on a Sunday, because they may be paying out more in wages than they are bringing in, because the only people who may benefit are stores like Canadian Tire or Safeway if they happen to open. The smaller stores along the waterfront do not open at this point. There is no point in opening those stores up until the kids come down or finish school, because you are not going to get the grey trade or the senior citizens coming through buying tie-dyed and fluorescent and pastel shirts and T-shirts and such. They are not going to buy them, so there is no point in opening up at that time. Anything opened up before the middle of June is going to lose money. So with that comment in the paper, I do not really know why they would make it, but if one opened up, there would have been a good reason for it.

I would just like to reiterate I stated that I work for the government. I also work at a tourist operation. I am the master of a tour boat in Kenora, and I do work Sundays the odd time, and I dock on the waterfront. There are stores that open on the waterfront, are busy on the waterfront, and it is proving itself. The people who come on the boat want to know what to do for Sunday. They do not want to go sit in a restaurant and a bar and drink and eat. They just want to shop around. As Mr Duggan pointed out, when you have a wife and two kids walking around with you, you want to find something for them to do on Sunday.

The Acting Chair: Mr O'Flaherty, thank you for taking the time out this afternoon and for your presentation.

LAKE OF THE WOODS ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT CORP

The Acting Chair: Now I would like to call on somebody from the Lake of the Woods Economic Development Corp. Good afternoon. You will be given half an hour for your presentation. You can either make a full half-hour presentation or you can make a shorter presentation and allow time for questions and comments from each of the caucuses. Please identify yourself and then proceed.

Mr Treusch: My name is David Treusch and I am executive director of the Lake of the Woods Economic Development Corp.

At the outset I might mention that our organization has five members and we like to think our group is the distillation of all three levels of government as well as the private sector, both in the form of small business and large business.

I do express appreciation for this opportunity to address the issue of Sunday shopping. Our organization supports Sunday shopping and looks to as broad a definition of tourism criteria as possible for purposes of the act.

The two relevant elements of the corporation's mission statement are stimulating economic growth and creating and maintaining jobs, and encouraging proactive thinking and planning.

Tourism has been an important economic engine for our tri-municipal area since the first tourist of 1883. In spite of global predictions that tourism will be the largest single industry by the year 2000, we find the industry one of the least understood. Because of the importance of the industry to local community development and this lack of understanding, our corporation began undertaking relevant data collection in 1988.

The research was undertaken by the Economic Planning Group of Canada, a consulting firm specializing in the tourism industry. One of the financial modelling tools used was the FAIM program. FAIM is the acronym for tourism financial assessment and economic impact model, jointly developed for the Canadian-Ontario tourism development agreement by the Economic Planning Group and Econometric Research Ltd.

Due to the high number of approximately 1,500 surveys of tourists together with appropriate survey timing, the Economic Planning Group regards its data with a relatively high level of confidence. Their estimate of total visitation to the tri-municipal area in 1989 is 958,000. This number should be related to a base population figure of approximately 15,500. This visitation resulted in total visitor spending of $233.4 million.

In order to calculate economic impacts, this spending was discounted to an effective revenue of $185 million. Discounting was essentially in the areas of service station sales and business expenditures which do not generate economic benefits to the local economy. However, much of this difference would accrue to the benefit of the province as a whole.

Direct impacts of this revenue are $87 million in value added income, $75.6 million in wages and salaries, and 3,245 person-years of employment.

Without the contribution of tourism revenues to municipal taxes, each tri-municipal household would have to pay an additional $2,513 in property taxes to maintain the same level of services if the commercial-industrial sector did not assume this additional cost. Without Sunday shopping the commercial sector's ability to pay additional taxes would be eroded, leaving the burden for one remaining single industry, the local paper mill.

Recent developments in the retail industry such as the West Edmonton Mall demonstrate that shopping in itself has become a major tourism attraction. The Eaton Centre in Toronto is reported to attract more visitors than Disneyland.

Specific to the issue, 42.2% of all tri-municipal visitors include shopping as an activity. In fact, shopping ranks third in visitors' key activities. For almost one third of our visitors, 67% of their activity was shopping. In total, tourism rang up $130.6 million on our retail registers. Consequently, tourism represents over 51% of local retail sales.

Quoting from Whyte, Reynolds and Associates, who undertook the retail portion of the corporation's market analysis and research study, "...a minimum of 41 'other retail and specialty stores' accounting for approximately 40% of the total retail base interviewed reflects the importance of tourism and summer resident activity."

1430

This study further cites business' opinion that 16% to 30% of its source of customers is visitors, the percentage depending upon the nature of the business. Additionally, it was found that in excess of 700 individuals are directly employed by the retail sector, or 8.7% of our workforce. On average, two and a half times as many square feet of selling space are devoted to groceries and convenience goods in our tri-municipalities than the Ontario and Manitoba averages, again indicating the significance of tourism.

Many businesses will declare that summer tourism, in effect, represents their profit, justifying the very act of being in business.

A recent threat to our local economy is the new Trans-Canada Highway bypass of the communities which opened to traffic in November 1990. The tourism surveys found that 42% of summer pass-throughs would leave the bypass and enter the tri-municipal area to shop, buy groceries and eat. To be closed on Sundays is to lose 14% of potential pass-through purchasing.

From a provincial perspective, the theory that pass-through traffic would be captured the following day elsewhere in the province is not valid. Our highways lead east, west and south. In two of these three directions, a traveller will have left the province in half an hour to two and a half hours.

Third only to traffic conditions and public inebriation, early closing and unavailability of stores and restaurants were most frequently cited by tourists as a main dislike of our communities. This is not inconsistent with the results of the consumer survey of the market analysis and research study which found that only 52% of respondents were fully satisfied by hours of operation.

In short, Sunday shopping provides the potential of increasing annual tourism expenditures from $5.75 million if shopping were the only activity engaged to $41.5 million if that activity induced a day's stay. Roughly speaking, these additional expenditures would result in 31 to 227 new tri-municipal jobs, $723,000 to $25.3 million in wages and salaries, and at least $360,000 or $65 per household in municipal taxes. It should also be noted that in the parochial terms of a community's economic wellbeing, these are all export dollars, not import or recirculation moneys.

For our purposes, we have adopted the widely held definition of tourism, that is, anyone visiting the community from a distance of approximately 25 kilometres or more. In defining tourism for purposes of administering the act, we recommend that it too follow commonly accepted practice.

The experience of communities committed to religious participation indicates that Sunday shopping does not adversely affect church attendance. Sunday afternoon shopping is frequently found to be a family activity, and in fact is generally regarded as contributing to the overall quality of life.

Carefully weighing all factors in balance, the corporation's board of directors at its regular meeting of May 21, 1990 carried the following resolution:

"Be it resolved that the corporation does hereby support the concept of Sunday shopping as a mechanism to increase visitor and tourism expenditures and enhance job creation in the tri-municipal area."

The Acting Chair: That allows six minutes for each caucus.

Mr Daigeler: Is this the first time you or your organization are making a presentation on this question, or were you involved in the previous discussions on the Sunday shopping issue as well?

Mr Treusch: You heard our colleagues from the same community make reference to last summer's addressing of this whole issue, and we at that time gave a similar presentation.

Mr Daigeler: What about the previous provincial round? Were you involved in that at all?

Mr Treusch: I personally was not involved at that time, so I have no knowledge.

Mr Daigeler: I am asking this question because it seems to me that there has been quite a significant shift in public opinion. I represent the Liberal Party, and there was a fair amount of criticism of it and the government at the time. That is why it was an issue during the election, that a fair number of people seemed to think the proposal that the Liberals put forward was not the right thing, but this time around it sounds as if almost everyone has finally seen the wisdom of the Liberal legislation.

Where is that change coming from? Is it something you have seen through your experience, and you have now agreed that was the right thing to do?

Mr Treusch: I can only speculate. I think it is an emotional issue, and emotion always gives rise to strong positions, often extreme positions. I mentioned that tourism is not a well-understood industry. It is one of the reasons we have collected data. In terms of our own community, being aware of the true nature of that industry, the impact being open or not being open on Sunday might have on the community, being given the facts perhaps took it somewhat out of the emotional area and brought it more into where there could be some real deliberation and some thoughtful discussion.

Mr Daigeler: The earlier presenter said Sunday shopping is now available in the United States. Is that relatively recent in the border states, or has that always been the case?

Mr Treusch: Before my current position in Kenora, I spent five years in Minneapolis-St Paul, and in all the time I was there, there was Sunday shopping.

Mr Daigeler: So it is not a recent phenomenon?

Mr Treusch: Not to my knowledge. I am not sure of North Dakota.

Mr Sorbara: I think this was a very good presentation. You make the case that tourism is a crucial industry in Ontario, a crucial industry in your area, and the freedom for storekeepers to open when the tourist market is there is crucial to the success of tourism in your area. Is it your view that those stores which do not have a tourist market, or those communities which are not a tourist destination, ought to be forced to remain closed on Sunday?

Mr Treusch: They should have the option to do what they think is best. Speaking as an economic development officer, I would like to be equipped with all the tools or all the resources I could muster. I think any community should have the option of whether it be a tourist community or not.

Mr Sorbara: In your own community, as an economic development officer familiar with the labour market and the social and cultural and economic issues in your community, since Kenora and the area determined to allow people to make their own choices with respect to Sunday shopping, have you noticed any negative impact on family life, on the quality of the working environment, on the satisfaction of workers in tourism or in retail or anywhere, or any other negative impact on the community that would help this committee muster some support for this bill?

Mr Treusch: None has come to my attention. We still do receive some complaints that even on the current basis some things are still too restricted.

Mr Sorbara: In other words, they want more freedom?

Mr Treusch: More extended hours or more stores open.

Mr Sorbara: What about from the ministerial community, from the pastors of local churches, the rabbis of the local synagogue, those people who are charged with the spiritual care of the community? Have they objected? Have they been to see you or the mayor, or have they written letters to the newspaper? Are they unhappy about what is going on in Kenora?

Mr Treusch: I am not aware of any. It does not mean there was not any, but none has been brought to my attention. We certainly try to keep our ear to the ground on the issue. You will notice from our statement that we are also concerned with the quality of life. If we do not maintain the quality of life of our community, it is very difficult to perform our type of function.

Mr Sorbara: What about within the trade unions in the area, or the district labour council? Are they protesting vigorously this new openness in the community?

Mr Treusch: I have not seen any rallies or marches or placards or letters to the editor.

Mr Carr: Thank you for a good presentation. I must say that organizations like yours are very successful, because I think there probably would not have been even the tourism criteria there are had there not been a lot of pressure from groups in communities like yours, so I thank you for taking the time, because they do serve a purpose in getting the message out.

One of the questions relates to economic activity; on page 4 and 5 you put together a lot of statistics. The government seems to be saying that as a result of Sunday shopping there is no increase in economic activity. In fact, as was mentioned earlier, there are some who say it is going to be an added drain on communities because of bus services and so on.

It would seem to me from all the statistics on pages 4 and 5 that that is not the case, that there is more economic activity, that you are actually helping some municipalities with the increased taxes—you put some of those in there. Is that the case? Maybe we could just sum it up as what you would say to a government that believes there is not any extra economic activity as a result of being open on Sunday in your community.

Mr Treusch: In our particular case, and I have asked a couple of the operators to try and be certain, they declare that the increased business they do as a result of Sunday openings is new business; it is not just reshuffling the deck from midweek or Saturdays through to Sunday. For our community, then, that is increasing the total business within the community, and it would benefit the community. It would net out in job creation; the business would be able to expand. I would hate to think a successful business would be penalized because it expanded and then could no longer open on Sundays. Of course it would then be paying more municipal taxes, so it is a win-win type of situation.

Mr Carr: As you know, the legislation was put in with the number one criterion of protecting workers who do not want to work on Sunday, although, as has been mentioned, there are many workers who do and the retail workers would be the only ones who would have protection. What has been your experience of the actual workers? Have you had people complaining to you that they have had to work on Sunday? Does that seem to be a big problem in the community, that a company has opened a business saying, "We have to be open, so you're going to work"? Has that been expressed to you at all?

Mr Treusch: No, it has not. I have found, particularly in the case of the smaller owner-proprietor type of business, that because of personal reasons, that owner elects not to open on Sundays, and he does not. With the Kenora experience, they are not obliged to open, so that is their free choice. That is the closest I have come to hearing any dissenting voice to being required to work on Sunday.

Mr Carr: Sometimes, when we look at our circumstances, it is refreshing to come out into communities and see organizations like yours that are working to make this a better province, and for that I want to commend you. Mr Fletcher is laughing at it, but I sincerely believe there are people who are trying their very best, sometimes in spite of what we in government do.

Interjection.

Mr Carr: He laughed. I assume that is what he was laughing about. He looked at me and laughed.

When we come out and get a chance to hear communities like yours and what you are trying to do to make your community viable, as a legislator it makes me feel a lot better, because there are some tremendous people out there who are working to improve the community, so I commend you.

Mr Treusch: We appreciate the support we get from provincial government as well.

Mr Fletcher: I support what Mr Carr was saying, even if I do chuckle.

I am going to follow what Mr Carr was saying earlier in the day about statistics. On page 5, it says for 42.2% of all visitors, shopping was an activity. What was number one and two on the list, do you know?

Mr Treusch: In our area, it would have been outdoor recreation and pleasure, that type of thing, and visiting friends and relatives.

Mr Fletcher: Then it says: "Shopping ranks third in visitor's key activities. For almost one third of our visitors"—which cuts it down a little more—"67% of their activity was shopping." Statistics are statistics and I really do not want to get into—

Mr Treusch: It is slightly different ways of stating the same thing.

Mr Fletcher: Anyway, I have listened to a lot of presentations today from the Kenora and District Chamber of Commerce, the town of Kenora, Lake of the Woods—that is Kenora—and Lake of the Woods Economic Development Corp, which is part of Kenora. I still have a bit of a problem with why you are here, because you probably meet the tourism criteria more than anyone else in the province almost. From what I can read and from everything I have heard today, you would have Sunday opening. That is where I am getting a bit of a problem. If it is just that you want the absolute right to choose between wide-open Sunday shopping or partial Sunday shopping, I can understand that. But the way Bill 115 is with the tourism criteria, you meet the criteria, from everything I have heard in every presentation today. Going through it, you meet the criteria. You would have wide-open Sunday shopping. I am trying to get a grasp on exactly why you are here saying that the bill is no good.

Mr Treusch: I think with distance and time, we were made aware that the issue of Sunday shopping was coming up—this proposed legislation. What the final form will be, we are uncertain. The government has been kind enough to take the issue out and hear representations like this. We thought it was worth while to let it be known what our experience has been and that we value it and that it be maintained.

We and I do not yet know, unfortunately, what the criteria are, and I was not able to be specific on the issue. The material I was issued talked about tourism criteria, but I do not know what those criteria are.

Mr Fletcher: Okay. I am going to make sure you get a copy of that.

Mr Treusch: Hopefully, it will be broad and not restrictive.

Mr Fletcher: Right. I know the town of Elora, which is close to my jurisdiction, loves this law. They think it was written just for them, and the town of Elora is strictly tourist.

Mr Treusch: I guess part of the problem, though, is—and maybe next week I get transferred to another community—maybe they do not even know how to spell the word tourism. But as we looked it over and began to analyse it, maybe tourism is an industry that can be developed there. Can we start Sunday shopping the day after? I do not know, and that is why to me non-restrictive legislation is so much easier to work with than something that is very narrow and confining.

Mr Fletcher: Yes. I know there is a problem with the municipal option, though. Municipalities were saying, "We don't want the burden."

Mr Treusch: Well, some municipalities may not,

Mr Fletcher: Now with the tourism criteria that are outlined by the Ontario government, with the government to be the overseer of it, I think it will work out well. I think this area is going to like the criteria. Thank you for your presentation. It was a very good presentation.

The Acting Chair: Mr Mills, you have about two minutes.

Mr Mills: I have listened to your brief with very open ears and I would like to comment to you that we talk about the economic engine being tourism, and I think our government recognizes that tourism is very important to this province. These regulations, which are draft regulations, are a process where we can hopefully refine or massage the criteria so they encourage tourism perhaps to an even greater degree than you perceive now.

Having said that, we talk about Sunday shopping. In British Columbia they have had wide-open Sunday shopping for the last four years and the statistical information is that during that four-year period—and I go back to your resolution that you support “Sunday shopping as a mechanism to increase visitor and tourism expenditure”—the experience in British Columbia over the last four years is that Sunday shopping has produced a growth of 1%. I just wonder if you would like to comment on what the 1% means when you have got the overheads, the costs. I do not see that being a very good argument for wide-open Sunday shopping and I would just like you to comment on that 1%. I am sure you would not be satisfied with that here.

Mr Treusch: It would be interesting. Again, you are summarizing; you throw out percentage rates of data, and so what does it really mean? You have to look behind it. I would suspect that probably the geography would have a lot to do with that. Here in Ontario, particularly where we are located, tourists are coming at us from three directions, and in a sense British Columbia is almost like an isolated cul-de-sac. If it is Canadian traffic, you are crossing the Rockies; other than that it is the one-way channels to south of the border. If you are going to try to take on the Americans strictly in the retail game, it is a pretty uphill battle. I would not expect the Ontario experience to be the same as British Columbia's.

Mr Mills: So you think the BC experience is unique to that province and not to be applied as a criterion for a similar experience here in Ontario?

Mr Treusch: That would be my initial reaction without seeing anything else.

Mr Sorbara: If we are finished questioning the presenter, I wonder if I might get a clarification from the parliamentary assistant to the Solicitor General. My problem arises because of some of the submissions that we have heard earlier today. The bill we are considering—if I understand it correctly, I say to the parliamentary assistant—provides in effect that all stores have to be closed on Sunday except—now I am quoting from section 4—“for the maintenance or development of tourism.” Is the government making an absolute distinction as between what is a tourist and what is not a tourist?

I will put this example before the parliamentary assistant. If I am a resident of Thunder Bay and on Sunday I am interested in buying some garden hose and perhaps a lawnmower and, I do not know, some plants, am I a tourist if I travel to Kenora to buy that whereas if I stay in Thunder Bay and look for a place to buy the same items in Thunder Bay I am not a tourist? How are we trying to distinguish between which shoppers in Ontario should have the right to shop on Sunday? What are the distinctions we are making as between my rights as a citizen and a resident of Ontario to shop in my local community or to shop in a community that is, say, I do not know, 100 or 200 kilometres away?

Mr Mills: I guess the definition of a tourist has been arrived at over broad consultation with the tourist industry and Tourism Ontario Inc. It is my understanding that the technical definition of a tourist is one who leaves his home and travels at least 40 kilometres to somewhere else and then he is a tourist.

Mr Sorbara: Is the object of the legislation then to encourage people to travel long distances to make their purchases? Is the object of the legislation to support businesses that can attract from a catchment area that is 40 kilometres or more away? If that is the case, why are we discriminating against the shopper who does not have the means to travel 40 kilometres or more to do his or her shopping? Why does that consumer not have the right to buy the very same products closer to home?

It seems to me that the government is not trying to encourage efficiency and discourage a lot of road travel and use of pollutants like gasoline. What is the basis upon which we are going to distinguish between whether or not I should have the right to buy things locally in my own community and perhaps travel to Kenora and buy the very same products? Why are we making that distinction?

Mr Mills: I suppose that in developing the tourism criteria, the ultimate part of those criteria must be who is a tourist. I think the strategy that was employed through consultation and getting it from Ontario tourism was that a tourist technically is one who travels 40 kilometres to another place to visit. Notwithstanding that, I do not see that if you live in Kenora you have to go somewhere else to shop if this is designated a tourist area. It might be very difficult to give an example of any particular area that will not have a particular tourism attraction. I do not think the intention is to make people travel but rather to uphold the criteria that are established here.

Mr Sorbara: Does the government take the position that if I am a resident of Thunder Bay, I am a tourist on Sunday if I drive to Duluth in order to do my grocery shopping?

Mr Mills: My interpretation of a tourist, and I will say it again, is one who travels at least 40 kilometres from where he lives. That for the purposes of the tourist criteria is a tourist.

The Acting Chair: Thank you very much. This is turning into a bit of a debate and I think this will be handled during clause-by-clause. Mr Treusch, on behalf of the committee, I would like to thank you for taking time out this afternoon and coming and giving your presentation.

FORT FRANCES CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

The Acting Chair: Our next presenter is from the Fort Frances Chamber of Commerce. Good afternoon. You will be allowed half an hour for your presentation. You can either take the full half-hour for your presentation or you can make it shorter and allow time for questions and comments from each of the caucuses. Please identify yourself for the record and then proceed.

Mr Zarembo: My name is Paul Zarembo and I live in Fort Frances. I am a chamber member of the Fort Frances Chamber of Commerce and I am here on behalf of most of our chamber members, so I am not speaking for myself. I am going to try to speak for them.

We did a little survey before I came and we talked with them about Sunday shopping: "It is important to me because—" What I am going to do is present some statements that I hope act as icons in your mind to give you an idea of the thoughts going through our business community. These are their statements, not necessarily mine. I am just going to go through it as per your directions in the summary sheet.

Heavy industry is not affected by the Sunday work rule. They have the freedom to plan and schedule work any day of the week.

The two most important industries, both in revenue and as major employers in Fort Frances, are Boise Cascade, which is the paper industry, and tourism.

Another statement is: Sunday shopping is one way for us to become more competitive. It is our right to choose when we will open our businesses. This is an antiquated law. It must be reviewed and updated.

We are amidst transition into free trade. When will the government stop tying our hands?

Fort Frances Canada Customs reports Fort Frances traffic is up 75% to 100%, while tourism and non-resident traffic is down or on the decline. Canada is becoming a bedroom/suburb community of the United States cities within 300 miles south of our border. Sunday shopping is a matter of business survival. Our competitors across the border are open on Sundays; Canadian businesses need every opportunity they can get;

In today's busy society, Sunday is the only day open for individuals and/or families to do relaxed shopping. Shopping is now a form of family entertainment.

Having stores open on Sunday is crucial to the tourism industry.

To declare Sunday a holy day—the derivative, holiday—is not separating religion from government. It also discriminates against people of other faiths. Churches offer many different options in regard to services and scheduling. They have gotten with the times, why do we not?

There are many people with alternative lifestyles who would like and/or need to work on Sunday. This is also their right.

Hopefully I presented some of the bullet points in the speech to reflect the feeling and the opinions and the frustrations of some of our business people, because we are having a tough time in Fort Frances.

During this meeting I would like to present a few reasons why Fort Frances business owners need to have the opportunity to open their business establishments on Sunday. Let me begin.

Fort Frances business owners strongly believe it is their right to choose to be open or closed on Sunday. It is our right to be open. We have the right to be taxed seven days of the week, we have the right to pay rent for seven days of the week, we have the right to be responsible for our business loans and mortgages seven days of the week, and we have the right to be responsible for making the payroll seven days of the week. Why do we not have the right to choose when and where we will conduct business?

Not having the right to choose to be open on Sunday is one more example of government interference and over-regulation of business. Upon the free trade agreement becoming fully operational, in approximately 1995-96, Fort Frances and all Canadian businesses will be thrust into an extremely competitive and new free market trading environment, an environment which has never been seen in Canada before—simply put, a market which we really are not prepared for.

As I speak, we are already five to six years behind the times in implementing change and making the transition into the free trade agreement. When is government going to stop tying our hands and let us become more competitive and be the very best we can? When will government begin to assist business, halting the overregulation of business?

Allowing Sunday shopping is one of many such measures or tools we can use to level our playing field and make our businesses more competitive. As a tool, Sunday shopping will assist the business community to become more competitive and to make quick and necessary adjustments in the marketplace.

If we do not plan for change, the US vendors will change it for us, on their time frame and on their schedule. We will end up becoming bedroom communities or suburbs of all major US cities within 300 miles south of our border. Basically we will have some convenience stores and just a few stores to tide us over until we can make that big trip.

Do not think this is not happening, because it is. See for yourselves. By contacting any Canada Customs office, it only takes a matter of 10 minutes to see the trend. This is a large grass-roots movement and people are voting with their feet. Here is an example. After discussions with Fort Frances Canada Customs personnel, during all of fiscal year 1990-91 there was a total of 50,000 people who transacted business with Canada Customs in one way or another. They basically came in the door and paid a fee, a duty, a tariff or some sort of tax; 50,000 transactions happened in the last fiscal year.

Presently, Fort Frances Canada Customs has just entered into its second quarter of this fiscal year. Upon entering into this second quarter of fiscal year 1991-92, Canada Customs reported 28,000 people have already transacted business through its system, better than 100% already. Based upon a rough, conservative estimate, we have determined that by the end of fiscal year 1991-92 a minimum of 80,000 people, perhaps 100,000 people, will have transacted business with Fort Frances Canada Customs. Please note that while return resident traffic into Canada is increasing, we are experiencing a decline in tourism and/or non-resident traffic through Fort Frances Canada Customs.

In short, per-person business transactions at Fort Frances Canada Customs are up 75% to 100% over last year. This estimate reflects an increase in border traffic into Canada while experiencing a reduction in non-resident tourism traffic at Fort Frances Canada Customs. When Fort Frances Canada Customs personnel were queried, they indicated that Fort Frances border activity has increased significantly and noticeably. When queried regarding Sunday shopping or Sunday activity at the Fort Frances Canada Customs, it was mentioned that Sunday used to be a slack or slow day. Sunday is now just as busy as any other day of the week, and sometimes busier.

Our destination is 1995-96 and full implementation of the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States. We will need lead time to get ready for this. We have already gone five to six years and we are not on the ball. We need time. We need lead time for business planning, staff scheduling, identifying new target markets, financing, pricing, business cycles, and again, implementation time.

This last bullet point is extremely important. We need implementation and lead time to introduce Sunday shopping to our marketplace. It takes time to implement these things. Of course, if you have such economic imbalances in the United States and you are buying, you can get things that much cheaper. Well, they are going to vote a lot faster and you are going to change your market quickly. We do not have that, so we have to maintain a higher price level. But we need every day we can get, and Sunday is one of them. The six-month trial of the Sunday shopping, or the eight months or whatever it was, is no measure of whether this pilot was successful or not. It takes years to change buyer habits.

Ladies and gentlemen, these are the 1990s. We must become more progressive. We must take off our blinders. We cannot isolate ourselves and live in ignorance. All the while we are surrounded by change and growing regional, national and international markets.

The two largest revenue- and employment-generating industries in Fort Frances are (1) paper and (2) tourism. They are both revenue- and employment-generating, and it is in that order—heavy industry and then tourism is second. We know the paper industry is on a decline. Everybody is taking a beating in the paper market, especially in Canada. I have a pretty good idea of that. I have been involved in the lumber industry and the forest industry myself in the past. Presently I am not, but I see some things that are going on there.

With tourism being such an important industry to Fort Frances, it stands to reason that we have an abundance, which is in decline, of incoming and outgoing non-residents on Sunday who are looking to—okay, they are coming in on Sunday. They are coming in the rest of the week too, and they are doing these things. But here they are. They are coming in on Sunday and they cannot do these things, such as stock up on supplies for their vacation in the area or restock supplies for the next leg of their trip to the Arctic or to wherever, find a place to stay or purchase the last memento reminding them of their Canadian experience before they leave Canada. I think we are sending them home with the wrong mementoes. Also, people on vacation enjoy relaxing, be it Monday, Saturday or Sunday. They are here to relax and enjoy themselves, as we all do when we travel.

Fort Frances is a border town. Its economy is directly linked to whether we are open on Sunday or not. This is a plain and well-known fact. If our businesses are not open on Sunday, we have effectively handed the Canadian consumer and non-resident tourist destined for Canada over to US merchants without competition from us, the Canadian merchants.

Ladies and gentlemen, thank you for your time. At this time, I will answer any questions.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Zarembo, that was a pretty powerful presentation. Do you believe, as Mr Mills believes, that the only businesses that should be allowed to be opened in Fort Frances are those that cater to customers who come from 40 kilometres or more away from Fort Frances?

Mr Zarembo: No, I believe all businesses should have the right to choose to be open on Sunday. That is what I believe.

Mr Mills: On a point of order, Mr Chair: I gave you the definition of a tourist arrived at by consultation with the tourist industry to say who is a tourist. In no way did I say, or did I want to be misinterpreted to say, that it bears some restriction on who should shop in Fort Frances. I just want to make that very clear.

Mr Sorbara: I appreciate that clarification. The point I am trying to make is that Mr Mills and the government have a definition of a tourist and the bill we are looking at says the only businesses that should be open on Sunday are the ones that maintain or promote tourism. I am just going from what the bill says to what Mr Mills and the government say are tourists, and the logical conclusion is inevitable; that is, the only stores that should be open in Fort Frances are the ones that cater to a market of customers who come from 40 kilometres or more.

Now, sir, about the only people who have come before this committee to support the government's position are district labour councils and the United Food and Commercial Workers. I take it that Boise Cascade in Fort Frances operates on Sunday?

Mr Zarembo: They operate any time they want, but they have to pay for it.

Mr Sorbara: I take it that the trade union movement in Fort Frances and the local union there are not lobbying to close down Boise Cascade on Sunday?

Mr Zarembo: No, I have never heard anything like that.

Mr Morrow: On a point of order, Mr Chair: I would like to clear something up with Mr Sorbara. I do believe those are trade unionists and they do have a negotiated contract.

The Acting Chair: Thank you for that piece of information. Please proceed.

1510

Mr Sorbara: I agree with my friend Mr Morrow that they do have negotiated contracts and they are able to work out with their employers, through negotiations, whether or not they are going to work on Sunday. I would love to see commercial workers and retail workers have those same rights, and we are giving them to them in this bill in a pretty forceful way.

Would you say, sir, it is rather an artificial distinction to identify and allow only stores that cater to or serve tourists to stay open in today's market?

Mr Zaremba: In today's market you need all the opportunity you can get to make your money. You have to. You are generating. You are responsible. I do not think it should be just segregated. I think anybody who is in business, who can find a target market, who is going to participate in generating revenue in his establishment should have the opportunity to be open. Granted that there are certain things set up so that there is a certain amount of protection for the employee.

Mr Sorbara: Would you be surprised if I told you these inconsistencies go back almost 100 years in Ontario history? If you go back to 1906, the law prohibited the sale of foreign newspapers. If you go back to 1938, Sunday movies were prohibited, except for armed service personnel. If you go back to 1943, we were prosecuting people for selling things at souvenir stands, at hot dog stands, and the rental of boats. Would that be tourism? Would you be surprised?

Mr Zaremba: It all depends on what they are hawking, sir.

Mr Jackson: Mr Sorbara is hawking right now.

Mr Sorbara: I have got a lot of things to hawk.

I just want to let you know that in 1945 we then prohibited armed service personnel from going to movies on Sunday and we thought we were being progressive. What are your predictions in Ontario? What do you think the law should be when this whole thing settles down?

Mr Zaremba: I think business should have the opportunity to be open, with provisos for the protection of the employees, to a certain extent. I myself used to work on Sunday. I am originally from the Chicago area. I grew up with Sundays. I shop on Sundays. I have worked on Sundays. There are a lot of people who might have somebody—there might be parents around. They, either male or female, might want to work Sunday. That is their right. If you want to go to church, there are a number of different service options. If you are Catholic, you can go on Wednesdays or Saturday nights or Sundays. A number of other denominations serve their target market the same way. When it all finishes up, I would like to see businesses have the opportunity to be open on Sunday, because they are going to be facing the US in the free trade coming up in 1995-96.

Mr Sorbara: The Chairman says I have only one more question. I had a long series of questions on the role and responsibility of the chambers of commerce as identified in the draft regulations. The draft regulations say any store over 7,500 square feet that wishes to open on Sunday must in its application submit a letter from the local chamber of commerce saying the local chamber of commerce approves that applicant opening on Sunday. What is this going to do to a local chamber of commerce when it has to make choices between applicants who apply to open on Sunday and have to go through the local chamber?

Mr Zaremba: I do not know. I am not very familiar with that part of the chamber. All chambers are separate entities. The local chamber, the provincial chamber and the national chamber are set up very differently from the way they are set up around the world and in the United States. These might just be some bylaws they have created locally, and maybe the bylaws in another chamber are a little bit different.

Mr Sorbara: If you were the president of the chamber and had to make the decision, and in your wisdom decided that the local—

Mr Zaremba: I do not feel there should be any distinction. It is a business-civic organization. It is there to bring business together. There should not be any discrimination.

Mr Carr: Even the labour unions that have come before this committee are not happy with the legislation, for different reasons. They say it does not go far enough and protect the workers. But just to clear the record, nobody who has appeared before this committee is happy. They are saying there should be amendments, and even the labour unions are saying that.

I can understand where you are confused with this government attempting to help you. This new government says it is trying to help business, and yet, as I mentioned earlier, it adds taxes on gasoline—and the vast majority of the price of gasoline is taxes—on cigarettes and on liquor, the very products people are going across the border for. In the last budget they increased it and in fact heightened the problem.

What would you say to a government that says it understands more about the economic activity in Fort Frances and what needs to be done than your chamber and your members? What would you like to say to a Premier, who I understand is in the city, who says, "We will decide what is going to happen in Fort Frances and what we believe is best"? What would you say to a Premier who says he knows better?

Mr Zaremba: We would say: "Just get out of the way of business. Just get out of the way and let us do our thing. You do your government's thing and we'll do our other things. We'll generate the money and we'll live within certain guidelines, but just stay out of our way. Let us be the best we can be."

Let's stop being looked down on as second-rate business people compared to the United States. It is not true. If you can do business in Canada, it is easy to do business in the US because of all of the regulations; you have a line of inspectors of this ministry and that ministry by the time you even get your doors open. I would just like for government to stay out of business. It should let us do what we do best, and we are going to let it do what it does best. It is a thrust and parry of laws and regulations and protections. We can live with that, but you have to give us some room to move. Sunday is just one small part of the whole program.

Mr Carr: As you know, one of the reasons they have brought in legislation is that as a socialist party their concern is for the workers. What has been your feeling with regard to the chamber and its relationship with workers? If Sunday were to be a day of working, do you see that there would be problems in terms of worker-management relations, whether the owners are small, midsize or large? How do you think that relationship will work and do you in fact see the government being able to protect the workers? How would you see it operating?

Mr Zaremba: You have the Ministry of Labour. When I was an employer, a gentleman by the name of Marcel Castonguay was the first guy to call you and he would tell you what the facts of life were. If you have something available that people can go to that is going to cut through the red tape and really sort things out between the employer and the employee, that should be good enough, just a good representative in government.

Other than that, you can have your basic legislation that works through some of these, like the Ministry of Labour, and the employees and the employers can figure it out themselves. They can figure out their schedules and how they are going to do things. I really do not have a concrete answer on that, but I see it as the employer and the employee working together. I do not think it is really going to affect a lot of employees. Of course you are going to have employers who are going to abuse the system, but you are also going to have employers who are going to work with their staff.

The other thing you get going too is that a lot of businesses are not going to open on Sunday. They are not going to force opening because they do not want to work. They do not want to see their employees work, so they are not going to be open. But that does not mean they should not have the right to be open if the market changes in the area and they have the flexibility to start changing and testing. Maybe they will find that employee who wants to work on Sunday and the owner, a woman or man, will say: "If you'd like to try working that day and you think there's a market, if you think we'll have enough people coming in, yes, we'll open up. We'll give it a try." They should have that opportunity without going through a lot of paperwork and checking with different agencies. So yes, I think there are abuses. There are abuses for the employee too. Employees can call in and harass the employer if they want. But that goes with anything. I think they will work it out.

Mr Morrow: Thank you for that very interesting presentation. Just a couple of really quick questions, if you do not mind. Neither the Retail Council of Canada nor any other organization has undertaken any study to permit it to come to a conclusion about the financial effects of Sunday shopping on retailers. Do you have any substantial surveys or studies in Fort Frances to give us any indication on that at all?

Mr Zaremba: No, I do not.

Mr Morrow: You talked a bit about the problems of a recession and Sunday shopping. We basically just went through the worst recession in Ontario since the Depression, and we had wide-open Sunday shopping. Can you please tell me, with my just giving you that information, how Sunday shopping would now help Fort Frances?

Mr Zaremba: First off, it is a right. I think they should have the right to be open. It is going to take time to change attitudes to get people used to shopping locally, and they should have the right to try it if they want. Right now a lot of people do not open on Sunday, and they did not open when Sunday shopping was legal anyway. So what is it really harming?

Mr Morrow: Should a worker have an absolute right to refuse working on Sunday in the retail sector?

Mr Zaremba: I think that should be worked out between the employer and the employee. I do not think somebody should be able to totally refuse. I think it has to be worked out between the two.

Mr Morrow: Now that you have raised that, do you agree with any form of a common pause day?

Mr Zaremba: "Pause day." I do not know what that means.

Mr Morrow: Thank you.

Mr Zaremba: Oh, common pause day. I have never heard of that. I do not know the terminology. Excuse me for my ignorance. I think you should be able to choose your pause days. I think you should be able to choose when you want your time off, whether it be consecutive—if you have to have 36 consecutive hours, then work it out. You might be Seventh Day Adventists and you might want to have your time off during the week.

Mr Fletcher: As far as the cross-border shopping, price is the motivating factor for people crossing the border.

Mr Zaremba: I think so.

Mr Fletcher: Right, okay, so even if you are open Sunday, they are still going across the border because of the price.

Mr Zaremba: Maybe not; not necessarily; sometimes, yes.

Mr Fletcher: I have to take exception to what you said about government getting out of business. For far too long I have stood by and watched when other governments have allowed business to do what it wants to do, and I have seen a lot of employees who have come out with maimed limbs. The environment has been harmed over the years.

As far as I am concerned, the government does have a role to play in protecting certain things, especially when it comes to protecting the rights of employees to safety. When it comes to protecting the environment, governments do have to be involved with business and they have to be a partnership. I agree with that. But let's not say, "Let's get out of the way."

Obviously, the free trade agreement was a government action that tried to help business, and look at what has happened. In fact, as far as free trade is concerned, if you look at what has happened in the paper industry, MacMillan Bathurst, Domtar, Abitibi-Price now are buying all their inks in a converting part of the industry from the United States. They are not buying from the Canadian producers any more. The Canadian producers are out of work; they have closed down. If you look at the starches they use in the paper industry, they are coming from the United States also. If you look where the converting industry is buying its paper, it is from the southern states also. So you can see why the industry and the other industries connected with it are going down the tubes, because they are going across to the US.

If Canadian industry and business are that concerned about keeping business and money in Canada, why are we not buying Canadian-made products, and especially in Ontario, especially in the industry? How many stores in Kenora are owned by American subsidiaries?

Mr Zarembo: There is not that much Canadian product out there, nor is there US product; $80 billion of trade comes from Japan and is imported into California every year.

Mr Fletcher: And then it is coming into Canada.

Mr Zarembo: Canada could be buying it too; I do not know.

Mr Fletcher: Perhaps Canada should be buying its own products. If it is going to go through the whole system and you want your own people to stay at home and shop, then maybe it should be business that stays at home and shops also. That way we help each other out, and that way there probably would be a lot more money to go around to help businesses.

Mr Zarembo: That is a protectionist attitude and I do not agree with that, but we live in a free country, so you are entitled to your opinion on that. I believe business should be able to access the markets so that their dollar can buy the product. I think there should be protection—

Mr Fletcher: It is okay for business, as consumers, to go outside the country and spend its dollars and not spend them in Canada, but when it comes to the people, the consumers who have to buy the products in Canada, it is not okay for them to go outside.

Mr Zarembo: I am not debating that. I came here to talk on Sunday shopping.

Mr Fletcher: You talked a heck of a lot about cross-border shopping too.

Mr Zarembo: Well, we see it. We are in Fort Frances.

The Acting Chair: Mr Zarembo, thank you for having taken time out this afternoon to come and give your presentation.

KENORA-KEEWATIN AND DISTRICT LABOUR COUNCIL

The Acting Chair: Our next presenters have cancelled, so we will be moving up to the Kenora-Keewatin and District Labour Council. Gentlemen, welcome this afternoon. You will be given a half-hour to give your presentation. You can give either a half-hour presentation or else give a shorter submission and allow time for questions and comments from each of the caucuses. Please identify yourself for the record and then proceed.

Mr Canfield: Thank you very much. I am Dave Canfield from the Kenora-Keewatin and District Labour Council. I do believe that briefs should be brief, so I will be brief.

I have been president of the district labour council for approximately three years now. We represent approximately 3,000 unionized workers in Kenora, and with all the phone calls I get coming to my place from non-unionized workers, I have taken it upon myself to represent anybody who needs my help. We represent approximately 800 employees who are with the United Food and Commercial Workers in Kenora, not all in the retail industry; some are in the essential service industry and probably about 300 in the retail industry.

The Sunday shopping issue is not new for the Kenora labour council, and I do not imagine for a lot of other labour councils; it has been brought up before across the country. Our council has been making presentations back as far as the 1960s, the 1970s, into the 1980s and now the 1990s, the difference being that democracy prevailed for three decades and disappeared last spring in Kenora. As the greed of the 1980s and the power of the corporate agenda have taken over today's society, we find ourselves fighting a brick wall, time and time again. Last spring we ran into that wall in Kenora.

The issue of Sunday shopping came up and at the time we thought council made the right decision, to hold a public meeting. The meeting, we thought, would decide the issue democratically, but no such luck. After two months of interviews, press releases and then finally the public forum, Kenora council voted five to two in favour of Sunday shopping.

During the months of the debate, we basically dominated the issue. The local media did a poll. They did not publicize this poll very well because it did not go in favour of their beliefs. It did not go in the editor's comment, but the people, the public, the majority were against Sunday shopping. Our arguments fell on deaf ears, which I hope they do not here, because I do not like attending token meetings.

There were arguments put forward by Kenora council. Tourism was one of the arguments and, after listening to the briefs by my fellow people from Kenora today, I will even give some credibility to some of the things that were said. The thing is, I think, for any of you people who have been to Kenora, you would agree with me that living on the Lake of the Woods, the most beautiful inland lake in North America, possibly the world, people do not come to Kenora to go Sunday shopping. Being a tourist town, the small stores were allowed to open before; there are some very unique shops that did open. Now with the larger stores open, it is only natural that people are going to shop on Sunday, but I am sure they did not drive, as I said before, hundreds or even thousands of miles to come to Kenora to shop on Sunday.

The opening of the bypass is another argument put forward: if we do not have Sunday shopping, people will go on the bypass. I do not particularly know what the bypass has to do with it, but if I see Sunday shopping, I will probably take the bypass, because I personally am dead against it.

At the council meeting, the Sunday shopping issue was passed. There were councillors who tried to answer the fears of the labour movement. One councillor said, "We'd keep a close eye on the larger stores and make sure they didn't force people to work." With all due respect to the councillor, I think she had better get out from under that mushroom. We in the labour movement have been trying for years to stop the manipulation of employees by employers, and we cannot control it yet. This councillor has been in business and, as I said, I have a lot of respect for the person. She was in business, I believe she said, for 32 years, and she worked Sundays and allowed her employees to be off. If all business people were this honest, this dedicated and this down to earth, there would be no need for a trade union movement in this country.

Another councillor stated—and I am glad there is not a women's contingent here—"We're not pulling the old ladies away from their stoves; the students will do the work." What happens when you cannot get students? In Kenora—and I have talked to small businesses there too; my family is very much involved in the business community—small businesses are having a hard time getting people to work now. The management of some of our larger stores told their employees in the retail trade industry, on a one-to-one basis with no witnesses, "You're going to work, like it or not."

There was another councillor who said the present bylaw discriminates against larger stores. He is right; it does. But it also ensures the survival of the corner store. This argument reminds me of deregulation and free trade. We know what that has done. When you are not on a level playing field, you cannot compete. The free trade deal has shown us only too much of that in the trade union movement by a loss of 250,000 jobs in this country. The corner store cannot compete against the superstores.

In Kenora, two stores basically had the big push on—maybe one more than two, the presentation you heard today. But there were two that had the biggest push on. The others sat back and did not really say a lot. As you also heard, Woolco was opposed to it. They even asked their membership to get out and fight the issue because they did not want to open on Sunday but would be forced to do so. Within a couple of weeks of Sunday openings, six larger stores had opened, and I think on your briefs you are going to see seven; I found another one somewhere. I do not know where I came up with the seventh store, but I did correct it.

This in time will have a ripple effect, eventually having the service industry open, and there will no longer be a common pause day. When I say the "service industry," I do not just mean the service industry that is open now. The suggestion has been made today to let business run business; let everybody open. It is only a matter of time until our whole operation will be based on a seven-day week, not just in industry but in the retail trade, services, the town workers, everybody. When you have those many demands out there, you have to satisfy them, and it would only be a while and everybody would be working.

I am employed in the pulp-and-paper industry, where operating crews have to work on a seven-day week. Some of the greatest arguments for this, which have been brought up here today many times, are that it costs a heck of a lot more to shut down a paper mill than a retail store. You are talking about $200,000 per startup. In our last round of negotiations, we were forced to give up three of only five shutdown days we had a year. We now shut down, as of our last contract, only for Labour Day and Christmas. We already know, and they have told us in no uncertain terms, that in this decade the paper industry is going to run 365 days of the year. I ask this committee, where does this all end?

I have a few more comments. I jotted down a lot of stuff sitting here all day listening to presentations, including one presentation from the town council. I would like to inform the gentleman that I made a presentation at the council when it decided to go with Sunday shopping. I have never been in one of the stores that open on Sundays; I stay with the corner stores. So I suggest he go to the optometrist.

Another comment that was made here was, "Let business run business." Mr Carr and Mr Sorbara seem to think this is a really great idea. I will tell you something. You go out and tell those 400 people from Abitibi between 40 and 60 years old who cannot go anywhere that business running business is the right way to do things in this country. Tell the other thousands of people who are going to lose their jobs in the paper industry because the paper industry mismanaged the industry. The employees did not mismanage that industry. They even had enough to say in negotiations. For the last year, we negotiated with Boise Cascade, who admitted, "Yes, we mismanaged our industry," and they were not regulated before. I suggest that maybe we need a little more regulation in industry and in business.

I am open for comments.

Mr Sorbara: I am sorry I left you with the wrong impression. I do not support the notion that we should just let business run business. In fact, I disagree with the position that you take in your paper where you say in effect that we have to have the trade union movement and the labour movement because of manipulation by employers. My own view is that a good employer has a good relationship with a strong and vital trade union in its place of business. It is the lousy employers who fight the workers' right to organize and, if the workplace is organized, fight the trade unions' responsibility to negotiate a good collective agreement. I think healthy labour relations require both a reasonable employer and good representation on the part of the workers.

Our problem here is that the world has changed dramatically over the past seven or eight years. You say you hope this committee listens. I put it to you that, collectively, about 75% or 80% of the people of this province—workers, trade union and non-union workers, people who are out of the workforce entirely, people who work a few days a week, all sorts of people—now support the notion that stores should be allowed to open on Sunday if they want to open on Sunday. If we are really listening, should we not be saying to the government, "Look, that's the will of the people"? What is wrong with that? If in your union you voted 80% to accept a collective agreement, should the 20% who say they disagree with the terms of the collective agreement prevail and the contract not be signed? Who is it that is not listening?

Mr Canfield: To answer that, if we vote 80% in favour of a collective agreement, that collective agreement entails the people who were voting on it. We heard a lot about referenda today, and you are saying that 75% of the people are in favour of Sunday shopping, yet I heard 70% of workers do not want to work on Sunday.

Mr Sorbara: That is simply not so.

Mr Canfield: So whose voice are we hearing?

Mr Sorbara: Okay, let's say that 100% of the workers do not want to work on Sunday. That is not a problem because the government, in its wisdom, has allowed every single worker who would prefer not to work on Sunday to phone in with 48 hours' notice and not have to work, with no recrimination whatever. I suggest to you that you do not have that right at Boise Cascade or at Abitibi, to absolutely refuse without any justification whatever. We are protecting the workers, so we do not have to worry about that 70%.

That aside, 75% of the people, not just in Kenora but right around Ontario, would prefer to allow stores to open. Businesses would prefer to remain open. Some would prefer to remain closed, and they have the right to do that. Why is it undemocratic to allow that to take place?

Mr Canfield: There are a lot of things in the Labour Relations Act. If you for one minute believe that business people stick to that book like a Bible, you are under an awful big mushroom too. I can tell you there are a lot of people out there who manipulate that Labour Relations Act like you would not believe. I hear from people every day who do not get paid for holidays, and I am not talking odd cases; I am talking in Kenora about hundreds of cases.

Mr Sorbara: I am aware of that because as an MPP I have people coming to my offices complaining when that happens. I am aware of it because for two years I was Minister of Labour. In all that time, I have never had a retail worker come to my constituency office or come to me as Minister of Labour to tell me that his or her employer has been jacking him around or forcing her to work on Sunday when he or she did not want to work on Sunday. That has been all the evidence before this committee, that it is just not happening out there. Maybe it is because there are not many jobs around. I agree that on health and safety, and on a whole bunch of other things, there are a lot of bad actors out there. But on this issue, if we have heard anything before this committee, it is that this is not really happening.

Again, 75% of the people want Sunday shopping. The workers are fully protected, and those who do not get protection do not seem to care enough to complain to the people to whom they should complain. How many complaints have you had in your labour council from retail workers who have been forced to work on Sunday against their will?

Mr Canfield: You better remember something—

Mr Sorbara: Answer my question.

Mr Canfield: I have not had any complaints from anybody who was forced to work, but to further answer your question, you better remember something. This is very new. Do you think people who have just pushed to get a law pushed through so they can open their stores are going to manipulate the thing the first year it is imposed? Wait for three or four years down the road and see what happens.

Mr Sorbara: I have taken too much time and Mr Poirier had a question or two.

Mr Poirier: This is exactly what I wanted you to expand upon. In your presentation, you mentioned that you had had some indications that people on a one-to-one basis were being intimidated and told that they will have to work. Does that mean that they were forced—"You work or you are fired"—or what? What have you heard about this? You are the first one in my week of hearings who is bringing this up. I would like you to expand on that.

Mr Canfield: These were comments made before the Sunday shopping bylaw was changed in Kenora. I would imagine and hope that these people went to their union, which would be the UFCW union. That is their first course to go through, their own union. Nobody has come to me at this time and stated that he or she was forced to work.

Mr Poirier: All of us have indicated that we feel a government law should strongly protect any worker so that he or she is not forced to work on a Sunday. That is not just the NDP. All of us believe this, and that is why the law should be damned strong. If you have any cases of that, please make sure you come forward.

Mr Canfield: Another side of the coin is that there are a lot of people, especially in the retail industry, who are working—maybe housewives, maybe single mothers—who are scared to come forward even to their own union. They are manipulated and they are scared to come forward. This is a fact. That is human nature. You tell me.

Mr Jackson: I am increasingly uneasy about the three labour movement representatives talking about women not having any representation here. Hopefully the situation in other parts of the north will be different.

I am trying to get a sense from your brief of what parts of this legislation you find good and which parts you do not. I am saying that very straight up with you because, on the one hand, you do acknowledge that tourism is an important part of the economy in your region and that there are jobs. By the same token, do you support that this legislation offers worker protection? As I listen to you carefully, I am getting a sense that you think the experience is that government cannot do the proper policing to ensure that there are not the kinds of intimidation.

I am just trying to understand if this brief means just that you are against Sunday shopping, period, end of sentence, or if we are talking more in terms of the details of what parts of this legislation you actually support and do not support.

Mr Canfield: If we did not have Sunday shopping, we would not have to worry about it, would we?

Mr Jackson: Your rhetorical response does not help the committee get a sense of where your labour sector stands on this issue. I will give you a couple of direct questions.

Is there anything in the legislation, or do you have concerns about layoffs that are directly related to those stores that previously were engaged in Sunday shopping and then find they are not able to under this legislation? Have you concerns about those layoffs and lost wages with respect to people who are no longer working as a result of that? I do. I am not part of the labour movement, but I have concerns about that.

Mr Canfield: To answer your visit question, yes, our labour council is opposed to Sunday shopping, period. As to these people who are employed, yes it is going to be a problem. Once you have got it in, it is like anything else, it is hard to get out.

In the instance of Kenora having Sunday shopping for the last year, mind you, in the summer not in the winter, where was the employer in the wintertime? If he wants to create all these jobs, why did he not stay open in the wintertime? Let us get to the bottom line. The bottom line is profit. It is not being Mr Nice Guy and employing people.

Mr Jackson: The bottom line is traffic.

Mr Canfield: The bottom line is profit.

Mr Jackson: It is traffic as well, which is defined by profit. Boise Cascade would not run extra shifts if there was not the market for the paper, and neither did Algoma when there was not the market for steel. That is traffic. That is the amount of inventory they can move, and the retail industry is very sensitive to that as well.

I am still not getting a sense whether you do or do not support this legislation. If you do not support the legislation I wish you would say so, and if you do support it tell us what aspect of it you do support. For example, with your statements about the role of business, do you support the concept that businesses can proceed to the approval stages at council once they get approval from their local chamber of commerce?

Mr Canfield: I agree with certain businesses being allowed to be open.

Mr Jackson: That is not what I asked you.

Mr Canfield: I am getting to that. I do not agree with the square footage regulations. I think they are too high. Anything under 7,500 square feet: I believe these are too high. I believe they should be reduced.

Mr Jackson: My question is not about the square footage, because no one has a consensus on that. My question is, if it was the square footage that you wanted, do you support the principle of a precondition of approval, being that the chamber of commerce in its wisdom decides whether or not that business should proceed? This is a legitimate question for the labour movement. Should the labour council be given permission? Is that not the balance in the partnership arrangement? I am just thinking out loud here. Why are you fully supportive that the chamber of commerce as an entity will make decisions and recommendations that are in the best interests of the workers?

Mr Canfield: It is a two-way street. You have to have input from labour and from the chamber of commerce. There is no doubt about that. If we had had a balanced council with the meetings we had last spring in Kenora, we would not have Sunday shopping today.

Mr Jackson: You have established in your presentation that council lacks balance. There are two bodies that are going to decide that these larger stores get permission to open: the council, which you have already indicted, and the second group is the chamber. I am trying to get you to answer, for our clarification, if you support the chamber having that power of decision-making as part of that stage.

Mr Canfield: I would support a three-way partnership in power but not just the council and chamber of commerce, no.

Mr Jackson: So as it stands it is insufficient in your eyes.

Mr Canfield: That is right, because you are dealing with three parties: business, labour and government.

Mr Jackson: You may have been present earlier today for one of the presumably larger stores that you are referencing, the Canadian Tire store. Do you have any difficulty with the manner in which the Canadian Tire store, as an independent proprietor-owned store, conducted its discussions with employees? That was shared with us in some detail.

Mr Canfield: That is a hard question to answer. You heard one side of how they conducted things with their employees. If Mr Bishop is on the up and up, I think he did a great job, but unfortunately I talked to a lot of people—I will not get into names of businesses or anything—and sometimes with these business people who are on the up and up and are so honest and down to earth, sometimes you get a different story from the people who work for them.

Mr Jackson: Let's be careful now, because you are here on the public record. You are not talking about Mr Bishop's approach.

Mr Canfield: No, I am not. I am generalizing.

1550

Mr Jackson: I asked you specifically about the elements of Mr Bishop's approach. I have done a lot of labour negotiating, have been to the labour board and I am familiar with the processes and protocol. I thought he had a sensitive approach in terms of consultation. It was in writing—God knows, that is an important element to workers—the stated guarantees of non-reprisal. I thought he had all the elements that you would require. Your unhealthy, perhaps, scepticism of human nature you are entitled to, but at least in that case have you cases in Kenora that you can point to?

Obviously no one at the Canadian Tire store complained to you. Have you received other complaints? When we asked the Ministry of Labour staff of this province how many complaints they had received when we had wide-open, unfettered Sunday shopping in this province, for the entire province they said between 15 and 18 cases. Were there a lot of those in Kenora of the 15 or 18 that were reported? There would probably be more; I will give you that benefit of the doubt.

Mr Canfield: I will not state whether anybody from Canadian Tire store reported anything or not; I do not think that is appropriate here. But in comparison it is amazing how unpopular the GST is and yet hardly anybody complains about that to the government.

Mr Sorbara: Come to my constituency office.

Mr Canfield: According to the media on the amount of people that have made complaints.

Mr Fletcher: You were talking about the erosion of collective agreements and what you have gone through as far as giving up the stat holidays is concerned. Being a member of the Canadian Paperworkers Union I know what is going on there. I look at what happened out west when Sunday shopping came in. Employees out there were getting double time for working Sundays, and as Sunday shopping came in it got knocked down to a premium and then got knocked down even more. I had a feeling, as you were talking, that this is one of the things you foresee, the erosion of the rights that employees have gained over the years through the collective agreement. Is that right?

Mr Canfield: That is right. I was going to get to that point before, the things that were done at the Canadian Tire store—as I say, I have no reason not to believe it is on the up and up—by giving the employees premium time. We know that in the foreseeable future, if Sunday shopping does come in, whether it be under tourism and then whatever the excuse is after that, in a matter of time we are going to have wide-open Sunday shopping, we are going to have wide-open services seven days a week in this country, and when we have that we are going to have the same thing that is happening in the United States right now: The premium time is disappearing. Year by year the people in the US are losing the premium time on Sunday, and the exact same thing will happen here. As one of the speakers said, we are five years behind; well, we are catching up rapidly.

Mr Fletcher: Is that the kind of social system we are looking forward to?

Mr Canfield: That is not the kind of social system the people I represent are looking for.

Mr Fletcher: Just another point, and this is more of a point when we are talking about what happens to employees and that no one is hearing what happens to employees: There were two staff who were suspended from a Steinberg's store in Kanata for wearing the button you are wearing, "Say no to Sunday shopping." They lost their pay and that went through the grievance procedure. Perhaps that is why the Ministry of Labour does not hear much, because it is going through the internal grievance procedure before it gets anywhere else and cases are probably getting solved at that juncture. Why is the labour council, and this is my last question, backing UFCW in this?

Mr Canfield: We are backing them for the same reason that the chamber of commerce is backing the Canadian Tire store, Safeway or anyone else.

Mr O'Connor: Unfortunately, time does not allow all of us an opportunity to speak and question every witness. I would just like to clarify one thing for the record. I believe one of the members opposite posed this question to the chamber of commerce: "Do you feel the Premier and the government of Ontario know your area better than you do?" I would just like to express, from the government's side, that we do not feel we know your area any better than you do. In writing the legislation over 60 groups were consulted. We are going around the province, and that is why we are coming and asking you for some input. I would like to clarify that. It might have sent a wrong message out that does not need to be sent out, especially in these difficult times.

Do you believe we are striking that balance between the rights of the worker and the tourist criteria concerns? The business community that had been voicing its concerns to us has been talking as retail operators in the tourist area. Do you believe we have struck that balance with this legislation or do you think there are areas that should be addressed?

Mr Canfield: I think this government has come a lot closer than the last government. At least they made a decision.

Mr O'Connor: I thank you for that. Perhaps you have to approach some of these chambers and work together with them, which should be very challenging for you. It seems to me that part of their problem is the bypass there, the tourist business that they are trying to bring, and they are confusing that. You have spoken on seven-day shopping and the tourist. If the road goes around the town, perhaps they need to come up with a better plan of attracting those tourists.

Mr Canfield: To help you out on that, as a matter of fact we did work together with the chamber of commerce on the bypass issue and did give our support on the concerns it had at the time, and also voiced some concerns we had at the time. So even though it was not unanimous with our labour council that we climb into bed, as they say, with the chamber of commerce, we did work co-operatively.

Mr Morrow: We know that 70% of the workers in Ontario really do not want to work on a Sunday. Does that concur with your membership or is that actually higher with your actual membership?

Mr Canfield: I would have a hard time with that. Our labour council is united as far as the Sunday shopping issue goes. We have never had anybody at a meeting who disagreed. There are people on the shop floor, we all know that. Nobody in our labour council has disagreed. We were unanimous in our efforts against Sunday shopping, unlike the chamber of commerce. They were not unanimous.

The Acting Chair: Mr Canfield, thank you for taking time out this afternoon for your presentation.

ONTARIO HOTEL AND MOTEL ASSOCIATION

The Acting Chair: I would like to call our next presenter, Mr Don Johnson from the Ontario Hotel and Motel Association. You will be allowed 30 minutes for your presentation. You can either do a 30-minute presentation or else do a shorter presentation to allow time for questions and answers from members of the committee. Please identify yourself for the record and proceed.

Mr Johnson: I am Don Johnson. I am president of the Thunder Bay District Hospitality Association, which is under the ring of the Ontario Hotel and Motel Association. I am sorry I have not been here all day, but I just arrived in town from doing Sunday shopping in Duluth. I was shopping, of course, and there were more people shopping there on Sundays than there have been every other day of the week.

I have a written thing. I just found out about this so I will read what I have and take questions from there.

The Ontario Hotel and Motel Association has been incorporated since 1925. The objectives of the association are to represent the hotel, motel and food and beverage industry in government and legislative matters; to provide means for members to exchange information on problems and new ideas; to review industry trends and develop forecasts; to provide guidelines for professional conduct in the industry; to provide educational programs and services; to provide guidelines for accommodation and operating standards in the industry, and to act as a focal point for organizing joint efforts among members for solutions of industry problems.

The Ontario Hotel and Motel Association represents over 1,200 members who own and/or operate large and small businesses in the hospitality industry, such as hotels, motels, taverns, restaurants, resorts and lodges throughout the province. The association's membership represents over 51,000 bedrooms, 150,000 licensed dining and lounge seats, employing over 45,000 people, which increases during holiday seasons.

We respectfully request that members of the standing committee on administration of justice consider the following: that Ontario encourage tourists and visitors by having unrestricted retail shopping on Sundays and holidays, in all areas throughout the province, as the market dictates, without any restrictions.

The Ontario Hotel and Motel Association is in favour of unrestricted Sunday and holiday shopping. We feel that unrestricted Sunday and holiday shopping is vital to our economy and the tourist industry throughout the province.

In a market-driven economy such as ours, consumers should be allowed the freedom of choice to decide which retail businesses and establishments they wish to patronize. The open and free market should be the final arbiter whether or not retail businesses function on Sundays and holidays, while still respecting the employment standards. Unfair and inequitable legislated restrictions are the worst form of economic blackmail in a free market economy.

As well, Ontarians deserve the right to work, earn incomes and profit from the production and sale of goods or the provision of services any day of the week. Economic prosperity generated in a free and unrestricted economy would benefit all Ontarians and their quality of life.

Retail shopping is an integral part of the tourism experience and represents a significant portion of the value of all tourism expenditures in Ontario. Most retail shopping, dining out, touring, sightseeing and recreation takes place on weekends. Shopping has become a family outing, and the majority of Ontarians and visitors favour retail shopping on Sundays and holidays. The popularity of cross-border shopping shows that Canadians will travel to the south, not only because they perceive the products to be cheaper, but also because of the ease of access to these goods.

This industry is the largest private sector employer, and the service sector accounts for 70% of all new jobs. Tourism is responsible for the creation of 32 full-time jobs for every $1 million in tourism expenditure. We employ professionals, skilled and unskilled, and are the largest employer of women, youths, indigenous people and visible minorities. There is no other employer that is capable of this range of employment opportunities for permanent or part-time employees of professional service staff whose educational achievements vary from elementary through to college or university background.

Tourism generated in 1990 direct expenditures of $15.5 billion, with estimated total income of $22.5 billion and estimated total sales of $36.9 billion. It is one of the nation's largest generators of personal income, corporate, property, business and sales taxes to all levels of government, including $1.85 billion to the province of Ontario, $2.5 billion to the federal government and $300 million to municipal governments in 1989 alone.

The closure of retail businesses on Sundays has meant job losses to many, especially students who rely on this income for their schooling. Our members throughout the province are reporting a large drop in business. They strongly feel that the availability of Sunday shopping will alleviate slightly the slumping economy. Of our members surveyed, 75% have said that closing the stores on Sunday has meant a decrease in revenue. We recognize that other factors have also contributed to the decrease in revenue, but feel that the freedom of choice to open and work at retail businesses on Sundays and holidays is a means to reverse this problem. This revenue, to quite a few, means survival, and unless retail shops are allowed to open on Sundays to draw tourists and visitors to their respective areas, many will have to close their businesses.

Obviously the hardest-hit areas are the border cities. Ontario will remain uncompetitive and continue to lose billions of dollars worth of annual tourism sales unless we change and allow unrestricted Sunday and holiday shopping.

The hospitality industry is faced today with many obstacles and increased operating costs. In order to remain competitive and recapture some of the lost business from our neighbours to the south, we must have the ability to compete on a level playing field. Bordering American cities are wide open for retail business on Sundays and holidays.

Bill 115 does have some merit, and we appreciate the Ontario government's recognition of the value and importance of tourism in this legislation. We do, however, feel that interpretation of the tourism criteria would create a lot of confusion, not to mention an administration nightmare in time and cost. To limit the timing for municipalities to declare themselves as tourist areas is also too restricting, as circumstances could, and most likely would, change at a later date.

The concept of a common pause day in Ontario is outdated and discriminatory. Multicultural Ontario in the 1990s is populated with every religion and ethnic background, and to allow one faith, belief or ethnic custom to dictate the lifestyles of everyone is wrong. Our contemporary society shows that Ontarians work at all hours of the day and night throughout the week. Hotels, hospitals, transportation, to name just a few, all must work on a 24-hour, seven day a week basis. While some people rest, others conduct business and provide services. Their professions are a necessity to any community, and I do not believe their quality of life is diminished by their work schedules. We must provide these products, experiences and services to our customers when they want them or risk losing them to other competing jurisdictions.

We appreciate that the proposed amendments to part XI-B of the Employment Standards Act recognize the operating realities of our industry. It is most important that all employers retain the right to schedule work and dictate work schedules. It has been reported that out of more than 10,000 inquiries and complaints registered with the employment standards branch of the Ontario Ministry of Labour in 1990, fewer than 15 were related to the right of retail workers to refuse to work on Sundays and holidays.

In closing, I ask that you bring Ontario forward and that we become once again the province to lead. We have a tendency to live in the past, remembering how mother was home in the kitchen and the smell of fresh baking greeted us as we returned home from school. But we all know times have changed, and we must also change, not only to keep up with the times but to take the leadership role in this changing society. We always remember the good things in the past, but we also remember that change is good, and change is what keeps us alive.

What happened when stores were allowed to open on Sundays? Has the public been asked, both workers and shoppers? We have to grow up. We always want what our memories think is best, but does that mean we hold back progress? We are constantly being told that we live in a free world where we have the freedom of choice. The freedom of choice to open retail outlets on Sunday is not a luxury but a necessity, because to many it will mean survival.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Johnson, I want to ask you a question about the workers in the area you represent in the hotel and motel business and retail workers generally, because after all, as the government puts it, the entire thrust of this legislation is to afford a measure of protection to working people, and that is, by the way, a very important and good objective in the minds of most of the people on this committee. After all, if we are not concerned about our working people, what are we concerned about? In fact, the government has stated that this bill is designed to provide additional rights to retail workers.

When the current Minister of Labour, the member for Hamilton East, Bob Mackenzie, was in opposition, his position was very much like the position of the labour council from which we just heard; that is to say, that retail workers will inevitably be exploited and the only way to protect them and to give them the right not to work on Sunday is to keep the stores closed. In fact, when our government introduced a bill to give strong protection to retail workers, he said that bill was not worth the powder to blow it to hell. The only way, he said, to protect retail workers is to close the stores, and I guess that is a valid point of view. In fact, the labour council right around the province is still advocating that view, although Mr Mackenzie and the NDP in government have taken a different position. They no longer are arguing to protect retail workers by way of keeping the stores closed, at least in those stores that might be of some interest to tourists, who of course are the rich people who can travel more than 40 kilometres in order to do their shopping.

I guess what I want to hear from you is whether, in your own experience and in the experience of your members, there is an underlying exploitation of workers, forcing them to work when they do not want to work and, in particular, forcing them into the stores and into the workplaces on Sunday when they would prefer not to be there.

Mr Johnson: I do not see how you can force anybody in to work on a Sunday, a Monday, a Tuesday, any day of the week. A Sunday is no longer a religious day, and calling it a common pause day—a Sunday is no different day than any other day of the week.

Mr Sorbara: That has a kind of new age connotation to it, does it not, common pause day?

Mr Johnson: Yes, common pause day.

Mr Sorbara: They do not even know about that in Chicago.

Mr Johnson: Let's have the common pause day on Tuesday. Having a store close, what does that create? It certainly does not create income. If I close my business down one day a week, what happens when it becomes two days a week? I do not make any money on that one day.

Mr Sorbara: Hold on a second. You have to appreciate my problem. My problem is that the whole thrust of this legislation, and we have heard it from the parliamentary assistant to the Solicitor General and the government members and the other ministers, is to protect retail workers, not to further religion. They do get a common pause day, but, by the way, this is not a common pause day for workers at Boise Cascade; it is a common pause day for retail workers and retail workers only, because they are being exploited. If the government did not protect them, they would have no protection.

Are workers being exploited out there? Are they forced to work against their will? If they are not being exploited, then the very purpose of the bill is meaningless. If there is no exploitation, why have the bill? If we can determine in these public hearings whether or not retail workers are being forced to work or, say, motel workers or hotel workers are being forced to work against their will, then we should have a bill, I agree. If there is no exploitation, we can pack up and go home. So what about it? Is there exploitation or not?

Mr Johnson: There is no exploitation of the workers. I do not know of anybody in Ontario who is legislated or anyone who has to work more than a 40-hour week unless he chose to do so to earn extra income, whether it be in my industry or in another industry.

Plus, saying that you are closed is not exploiting the worker; it is also taking a job away from another sector that needs that employment, the person who works at Great Lakes who needs that second job to make ends meet because he wants that colour TV, so he goes out and works in my industry and earns that extra money. You are exploiting him. You are not allowing him that chance to do that, because you are taking a whole day of that earning power away.

No one has to work more than 40 hours a week and no one is asked to work more than 40 hours a week.

Mr Daigeler: Before we go home, I do have a question that I thought perhaps the government members would have asked a long time ago, because the tourism representatives have very strongly made the argument that the common pause day is outdated. Would you go so far as to say that really all sectors of society should work on Sundays? You are very strongly arguing that you have the right to work and therefore you should be provided the opportunity. Should that therefore not also include the schools, government, us as well, and we really should go away from that idea of not working on Sunday at all?

Mr Johnson: You mean leave Sunday closed for—

Mr Daigeler: That is correct, yes.

Mr Johnson: I think that would be an impossibility, but I do believe that there should not be a Sunday closing day of anything. There should be a seven-day week of operation. It does not mean a seven-day week of an employee having to work that seven days.

Mr Daigeler: Right, but you would say that city hall, for example, should be open seven days a week.

Mr Johnson: Very much so. I have all kinds of things I need done on a Sunday that I cannot possibly do, and come along Monday, when they are open, I am working or I have to do something else.

Mr Carr: Thank you very much for your presentation. One of the questions I have, one of the feelings that have been put forward, is that as a result of this legislation, we will have certain areas that will meet the tourist criteria and they will open up. You obviously are familiar with some of the people who would be in that industry. Do you think that would give one region a certain advantage over another region for the people in your industry? As a result, do you think what we will probably see is that different municipalities will say, "Our neighbours are open, so we have to be"? Do you see it happening as a snowball effect with the tourism criteria?

Mr Johnson: No. A barber shop is closed on Monday, yet there are other salons that are open on Monday. I do not see forcing other barbers to open on that particular day. Usually they work alone. If Thunder Bay chooses to be open on Sunday, I do not believe Kenora will feel it has to open on Sunday or on a common pause day, be it Sunday or Tuesday. I do not see any effect on that, but I do not believe it should be delegated to just one area in the province, because I believe tourism affects the whole province.

Let's face it, I just came back from Duluth, like I said when I started. One common practice is that I can shop. I am not there to shop. I do not personally go down there to shop; I go down to get away. If I need a necessity and that store is open or I need something or I find something that I would like to purchase, I am capable of doing it there. Duluth is very much an area exactly like Thunder Bay except it has Sunday shopping.

Thunder Bay retail business relies a lot on Armstrong, Manitowadge, Longlac, Nipigon, Red Rock, Ignace, people who live outside what we call a big metropolis, which is Thunder Bay. They cannot get the items we provide. They have to come here. A lot of them work and can only get away on a Saturday and Sunday. We are restricting them to that Saturday to do their shopping, and that Sunday to do whatever else. Maybe they would like to do that on Sunday. We are like Duluth. They have a lot of Sunday shopping, but not because the people of Duluth go out and shop; a lot of people from outside come in. There are a lot of small towns around Duluth too that do the same thing.

Mr Carr: One of the feelings that have been put forward is that a lot of the people who are interested in having Sunday shopping are big corporations, and the word "greed" has been kicked around and so on. It would seem, listening to you, that a lot of your members are not greed-motivated, they are survival-motivated. I wanted to see how your organization would see handling relations with your people on working on Sunday, how you would work it out. My feeling is that unfortunately this has happened. In the modern society, we have to work. Workers and the people who run businesses have to have better co-operation. As one lady said earlier, "If I have people who are working for me who are unhappy and they've got their face down to the floor, it's going to cost me business." How does your industry see working it out so we protect the workers while ensuring that you can survive?

Mr Johnson: The retail business as a whole, the mainstay of it, including the hotel business, the part I know of, a lot of it is part-time labour, a lot of it is unionized, a lot of it is very small. Most of my colleagues in the business operate on the premise of who is available. My schedule, personally speaking, is completely open, and that does not include just Sunday, that includes every day of the week. Who is available? This is how we cover it. Nobody is chastised because "I'm going away this weekend and I cannot make it," or "I won't be in town Monday, so I can't make work." I do not restrict those people and I do not know of very many people in this industry or the retail sector, where it is a small clothing store, any shopping stores at Intercity Plaza or anywhere like that, where they demand you be here on this day. They work themselves around it. All employees may request on the basis that they are leaving, their husbands are going or their wives are leaving and they are going with them, and I have very seldom turned them down..

Mr Carr: This is maybe a product of the day and age, but one of the presenters—it was a small shop owner in a small part of Toronto—said he had a list of 200 people who wanted to work Sunday and he did not take time to argue with the one on the list. He just went to the next person because that person was more than willing. As you see it then, there would not be a problem getting people to work on Sundays in the area?

Mr Johnson: There would never be a problem getting people to work, not in this day and age. I mean, in my industry, especially for part-time people who are looking for extra money, this is when they are doing it, after hours, and they would prefer to do it on their days off because that affords them more time.

Mr Morrow: Just to make something very clear before we start, I think what we are talking about here is an overall quality of life, basically getting out of the rat race. The elimination, as I see it, of the common pause day will have a ripple effect on our society. We will see changes and spinoff effects in such things as day care, policing, busing. Where does it stop?

You have something that I think we all want here, and you mentioned it. Neither the Retail Council of Canada nor any other organization has done any studies or surveys on the financial effects of Sunday shopping, and you said you had done that. Can you please give that to us? Would that be possible?

Mr Johnson: Sunday shopping in our industry is survival. We are not looking for extra money to line our pockets with. All we are looking for is to pay our mortgages, to pay our taxes, to pay our employees. When we are not open, we make no income. So we cannot derive money from these closed days. When we are open, we can make income, and it helps us sustain ourselves. To be a small businessman in Ontario in these times—some may say the recession is over; I have not felt it yet. But if you are holding on to a large mortgage, employing 40 people and only making so much money personally, another day of opening is another day you are going to survive in this community.

Mr Morrow: You talked about section 11b, which is basically the Employment Standards Act, if I can think back on it. Do you agree with the worker's absolute right to refuse work on Sunday?

Mr Johnson: I agree with the worker's absolute right not to work on a particular day, not necessarily just Sunday. If somebody had a religious belief on a Sunday, that is a particular right. I would not steal that away from anybody. I would not steal the person's right to religious belief who celebrated on Saturday.

Mr Morrow: Just one last thing. I am going to answer a question you asked. The question you asked is what happened when stores were allowed to open on Sundays. The obvious answer for that is we had the worst damned recession this province ever saw.

Mr Jackson: Oh, for God's sake. How far did you get in school?

Mr Morrow: That's not very nice.

Mr O'Connor: I want to thank you for coming here today. Perhaps for some of the other members I could share one thing with them. Legislative research has provided us with some information, and in 1986 the Progressive Conservative Party had a task force going around the province. In fact, they went to 11 different centres and had over 130 oral presentations. Two of the main recommendations they came up with at that point were that the principle of a common pause day should be maintained and that employees not be required to work as a condition of their employment. I just wanted to share that with the committee.

One thing I would be curious for some input from you on: During that period that Sunday shopping was open, did your members in this area find you had an increase in demand for the service you provide? Do you have stats on that?

Mr Johnson: Not with me, but yes, we did have an increase in demand. As a matter of fact, why this Bill 115 affects our business in one part is that it is closing us, and we are open. If I go by my own scenario of my lounge, my lounge does better in eight hours on a Sunday than it does in 14 hours on a Monday or a Tuesday.

Mr O'Connor: Perhaps we could get some clarification on that point, because I do not believe you are correct in that. Could I just ask for some clarification on one point, whether in fact your business will be closed down on a Sunday?

Mr Johnson: It is now.

Mr O'Connor: Yes, okay. So it is not affected. We have heard from your parent organization, the Ontario Hotel Association, down in Toronto. They have shared with us that they felt that the biggest problems they are facing right now are the GST, the recession, high prices, which are forcing people to go across the border, the high dollar. We heard that from the Toronto people. Perhaps you could share some of your feelings on that, because you are perhaps a little closer to the border.

Mr Johnson: The GST of course affects. The high dollar, all those things, of course they affect us here. But as I am saying, for retail businesses to be open—the fact that they are closed on Sunday does not bring any tourists galloping towards our area. I mean, for one, we are fighting the cost of gas, the cost of alcohol, the cost of cigarettes as compared to travelling, which is what a tourist does. If you are an American and we are trying to bring you into our area of the country and you are paying so much more for gas, you are going to tend to stay south or go somewhere else. And to top off all these prices, to top all that off, you cannot shop on Sunday here anyway, or if there is some necessity that you have to get, you cannot get it here because the store is closed, or you have to hunt around town for a pharmaceutical that is open. You are at pretty much of a loss. If you are thinking of bacon and eggs for the Monday breakfast, you cannot get that here.

The Acting Chair: Mr Johnson, thank you for taking time out in your busy schedule to come in this afternoon.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Chairman, can I get one point of clarification from the parliamentary assistant?

Mr Mills: Is it 42 kilometres?

Mr Sorbara: No, it is not a kilometre question. It arises out of the questioning of Mr Morrow of the last witness. I have reviewed the various statements of Mr Mills and the Solicitor General himself, or actually the former Solicitor General, and the other statements that have been made by the government. My understanding was that the purpose of this bill was to create a common pause day, obviously for retail workers, because they are the only ones that were affected, and to promote tourism. I extract these from the very speech that the parliamentary assistant for the Attorney General gave in the Legislature.

What I get from Mr Morrow is that there are other purposes to this bill, and if that is the case, I think they should be put on the table. He suggested in this questioning (1) that the purpose of this bill was, to quote him, "getting out of the rat race"; and (2) that the purpose of the bill was a sort of an anti-recessionary measure, that this bill was going to come to grips with the recession, or at least he suggested that by saying Sunday shopping had something to do with bringing about the recession. Are these part of the policy objectives of the government in bringing forward this legislation?

1630

Mr Mills: The policy objective of this bill is, first of all, to protect and perhaps enshrine the common pause day.

Mr Sorbara: Is that for retail workers or for everybody?

Mr Mills: For retail workers.

Mr Sorbara: Only?

Mr Mills: Yes, to promote tourism and to put a sense of purpose and values into the quality of family life in Ontario through those measures.

Mr Morrow: On a point of order, Mr Chair: Do I not have the right as a member to ask any question that I feel fit to ask?

The Acting Chair: Nobody is questioning that.

Mr Jackson: But, for the record, he made an outlandish and stupid statement. I would not have jumped on his right to ask a question, but he did not ask the member a question. He answered it for him. He said that—

The Acting Chair: We are allowed to make comments also at this committee.

Mr Jackson: —we had a recession when we had open Sunday shopping and he rested his case that we no longer have it.

Mr Morrow: Can I ask for an apology, Mr Chair, please?

Mr Jackson: You made a stupid statement.

The Acting Chair: I beg your pardon?

Mr Morrow: Can I ask for an apology from the member for Burlington South?

Mr Jackson: You can ask all you want.

The Acting Chair: I do not think that was appropriate.

THUNDER BAY CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

The Acting Chair: Can we call the next presenters, the Thunder Bay Chamber of Commerce. You will be given 30 minutes for your presentation. You can either take the full 30 minutes or you can submit a shorter brief and then allow time for questions and answers from the committee. For the record, please identify yourself, and then proceed.

Mr Ringius: I am Dave Ringius, president of the Thunder Bay Chamber of Commerce. Our executive director is Rebecca Johnson, and our first vice-president of policy is Dick Dolphin.

Thank you for allowing us to meet with the all-party committee. I can recognize an all-party committee by the comments that were made. We have been through a one-party committee and it is a little more amicable.

Our presentation will be based on the articles we have given you in the kits. We will speak to the information as representatives of our business community.

The Thunder Bay Chamber of Commerce is made up of almost 1,000 businesses—900 plus—in Thunder Bay, and we represent the independent business community. The majority of our members are small with fewer than 10 employees, and a lot of them are in the retail and hospital-ity sector.

Our most recent survey indicates that our membership is in favour of Sunday shopping. More than 24% of our members responded to a mail survey. In questioning its validity, we have talked to survey experts and they say that a 24% response is above normal. On a mail survey, you can expect a 10% to 12% response, so we feel this is a valid survey of our members. It changed somewhat from our 1988 survey, prior to Sunday opening and free trade. At that time, our membership was not in favour of Sunday shopping. It was very close, like 47% to 53% at that time. Now 68% are in favour. However, our retail sector still does not support Sunday shopping. In 1988 they were adamantly against it. It is fairly close now, but the retail sector is still negative. We as a chamber have to represent our whole constituency, so our membership does favour Sunday shopping.

Also, there is a variance between the large and small retailers. The large retailers are against Sunday shopping. They feel that perhaps, being open seven days, the service will slide, that they are not going to employ more people, that they will give less service in order to support the Sunday shopping. Our local, smaller retailers, the independents, want the opportunity to add more value to their businesses; they look at the bottom line.

We have also included in our kits some articles from the various local newspapers. It will give you an idea of the local flavour of the issue at this time.

One thing we wanted to learn from our community was what and who should make the decision on Sunday shopping, or shopping at all. The membership indicated that the marketplace should dictate the times of opening, that they should not be dictated by government.

If there were a choice of which government should do it, if the marketplace does not, the survey indicated that the province should do it, that it should not be a responsibility of the municipality, that we should have one law for the whole province and not have different laws at the municipal level. But private business would like to dictate its own times of opening and let the marketplace settle the question.

The Thunder Bay Chamber of Commerce also conducted a survey at its annual trade show, which attracts more than 45,000 visitors and more than 300 exhibitors from the various business sectors in northwestern Ontario. That survey was similar to our business survey, the difference being that a number of people at the show would have been consumers, not just business people. They also indicated that the Thunder Bay community was in favour of Sunday shopping, and they also indicated that the marketplace should dictate the times of opening, not government.

We also have in the kit the Victoriaville survey. You have probably received it from some other presenters today. A mall in Thunder Bay did its own survey made up of retailers and service people in the area, and consumers. It also supported Sunday shopping. The retail sector there supported it more than our own survey showed.

The chamber will agree to its responsibility to affirm the tourism designation if the decision is kept at the municipal level, and to assign the tourist designation. The chamber would support anyone looking for that designation.

You have heard a lot about cross-border shopping. The Thunder Bay Chamber of Commerce was one of the first chambers in the country to recognize the magnitude of the problem. It was not a micro problem in Thunder Bay; it was macro. It has passed beyond our jurisdiction. At this point it rests with the governments to see what kind of level playing field we can make for our people in Canada, bearing in mind our standard of living and lifestyles here. There is a price to pay for that.

I am not sure anyone has any concrete data to indicate that Sunday shopping would stop cross-border shopping. However, during the trial period, during a recessionary time, a number of our members have indicated that it was a benefit, but they do not yet know the bottom line for the year.

One area the chamber agrees with is the 36-hour employee pause period in a seven-day week, but not necessarily on Sunday, because many of our members already work on Sunday. There is a small percentage who do not, so we certainly are in favour of that type of common pause day for the employee, guaranteeing time off in a seven-day period. North American culture is changing, and we are now in a traditional shopping mode. A lot of people shop in their own leisure time. Not everyone works a 40-hour week any more, and in a double-income family unit they do not always have the same days off.

Thunder Bay is the hub of northwestern Ontario. It is a major centre and a number of our mall outlets have indicated that since the Supreme Court ruling their trade has dropped. We are a draw for northwestern Ontario. A number of people come here. They leave their own smaller communities to come to Thunder Bay, and so from that point of view, Thunder Bay could be viewed as a destination point for weekend shopping. People from communities within 100 kilometres of Thunder Bay are now driving through Thunder Bay to do their shopping in Duluth, which is a three-and-a-half-hour drive anyway, so what is four and a half hours? It is no big deal when you are going that far. That is a concern to our operators in northwestern Ontario, and in Thunder Bay in particular.

In the multicultural society not everyone celebrates the same religious holidays, so we do not see that as an issue on Sunday.

Our data are based on our membership survey. At this time I would like to ask a question. There was a quote attributed to Mr Rae in the Globe and Mail of July 30. It said, "The arguments for Sunday shopping are familiar and will not change the government's plans," so I am concerned why there is an all-party committee on Sunday shopping if we are not going to be listened to.

Mr Mills: Can I jump in here? The policy of the government is that the common pause day is not on the bargaining table. That will not change. We are committed to providing a common pause day to retail workers in Ontario.

Having said that, we are here to listen to what you have to say about the tourist criteria, and I must say that what we are doing here is unique. Usually a government presents a bill and the regulations come afterwards. They do not even come before the Legislature. They are just put in place alongside the bill. What we are doing here is very open, and it demonstrates the type of open government we are trying to put forth. We are putting the regulations out into the open for discussion, and for input from people like you to see if we can define and refine and make this Bill 115 work better.

The common pause day is the law of Ontario. It is constitutionally sound. It has been challenged through the courts, and I am afraid that it is here. We are here to listen to you about refining the tourist criteria and how we can best promote tourism in Ontario, which we recognize as a very big industry. We have no intention of cramping your style, believe me; that is why we are listening.

The Acting Chair: Are you done with your submission now?

Mr Ringius: Yes, we are. We are open to questions.

Mr Sorbara: I want to congratulate you on your survey, and I want to suggest that the results you have garnered in your own survey seem to be replicated right across the province. Generally about 75% of ordinary Ontarians favour a more open approach to Sunday shopping, while 25%, and shrinking, are opposed to any form of Sunday shopping.

I was interested in the results you had in respect of large retailers and small retailers. The reason I am interested is because the submissions that have been made to the government members, to this committee, and sometimes by the government, claim it is the mean, greedy, large retailers, who are out to capture more of the market, who are driving the Sunday shopping debate. You are telling us, I think, that in your own survey, the large retailers were more generally opposed and the smaller retailers were more generally in favour of a more open policy in respect of Sunday shopping.

Mr Ringius: Yes, and again we do not have all the larger retailers here. We are not that large a community. We have Eaton's, Sears and Canadian Tire. We were not able to distinguish the large from the small. We are going on verbal communication and meetings with them. After we published the results of our survey, they called us to express their concerns. That is what we have heard from those sectors.

We also are very active in our retail committee. We have a number of small independent businesses involved, and we also have differences of opinions at those meetings. Some are totally against it and some are for it. The results of our survey do not surprise me, because our membership is made up primarily of small independent businesses.

Mr Sorbara: Now I want to take you to the draft regulations my friend Mr Mills was referring to, specifically to paragraph 3(1)4 of the draft regulations. That is the paragraph that requires any business that operates a store over 7,500 square feet to have included in its application for an exemption a letter of endorsement from the local chamber of commerce or visitors' bureau saying in effect that the chamber of commerce supports that retail business being open in that area on Sundays. Are you telling this committee that the Thunder Bay Chamber of Commerce is willing to take on that responsibility?

Mr Ringius: The chamber of commerce is willing to give a letter of endorsement to any member who wishes to seek that criterion.

Mr Sorbara: So you are not going to exercise any kind of function of reviewing the application? If someone applies, you will endorse it.

Mr Ringius: No, it has to be a member. If it is a member of the chamber of commerce, then we will endorse the application.

Mr Sorbara: What happens if the business is a non-member of the chamber of commerce? Just for purposes of argument, let's take the local Sears store, which is not up to date in its membership and applies to you for a letter of endorsement so it can complete its application to open on Sunday.

Mr Ringius: Our primary responsibility is to our membership. I do not know of any time we would go outside of that parameter. I do not have that mandate at this point in time. We act for our membership.

Mr Sorbara: I should tell you that the thrust of these draft regulations is for the chamber to exercise some sort of discretion, identifying what businesses in its view should and should not stay open. If you were to simply endorse every application from each of your members and reject every application from each of your non-members, you would be subject to a court challenge because you are not doing what the law requires you to do.

Mr Ringius: Certainly we would not want to be involved in any court challenge. That was not my understanding at this point, that they would have to get either an endorsement from the chamber or the visitors and tourist bureau, of which I do not believe you have to be a member to do that. We are here on behalf of the chamber members. That is whom we would support in an application. We do not have, I believe, the expertise to verify whether they should be open or should not be open at any point in time. I do not see where our jurisdiction would come into that.

Mr Sorbara: I want to suggest to you that in the example I presented, if Sears is not a member and seeks your approval and you reject it arbitrarily, you would certainly be subject to an application before the courts to require you to perform your function. How are you going to support and pay for that court challenge?

Mr Ringius: Our executive director indicates that what would happen would be reviewed by the policy committee. Then it may or may not be endorsed by the executive, depending on the criteria we would enter into. If I seem a bit vague here, it is because of some of the wording in the law and, I believe, some of the grey areas. If we get into the designations of tourism and who is going to validate that, I guess by your questions, Mr Sorbara, you are indicating that the chamber may be involved in making those decisions.

Mr Sorbara: The draft regulations require the chamber to make those decisions. If they do not do them judiciously, I can tell you as a lawyer that you will find yourself in court in pretty short order.

Mr Daigeler: Obviously this is a very important subject that Mr Sorbara brought up. I am sure you will want to look into that closely. We as a committee will be looking at that as well when we come to amendments to the bill.

First of all, I really appreciate the package you put together for us. You are the first one who has actually put together clippings from the local papers. I just skimmed through it and it is very interesting, very useful, because we get a feeling of what the broad community is saying. Thank you very much for doing that.

You also included—there was reference to it earlier—the results of a survey entitled Victoriaville. What is this? It does not really give any explanation and I just wonder, what is this Victoriaville and where is that coming from?

Mr Ringius: Victoriaville is a local mall. It is called Victoriaville because it is on a former street called Victoria Avenue, which the city built over into a mall.

Mr Daigeler: And the survey is?

Mr Ringius: The survey was conducted there, at a gathering place in the mall, among the shoppers and the business people who work there.

1650

Mr Jackson: I am reminded of the old expression that there are two things people should never watch. One is the making of sausages and the other is the making of laws. I guess we are being somewhat exposed to that today. It is quite apt.

On that point, I want to delve a little deeper because we have waited to talk to the chambers about this very sensitive point Mr Sorbara has raised. Perhaps I can direct my question to the legal counsel who is here from the Solicitor

General's office. For the benefit of the chamber as well, do you concur with the statement that the chamber would be obligated to process all applications, and does the legislation refer to any time frame for the regulations?

Mr Ceyskens: The draft regulation requires four things. The first three of them are not really relevant to the discussion here. The fourth one I will read out for the benefit of those who do not have the material in front of them. It reads as follows:

"If there is a chamber of commerce, a convention and visitors bureau or a similar organization serving the area being considered, a letter indicating that the organization, or if there is more than one of them, one of those organizations, supports the opening of the retail business establishments in that area on a holiday."

That is one element of what is required for an application. If there is none of the organizations named in paragraph 4, then the person applying does not have to resort to paragraph 4. If there is any one of those organizations available—for example, if there is not a chamber of commerce but there is a convention and visitors bureau, then the applicant would have to go to the convention and visitors bureau. In brief, to summarize, the applicant would have to resort to that provision unless there are no organizations available to the applicant in the community.

The second part of Mr Jackson's question relates to a time frame. There is no provision.

Mr Jackson: I was fearful of that because I have had an experience in this very delicate area recently with a microbrewery that wanted to be open on Sundays for public tours. We had the local convention bureau's support. We went to the chamber to get support, but when we got to council it said, "The legislation is such that it gives us options here to proceed," so what we had was a Mexican standoff. Ultimately the microbrewery went bankrupt, but the point I want to stress here is that we found a flaw in that legislation. It was not time-sensitive; it did not say. So if a non-member approached the chamber or the convention and visitors bureau—in my view, there is a greater risk associated with the convention and visitors bureau proceeding, because it is not at arm's length from city hall and regional funding whereas the chamber is totally at arm's length from the municipality—you could simply just delay the process because it does not say when you have to process the application. I certainly want that matter resolved in the regulations.

I apologize to the chamber that I am asking questions of staff, but if I do not ask them while we have time I may not get answers.

The other question has to do with if you have received or given a written legal opinion to the Solicitor General with respect to the legal implications of passing authority to each of those named groups. As I raised in my point earlier, the chamber is at arm's length of the municipality but some of our convention and visitors bureaus get some of their funding directly from their regional or municipal governments. In one sense, they are not at arm's length. Was that aspect of it looked at? Aside from the overall legal question which was raised about liability by Mr

Sorbara, I also have some concerns about the inappropriateness of a convention and visitors bureau which receives municipal funding giving those kinds of recommendations. That question is for legal counsel as well to determine what legal advice was given to the Solicitor General in this sensitive area.

Mr Mills: I do not think this is the appropriate time to get into that detail. When we get to clause-by-clause, it will be a very good and opportune moment. I do not really feel we should put legal counsel on the spot here in this forum to answer that sort of question.

Mr Jackson: Why have we paid a considerable amount of money to bring four or five staff members along on this road trip with us if not to respond to the concerns in the presence of people who have legitimate concerns about that aspect? I also remind the parliamentary assistant that we will not be doing clause-by-clause on regulations. This will not come up in clause-by-clause because the regulations are being dealt with separately. I do feel it is appropriate. You are censoring your staff. That is fine. But it is not out of place to request clarification on legal advice that was or was not given.

The Acting Chair: I think we have had it clarified enough now. Basically what you are doing is just delving into more minor details on that. Could you proceed with your questioning? It has been brought up now.

Mr Jackson: No, I asked a very specific question. It was not in general conversation. I asked a specific question of the legal counsel. I raised the question earlier about if these restrictions covered native peoples in Ontario. Legal counsel was kind enough to give me a straight, specific answer and direct me to a legal case by which he guided the minister in his recommendations. I am asking him the same question now with respect to matters dealing with the regulation.

The Acting Chair: The parliamentary assistant has answered to the best of his ability at the moment, and that is as far as he chooses to go.

Mr Jackson: You have the censoring of a staff member and I think it is absurd. We can get it under freedom of information, but that is ridiculous.

Mr Sorbara: Just to be helpful, we might get, for the benefit of the chamber, at least a legal clarification from counsel as to what the legal implication of this section is in the event that the Thunder Bay chamber decides arbitrarily to support applications of members of the chamber and arbitrarily reject application of applicants who are not members of the chamber. Would it be okay for legal counsel to answer that? After all, you have put them in the legislation. They need to know what the legal ramifications might be.

Mr Ceyskens: I am comfortable with answering that question. The short answer to that question is that there would likely be a motion for judicial review of the decision.

Mr Sorbara: Just for the help of the committee members and the chamber, a motion for judicial review means that the applicant would apply to the Ontario Court (General Division) and bring probably the president, the executive director of the chamber to court to force them to exercise reasonable discretion and not arbitrarily make choices. That will cost you money.

Mr Jackson: And timely.

The Acting Chair: Thank you for that clarification, Mr Sorbara. Thank you, Mr Jackson. Mr Fletcher.

Mr Fletcher: We have heard from chambers that the chambers are saying, "We don't want to do this." Suppose we take it out of the draft legislation? That is a possibility and that is what we are listening for. That is why we are here, to hear what you have to say. If you do not like it, then we can take it out. That is what the committee is going to do, so do not get upset right now, because there are no judicial reviews or anything. Exactly where do you see the chambers of commerce? Do you see a role for the chambers of commerce throughout Ontario as far as this legislation is concerned, as far as Sunday shopping is concerned? Do you see a role?

Mr Ringius: The role of the chamber is according to our survey, which indicated that they did not want any government involvement in stating when they should be open and should not be open. So if the short answer is, "Yes, we don't want to be involved in that," we think our members should determine when they should be open.

Mr Fletcher: Fair answer.

Mr Dolphin: I think part of the point here is that we as a chamber of commerce, and it has been stated in the Ontario chamber as well, are a little bit unhappy, in fact very unhappy, with the fact that things are being foisted on the business populace which has not had any input from any of the business people they are affecting.

Mr Fletcher: Oh, I agree with you.

Mr Dolphin: This is another type of situation where I believe we would be against having something for which we would have to give an action, for which we had no input as to how to determine, as a gentleman put it, the time frame in which we had to act or the impact it could have. As our president has stated very clearly, we feel we only have the mandate from our own members, basically. I think we are saying here that we are being put in a position where we have nothing to say about being put there.

Mr Fletcher: I agree with what you are saying and perhaps somewhere down the road we will get into that mode where we can say, "How can you help us out?" That is fair.

You said that back before, when Sunday shopping was an issue, the membership was split on it. What about when free trade came in? What was the position of the chamber of commerce on free trade and the GST across the province? I know what it was in my area. On free trade and the GST, there was not a big approach from the chambers on them.

Mr Ringius: The approach the Thunder Bay Chamber of Commerce took was to educate its members on the effects. We did not take a position one way or the other because there was controversy on both of those. Generally, I think the business community was in support of the free trade agreement. We ran seminars on opportunities under the free trade agreement and we brought in experts from across the country and exposed them to people not only in Thunder Bay, but we had facilitators in from the United States as well. We made it an opportunity. If it was inevitable, then we would go with it.

We took the same approach on the GST. We provided forums for our members and again, because we represent a fairly independent group of small members, they would all have access to high-priced tax lawyers and tax accountants. Our local firms here took their tax people and gave them free of charge for two seminars and we ran that. We had two sold-right-out venues to do that. We took an educational approach and we did not take a stance, one way or another, outside of supporting both the Canadian and Ontario chambers on their deliberations.

Mr Fletcher: Cross-border shopping has been blamed on the Canadian dollar, the GST and the effects of free trade. The one thing I remember you saying about Sunday shopping is, "Let the marketplace determine it." When the marketplace is determining where people are shopping now, why should we try to do anything about cross-border shopping?

Mr Ringius: I think we have to look at the tourism aspect of the Sunday shopping thing for attracting tourists here, and it gets into a border issue as well. We are into a number of areas and the out-shopping thing is not for Thunder Bay to decide. It is the unlevelled playing field that we have from a tax standpoint and as an education process on the consumer.

Mr Fletcher: So even though the marketplace and the consumers are saying, "We want lower prices," and they like the lower prices, and the GST and free trade were part of the problem, and you took a non-issue stand on something like Sunday shopping and it is not going to have that much of an effect on cross-border shopping, you have taken that stand.

Mr Ringius: I concur. We do not have any concrete data that would indicate Sunday shopping at this point would have any curtailment of out-shopping. We do not know that at this point. There are no data.

Mr Mills: Thank you for appearing here this afternoon. I have said it over and over again and I really mean it: We are here to listen and take into consideration all the things you have said.

I would like to change my direction at this time. I have heard here that we live in a time of changes. The other presenter said we are in a shopping mode, I believe. It is charge everywhere, shop, shop, shop. We cannot leave anything unturned, and notwithstanding the fact that we shop six days a week, we really have to shop seven. A long time ago when I went to school we learned a poem. I believe it was by Tennyson and it says:

What is life if, full of care,
We have no time to stand and stare?

I think that really is what the Premier was saying in his speech from the throne. We really should look at the quality of life and what all this does for Ontarians as a whole.

Apart from those of one or two of the labour organizations, I am rather disappointed at all the presentations I have heard from business and the presentations of the chambers and the tourist and hotel industries. No one has come to grips with what it means to Ontarians and the quality of life has been left out. I am disappointed at that. I thought we all had a vital interest in the quality of life here in Ontario as opposed to the quality of life in the United States. Some people say we are five years behind the times. If that is catching up, I hope personally we do not catch up for a long time because there is more to shopping and there is more to this than the eternal shop, shop, shop. There is another dimension. The Premier touched on this and I would just like to raise that today. I hope that as we go around the province, other people are going to address that issue of vital concern as we listen to people who seem to be neglected.

Mr Fletcher: Point of order, Mr Chair: Are we not allotted a certain amount of time? Our time has not been used for comment or anything else.

Mr Jackson: We are in committee now.

Mr Fletcher: Is that correct? They are still at the table.

The Acting Chair: Yes, they are.

Mr Fletcher: That is where Mr Mills was directing his comments?

The Acting Chair: That is right.

Mr Fletcher: Are we finished with these witnesses?

The Acting Chair: Yes.

Mr Fletcher: Are they going to be excused before any more comments?

The Acting Chair: We have to hear what Mr Sorbara's comment is.

Mr Fletcher: Are we going through each party to do another comment?

Mr Jackson: Maybe if you wait you will find out. Incidentally you do not have to apologize.

The Acting Chair: We do not know what Mr Sorbara had to say.

Mr Sorbara: I did want to make a comment following upon the comments of Mr Mills which, I regret to say, I found somewhat regrettable and unfortunate. If my friend the member for Guelph prefers that the presenters step back from the table, I am certainly willing to defer until that happens. You may rule that there is no more time for anyone to say anything.

My point, and it is a quick point, is that I do not think any of the people who presented to us today are advocating that we simply cede our values to American values. I think all the presenters, both those who were for Sunday shopping and against Sunday shopping, were genuinely trying to help this committee come to grips with an issue that it seems Ontario must consider in a public fashion every few years. I say to the parliamentary assistant to the Solicitor General that he should not misinterpret either the comments of the chamber or those of any other of the presenters. They simply presented to us the commercial problems they confront in their communities.

If we take the attitude that we are somehow trying to denigrate our quality of life—I know that the chamber has at the centre of its values a high quality of life in Thunder Bay.

The world is with us late in Sault,
Getting and spending we lay waste our powers,
Little we see in nature that is ours.

That is another poem and it was written when no one could buy anything on Sunday in Ontario.

We have always been concerned about those things, and all of us here are concerned about a high quality of life. Those who ask this committee to take a different view and consider the possibility of opening up the hours on Sunday ought not to be accused in a public forum of somehow reducing the quality of life of our citizens. I reject the comment and I do not think it is appropriate after the comments of the chamber.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, Mr Sorbara. I believe the chamber was about to make its own response to Mr Mills's comment. Please go ahead.

Ms Johnson: Yes, I was. I guess I take exception that we are not concerned about the quality of life, not only within our chamber of commerce, but certainly within our community of Thunder Bay. We are very concerned about that. Did we bring in that quotation to this table? No, we did not, sir. But I would say we are looking at what we feel is best for our community.

Our community has changed in the last few years and in fact our survey has changed, as our president has already noted to you. There is a change in our environment, not only in Thunder Bay but in Ontario. If you would check with what your provincial government looked like approximately two years ago, you would see that Sunday shopping was a non-issue. People did not even want to discuss it. It has circled completely. In fact people, not only within our chamber of commerce but in the province, have said they want Sunday shopping. I think that is what you have to look at, what the people in this community want. It is a changed environment. We are very concerned about what is happening in our province and it is not only on this issue, but on everything. I would like you to be aware of that. Thank you very much, Mr Sorbara.

The Acting Chair: Thank you for your presentation this afternoon.

The committee will be meeting outside the door right after we adjourn. We will be taking off right away. I would like to thank the city of Thunder Bay for hosting this today. We will adjourn now until 10 am, Wednesday, August 7, at the Sudbury Senator Hotel.

The committee adjourned at 1710.

RETAIL BUSINESS ESTABLISHMENTS STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT DES LOIS EN CE QUI CONCERNE LES ÉTABLISSEMENTS DE COMMERCE DE DÉTAIL

Resuming consideration of Bill 115, An Act to amend the Retail Business Holidays Act and the Employment Standards Act in respect of the opening of retail business establishments and employment in them.

Reprise de l'étude du projet de loi 115, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les jours fériés dans le commerce de détail et la Loi sur les normes d'emploi en ce qui concerne l'ouverture des établissements de commerce de détail et l'emploi dans ces établissements.

The Acting Chair (Mr Cooper): I would like to call this meeting of the standing committee on administration of justice to order. This is a tripartite committee and we are studying Bill 115, the Retail Business Establishments Statute Law Amendment Act.

Mr Sorbara: What about introducing the new members of this committee? The makeup seems to change every day.

The Acting Chair: We have Tony Martin, the member for Sault Ste Marie subbing in today, and Sharon Murdock, the member for Sudbury will be a guest on the committee.

Mr Sorbara: Is that coincidental?

The Acting Chair: Obviously.

Mr Sorbara: Do we advise our new members of what we have been hearing over the past few days, that people are more or less anxious for the government to get out of the business of regulating Sunday shopping so they can get on with their lives?

Mr Morrow: It has not been summed up yet.

SUDBURY AND DISTRICT LABOUR COUNCIL UNITED FOOD AND COMMERCIAL WORKERS, LOCALS 175/633

The Acting Chair: We will start off by calling our first presenter, the Sudbury and District Labour Council. Thank you for coming this morning. You will be given half an hour for your presentation, and you can use the full half-hour for your presentation or you can submit a shorter brief and allow time for questions and comments from each of the caucuses. That time will be divided equally among all three caucuses. Could you please identify yourself and then proceed.

Mr Morin: I am Don Morin. I am from the United Food and Commercial Workers, and next to me is Barb Young from the labour council. Because of time and holidays, the labour council has everybody on holidays. We are going to combine our briefs and put one together and we are the next on the list, UFCW. I have to say to the committee it is your choice. We can take the half-hour for each or half-hour total, whatever. It is in the committee's hands.

The Acting Chair: It would be more convenient for both of you to submit your briefs and then we will do the questions and answers.

Mr Morin: We only have the one brief.

The Acting Chair: Well, each do your own.

Ms Young: Mr Chairman, Locals 175/633 of the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union would like to thank the standing committee on administration of justice for the opportunity of appearing before it in order to put forth the views of our members, both provincially and in the Sudbury area, as well as reinforcing the position of the UFCW Canada as put forth on July 29, 1991.

Local 175 of the UFCW is the largest local union of any union in Canada, and with Local 633 has a combined membership of over 45,000 in the province of Ontario, mainly employed in the retail and support industries. As such, our members have a greater stake than most in the Sunday shopping/working issues facing the Ontario government.

The Ontario Federation of Labour, with which we are affiliated, supports the position which our locals and the UFCW Canada are putting forth since many other Ontario workers are directly and indirectly affected by the Sunday shopping/working issue.

Locals 175/633 and the labour movement in general appreciate the government's efforts in bringing forth legislation aimed at enshrining a common pause day in Ontario and providing needed restrictions both on Sunday shopping and Sunday working. While this proposed legislation is an important step forward, Locals 175/633 have five main concerns with the proposed amendments to the Retail Business Holidays Act. These concerns are related to (1) the intent of the RBHA; (2) the municipal option; (3) the drug store openings on Sundays; (4) enforcement of the legislation; (5) the definition of a retail business.

In this presentation we will present our members' views on each of these concerns. We will also address three other issues related to that of Sunday shopping/working.

1. The intent of the Retail Business Holidays Act. The present act: The present act fails to recognize the right of workers to a common pause day.

The proposed amendment: The proposed legislation recognizes the need for and the importance of a common pause day in part I of the Retail Business Holidays Act. The wording in the proposed amendment to subsection 4(2), such as "shall take into account" and "should be maintained" is, however, too general. This achieves only a watered-down version of what is required.

Recommendation: In order to ensure that the intent of the Retail Business Holidays Act is consistently followed, the amendment to subsection 4(2) regarding municipal powers should read:

"4(2) The council, in passing a bylaw under subsection (1), must maintain the principle that holidays are to remain as a common pause day; that is, to ensure that they remain: "days on which most businesses are not open; and "days on which most persons do not have to work."

2. The municipal option. The present act: The legislation implemented by the previous Liberal government provides that municipalities have full control over the decision to allow stores to open on Sundays or other holidays. There are no regulations, no criteria and no principles to guide municipalities in making the decisions. The will of the municipal councils simply predominates. The provincial government has no way of stopping wide-open Sunday shopping/working. One only has to look at the high rate of applications for exemption that are presently in the hands of the municipalities for proof of the extent of this problem.

The proposed amendment: As proposed, the decision-making process would remain in the hands of the municipalities. In addition, the regulations and criteria of the tourist exemption as set out in sections 1 and 2 and subsections 4(1) of the new amendments are so broad as to effectively restrict no one. Under the proposed rules, decisions of the municipalities would be final and the province, including the Solicitor General, would not be able to challenge this decision. In the view of Locals 175/633, this proposal would lead to wide-open Sunday shopping/working and as a result would fail to enshrine the common pause day as intended.

Recommendations: The recreational, entertainment and the cultural pursuits of tourists as well as the goal of enshrining the common pause day can both be accommodated by the law. To accomplish this, Locals 175/633 recommend that the proposed amendments be changed to reflect the following:

i. The new subsection 4(1) to read:

"4(1) Notwithstanding section 2 and subject to the provisions of clauses 4(1)(a) and (b) below, the council of a municipality may by bylaw permit retail business establishments in the municipality to be open on holidays where it is essential for the maintenance or development of a tourist industry and where it is essential to meet the educational, cultural, leisure and recreational needs of the tourist; and

"(a) only retail business establishments in which the total area used for serving the public or for selling or displaying to the public in the establishment is less than 4,000 square feet; and

"(b) the number of persons engaged in the service of the public in the establishment does not at any time exceed four."

ii. The government must establish a committee of the affected stakeholders that will prepare and recommend a new set of viable tourist criteria regulations. The stakeholders should include the representatives of the affected groups, such as retailers, unions and government.

iii. According to the amendment, the tourist criteria as proposed would not form part of the legislation. However, we recommend that the new set of viable regulations established by the stakeholders mentioned above be integrated into the legislation.

iv. Subsection 4(8) must be modified to state,

"4(8) The council's decision may be appealed by any interested party to the tourist exemption board."

3. The drugstore openings on Sundays. The present act: The drugstore with a square footage of 7,500 or less may open on a holiday under the present act. Currently, these drugstores must dispense drugs, and the principal business must be the sale of goods of a pharmaceutical or therapeutic nature for hygienic or cosmetic purposes. No other goods are allowed for sale with the exception of sundries. Unfortunately, there is a widespread problem with these drugstores selling soft drinks, potato chips, candies and other foodstuffs which are considered sundries. In many cases, up to 80% of sales in these stores consist of products of a non-pharmaceutical nature. This occurs in spite of the ample opportunity to purchase such non-pharmaceutical products provided through the numerous convenience stores that are allowed to open on Sunday. To compound the problem, the absence of a restriction on the number of employees working on a Sunday or holiday allows some drugstores to dedicate extra help for the benefit of sales of non-pharmaceutical products.

The proposed amendment: In its proposed legislation, the government has not addressed the problem of large drugstores opening on Sundays. The proposed legislation also fails to put a restriction on the number of employees allowed to work on a holiday.

Recommendation: Locals 175/633 recommend that clauses 3(2)(c) and (d) of the present act be amended to read as follows:

"3(2)(c) The total area used for serving the public or for selling or displaying to the public in the establishment is less than 2,400 square feet;

"3(2)(d) The number of persons engaged in the service of the public in the establishment does not at any time exceed four, including the pharmacist, who must be present in the establishment during business hours."

Currently there are many drugstores with a square footage of 2,400 or less in many communities in the province of Ontario that provide ample opportunity for this population to receive needed medication or other prescription products, particularly in cases of emergency. Additional prescriptions and other medication can be obtained at various hospitals and clinics with on-site pharmacies open on Sundays.

The limitation of four persons, including the pharmacist, to be engaged in the service of the public, would allow the prescriptions or other medication needs of the people of Ontario to be fully met. Our recommendation would require pharmacists to be present during business hours in the establishment in order to attend to the prescription and other medication needs of the people, which addresses the real reason for drugstores remaining open on Sundays.

4. Enforcement of the legislation. The present act: Currently, the act provides for maximum fines of $50,000 upon conviction for illegal Sunday openings. Also, municipalities or the Attorney General of Ontario can apply to the Supreme Court of Ontario for an injunction to close an establishment that is opening illegally. However, there are no minimum fines. In many cases, the courts are imposing fines of $300 upon conviction, hardly a deterrent. Under the present act, only two parties, the Attorney General of Ontario and the municipality, are allowed to file for an injunction. Unfortunately these two parties are, in many cases, not aware of violations or are not interested in filing for an injunction.

The proposed amendment: The government has proposed minimum fines of $500 for the first offence and $2,000 for the second offence. We fully support the principle of the minimum fine. However, the proposed fines are far too low. We believe that the amount of the proposed minimum fines will not deter retailers from opening on Sundays. In fact, a retailer's profit for one day could easily surpass the amount of the fine. Under the proposed legislation, there would be no change with regard to who can apply for an injunction. As a result, we foresee the same problems of little enforcement and no action continuing.

Recommendation: In order to address problems related to the fine being an insufficient deterrent, and the lack of enforcement, Locals 175/633 recommend the following:

i. the proposed amendment of the minimum penalty, subsection 3(1), be modified to include, "For first offences, the minimum fine for conviction be $10,000, and for subsequent offences, the minimum fine for conviction be $20,000";

ii. subsection 8(1) be amended to read, "Upon the application to the Supreme Court by any affected or interested party, the court may order that a retail business establishment close on a holiday to ensure compliance with this act or regulation under this act."

1020

At present, legislation similar to Locals 175/633's proposals exist in the province of Quebec, allowing affected parties to apply for an injunction. This legislation has proved to be both workable and effective.

As noted, in the UFCW Canada brief, the cost of enforcement is considerable in the Metro Toronto area, and we have no reason to believe that justice is cheaper in the north, which reinforces the need for reasonable and effective deterrents.

5. The definition of a retail business: Under the existing act the definition of a retail business does not include club warehouses, such as price clubs. The flaw allows for giant stores, in the guise of membership clubs, to be open on Sunday.

The proposed amendment: The government has not addressed the existing problem relating to the definition of a retail business. As a result, club warehouses will continue to operate on Sunday.

Recommendation: To prevent the circumvention of the act by establishments such as price clubs, clauses 1(1)(b),(c) and (d) of the present act should be amended to reflect the following:

"Retail business' means the selling of goods or services by retail to any member of the public, including a member of a club or co-operative of any other group of consumers;

"Retail business establishment' means the premises where a retail business is carried on. Any space or stall in markets, particularly in covered markets and 'flea markets,' shall be considered to be a retail business;

"Principal business' means that portion of the business which accounts for 80% of the retail business establishment's gross sales."

Our general concerns: Sunday shopping/working and cross-border shopping: The members of Locals 175/633 in this area fully support and endorse the position and the reasons put forth by UFCW Canada.

Sunday shopping/working and tourism: According to the proposed amendments to the Retail Business Holidays Act, the tourist exemption as proposed would be granted by the municipality only where it is essential for the maintenance or development of tourism. As previously stated, the proposed criteria for the tourist exemption are far too broad and too general and would provide too much leeway for municipalities to operate as the sole decision-makers. As a result, the exemption as proposed would lead to wide-open Sunday shopping/working.

The geography of the north dictates that ease of Sunday opening for tourism purposes could lead to one centre declaring itself a tourist area in order to draw the residents of another centre three or four hours away to come on Sunday to spend dollars badly needed in the drawn-upon centre.

Clearly, the government has not achieved a balance between the establishment of the principle of a common pause day and the development of tourism. However, by accepting our recommendations, Locals 175/633 believe that the recreational, entertainment and cultural needs of the tourists can be met without opting for wide-open Sunday shopping/working and without one centre of commerce preying upon its neighbours.

Sunday shopping/working and the family: The amendments proposed by the government would lead to wide-open shopping/working affecting a significant number of workers and their families in Ontario. Locals 175/633 believe that these workers and their families have a right to a common pause day.

Retail workers and their families are directly affected by Sunday shopping/working; that is more than two million people in Ontario. In addition, police, transportation, public workers, maintenance staff, delivery workers and other support services for retailing, which represent another 250,000 workers and their families, would also be affected by wide-open shopping/working on Sundays. Ontario needs a common pause day for workers and for their families.

In conclusion, the goal of Locals 175/633 has always been the enshrinement of a common pause day for the retail workers, for workers in related sectors and for their families. The amendments to the Retail Business Holidays Act proposed by the Ontario government, while representing a move in the right direction, would fail to ensure that this goal is met and would serve to open the door to a further erosion of the common pause day.

We firmly believe that by accepting our recommendations, the maintenance of family values and the establishment of a common pause day can be realized. Locals 175/633 are prepared to work with the government of Ontario and other groups to develop and implement lasting, workable solutions which serve to establish a common pause day and at the same time strengthen the economy of this province and benefit all the people of Ontario.

The Acting Chair: Before we proceed with the questioning, coffee and juice are available in the far corner for anybody who wants them. We will allow about 10 minutes. We will be really flexible for each caucus. We will start with Mr Sorbara.

Mr Sorbara: Can I begin by asking you to explain to the committee in your own words why the UFCW would like all or most of the stores to be closed on Sunday?

Mr Morin: We do not think they should be open. We do not need them open, and why should they be open and shopping—people have six days now. The people who work in the stores have given up Saturday already. They work until midnight. Some work 24 hours a day.

Mr Sorbara: No, nobody works 24 hours a day.

Mr Morin: I am sorry. The stores are open 24 hours a day.

Mr Sorbara: So the stores are open 24 hours a day. It is against the Employment Standards Act and any collective agreement I have ever seen to allow people to work 24 hours a day.

Mr Morin: But people are working from 8 in the morning until 5, 5 to midnight, midnight to 8.

Mr Sorbara: Sure; shift work.

Mr Morin: It is a three-shift thing, and it is not a five-day shift, it is a six-day.

Mr Sorbara: And sometimes seven.

Mr Morin: No, Sundays are now closed.

Mr Sorbara: But can you explain to me why you want the stores to stay closed on Sunday?

Mr Morin: It is the only time the retail people of Ontario have with their families. It is the only time we can plan to say that we have time with the family, and if the stores are open we cannot possibly be with our families.

Mr Sorbara: But hold on a second. The previous government in its law and this government in its bill have given to every single retail worker the absolute, unequivocal, clear and precise right to have a common pause day on Sunday. They can refuse to work, without explanation or without reason. All they need to do, if they are assigned to Sunday work, is give 48 hours' notice and they can give notice for ever that they do not want to work on Sunday. Every retail worker will have that right. So within that context, why do you want the stores to stay closed?

Mr Morin: Mr Sorbara, just for your information, I am on staff and Barb and I both come from the retail section. I was a butcher for 25 years and Barb is still in the grocery business as a cashier. Until three years ago, I worked in the retail sector.

And you are right, we do have the right under the law, except when you get into the store situation, you walk up to the store manager of the company and say, "I'm sorry, but under my guidelines I do not want to work Sundays." "Oh, that's fine. You don't have to work." So you get your schedule the next week, and instead of working 8 o'clock in the morning or 9 o'clock in the morning to 2, all of a sudden you are scheduled 6:15 to 10:15 Saturday nights—only Saturdays. You never get any more Monday to Friday shifts. You go up and say, "I'm sorry, Mr Manager, the last five weeks I've had 24 hours a week and this week I'm down to 16." He says: "Well, I'm sorry. Sunday shopping is so important to us that we need the hours on Sunday, and if you're not prepared to work Sunday, I'm sorry, we don't have any more hours for you."

Mr Sorbara: I cannot accept that, and the reason why—

Mr Morin: I work in the business and I can accept it.

Mr Sorbara: I appreciate that, but I also work in the business. I worked in the business as Minister of Labour and I have been an MPP, and I agree with you that there will be one or two instances per community where that might happen, but as a Minister of Labour to whom those complaints came and as an MPP to whom those complaints came, they were so few and far between as to be non-existent. The evidence we have had before this committee from most small businesses and large businesses is that they do not have any trouble at all finding a sufficiently large workforce to run their stores on Sunday if they choose to be open.

I like the notion of a common pause day for everyone, if we could get it. If we can only provide it to retail workers, okay, let's only provide it to retail workers. We are giving retail workers the absolute right to say no, and any juggling around or screwing around with the schedule and the full force of the law comes down on the heads of the employers. You are a trade union person and you know that you can enforce that.

So given all of that, why do you want the stores to stay closed, particularly when 75% of the people in the province would prefer for the government just to mind its own business and let them shop if they want to shop or not shop if they do not want to shop or do whatever they want on Sunday?

Interjection: Or work if they want to.

Mr Sorbara: Or work if they want to work. I mean, hundreds and hundreds and thousands of people see the opportunity to work part-time on Sunday as something that will do them good. The spokespeople for the trade union movement and labour say no, they are not going to be able to work on Sunday. It seems to me that if we implement your thinking, the next thing we would do is to say to Inco, "You can only run your facilities for 40 hours a week because that's the only way we can guarantee that people will only have to work 40 hours a week." Inco workers take up Sunday work and they do it voluntarily and they do it through their collective agreement. Why can we not give the same freedom to the retail sector, particularly with the strong protection that we are giving to any retail worker who does not want to work, the right to book off? Why do we not give that same protection to the steel-worker at Inco?

Mr Morin: The first thing I want to say is that we are here talking about the Retail Business Holidays Act, we are not talking about International Nickel, which is a seven-day operation.

Mr Sorbara: But International Nickel is part of the district labour council.

Mr Morin: And the labour council is here and the president of the labour council is a member of 6500. He totally agrees with our presentation. I am sorry, but Inco works a seven-day week. They have two days. It is seven days a week for five days, but they have two consecutive days off every week. They either get Monday-Tuesday, Wednesday-Thursday, Thursday-Friday, Saturday-Sunday, and it is a rotating shift. My father worked for Inco for 40 years before his pension. They have two consecutive days off. The retail business people get Monday off, they might get a Wednesday off, they might get a Thursday off, they might get a Saturday off. They have one day off together, and Sunday.

Mr Sorbara: No, no, the bill that these folks are proposing says that every retail worker shall have at least 36 consecutive hours of time off. Now, I would prefer if they would bring in a bill that guaranteed retail workers 36 hours of work a week. That would be better, but in their wisdom, they are saying 36 hours per week, consecutive hours, off. Is that not a good idea?

Mr Morin: That is a day and a half at best. But they get Monday off and they have to work Tuesday afternoon at 5 o'clock, and that would be legal under our contract.

Mr Sorbara: Do you negotiate premium time for Sunday work for the stores that are opened?

Mr Morin: We sure do, in some of them.

Mr Sorbara: Is that not a reasonable thing to do?

Mr Morin: It is reasonable in some ways if they do open. But at the same time, our people—

Mr Sorbara: But even then you think they should close?

Mr Morin: Our people do not want to work, and when you go in to get a job in the retail stores, what is the first thing the store manager says when you come down? "I'm part-time. I'm going to school and I need a job." He says, "Well, we have openings in this store, but before we hire you, are you prepared to work Sunday?" If you say yes, you get the job. If you say no, you do not get it.

Mr Sorbara: But it does not matter any more, because if you say, "Yes, I'm prepared to work on Sunday," and you are hired on that basis, notwithstanding that, their bill says if you give them notice 48 hours before the start of your shift, you do not have to work on Sunday and the employer cannot jig around your hours, take any disciplinary action or do anything else.

Mr Morin: But I am sorry, Mr Sorbara, he can, because in every contract—

Mr Sorbara: But he cannot. It is against the law.

Mr Morin: Let me finish, please. There is a probationary period in there that says for the first 45 days the company has the right to hire and fire and we cannot grieve it as a union. All the manager has to do—

Mr Sorbara: You do not have to grieve it.

Mr Morin: We cannot grieve it and the manager just has to walk up and say: "I'm sorry, I'm not satisfied with your work. You're gone."

Mr Sorbara: I am telling you, my friend, under their legislation—

Mr Morin: Under their legislation they could not do anything. It is a probationary period.

Mr Sorbara: Under their legislation, even if you have worked one week, you can go to an employment standards officer and, if you are fired, get reinstated with full pay.

Mr Morin: For what?

Mr Sorbara: Within that one-week period, if you are dismissed because you refused to do Sunday work. That is the bill, and that is what we all support.

Mr Morin: But he has not been fired for not working Sunday. The manager has walked up and said to him: "I'm sorry, you've worked three days in my store. I don't like your work. We don't need your services any longer." What rights does he have?

Mr Sorbara: Can I ask you another question? If you had negotiated a collective agreement and 75% of the people in the bargaining unit supported the terms of the collective agreement, you would feel constrained to put that agreement into place, would you not, to accept that agreement?

Mr Morin: Yes.

Mr Sorbara: In Ontario, 75% of the people want the freedom to shop or not to shop, and that 75% includes retail workers, that 75% includes union people and professional people and non-professional people; people from every walk of life would prefer not that all the stores be open but that the stores have the freedom to be open if they choose. Why should we not be implementing in a democratic way the wish of the people in that regard, particularly when the one group of people who are supposed to be protected and given a common pause day—by the way, this is not a common pause day for steelworkers, this is not a common pause day for real estate agents, this is not a common pause day for media people, this is not a common pause day for the people that have to clean the streets. This is a common pause in this bill only for retail workers, and they have an absolute guarantee of that, and in the terms of the collective agreement 75% of the people say, "Give retail workers an absolute right to a common pause day but let the rest of us shop if we want." Why should we reject that collective agreement?

Mr Morin: First of all, you said 75% of the people. They were asked one question: "Do you prefer to shop on Sunday?" If the question had been put, "Do you prefer to work on Sunday?"—

Mr Sorbara: No, no, the question is—

Mr Morin: I am sorry; I never cut you off. I would like to finish my statement first. If the question had been put to the people, "Do you wish to work on Sunday, or do you wish to shop on Sunday?" then we would get the answer and your 75% poll would go down mighty fast.

Mr Sorbara: Let me just advise you that most of the people in the province, in fact every group in the province except for retail workers, are eligible for Sunday work. If they asked me whether I would prefer not to work on Sunday, of course I would prefer to work two or three days a week, but sometimes I have to work on Sunday. I have not asked the government to provide me with the same rights retail workers have. I acknowledge that retail workers should have that. But what I am saying to you is, given that they are guaranteed under this bill the common pause day, why should the rest of the people have to live in a world where all of the stores are closed anyway?

It was the case. The NDP, before it came to power, used to say that the only way to give retail workers a common pause day was to close all the stores. I have read so many Bob Mackenzie speeches on that theme, I get sick to my stomach. But even they, now that they have come to power, say we do not need to close all the stores. All we need to do is protect the workers with an absolute right.

Given that, I ask you once again, why should we be insisting that all the stores close?

Mr Morin: It is the only way to protect the retail workers.

Mr Sorbara: Oh, goodness.

Mr Morin: We do not need in Ontario an American economy.

Mr Sorbara: This is not an American economy.

Mr Morin: We have already proved it in the States. They are open 24 hours, seven days a week, and there is no more money, there is no more business, and people's lives are hell. In Ontario we have a good thing going. Why can we not protect people? The people of Ontario have to be like Americans and shop on Sunday, and I do not think that is true.

Mr Sorbara: My friend, this has nothing to do with American lifestyle.

Mr Daigeler: Mr Sorbara, I think, must have had a good night's rest. He is all worked up, certainly very keen to put forward some very important views.

My question is less direct. I would like to ask you what happened in that interim period, when the Liberal legislation was struck down and there was open Sunday shopping, what was the situation here in Sudbury and in the area? What was your experience?

Mr Morin: The majors all opened up. All the major chains opened up in Sudbury. As a result of that, there was open Sunday and they did business. I would agree with that. But in the long run, what the stores did was, "We're open on Sunday and we have to pay double time, so you have to cut your hours now," so we had fewer people working, not more.

Everybody is standing there and shaking their heads. I am in the stores; I am the business rep. What is coming through from the great big bosses up top in Toronto? "You're using 70 hours on Sunday. That's costing us 140. Cut 70 more hours on Monday to Friday." Those exact words came out of the big business. Those are their exact words: we paid double time. We heard it and we heard it and we heard it. We lost jobs. We would lose full-time jobs and we would have more part-time.

Mr Daigeler: If that is so, that would be an important witness, because we have not heard that before. If you have anything that verifies this, if you can provide that to us it would be very useful.

Mr Morin: There is no way of proving it. You are sitting in the store and you hear the store manager come down: "Cut the hours. I just got a call from head office." Bang, that is it. Sunday shopping, we have to cut our hours. We used 100 hours; we cut another 100 because we had to pay double time.

1040

Mr Jackson: Just on that point, are you saying that you hear about this but you do not ever record it, so you forget where this occurred? Can you not tell this committee companies that have done this? I guess that was what Mr Daigeler was saying.

Mr Morin: I can say it very clearly. It happened in Sault Ste Marie, it happened in Sudbury, it happened in North Bay, Parry Sound.

Mr Jackson: Those are the cities. What are the companies that did this?

Mr Morin: A & P, Miracle Mart, that I know of. I service them. I cannot say the rest.

Mr Jackson: And what they were doing was actually adjusting the total—

Mr Morin: Adjusting the total. In other words, if they used 70 hours on a Sunday—I am talking A & P; they had to pay double time—they as much as told their managers, "If you use 70 hours on Sunday that means it was 140. Cut that many hours off your schedule."

Mr Jackson: Let me ask you a couple of quick questions. First, your brief, whether I agree with it or not, is generally presented well because it is a very easy brief to read, and it is appreciated when you lay out very clearly what your recommendations are. We do not always get that. I want to let you know, for whatever it is worth, it is a well-presented brief.

On your recommendations about the common pause day, it is interesting that you suggest trying to define more what a pause day is. As you also say this is a common pause day for retail workers, why are you not asking us to make this a bill for retail workers and defining a retail worker so that the exemption flows from the worker and not from describing the activities of a pause day—the non-activities of a pause day, to be exact?

Mr Morin: We mostly agree with what the bill says. We just want to fine-tune the bill so it protects the workers in the best possible way.

Mr Jackson: I am hearing from you, and it is in print, that the protection is not there. Under examination and questioning you still insist that it will not be there.

In my seven years as a legislator, when I have been faced with this kind of difficulty, it generally flows from where we are causing our definition. I find it would be a lot easier to define a retail worker for their personal protection. This is a bill for retail workers. I am having no trouble with that. But the fact is that where we are getting into difficulty is trying to define a pause day and the pause day activities. Why are you not looking at more of a definition of a retail worker to define those who are clearly protected?

Mr Morin: You could go both ways. You could define what a retail worker is or you could define what the retail employees act is. We went the other way. We tried to define what the act would mean and what a retail business would be—which is a retail person. We just went the opposite way. We tried to define what a retail business would be so that under the act what would be open and what would be closed. I think your question and mine are the same thing. We just went to what a retail business would be. We want to define that very clearly in the act.

Mr Jackson: The second area: You fundamentally disapprove of both the Liberal and the NDP approach to a municipal option in terms of defining this. You feel there should be one strong piece of provincial legislation, period, end of sentence. Is that essentially your philosophical approach? Your brief says you do not support the municipal option.

Mr Morin: We do not support the municipal option if it is only the municipality that has the choice. We want some outside organization that can overturn it. What of the little town?

Mr Jackson: You want an appeal. Do not tip your hand completely; I know you want to turn it over. What you are saying is you want a fair appellant mechanism.

Mr Morin: That is right.

Mr Jackson: Would you consider supporting an amendment that would have an appeal to cabinet?

Mr Morin: That is one point, yes.

Mr Jackson: Since the new government has come on board, we have a whole bunch of these various boards and policing commissions and all that. I doubt we are going to get another one of those. And you certainly do not want to go to the Ontario Municipal Board, due to cost and the time it would take, especially since the activity would be allowed to proceed while the appellant mechanism is under way. I am just going to ask you directly, do you support an appeal to cabinet as a means of fair and arm's-length appeal? Because it is a municipal decision. It is not a provincial decision; it is a municipal decision.

Mr Morin: That is one option that would be open, I would think. There is a lot of talking on this bill, and as I said at the end of our brief in our conclusion, we are prepared to work.

Mr Jackson: There is not an appellant process in this bill now. The government has indicated on several occasions that although it is listening and it is listening well and it is listening carefully, there are not going to be any amendments. One of the areas they might consider amending might be an appeal to cabinet, because it is an amendment which is put right at their feet. Do you know what I am suggesting to you there?

Mr Morin: It would help, yes.

Mr Jackson: Now the cabinet is rejecting an appeal to cabinet. It is not a simple amendment that is arm's length, where they can say, "Somebody else didn't like it" or "We didn't consult with the chambers." They cannot slough it off to somebody else. This is now the government of the day rejecting our amendment which says they can go to cabinet.

Mr Morin: I will be honest with you. I am not up on the fine points of the law in this bill, where the amendments would go. I am looking at what the workers want. When it comes to the fine points of amendments, as I keep saying, the people in our union, our top executive, are more than willing to sit down with the government, with the committees, and iron this out.

Mr Jackson: The municipal jurisdiction over commercial and tourist activities on reserves: Are you aware that all commercial activities on reserves in this province will be covered by municipalities and municipal jurisdiction?

Mr Morin: As I said, I have no idea about the fine points of the law.

Mr Jackson: It is not fine points of the law. It is what we are told that this bill says, that commercial activities for aboriginals in this province are going to be decided now by municipalities, with no appeal mechanism. I am offended by that. I asked the labour councils in Lakehead and Thunder Bay last night, and they were also quite concerned about this. I assume you have representation of some form for aboriginal activities, commercial activities, and their workers.

Mr Morin: Within the Sudbury region, we have no representation of aboriginals at all right now on the labour councils.

Mr Jackson: I am intrigued by your 4,000 square feet. If the retail activities at Science North were 4,000-square-feet-plus, would you expect it to be closed?

Mr Morin: I think you have a red herring. Science North is by no means a retail business.

Mr Jackson: I did not say that: the retail section. There are a lot of tourist attractions that can still stand alone without a retail section, but there are large and growing retail sections, whether it is food service or souvenirs or art galleries. There is a whole series of expansion and opportunity in commercial activities which are occurring as an adjunct and form part of large tourist activities. I was just wondering if you were looking at a more absolute rule here.

Mr Morin: I would have to go back and say the same thing. Science North is a red herring. It is a tourist area, it is well defined as a tourist area and I think it would be one of the fastest to get an exemption to be open on Sunday.

1050

The Acting Chair: Mr Mills, the parliamentary assistant to the Solicitor General, would like to make a clarification.

Mr Mills: Our legal adviser from the Solicitor General just wanted to clear up something that was a little unclear.

Mr Ceyssens: Just before we go on, I wanted to raise one particular point regarding whether the act would apply to retail businesses operating on Indian lands. The matter arose yesterday very informally in response to a question by the same member and I provided advice as follows.

There was one case, to my knowledge, which has addressed it. That case is a decision of the British Columbia Supreme Court and it is called Regina v Duncan Super- markets Ltd. Again, I stress that is the only case I am aware of; there may be another case. But what that case decided is that, in the British Columbia version of the Sunday shopping legislation, that did apply to businesses operating on Indian land. Very simply, the way that came up is that a business operating on Indian land was charged and in its defence the business raised the issue that the province did not have the legislative mandate to address businesses operating on Indian reserves. That is it.

Because the BC Supreme Court ruled that way, that does not mean an Ontario court would do the same, if for no other reason than that the Ontario legislation is different. The BC Supreme Court is not binding on Ontario courts. I did offer that case because it offers guidance. It is not binding; it offers guidance. I do not think it could be fairly said that this act does or does not bind businesses operating on Indian lands. What can fairly be said is that in BC the court said that legislation did. If there are any questions flowing from that, I would be happy to answer them.

Mr Jackson: Paul was helpful yesterday when I raised this question with him and with the parliamentary assistant. I was advised very clearly that the presumption in this legislation is that they were included. If in fact we are now hearing today that, to be fair, it is neither in nor out, then clearly that is a problem for the committee and for the government to have the matter clarified. If in fact we are silent, as counsel will advise us, that simply says the courts will decide whether there can or cannot be jurisdiction. The Solicitor General of the day will be put in a dilemma, to go on to reservation lands and charge and then get into an expensive court process. I think we should at least acknowledge that this is a potentially serious matter that should be resolved. If anything, that is clearly part of the committee's mandate. It should not be a shame to the government that it has been overlooked, but it certainly should not accept the fact that it is neither in nor out, which is today's position.

The Acting Chair: I think it has been acknowledged. I think what we should do is proceed, in fairness to our presenters.

Mr Ceysens: Let me make one additional remark on that. It is an important matter and it should be addressed more than informally at this stage. It would be my respectful submission to the Chair that a formal legal opinion be drafted, for the reason that the committee should not be relying on, if you will, seat-of-the-pants advice at this stage. It is a matter of some importance. It should be in the manner of a formal opinion, and certainly that opinion can be arranged, but at this time it may be preferable to proceed in the absence of that opinion.

Mr Carr: I want to say how pleased I am to be in Sudbury today. Unfortunately, the last time I was here was in 1975 when we beat Sudbury, the year we went on to win the Memorial Cup in the eighth game, in two periods of sudden-death overtime. I hope people will not hold that against me this time around. I do not know if I have too many friends in Sudbury after that.

My question relates to the complaints that are heard with regard to people being forced to work. When he was in, the Labour minister, Mr Mackenzie—as you know, a very strong advocate all his life of the labour movement—said that during the period of unrestricted Sunday shopping they had heard 15 complaints that people were forced to work. My question to you is if in fact there are any more in the system. We only heard about the 15 because of the time delays, by the time you go through the procedures. Do you see that increasing substantially over the next little while? If not, in light of the fact that you said you know of lots of cases, why would your union not have taken the opportunity to bring them to this body, as is really your mandate as part of the union? If you are saying that there have been a lot of abuses, why have we not seen it in the actual number of cases? It may be, as I think Mr Fletcher pointed out, that there might be some through the system. Do you see us all of a sudden having 300 that have come through or is it a case of people not reporting them? If they are not reporting them, why would your union not be reporting them?

Mr Morin: You are asking a kid who is between 14 and 16 years old, who is going in to get a job, to come to a union he has never heard of before. He is just hired. He does not really know he is in yet and he walks into the store to get himself a job. He is about this high off the floor. He is scared out of his boots. He is looking for his first job. He is in high school. The store manager or the personnel person in the store, whoever it is, gives him an application form and says: "Here. We are taking applications and we are hiring. But just making a point, if we do hire you, we are looking for people to work Sunday. We really do not need people for anything else." What do you think the kid is going to say? Is he going to say, "Oh, I'm sorry, but I don't believe in working Sundays. I can't do this," and walk out the door and not take the application? He will take the application and say: "I need the job. I'm going to school. I need the money. I'll work any hours you give me."

Mr Carr: What I am talking about is the people who were already hired and, as a result of that, then were forced to work. I guess my feeling is this is a union. Would that scare a person? First of all, he would not be 14, because he could not work.

Mr Morin: Yes, he could.

Mr Carr: He would have to be of legal age. I say the problem would be the union's position should be to go up to that individual and say: "You're very new. This is what your union does for you. These are some of the safeguards. Here are some the things we can do and here are some of the circumstances where we can help you out." If people are scared to come to the union, you have obviously not done a very good communication job. The first thing you should do is clearly communicate to that individual in your union what your union is all about. I admit some people might not know, but certainly that would be the first thing you would do, is say: "This is what we can do for you. We're here to protect you. This is how we can protect you." It would seem either (1) that has not happened or (2) there is not the number of claims of people being forced to work you have made here today.

Mr Morin: I did not say they were forced to work. I said they were asked when they were hired if they could work Sundays. Who would refuse? The same thing with part-time, all right? They got their part-time workers. They have been there for a year. They are getting 16 hours a week at such and such a rate and, all of sudden, we are open Sunday and because there is business on Sunday and, as I just said, the cutbacks, the manager says: "I'm sorry. You don't want to work Sunday, but this week we only have eight hours for you because all these other hours are put on Sunday." What is the part-time person going to say? "Yes, I'll work Sunday." They need the money. It is no choice. These people, some of them, are going to university. Some are going to high school. Some are from broken homes. They have no choice but to work Sunday. It is not a choice of not working. It is a choice of, "Do I want the money or don't I want the money?" They would get the same hours from Monday to Friday if the stores were closed. This is forcing them into working Sundays, and just about every Sunday, to get them hours.

Mr Fletcher: Thank you for your presentation. I am very pleased to see you here today. As with Mr Carr, it is nice to be in Sudbury again.

Let me start off by going on what Mr Sorbara said. It is too bad that he is not here to hear this, because when he was the Minister of Labour one of his own colleagues, a person who stood beside him while he was the Minister of Labour—it was Mr Rick Ferraro, who was a Liberal at the time in the government—publicly stated: "Employees are jeopardizing their jobs by refusing to work. An employer will eventually find someone who is willing to work on Sundays." That is with the Liberal legislation that was there.

As you said, it was flawed then and it is still a flawed piece of legislation. The amendments we are trying to get through are hopefully strengthening the employee protection. As we promised during the election, the New Democrats are committed to a common pause day for workers in the retail sector. We campaigned on that and we are delivering on that promise. That is what we said.

As for the 75% who wish to shop, you really brought this around when you said that if we change the question to how many people want to work on Sunday, it goes around. The stats are saying about 70% are saying, "No, I don't want to work." I agree with you on that part.

As for Mr Jackson saying, "Who is going to do anything like adjust your hours?" if you go to what Loblaw's Supermarkets said in 1988—and Mr Jackson should have known this—Loblaw's stated, "If Sunday shopping comes in, the work schedules will simply be adjusted for existing employees to compensate for the extra day," again, exactly what you said was happening.

As for 14-year-olds working in supermarkets, they do, and they do it quite often. That is another situation.

Let me get to some of the questions I do have. We have heard from different different people in different areas that Sunday shopping is going to boost the economy. Is that your finding? Do you think that is what is going to happen with Sunday shopping?

Mr Morin: Sunday shopping cannot boost the economy. There is only so much money out there. What do you do? All of a sudden all this money comes into Ontario just for Sunday shopping? There is no such thing. You get the same money from Monday to Friday, Monday to Saturday, as you get from Monday to Sunday. If there is no more money, it is just longer hours, spread-out hours, worse service in the stores—and I want to put that because there are less people around to work—and there is no more money into the economy.

Mr Fletcher: As I was saying before, with this piece of legislation what we are attempting to do is not only protect the person working in the store—that is a priority with us—we also have a commitment to tourism in Ontario, and that is a commitment with us. I know it is a hard balance to strike. We are trying to strike a balance, and that is something the Liberals and the Conservatives could never do.

Mr Jackson: You have pissed off everybody. You are doing a great job out there.

Mr Fletcher: Do you agree with the statement that Sunday shopping, if closed on Sundays, is going to have an effect on tourism?

Mr Morin: No, it is not. We would like to define what is tourist, but the bill will not hurt tourist business whatsoever.

Mr Fletcher: Again, as Mr Jackson is trying to say, there are no amendments to this. That is what this committee is for. It is to listen to what people are saying, especially working people, because they are the people who are affected the most, people who have to work on Sundays. We recognize that. We are listening to your amendments, what you are suggesting. We are also listening to what tourism people are saying and we are also listening to what the chambers are saying. There are going to be amendments. There will be changes. We cannot just sit around and have a piece of draft legislation and say that is what it is going to be. I think you recognize that, even though some members may not.

I have one more question. If there is no Sunday shopping, are we going to lose all these part-time jobs?

Mr Morin: No. I have to go back to the fact that I service this area. They hired people and they closed Sundays. The same people have in fact hired more since. There have been no part-time jobs lost because of Sunday shopping. We probably have more now.

Mr Fletcher: There is one more statement I must make. We do have a new tourist area. It is called Mulroneyville and it is in Toronto. If you want to see what Conservative economic policy has done to the people of this province, you can go to Toronto any time and take a look at the broken hearts there.

Mr Carr: And pick up your NDP memberships. They are selling them.

Mr Morrow: The brief you gave us was very precise and very good. I want to thank you very much for that. I am also hoping that you can help us clear up something Mr Carr brought up. As chief steward for my local, I know a lot of things we handled on the shop floor would not have gotten to the Minister of Labour. For the Minister of Labour to hear this—there are 15 complaints. In my process that would mean that there were a hell of a lot more complaints in the stores and on the shop floors. Is that not true?

Mr Morin: True enough. What you get in government is the minority. The complaints are general out there, but can you carry to fruition every complaint? You cannot bring everything to the government. You cannot bring everything down.

Mr Jackson: Even to an NDP Minister of Labour?

Mr Morin: They all cannot get there. It is just impossible. You think the union is God up here, that we hear everything. Some of these members, if we can get in to see them once a month, we are lucky.

Mr Morrow: That is exactly what I am saying.

Mr Morin: He thinks we are in there talking to them every day. We are not. We just cannot be there.

Mr Morrow: That is exactly what I am saying. You must understand that for the Minister of Labour to hear one complaint even, it has to be extreme out there.

Mr Morin: I service the north. I have 2,200 people under contract and I service from Thunder Bay to Bracebridge. It is just impossible to talk to them all.

Mr Morrow: We also understand that 57% of the general public wants Sunday shopping, but we also know, on the other side of that, that over 70% of the people do not want to work on Sunday. Does that concur with your membership?

Mr Morin: That concurs, yes.

Mr Morrow: Or is that higher actually?

Mr Morin: It is even higher. Our people really do not want to work.

Mr Morrow: If you do not mind a question about membership size, what is your membership size, combined total, for Sudbury?

Mr Morin: We have about 1,000 people on contract.

Ms S. Murdock: I want to thank you for coming today. I have a couple of questions actually on your brief from pages 3 and 4. On page 3, under the recommendation for retail business, you are suggesting a 4,000-square-foot allowance, and on page 4, under drugstores, you are suggesting a 2,400 square footage. I am just wondering if there is any particular reason for the difference and how you would justify that difference being allowed under law.

Mr Morin: We are saying that a drugstore is doing most of its business on Sunday. It is not drugs. It is not pharmaceuticals. It is stuff coming out of the big stores. Why should they be allowed to sell it on Sunday? Like Pampers—they sell Pampers, they sell pop, they sell chips, they sell everything that a major store sells, and what are they open for? They are open because they are a drugstore. They are doing no drug business whatsoever. If you take Herbie's here in Sudbury, you cannot find the drugstore in it. You just cannot find the drugstore in it. You can find the grocery store, but you cannot find the drugstore.

Ms S. Murdock: So you are saying that because they do not specialize in the selling of drugs or pharmaceutical products, they should be reduced as compared to other retail businesses.

Mr Morin: That is right.

Ms S. Murdock: Okay. The second question I have is whether or not you are familiar with the tourist exemption criteria for the retail business under the regulations of the act.

Mr Morin: Not under regulations.

Ms S. Murdock: Because I think it would answer some of your concerns regarding that. Under this legislation, just so you know, a retail business operator, either as an individual or as a group, would apply to make an application to the municipal area. The municipal, unlike the previous legislation that we had, would have to follow certain criteria, first of all, in terms of a geographic region as to whether it conformed to tourism business, and that would be under six criteria. Then, and only then, if it was retail, they would have another four criteria to determine whether or not they were eligible to be open. If they did not meet those criteria, then they would not be allowed to be open, and from your presentation, I was not sure whether you understood that.

Mr Morin: I have not read the act totally, Sharon, no. I have not really done it all.

Ms S. Murdock: Just another clarification on the 36 consecutive hours of not having to work, my understanding was that if I was working on a Tuesday or a Sunday, whatever, till midnight, for instance, that I would not be allowed to be rescheduled to work for at least 36 hours, so that you could not work Saturday and then be given—

Mr Morin: Be back Monday.

Ms S. Murdock: Yes, you would have a full 36 hours from a Sunday shift before you would have to work again. I did not know whether that is what you were saying.

Mr Morin: I was just going with 36 hours, and he said to me 36 hours. I am not up on that part of the law, the technical part, but 36 hours, I would say, if you worked on a Sunday, they could work you Tuesday morning.

Ms S. Murdock: If you worked on a Sunday you would be guaranteed that you would get the Monday off.

Mr Morin: You would only get the Monday off, not Tuesday too.

Ms S. Murdock: No, you would not. But depending on when you got off on Sunday, right?

Mr Morin: With general Sunday shopping, it stops at about 4 o'clock at night—4 o'clock, maybe 5, maybe 6 at the latest.

Ms S. Murdock: In the evening, you mean.

Mr Morin: Yes, evening. Then you have already got 12 hours in on Sunday. So you take 24 hours on Monday, and Tuesday morning, you only get one day. That is what I was going by.

Ms S. Murdock: Okay. I thank you very much. I have no other questions.

The Acting Chair: Mr Mills has one point of clarification.

Mr Mills: I have a couple of points I would like to make. I thank you for your presentation. I want everyone here to understand the uniqueness of what we are doing here. There has been some suggestion, perhaps, that our minds are already made up. That is not the case. We are here to listen. Never before, when a bill was put forward, were the regulations put to the public for their thoughts about the draft regulations. This is unique, and I think it sends a message to everybody, the openness of this government and the willingness of this government to listen. I want to impress upon everybody that that is a first, and it is very unique.

Second, I would just like to clear up a query here on page 5, when you talk about the price clubs, the definition of price clubs. It is my understanding that the Attorney General has indicated to me that they fall within the jurisdiction of the act in that they are members of the public who have purchased membership in a public enterprise and are therefore subject to all the regulations this act will provide.

Mr Jackson: Mr Chairman, just to correct the record, I would not want Mr Mills to mislead the public that this is some sort of a unique experience. I can assure you that this is not the first time in Ontario that draft regulations have been discussed by committees, whether they are public or at Queen's Park. I do not know where he is getting his wild-eyed briefing notes from. I understand why he reads them, but it does not—

Mr Daigeler: The 40 kilometres tourism—

Mr Jackson: No, no, that is another issue. I am simply indicating that, first of all, this is the fourth time that a committee has gone around this province on this issue. It is getting absurd. But to suggest that this is the first time in Ontario's history for draft regulations is misleading. That is a function of his briefing note, not his basic understanding of the history of this province. So his briefing note is misleading, and I just wish to suggest that certainly that is not the case.

The Acting Chair: Okay. On behalf of the committee, I would like to thank you for taking time out this morning and giving us your presentation.

Mr Morin: Thank you.

Mr O'Connor: On a point of order, Mr Chair: Cam Jackson stated that he felt Mr Mills was misleading. I believe that is unparliamentary language. I thank him for bringing that up in the record, but the word "misleading," I think, is unparliamentary, and I would like to have that straightened.

Mr Jackson: It does not qualify in committee, first point you should learn. Second is, I clarified the point—
Interjection.

Mr Jackson: No, it can come up in committee. There are absolutely all sorts of efforts recorded—

The Acting Chair: Maybe in the future you could choose your words just a little more.

Mr Jackson: No, I indicated his briefing notes. He is parroting his response that has been prepared for him. I made that clear. He is not purposely misleading us. It is his briefing note which is misleading. I clarified that and I made that very clear. I do not think he intentionally would mislead this committee at all, but he is parroting his brief, and that is why he is with us.

Thanks for giving me the opportunity to clarify that.

The committee recessed at 1114.

AFTERNOON SITTING

The committee resumed at 1330.

SUDBURY AND DISTRICT
CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

The Acting Chair: I would like to call this meeting back to order now. Our first presenter this afternoon will be from the Sudbury and District Chamber of Commerce. Would you please come forward. Thank you for being here today. You will be allowed half an hour for your presentation. You can either use the full half-hour for your presentation or you can make a shorter submission and allow time for each caucus to offer some questions and comments. Could you please identify yourself for the record and then proceed.

Mrs Warwick: My name is Jeanne Warwick and I am president of the Sudbury and District Chamber of Commerce.

Mr Chairman and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today to make this presentation. The Sudbury and District Chamber of Commerce, now in its 96th year of leading and serving the Sudbury area business community, represents over 1,000 businesses throughout the regional municipality of Sudbury or, if you wish, employers. Our membership encompasses both the multinational corporation and the small entrepreneur, but primarily we represent small business, approximately 30% of which are retailers.

I am going to divide the talk up into three areas, starting with tourism criteria. When Bill 115 was introduced earlier this summer, the Sudbury and District Chamber of Commerce was surprised and dismayed to learn that community chambers of commerce and boards of trade were given the responsibility of dealing with applications for exemption under the tourism criteria, paragraph 3(1)4 of the act. The tourism criteria read as follows,

"If there is a chamber of commerce, a convention and visitors' bureau or a similar organization serving the area being considered, a letter indicating that the organization, or if there is more than one of them, one of those organizations, supports the opening of the retail business establishments in that area on a holiday."

The problem with this concept is that chambers of commerce and boards of trade do not see their roles to be that of a regulatory body. There is no, and there is unlikely ever to be, 100% consensus among any city's business community on the question of Sunday shopping. A community chamber of commerce having to decide on local store openings would only foster disharmony among its membership and the business community as a whole.

The likelihood of some members withdrawing support of the privately financed organization, if they are not in agreement with the decision, is a strong possibility. This responsibility could mean the end of an organization that does so much good for the community. To force this unwanted responsibility on to chambers of commerce is totally ludicrous. Rather, this responsibility should remain in the hands of elected officials.

To our knowledge, there had been no consultation with any representative from the Ontario Chamber of Commerce or a community chamber of commerce prior to the implementation of this regulation, which is in direct contravention to the consultative process that has so often been espoused by the current government. As well, the legal implications that could stem from making these kinds of decisions at the local level are not a risk that we are prepared to accept.

Second, holiday shopping: It has long been the position of the Sudbury and District Chamber of Commerce that we are opposed to Sunday shopping. Surveys on this question conducted with our general membership in October 1989 and repeated in March 1991 showed that 70.5% and 56% respectively of the members who responded said no to Sunday shopping.

It is interesting to note that during both surveys the number of members in favour of Sunday shopping did not increase, 29.5% in 1989 and 30% in 1991; rather, approximately 14% of the 1991 respondents were in favour of Sunday hours for certain types of businesses—for example, pharmacies, tourist attractions and convenience stores; and/or during certain seasonal periods—for example, Christmas or the summer tourist season.

We feel strongly that there is an essential value in the preservation of a periodic day common to most of society when the maximum number of people are free from their employment requirements to spend time with their family and friends and pursue spiritual, recreational and other needs and goals.

It is our opinion that the legislation, as it existed prior to the June 1991 amendments, sufficiently provided for individual communities' freedom of choice relative to its particular needs and circumstances.

Last, the Employment Standards Act amendments: We believe employees are appropriately protected in current legislation, where they are permitted to refuse Sunday work that they consider unreasonable and refuse work that is in contravention of subsection 2(2) of the Retail Business Holidays Act, work on holidays. We are unaware of any circumstances where employees do not find this current legislation sufficient, and therefore believe that the proposed amendments to this legislation are both unnecessary and inappropriate.

Mr Daigeler: Thank you for coming and speaking to us with the views of your chamber of commerce. We are receiving a different message from your chamber than what we have been hearing so far from the other chambers. Yesterday in Thunder Bay the chamber was arguing for wide-open Sunday shopping, although they too felt the Liberal legislation was the right thing and that we should simply leave it the way it is: that a community that wants to open has the right to do so and a community that wants to stay closed can do that as well, on the basis of their elected representatives. I think that was the principle, much maligned, may I say, during the last election and before by the current government. But perhaps people have now seen the wisdom of this particular solution. I think it respects the differences of opinion on this.

Even in your own chamber I do see a certain shift of opinion. Would you agree that there has been a shift of opinion in favour of not regulating it too much, but leaving it to the different communities and perhaps even to the different store owners to stay open? Have you seen that and observed it?

Mrs Warwick: Yes, and our statistics show that. We had a taste of Sunday shopping over the Christmas holidays and I think a lot of people really enjoyed it. First, what we are objecting to is not being consulted in the first place. Second, if we had been consulted, we are not regulatory bodies, nothing to do with—

Mr Daigeler: With your permission, I would like to come to that point in a second because I think it is a very important one, but just stay on the general question, because your presentation, as it were, is so different from the other business perspectives we have heard so far. The business representatives have been arguing very strongly that, especially in a time of recession, it is almost a necessity for them, a business necessity, a financial necessity, to stay open on Sunday in order to survive. I found that difficult to argue against. Have you heard that here in your community business owners are saying, “We need that extra day in order to make ends meet”?

Mrs Warwick: We represent small business. The small businesses find it so difficult working the long hours, and it is not financially viable for them to hire extra help on Sundays and they just get totally burned out. There are different opinions on Sunday shopping. What we are against is the legislation of who says what places can be open.

Mr Daigeler: We have had especially some tourism-related businesses or even a Canadian Tire store from Kenora coming to us to say, “Because so many tourists are coming to Kenora, we have to serve them and we have to provide these open hours.” Is that not the experience in your community, even though you have quite a few tourists coming here as well?

Mrs Warwick: We have to go by numbers in our survey, and the majority rules. This is what we are speaking about. I am sure towns that are cross-border shopping and towns that cater a lot to tourism would feel very differently about Sunday shopping.

Mr Daigeler: Mr Poirier may want to speak on that consultation question.

Mr Poirier: Pertaining to the vocation, I have always seen Sudbury as having a real, but also an immense, tourism potential. Would you be able to elaborate on how that has fitted in with discussions among your members? What do you see happening for a tourism vocation in the short term or midterm for Sudbury, and may that change the perception of Sunday shopping in Sudbury? Have you discussed this with your members?

Mrs Warwick: Have we discussed this with our members? Maybe Debbi Nicholson, our executive director, could help me out here.

Mr Poirier: Obviously, being an advocate of tourism, having come here so many times in the last 15 years, I have always believed that Sudbury has immense potential. I was talking about this with some Sudbury people last night and they were discussing it. It is really picking up. Where do you fit into that?

Ms Nicholson: Certainly we are advocates of a strong tourism industry here in Sudbury. We have worked hard and long at that over the last decade and certainly have seen a lot of change. Our retail industry, however, does not feel it is necessary for it to be open on Sundays as it now exists. As Mrs Warwick mentioned, we have seen a shift in the statistical results we have been able to compile ourselves, and perhaps in another two, three or five years we will see an even greater shift again. But for the time being the feeling is that definitely we do not need Sunday shopping.

Mr Poirier: Okay, but they are still open to allowing other store owners, even in retail, to open if they wanted to. I may not feel I would like to open on Sunday, but if other retailers in Sudbury want to open, that is okay. Is that what you have heard?

Ms Nicholson: No.

Mr Poirier: So they do not even want others to be open?

Ms Nicholson: That is right.

Mr Poirier: Because they are afraid their opening might influence their market share.

Ms Nicholson: Exactly, and quite often the larger employers, the national companies, for example, do want to open. However, the small business people are forced to open in order to maintain their market share. So it no longer becomes freedom of choice; it becomes a must in order to maintain market share. As Mrs Warwick mentioned, a lot of the very small independent retailers are then working 70, 80, 90 hours a week. They cannot afford to hire additional staff. Their overhead expenses become that much greater because they have another day of the week on which they have to heat and light their building and provide security and so on, so they continue to lose their profitability.

Mr Carr: Thank you for coming here this afternoon. You have covered this question fairly well, but I just wanted to really make sure that members of the government side heard it, and of course the parliamentary assistant has said the government is listening. It is with regard to the situation where the chambers have to become involved. I think this is one of the items where we may see some movement on the government side. We have organizations that have come across saying, and the chambers that have appeared before us so far have said: “We don’t want the responsibility. Whatever you do, just keep us out of it.” I would just like to reiterate that. Maybe, just for the parliamentary assistant’s benefit, you could let him know again that this is probably the number one concern you have with it. Is that correct?

Mrs Warwick: Yes. The chambers were not consulted, and if we had been consulted, we are not a regulatory body, so we are not interested in assuming that position or we are not prepared to accept the legal implications that flow from making these decisions.

Mr Carr: The other question I had relates to the split. We had some of the other chambers come in and give us some data on their polls of their membership. What they did is they also included the retail. There seems to be a real split between those who are in retail within chambers and those who are not. Those who are in retail do not want it in a lot of areas, but the ones who are not in retail see the spinoff effect for their business because people are shopping Sunday and then will go to the restaurants or the other businesses that are involved. Did you see a real split? You did not put the statistics in here, so it might not be something that you were able to quantify. Did you see a real difference in your membership between the retail and the non-retail members on this question of Sunday shopping?

Ms Nicholson: Perhaps I could respond to that. Certainly in the 1989 survey that we did we specifically identified retailers who were responding and other members who were responding. The retail statistics opposed to Sunday shopping were 83%, whereas the general membership was the 70.5%. What we tend to find, though, is that the general member, not the retail member but the general member, tends to perceive the issue as a consumer and as a convenience to them or their spouses or their families or whatever. Sure they would like wide-open shopping, perhaps 24-hour-a-day shopping, who knows? But if they turn around and look at it from a retailer's point of view or if they themselves in their own type of business had to be open, would they want to be? It is a very different question.

Mr Carr: And this time, was the reason you did not do it that you did not want the internal split? It could be very divisive. It is tough keeping members together, and if you break it down and you get sort of a split, it is probably best to take an entire organization. So you want the total numbers, not to get any internal friction. Is that why those numbers were—

Ms Nicholson: We always do it on behalf of the entire organization anyway, because we represent all of our members, not just a certain segment of our members. We did do it this time as well, but I do not have the figures offhand; I would have to check that. I do not want to give you erroneous figures.

Mr Carr: I will leave some time. Thank you.

Mr Jackson: I presume there is a visitor and convention bureau in Sudbury.

Ms Nicholson: Yes.

Mr Jackson: And there is a business improvement area for the core?

Ms Nicholson: Yes.

Mr Jackson: Have you consulted with them about this contentious clause, which embraces them also in terms of—because it can be any one of you. It does not necessarily have to be all of you.

Ms Nicholson: We have not spoken with the BIA about it at all. I was not aware that the BIAs could be. The legislation does not specify them, it only identifies chambers or CVBs. I have spoken with the lawyer for the city of Sudbury, not with the CVB particularly, and he certainly had some problems with it as well.

Mr Jackson: Yesterday when this matter was raised by two chambers who were before us, I requested that the government provide some sort of written legal opinion, not a rationale for why they have the policy—that is a policy matter—but the legal basis in terms of the impact it will have on those agencies named in the regulations. The parliamentary assistant indicated that that would not be forthcoming. It is my intention to approach the new minister directly to see if he would be more co-operative towards the committee. Would you support getting that kind of written opinion from the Solicitor General's office of the legal impact of you assuming the responsibilities as set out in this regulation?

Ms Nicholson: I think regardless of what the legal impact would be, we are there to represent our members. We are a privately funded organization, businesses—

Mr Jackson: I am a member of a chamber as well. I do not need a description of your chamber.

Ms Nicholson: For the rest of the members.

Mr Jackson: I think everybody here knows what a chamber is. What I asked you specifically was, are you and the chambers in this province interested in getting a legal opinion as to what the implications of naming you in these regulations will be?

1350

Ms Nicholson: I think to have that information would be fine, but I do not think our position is going to change, regardless of what that opinion is.

Mr Jackson: I was not suggesting that it would change your opinion; I was just wanting to save the chambers from engaging lawyers to get written opinions on it when we should know why the Attorney General is recommending it.

Mr Mills: I know we have to look through bodies here, but I am here and I can see the top of your head. Thank you very much for your presentation here today. I just want to say one or two things about the concerns that you have.

My colleague Mr Jackson has voiced some concern inasmuch as the Solicitor General is not forthcoming with an answer. I want to tell you here this afternoon that there are many issues being looked into by the minister and one of those issues is that very issue. So to say that it is not being looked into and it is not being addressed is a little bit off base.

Mr Jackson: On a point of order, Mr Chair: For the record, I did not say that he was not looking into it; I said I wanted to know the legal basis on which he came up with the recommendation and its impact. If the parliamentary assistant is now clarifying that the Attorney General put in the regulation without knowing its legal impact, then that is news to this committee. My presumption was that they did check with their legal department about its implications and I simply want him to share information which the ministry has. That is what I am looking for, Mr Mills. That is what I expect your minister will be forthcoming with.

Mr Mills: I would just like to further add that we have heard your concerns and I understand them, and I want to assure you that there is no intention to put the chamber in the position that has been suggested. This particular clause in the regulation was designed to ensure consideration of representation and participation of a local business association. I should point out as well that the involvement of a local business association pertains to all applications for a tourist exemption. I hope that clarifies this point regarding the involvement of your association, the local chamber, in this regulation. I look forward to hearing how your organization feels it can most appropriately be involved in the process forthcoming.

Mr Carr: Leave them out.

Mr Mills: I hope that clarifies our position.

The Acting Chair: Point of order?

Mr Daigeler: A point of clarification: Could the parliamentary assistant repeat what he has just said? Obviously this is going to be of significance to similar presenters, because the concern has been raised several times. What is the implication and what is the nature of that required consultation? I may be a bit of a slow learner, but since the parliamentary assistant I think is putting forward the official line, I would like to have it repeated, because I did not fully understand it.

Mr Mills: What official line do you want me to put forward? What do you want me to—

Mr Daigeler: On the nature of that consultation that is required, because the way I read the legislation before us, that is very different from the interpretation you just gave, so could you just repeat the interpretation of that clause you have just given?

Mr Mills: This particular clause in the regulation was designed to ensure consideration of representation and participation of a local business association. We are also saying that there was never any intention to put the chamber in the position that has been suggested here, in a legal position. There was never any suggestion that this position was suggested.

Mr Daigeler: It seems to be different.

Mr Mills: It was designed to ensure consideration of representation and participation of a local business association. Further to that, I can only reiterate what I said, that the Solicitor General is looking at this issue along with many other issues that have come up through these hearings.

Mr Daigeler: I think this is obviously going to be an issue that when we come to clause-by-clause we will want to take a close look at, but it is not the position that was put forward yesterday by the legal adviser of the Solicitor General, who indicated that in fact the chambers could be subject to judicial review, in other words, being put before the courts.

The Acting Chair: This is something better dealt with in clause-by-clause. I think in fairness to our presenters, we should continue on. Mr Sorbara?

Mr Jackson: A point of order, Mr Chair.

The Acting Chair: Mr Sorbara first.

Mr Jackson: Does he have a point of order?

The Acting Chair: Yes, he does.

Mr Sorbara: I will just defer to my friend from Burlington if he wants to make a point of order.

Mr Jackson: I clarified this point yesterday for the Chair, and I would just like to make sure that we are consistent on this. We are not doing clause-by-clause on the regulations. We are getting feedback on regulations, but this section is contained also in regulations. So it is not necessarily going to be resolved in clause-by-clause is my understanding.

The Acting Chair: What I was suggesting was that it would be discussed at that time, and in fairness to our witnesses, it would be more appropriately dealt with at that time.

Mr Jackson: With due respect, Mr Chairman, on my point of order, which was really your clarification, the chamber is very vitally concerned about the issue of how it is legally put in this position. We are told that it is only for purposes of consultation. The chambers are saying across this province that they do not buy that. We have also heard from the deputants that the legal counsel of the city of Sudbury has advised them that there are legal concerns affecting it.

I figure that this is an issue which is on the table. If we wish to remove it and revisit it in Toronto behind closed doors, that may be the wish of the Chair, but I think it is perfectly germane to the questions being raised by the deputants, especially in the city of Sudbury, where the municipality's legal counsel and the local business improvement area or convention bureau, whichever group, has had discussions.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Chairman, I think there is no doubt that there would be consensus among lawyers and people who have reviewed the regulation that if the draft regulation remains as it is currently proposed, the legal implications for a local chamber of commerce are very significant indeed. In fact, we heard that on our first day of hearings from the executive director of the Ontario Chamber of Commerce, and he made that point in no uncertain terms.

It appears that Mr Mills is now qualifying the government's position, and I think that is encouraging. I think that is good news. What I would recommend, however, is that, rather than simply suggest a change in the government's position in the context of public hearings, for the sake of all of us, the minister, even though he is new in his job, could make an announcement or issue a press release stating that the government is going to revisit that issue.

There is no doubt in my mind that the chambers of commerce and the convention bureaus in the province cannot assume that responsibility. The legal implications are significant and severe and the cost implications are significant and severe.

It would help us—

The Acting Chair: Mr Sorbara—

Mr Sorbara: If I could just conclude in one sentence—

The Acting Chair: I think the parliamentary assistant has done what he was supposed to do. He has clarified an issue, saying that it was never the government's intention—

Mr Sorbara: If I could just make the point that it would assist us in our public hearings if, as we continue through the province, we could tell representatives of the chamber of commerce that they no longer need to worry about that issue, so that in the limited time we have they would not have to bring forward those arguments.

I am suggesting to you, sir, and to the parliamentary assistant that the government simply needs to issue a press release that that approach is no longer on the table. It will allow us to narrow the focus of these hearings, and frankly, it would take a great doubt off the shoulders of not only the Ontario chamber but the chambers in every single community in the province. So I would ask that the Solicitor General do that and I would ask through his parliamentary assistant, who has been participating for a number of days now and knows the problem.

The Acting Chair: Mr Mills, would you like to address that?

Mr Mills: I would just like to say that the government realizes that there is a legal impact here and we are looking into it. I do not know what you want me to do, other than to say that we recognize it and we are looking into it, and when we arrive at an answer, if we do arrive at an answer, then it will be related to committee members. Right now we are looking into it, and I think that is very good.

Mr Sorbara: If I could just make the point once again, Mr Chairman, there is no doubt that the government is looking into it. It is looking into the entire legislation, and everything, I guess, is on the table, except for the things that he says are not on the table. But that means that for the rest of the public hearings, the chambers have to make the point over and over again. If the government would just say, "We're going to take that off the table," it would ease the burden.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, Mr Sorbara. If we could continue with the questioning, Mr Lessard.

Mr Lessard: I just want to apologize to you for that brief interruption and also for the fact that your organization did not get consulted. It is something that should have been done before, and it is unfortunate that it was not. I understand that you do not see the role of the chamber in being involved in the process that has been suggested in the draft regulations. Having said that, do you feel there is a role for the chamber in this issue?

Mrs Warwick: No. It is a very dicey issue, and there are so many different opinions on Sunday shopping. I am a perfect example. I love to shop on Sunday, but I do not want to work on Sunday. I work 10 hours a day, six days a week, and I have no time to shop, but there is no way I want to work on Sundays, thank you very much, or pay staff to work on Sunday, because it is not financially viable. This is a real sticky issue.

Mr Lessard: You have surveyed the members of the chamber with respect to this issue, and I notice that in your last survey, when you asked them whether they were in favour of Sunday shopping, the split seemed to be fairly close. Notwithstanding that fact, you make the statement in your presentation that you feel strongly that there is an essential value in the preservation of a common pause day. Notwithstanding the fact that there are some members who are in favour of Sunday shopping, there is a strong consensus that there should be a common pause day; there is support for that principle. Is that correct?

Mrs Warwick: That is correct.

Ms S. Murdock: Actually, I am glad you brought the regulatory aspect to the forefront here. I am just sitting in today, so I have not had the opportunity of listening to the previous presenters, but it is nice to hear that.

In terms of the criteria that are used to determine whether a retail business is or is not a tourist operation, subsection 4(3) is the one you are objecting to. What I am hearing you say is that you would like that subsection removed. But in relation to the rest of the regulations, do you have any thoughts or concerns on the six criteria that are required to determine the geography, whether within that geographic space you are a retail business for tourist operations, and then, after it is determined you have met two of the six, whether you fulfil the four criteria that are required? Does that meet your concerns?

Ms Nicholson: We did not look at those other points in any sort of detail, so we would not be able to give you a quick answer here—yes, we are in favour or no, we are not in favour.

Ms S. Murdock: I presume you read the whole regulation. When you read it, did anything jump out at you in terms of those criteria to determine whether a business would meet the criteria required under the provincial regulation?

Ms Nicholson: We were not looking at the criteria for which a business would have to qualify at all. Yes, we read through it, but no, we did not examine it at all.

The Acting Chair: Mrs Warwick, Ms Nicholson, I would thank you on behalf of the committee for taking time out this afternoon and appearing before us.

Mr Sorbara: Just a minor point of order, Mr Chairman. Can we find out on whose behalf Mr Lessard was offering an apology to our deputants? Is there something the committee did wrong?

The Acting Chair: On behalf of himself, obviously.

Mr Sorbara: He did well and I thought you did well.

ONTARIO HOTEL AND MOTEL ASSOCIATION

The Acting Chair: I would like to call forward the next presenters, from the Ontario Hotel and Motel Association. Thank you for being here this afternoon. You will be given half an hour for your presentation. You can either use up the full half-hour for your presentation, or you can make it a shorter submission and allow time for questions and comments from each of the caucuses. Could you please identify yourself for the record and proceed.

Ms Dozzi: My name is Melinda Dozzi. I am president of the Ontario Hotel and Motel Association, whose head office is in Toronto, but I happen to reside in Sudbury, where I have resided my whole life.

I am going to introduce my speech in a casual fashion if I can. It is like bringing you into my home and saying, "Oh, my gosh, she's going to bore us," like showing home movies. I am going to tell you a little about myself and my family, because with the group of people I represent, the hoteliers, the motel owners, the tavern workers, the lounge and the restaurant operators in the province, I must speak a bit about myself and my family.

I know you are very interested in the quality of life that people will have if they are forced to work on Sundays. Coming from the background I come from, I have seen my family work in this industry for many years. My family has been involved in the hospitality industry since 1937 in the city of Sudbury—54 years in business.

My father started with the first small hot dog stand in Sudbury—we used to call it the Milk Bar—with a grocery store and gas tanks. He worked long hours, as did my mother. I grew up in this industry. I have a brother and a sister who are still in the industry, my brother residing in Alberta and my sister being co-owner of the business we have in the city of Sudbury.

My dad remembers when wieners from Schneiders were 17 cents a pound and relish cost 48 cents a gallon and was stored in wooden barrels. His first cash register was a cigar box, and his biggest customers were the weary and very hungry men coming off the afternoon shift, 4 to 12, at the International Nickel Co of Canada, because our establishment was on what was known at one time as the Copper Cliff Road.

The grocery store we had was open to convenience customers, and I remember as a child hearing people bang at the door at all hours of the day and night asking for a loaf of bread or a pound of butter. I very well remember that during the Second World War, my dad was sick and my mother was pregnant and she was up at all hours of the day and night, sometimes at 5 or 6 in the morning, with the gas pumps, giving gas to the miners who were on their way to work, or sometimes they happened to be travellers.

We were all raised and educated in good schools, given a Christian education. Family and friends have worked for us over the many years we have been in business, and still do. Our family has employed many young people who have resided and still reside in Sudbury and others who left Sudbury a long time ago.

I went on to university, resided in London, Ontario, and graduated from there, and I taught high school for 17 years. So I have not been strictly in this industry all my life.

I recall, when I was a child, that many times my parents had to work on Saturdays, Sundays, but my father and mother always found time to take us, in the middle of the week perhaps, on Wednesday, Tuesday, Thursday, camping or hunting or fishing, whatever it might be.

There have been so many issues that have faced this industry over the years, and I feel Sunday shopping is one of the issues facing us right now. I recall in 1952 that my parents were interested in putting beer, liquor and wine into our dining room. We could not do that. It was against the law then to have beer, wine and liquor in dining rooms in Sudbury. Then, it was just the men's beverage room and the men and women escorts, or whatever it was, on the other side—I have to be careful.

Mr Sorbara: Ladies and escorts.

Ms Dozzi: I remember in Sudbury that in order to do this we had to go to plebiscite. Several hoteliers, along with my dad, put up the money to go to plebiscite, and we had to build 16 motel rooms in order to get a licence in 1952. We never wanted to get into the hotel business, but he was forced to in order to get beer, wine and liquor sales in our establishment.

I remember in Sudbury when we were closed on Wednesday afternoons. No retail outlet was open in Sudbury on a Wednesday afternoon. Now we are open on Wednesday afternoons. At that time, it was a big issue: "You can't open Wednesday afternoons. We have to have Wednesday afternoon off to go bowling, to go skating, to do whatever—play bingo." No one thinks about this any more. Do you ever go to a community which is closed on a Wednesday afternoon? It was in Sudbury. It was a big issue in those days about opening Wednesday afternoons.

I remember the big issue of Sunday movies. It was a no-no to go to the movies on a Sunday. Now on a cold winter afternoon, especially when you live up in this part of the world, other than staying home, I suppose, and being a couch potato and watching TV, etc, people go to movies on Sundays.

Mr Sorbara: Just ask Pee-Wee Herman.

Ms Dozzi: That was not fair. There was an item on the news this morning saying he is going to be hired in that type of theatre. Poor guy.

Anyway, back to where I was. I must say, because of the previous speakers, that the hotel association of Sudbury and the hoteliers and the owners of the licensed and unlicensed establishments are not supporting the chamber of commerce view that we are against Sunday shopping. Therefore, when they say they represent the members of the chamber of commerce, they really do not, because they are not representing our association, and we have many hotels and motels. We have nine full-service hotels in Sudbury and no one agrees with the stance they may have taken that they are against Sunday shopping. All our hotel members in this community are supporting the stance of the hotel association.

Just before I came in here, I was talking to one of the hoteliers, who has just returned from a trip to England and Ireland. He said that in England and Ireland now everyone is open on Sundays. Do you know why? The economy is so bad that they have to work on Sundays and they are glad to work on Sundays, especially in built-up tourist areas.

Just as an aside, and I want to tell you this has nothing to do with Sunday shopping but is something you should think about: I just left my property, and I had 37 people in for lunch from Southwest Tours in Madison, Illinois. The tour guide would not stop talking about how expensive it has been travelling in Ontario. Her name is Laurel Johnson. In fact, I am going to fax her tomorrow and ask her to send me a critique of her trip and where she has been. That is all she talked about, how expensive the food was and the accommodations and things in general in Ontario.

She said: "When you talk to these people, when you mention the price of your buffet or your salad bar, whatever it is, please don't say anything about 15% service charge, GST, PST, because it confuses them totally and they don't want to hear it. Say to them: 'We have a set menu' or 'We have a set price,' and that's it. Please don't introduce all these other issues, because it confuses them thoroughly." She said it was so bad that they have had to stop at several banks along the way and let people get extra money out. Because this was their last stop before they moved into Sault Ste Marie, Michigan, they were digging deep into their pockets to spend every little coin they had in Canadian money. They did not want to take it back with them, and they were asking my cashier for change in American money. They did not want any Canadian money left in their pocket. I realize it is not Sunday shopping, but it is something we should think about. It is sort of scary.

Now for the more formal presentation I have, because I must speak for the members of the hotel association in this city and also in the province.

Tourism is the lifeblood of this industry, but by continually heaping restrictions on what is already an era of economic uncertainty the government succeeds in cutting off that supply of blood. I respectfully request that members of the standing committee on administration of justice consider the following: That Ontario encourage tourists and visitors by having unrestricted retail shopping on Sundays and holidays in all areas throughout the province as the market dictates without any restrictions.

The Ontario Hotel and Motel Association is in favour of unrestricted Sunday and holiday shopping. We feel that unrestricted Sunday and holiday shopping is vital to the economy and the tourism industry throughout the province. In a market-driven economy such as ours, consumers should be allowed their freedom of choice to decide which retail businesses and establishments they wish to patronize. The open and free market should be the final arbiter as to whether retail businesses function on Sundays and holidays.

While respecting the employment standards, unfair and inequitable legislative restrictions are the worst form of economic blackmail in a free market economy.

As well, Ontarians should have the unrestricted right to work, earn incomes and profit from the production and sale of goods and the provision of services any day of the week. Economic prosperity generated in a free and unrestricted economy would benefit all Ontarians and their quality of life.

Retail shopping is an integral part of the tourist experience and represents a significant portion of the value of all tourism expenditures in Ontario. Most retail shopping, dining out, touring, sightseeing and recreation take place on weekends. Shopping has become a family outing, and the majority of Ontarians and visitors favour retail shopping on Sundays and holidays.

As I was leaving my place of business to come here, one of my staff said to me, "Tell them I work a lot and I really miss shopping on Sundays."

The popularity of cross-border shopping shows that Canadians will travel south, not only because they perceive the products to be cheaper, but also because the ease of access to these goods is enticing. Whatever happened to "Buy/shop Canadian?"

This industry is the largest private sector employer and in the service sector it accounts for 70% of all new jobs.

Tourism is responsible for the creation of 32 full-time jobs for every $1 million in tourism expenditures. We employ professionals, skilled and unskilled, and we are the largest employer of women, youth, aboriginal peoples and visible minorities. There is no other employer capable of this range of employment opportunities for permanent or part-time employees of professional service staff, college or university educated and the uneducated.

Tourism is one of the nation's largest generators of personal income, corporate, property, business and sales tax to all levels of government. The closures of retail businesses on Sundays has meant job losses to many, especially students who rely on this income for their schooling.

Our members throughout the province are reporting a large drop in business. They strongly feel that the availability of Sunday shopping will alleviate slightly the slumping economy. Of our members surveyed, 75% have said that closing the stores on Sundays has meant a decrease in revenue.

We recognize that other factors have also contributed to the decrease in revenue, but feel that the freedom of choice to open and work at retail businesses on Sundays and holidays is a means to reverse this problem.

This revenue means survival to quite a few and unless retail shops are allowed to open on Sundays to draw tourists and visitors to their respective areas, many will have to close their businesses. Obviously, the hardest hit areas are the border cities. Ontario will remain uncompetitive and continue to lose billions of dollars' worth of annual tourism sales unless we change and allow unrestricted Sunday and holiday shopping.

The hospitality industry today is faced with many obstacles and increased operating costs. In order to remain competitive and recapture some of the lost business from our neighbours to the south, we must have the ability to compete on a level playing field. Bordering American cities are wide open for retail business on Sundays and holidays. The value of the Canadian dollar, we know, is out of line, and works against Canadians. Americans do not assimilate dollars to dollars. They can assimilate dollars to pesos, dollars to lire, dollars to francs, but Americans on the whole have a hard time assimilating dollars to dollars.

The ministers can say as often as they want that the 10% or 15% premium on the American dollar helps tourism and helps bring travellers and tourists into Ontario and into Canada in general, but this is not so; 10 cents does not mean a great deal.

Most Ontarians cross-border shop for less than a day, on the weekends, with the largest volume of traffic on Sundays. Sunday shopping should be unrestricted in Ontario to permit—excuse me, I am repeating myself—a level playing field, an unrestricted freedom of choice in the marketplace.

While Bill 115 has some merit and we appreciate the Ontario government's recognition of the value and importance of tourism in this legislation, we do however feel that interpretation of the tourism criteria would create a lot of confusion, not to mention an administrative nightmare in time and cost.

To limit the timing for municipalities to declare themselves as tourist areas is also too restrictive; circumstances could, and most likely would, change at a later date. Municipalities and chambers of commerce do not need this responsibility and they do not deserve it. It is not fair.

The concept of a common pause day in Ontario is outdated and discriminatory. Multicultural Ontario in the 1990s is populated with every religion and ethnic background, and to allow one faith, belief or ethnic custom to dictate the lifestyles of everyone is wrong.

In our contemporary society Ontarians work at all hours of the day and night throughout the week. Hotels, hospitals, transportation, just to name a few, all must work on a 24-hour, seven-day-a-week basis. While some people rest, others conduct business and provide services. Their professions are a necessity in any community and I do not believe their quality of life is diminished by their work schedules.

We must provide these products, experiences and services to our customers when they want them or risk losing them to other, competing jurisdictions.

To stimulate tourist activity in northern Ontario and thus utilize the region's most readily available non-depleting industry as an economic generator, northern Ontario must be perceived as a major destination by potential visitors, both domestic and foreign. Tourism is an increasingly important sector in northern Ontario, particularly for those communities lacking any major resource industry.

I was in Niagara Falls not too long ago to meet our director and our people there. They were lamenting greatly in Niagara Falls, as you well know, because of cross-border shopping, although people who live in Niagara Falls and St Catharines have been cross-border shopping for years. Now it is the extra people who are going across the border to shop.

Our director there said to me, "It used to be that Niagara Falls was the tourist destination in Ontario." Now every single town, big or small, whether it is Dryden, Kenora, New Liskeard, Kapuskasing, Elliot Lake or wherever, wants to be a tourist-oriented community. You never thought before: "I'm going to go on a holiday. I'm going to go to this wonderful little tourist community of New Liskeard." Now everybody wants to get in.

This business must be important because every community—Sudbury has just spent a fortune campaigning to promote itself as a tourist destination. There is not a single little town anywhere in this wide province of ours that will not say, "I want to be a tourist destination." Go to any community, big or small, they are not going to say, "We do not want to be called a tourist destination." Go to Lake of the Woods, go anywhere you want. I represent these people, 26 zones across the province, from Kenora, Dryden, Lake of the Woods to Kingston, Windsor, the whole gamut, and no one says they are not tourist-oriented or a tourist destination.

I want to mention another thing that I think might be interesting for you to know. I just came back from a Calgary meeting of the Hotel Association of Canada. The big issue was not Sunday shopping, because in Calgary stores are open from 12 to 5 every Sunday. The big issue with the hoteliers of Canada is rising taxes and that type of thing, which we feel is hurting the industry tremendously, whether it is a federal, provincial or municipal tax.
